The High Court was greatly impressed by the alleged injuries suffered by the accused. There is no material to show that he had sustained injuries during the course of assaults on his wife, children and brother-in-law. The injuries were of a very superficial nature and self-infliction could not be ruled out. The story the accused concocted that someone (and not some others) did the killings is hard to swallow. The killings were possible by one who was known to the victims and who could have gained access without creating any stir or attracting anybody's attention, keeping in view the time and place of incident. The plea that he had raised an alarm is hardly credible. It is not his case that more than one person was involved, and/or that he tried to resist the assaults. Had he tried it, some serious injuries and not superficial injuries would have resulted. If the accused sustained injuries during the assaults at least he could have described the assailant as well as the nature and manner of defence by which he tried to protect all or any of them. There is no material that the accused tried to protect his wife, brother-in-law and children and sustained any injury in that process. This conduct, to say the least, is unnatural. The explanation offered about the sustaining of injuries is also hard to believe to warrant acceptance. Further, four people were attacked brutally and in a gruesome manner. The nature of injuries inflicted and the manner and position in which the bodies were found dead on the cots would also go to show that a person who was already inside the house, with a perfect plan and design could have so smartly and swiftly killed all of them without causing any flutter to disturb any one of them, so as to either awaken them or even let them attempt escape. (Para 17)

Further, in the examination under Section 313 CrPC, the accused took the stand that it was his brother S who was responsible for the crime. This is contrary to what his stand was during investigation. If in reality S was the assailant, there is no reason as to why the accused who claimed to have seen the assailant but not recognized him could not have spoken about him. This is certainly a very vital factor. The conduct of the accused in going to the house of PW 9 and giving false news further aggravates the guilt pointing finger at the accused. (Para 19)

The murders were not for any monetary gain and nothing was found or stated to have been stolen. (Para 20)

The evidence on record also fully establishes the fact that the accused suspected the chastity and fidelity of his wife and also doubted that she did not beget the children through him. The High Court has held that it was not possible for PWs 5 and 6 to have heard the quarrel from a distance of about 1000 to 1500 ft. On a reading of the evidence of the two witnesses it is clear that they have not stated to have heard the quarrel from that distance. Further, there is another surmise made by the High Court that when quarrelling, it was not expected that the accused would talk in such a loud voice that the witnesses would hear it from a distance. The quarrel was taking place late at night when obstruction to sounds would be less. At night, voice would normally carry to a greater distance than during daytime, particularly in a village in the absence of bustling activities of a busy town. (Paras 20 to 22)

Thus, the circumstances highlighted by the prosecution present the complete picture which completely rules out the role of any other person and unerringly as well as inevitably points the finger at the accused. The High Court erred in reversing the conviction. (Para 24). State of Rajasthan v. Kheraj Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 224: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1979.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-8-2003]

[5716] — Ss. 386 and 374 — Reversal of conviction by High Court brushing aside prosecution evidence against accused on flimsy reasons — Impropriety — Murder case — A-9 was at the place where murder took place during the relevant period — He had accessibility to weapons — He had been involved in other offences relating to illegal use of arms — Recovery of country-made pistol, etc. at the instance of A-9 who clearly stated in his disclosure statement that he himself had concealed the said pistol — Pistol proved to have been used for causing death of deceased — Extra-judicial confession made by A-9 to two PWs, found reliable and trustworthy — Held, case against A-9 proved beyond reasonable doubt — High Court erred in acquitting him — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 27 (Paras 38, 19 to 26, 34 and 35). State of M.P. v. Paltan Mallah, (2005) 3 SCC 169: 2005 SCC (Cri) 674: AIR 2005 SC 733: 2005 Cri LJ 918.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-2005]

(13) Conviction/Reversal of acquittal justified (contd.)

Mohd. Inayatullah v. State of Maharashtra, (1976) 1 SCC 828: 1976 SCC (Cri) 199; Pohalya Motya Valvi v. State of Maharashtra, (1980) 1 SCC 530: 1980 SCC (Cri) 261, distinguished on facts

[5717] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Appeal against conviction — Acquittal by High Court, held on facts, not proper — Case based on evidence of eyewitnesses PW 1 and PW 2 (brothers of deceased) — Their evidence clearly cogent — Conclusions of High Court contrary to the evidence on record — That apart, vital factors not given importance — High Court doubted the presence of PWs 1 and 2 without properly analysing their evidence — Held, High Court was not justified in acquitting the accused persons — Conviction by trial court restored — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307 and 307/34

Allowing the appeal, setting aside the acquittal by the High Court and restoring conviction by the trial court

Held :

The High Court was not justified in directing acquittal of the accused persons. It proceeded on an erroneous impression that the FIR was lodged at 2.00 p.m. after deliberations and discussions. No material has been indicated for coming to this conclusion. On the contrary, the evidence on record clearly shows that the information was lodged at 8.00 a.m. at the police chowk, and the FIR was registered at the police station at 9.35 a.m. and it reached the Magistrate at 3.00 p.m. It is baffling as to how and on what material the High Court came to the conclusion that the FIR came into existence at 2.00 p.m. Considering the facts, it cannot be said that there was any unexplained delay so far as registration of the FIR and dispatch to the Magistrate are concerned. Further, the area was a terrorist-infected area where terrorism was at its peak during the period concerned. The High Court did not attach any importance to this vital factor, and came to presumptuous conclusions. (Para 7)

Further, there was no dispute by the accused regarding the presence of the dead body and the severed head in the field and near the tubewell of accused K. Though the prosecution has to lead evidence to substantiate its accusations, if facts within the special knowledge of the accused are not satisfactorily explained it is a factor against the accused. No explanation was given by the accused during examination under Section 313 CrPC except making bold denial. Though this factor by itself cannot be sufficient to fasten the guilt of the accused, while considering the totality of the circumstances this is certainly a relevant factor. (Para 7)

The evidence of PWs 1 and 2 is clearly cogent and without even properly analysing their evidence the High Court came to the conclusion that their presence was doubtful. (Para 7). State of Punjab v. Karnail Singh, (2003) 11 SCC 271: 2004 SCC (Cri) 135: AIR 2003 SC 3609.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-8-2003]

[5718] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Appeal against conviction — Interference by High Court reversing conviction — Held on facts, was not proper — Respondents and their father entering into the house of PW 3 at the dead of night and causing head injuries to PW 3 and his wife B with the butt of a pistol as a result of which B died — High Court reversing the conviction by trial court on the grounds of (i) absence of proof of light, (ii) improvements and contradictions in the testimony of PWs, and (iii) difference between the ocular and medical evidence regarding injuries — Site plan showing existence of electric bulbs — On facts, High Court erred in coming to the conclusion that in absence of light, the assailants could not be recognized — Improvements and contradictions were minor and natural and rather showing the truthfulness of the evidence — Testimony of PW 3 corroborated by evidence of PW 4, a natural witness — On facts, medical evidence and ocular evidence found wholly consistent — High Court's judgment based on entirely faulty and erroneous appreciation of evidence, held, liable to be set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34, 307/34 and 452 (Paras 6, 7 and 12 to 15). State of U.P. v. Premi, (2003) 9 SCC 12: AIR 2003 SC 1750: 2003 Cri LJ 1554.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-2003]

Modi's Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology (22nd Edn.), referred to [5719] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Appeal against conviction — Order of acquittal by High Court, held, perverse — Hence set aside — Explosive Substances Act, 1908 — S. 3 — Murder — Accused persons and prosecution party belonging to two opposite groups — On the fateful day at 6.30 a.m., deceased O along with PWs 1 to 4 and three others going in a bus to Court (25 km away) to depose against some of the accused persons in earlier two cases — Accused persons stopping the bus and getting into it — Apprehending that accused might attack, prosecution party getting down from the bus — Accused chasing them — Respondents 1, 2 and 4 throwing bombs at O — Respondents 3 and 5 assaulting O with hunting sickles — Medical evidence and objective finding of IO supporting prosecution case — Evidence of eyewitnesses (PWs

1 to 4) and co-passenger PW 5, held, reliable — Hence High Court erred in doubting the veracity of prosecution case — Conviction of Respondents 1 to 5 restored — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/149 and 148 (Paras 9 to 12). Kamma Otukunta Ram Naidu v. Chereddy Pedda Subba Reddy, (2003) 11 SCC 293: 2004 SCC (Cri) 155: AIR 2003 SC 3342.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-2003]

[5720] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Murder — Appeal against conviction — Interference by High Court — Held on facts, not proper — Conviction justified — Conviction of respondent (nephew of deceased) based on evidence of PW 3, set aside by High Court disbelieving the evidence of said witness — Propriety — High Court disbelieving the prosecution case on the grounds that (i) prosecution failed to explain the existence of bloodmarks on the walls in close proximity to the scene of offence, (ii) there was existence of two complaints, and (iii) the recovery of sickle (crime article) on the basis of the statement said to have been made by the accused under S. 27 of the Evidence Act was not liable to be relied upon — No material contradictions or inherent improbabilities in the evidence of PW 3 — PW 3, who was an independent witness, held, would not like to involve the nephew of deceased wantonly — Further, the doubtful features pointed out by the High Court, held on facts, did not obliterate the clear account of the eyewitness PW 3 — Hence, High Court's order set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Paras 3 and 4). State of Karnataka v. Panchakshari Gurupadayya Hiramath, (2002) 10 SCC 229: AIR 2003 SC 825.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-2002]

[5721] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Murder case — Appeal against conviction — Conviction justified — High Court reversing the finding of trial court without considering and taking into account the testimony of eyewitnesses — Held, clear infraction of S. 386 CrPC — Hence, acquittal by High Court, held, liable to be set aside

Since in the present case, the High Court has reversed the finding recorded by the trial court without considering and taking into account the testimony of the eyewitnesses, there is a clear infraction of Section 386 CrPC and the order of acquittal passed by it is likely to be set aside on account of this serious error. (Para 8)

In a murder case based upon direct eyewitness account it is absolutely necessary to thoroughly examine the testimony of the eyewitness in order to ascertain whether they had really seen the occurrence and whether the statement given by them appears to be natural and truthful and finds corroboration from the medical evidence on record. (Para 6)

In the present case eleven eyewitnesses have fully supported the prosecution case. Out of these eleven witnesses, five were injured witnesses who had received serious gunshot injuries. Their presence on the spot, therefore, cannot be doubted in any manner. In fact, the testimony of five injured witnesses is more than sufficient to establish the charge against the accused-respondents. However, the High Court did not at all advert to this important piece of evidence and has chosen to rely upon some trifling and insignificant circumstances to discard the prosecution case. (Para 6)

The prosecution had succeeded in establishing its case against the accused-respondents beyond any shadow of doubt. The judgment of the High Court is wholly illegal and perverse. It is not a case where two views are possible. (Para 14). State of Rajasthan v. Bhawani, (2003) 7 SCC 291: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1628: AIR 2003 SC 4230.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, K.G. Balakrishnan and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2003]

Amar Singh v. Balwinder Singh, (2003) 2 SCC 518: 2003 SCC (Cri) 641, relied on

Ashok Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (1991) 1 SCC 166: 1991 SCC (Cri) 126; Arun Kumar v. State of U.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 322: 1990 SCC (Cri) 173; Bharwad Jakshibhai Nagjibhai v. State of Gujarat, (1995) 5 SCC 602: 1995 SCC (Cri) 993, distinguished

[5722] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Rape — Conviction — Unmerited acquittal by High Court — Held, not proper — Duty of Courts while dealing with charges of sexual assault on women, particularly of tender age and children, stated — Courts have to display a greater sense of responsibility and to be more sensitive while dealing with charges of sexual assault on women, particularly of tender age and children — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 375 and 376

The High Court was not justified in reversing the conviction of the respondent and recording the order of acquittal. An unmerited acquittal does no good to the society. If the prosecution has succeeded in making out a convincing case for recording a finding as to the accused being guilty, the court should not lean in favour of acquittal by giving weight to irrelevant or insignificant circumstances or by resorting to technicalities or by assuming doubts and giving benefit thereof where none reasonably exists. A doubt, as understood in criminal jurisprudence, has to be a reasonable doubt and not an excuse for a finding in favour of acquittal. An unmerited acquittal encourages wolves in the society being on the prowl for easy prey, more so when the victims of crime are helpless females or minor children. The courts have to display a greater sense of responsibility and to be more sensitive while dealing with charges of sexual assault on women, particularly of tender age and children. (Para 16). State of Punjab v. Ramdev Singh, (2004) 1 SCC 421: 2004 SCC (Cri) 307: AIR 2004 SC 1290.

(13) Conviction/Reversal of acquittal justified (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-2003]

[5723] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Reversal of conviction by High Court — Based on flimsy, untenable and unjustifiable reasons — Held, not proper — Interference by Supreme Court called for (Paras 7, 10 and 11). Hem Raj v. Raja Ram, (2004) 9 SCC 18: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1412: AIR 2004 SC 1489: 2004 Cri LJ 901.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-1-2004]

[5724] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Reversal of conviction by High Court — Propriety of — Four eyewitnesses — Two related and inimical whereas two independent — Their testimony found reliable — Case against accused, established — Contention that after the reconstruction of the case record the statements made by the accused under S. 313 CrPC had not been properly considered by the trial court, not sustainable — Held, High Court erred in acquitting the accused resulting in grave miscarriage of justice — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 302/149, 302/34, 307/149, 323, 323/34 and 148 (Para 15). State of U.P. v. Kishan Chand, (2004) 7 SCC 629: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-8-2004]

[5725] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Reversal of conviction by High Court based on patently perverse conclusions, held, indefensible and liable to be set aside — Rape and murder — Victim, a girl aged about 10 years — Eyewitness claiming having seen the accused throttling the victim — Evidence as to last seen together — Acquittal by the High Court — Propriety — Victim seen chewing sugarcane at "kolhu" of accused D — Later on seen going with D towards his sugarcane field — Not returning to her home — Complainant B (father of victim) going to the sugarcane field of D for searching the victim there — D not permitting him to do so — Thereafter, B taking "Pardhan" of the village and other persons with him making search there — Dead body of victim found buried in the said field — On such facts, held, conviction by trial court was proper — High Court erred in setting aside the same — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376, 302 and 201 (Paras 7 to 9). State of U.P. v. Devendra Singh, (2004) 10 SCC 616: AIR 2004 SC 3690: 2004 Cri LJ 3118.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-2004]

[5726] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Conviction for murder — Having regard to testimony of reliable eyewitnesses as also circumstantial evidence regarding motive, last seen together, prompt lodging of FIR naming the accused and post-crime conduct of abscondence of the accused, held, charge of murder proved — Minor discrepancies in prosecution case, such as failure on the part of deceased's brother to disclose the name of the person who first informed him about the murderous attack on the deceased or his failure to mention the accused's name to SDM and Tehsildar who were along with him at the time of occurrence, are immaterial — High Court erred in reversing conviction recorded by trial court. State of U.P. v. Anil Singh, 1988 Supp SCC 686: 1989 SCC (Cri) 48: AIR 1988 SC 1998.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-1988]

[5727] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Acquittal not justified — Dying declaration recorded by competent magistrate after obtaining doctor's opinion that deceased was in a fit condition to make statement preferable to declaration based on oral testimony and circumstantial evidence — Death of housewife by burning — Deceased stating that she caught fire while preparing tea and that she was making the statement with full senses and without any outside pressure — Trial court excluding the dying declaration under impression that it was made in a sense of fear and convicting the husband, father-in-law and mother-in-law of the deceased on the basis of circumstantial evidence — High Court relying on the dying declaration acquitting the accused under Ss. 302/34, 120-B, 506, IPC — Having regard to the contents of the dying declaration, held, there was no basis for excluding the same and interfering with the finding of the High Court particularly when the appeal is against acquittal — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34, 120-B and 506 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 32(1). Kishan Lal Sethi v. Jagan Nath, (1990) 3 SCC 45: 1990 SCC (Cri) 460: AIR 1990 SC 1357: 1990 Cri LJ 1500.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-4-1990]

[5728] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Acquittal not justified — Number of witnesses — If prosecution case is otherwise truthful and acceptable, it cannot be rejected merely because all witnesses had not been examined or independent witnesses not produced to corroborate — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 134

The public are generally reluctant to come forward to depose before the court. It is, therefore, not correct to reject the prosecution version only on the ground that all witnesses to the occurrence have not been examined. Nor is it proper to reject the case for want of corroboration by independent witnesses if the case made out is otherwise true and acceptable. State of U.P. v. Anil Singh, 1988 Supp SCC 686: 1989 SCC (Cri) 48: AIR 1988 SC 1998.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-1988]

[5729] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Acquittal not justified — Acquittal reversed by High Court relying on dying declaration which was disbelieved by trial court on flimsy grounds — Dying declaration — Despite having been corroborated in respect of material particulars, disbelieved by trial court taking into account irrelevant considerations — Reversal of acquittal by High Court, if on facts was justified — Dying declaration recorded in hospital by PW 9, the Executive Magistrate, in presence of the doctor who certified prior to the declaration that the deceased was in a fit state to make the statement — Therefore, where the dying declaration was acceptable in view of corroboration of material particulars existing therein, held on facts that the trial court erred in disbelieving the same relying on flimsy grounds based on irrelevant considerations — Hence, the reversal of acquittal by High Court, was justified — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 r/w Ss. 34 and 376 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 32

There is convincing and satisfactory evidence to prove that the appellant was responsible for the murder of the deceased. The evidence of PW 9, the Executive Magistrate, shows that when he recorded the dying declaration the doctor was present and he had certified that the deceased was in a fit state to make the statement. The Sessions Judge disbelieved the dying declaration on flimsy grounds based on irrelevant considerations. Whether the Executive Magistrate reached the hospital on a scooter or any other conveyance or whether the Magistrate had noted the percentage of burn injuries on the body of the deceased are irrelevant matters which should not have weighed with the Sessions Judge in disbelieving the dying declaration. (Paras 9 and 11)

In the instant case, there has been material corroboration as the deceased was found with burn injuries near the house of the appellant. PW 2 also saw the deceased near the house of the appellant and it was from that place that the deceased was removed to the hospital. Further, PW 1, the husband of the deceased, also deposed that on hearing about the incident, he rushed to the place of occurrence and saw the deceased with burn injuries. The High Court considered all this evidence and rightly reversed the judgment of the Sessions Court. (Paras 14 and 15). Shambhu v. State of M.P., (2002) 3 SCC 561: 2002 SCC (Cri) 684: AIR 2002 SC 1307: 2002 Cri LJ 1778.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.P. Sethi and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-3-2002]

State of Assam v. Mafizuddin Ahmed, (1983) 2 SCC 14: 1983 SCC (Cri) 325, relied on [5730] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Appeal against acquittal — Murder — Acquittal not justified — Appreciation of evidence — Homicidal death of wife owing to knife injury inflicted on her neck — Death taking place in course of quarrel between the deceased-wife and respondent-husband in their house — Only respondent, deceased and their minor children present in the house at the material time — Respondent running away from the house immediately after the death of his wife — Eyewitness account of the next door neighbour, an independent and disinterested witness, was reliable — Minor inconsistencies in his version, considered in the context of his entire testimony, not rendering his testimony untrustworthy — His testimony amply corroborated by another neighbour — Dying declaration pointing to respondent as perpetrator of the crime — Knife recovered from possession of respondent — Held, circumstances when considered in the light of the unimpeachable evidence on record lead to the only legitimate inference that nobody else other than the respondent could have committed the murder — High Court reversed the findings of the trial court and acquitted the accused without properly displacing the cogent reasons given by the latter and without considering the vital points in the case — Hence judgment and order of the High Court set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. State of Karnataka v. Gangadharaiah, 1998 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1997 SC 3787.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-1997]

[5731] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reappreciation of evidence and reversal of acquittal by High Court — Held on facts, was justified — Misunderstandings and enmity between the families of deceased and accused — Defence plea that due to the darkness of

(13) Conviction/Reversal of acquittal justified (contd.)

night the ocular witnesses could not have witnessed the occurrence, on facts, rejected — More than sufficient material on record to constitute the motive — No material discrepancy in prosecution evidence — Sufficient explanation given in respect of belated FIR — Trial court not only rejecting valuable material without giving due weight or importance to the same but also entertaining doubts and surmising much under the pretext of analysing the probabilities of the case — Cogent and convincing evidence available on record — Hence, held, High Court rightly reconsidered the evidence and reversed the acquittal — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34 and 324

The High Court, having regard to the superficial manner in which the evidence has been discussed, analysed and considered in a perfunctory manner by the learned Sessions Judge, was very well justified in undertaking the reconsideration of the evidence in its proper perspective in order to ensure that no miscarriage of justice resulted in the matter. The trial court erred not only in rejecting valuable material without giving due weight or importance to the same but also in entertaining doubts and surmising much under the pretext of analysing the probabilities of the case. Despite the cogent and convincing evidence on record, a finding in favour of the accused seems to have been arrived at by the learned trial Judge on an incomplete evaluation of the evidence resulting in total miscarriage of justice. Hence, there is no reason to interfere with the well-merited conclusions and judgment of the High Court. (Paras 6 to 9). Shivraj Bapuray Jadhav v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 6 SCC 392: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1372: AIR 2003 SC 3578: 2003 Cri LJ 3542.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-2003]

[5732] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court — On facts, held proper — Improper ground — Prosecution proving the presence and participation of accused persons in crime beyond reasonable doubt — Trial court erred in acquitting them by giving the benefit of doubt on tenuous ground — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 3 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 323 r/w S. 34

The benefit of doubt rendered by the trial court in respect of accused M, K and T runs straight to the teeth of ocular evidence. The High Court on appreciation of ocular evidence of PWs 1, 2, 3 and 4 and materials on record has rightly come to the conclusion that the prosecution has been able to prove the presence and participation of the accused M, K and T beyond reasonable doubt. The trial court acquitted them on the benefit of doubt on tenuous ground. (Para 18). Mohar v. State of U.P., (2002) 7 SCC 606: 2003 SCC (Cri) 121: AIR 2002 SC 3279.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2002]

[5733] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court — Held, proper — Assault on PW 3 by appellant — Evidence of eyewitnesses (friends of PW 3) rejected by trial court without any plausible reason — No reason given as to why the evidence of PW 3 was not worthy of credence — Since trial court itself observed that there was exchange of hot words between the accused and PW 3, plea that genesis of occurrence not established, held, rightly discarded by High Court — Reliance placed by High Court on evidence of PW 3 and other eyewitnesses, held, proper — High Court was justified in reversing the acquittal — Penal Code, 1860, S. 307 (Paras 6 and 7). R. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 9 SCC 27: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1408: AIR 2004 SC 1812: 2004 Cri LJ 1391.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-2004]

[5734] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reappraisal of evidence and reversal of acquittal by High Court — Propriety — Reasons assigned by trial court for total rejection of prosecution evidence were against well-settled norms and principles of appraisal of evidence — Held, High Court rightly observed that conclusions by trial court were vitiated on account of perversity of approach — Thus, High Court was entitled to independently appraise and assess the evidence — On facts, conviction of A-2 under S. 302 IPC etc. was proper but that of other accused persons was improper except conviction of A-4 under S. 324 IPC for causing injury to PW 1 (Paras 5 to 10). K.M. Ravi v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 16 SCC 337.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2002]

[5735] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court — Sustainability — Five accused alleged to have assaulted the deceased and other PWs with lathi and axe — Deceased succumbing to the injuries in hospital — Whereas trial court doubted the credibility of so-called eyewitnesses, PWs 3, 4, 6, 7, 8 and 10 who were relatives of the deceased High Court concluded that the evidence of PWs regarding the presence and participation of the accused in the occurrence was reliable and truthful — Victims of assault would not normally spare the real culprits and falsely implicate innocent accused persons — Evidence of PWs clearly showing that the deceased was lying injured at the spot where the accused persons were present and they assaulted PWs 3, 7 and 8 when they went to rescue him — Further, their houses were at a very short distance and it was quite natural that on hearing the alarm they had rushed to the place of occurrence — Moreover, though some exaggeration in evidence of PW 10 (informant) was discernible but reading the same carefully along with the evidence of PWs 3, 7 and 8 lends support to the prosecution case — Non-examination of doctor who examined the injured PWs and deceased initially not fatal since homicidal death was not disputed — Reason for absence of incised wound when weapon of assault was alleged to be axe rightly noted by High Court that axes which are generally used in villages for cutting trees and branches are not so sharp like swords or knives, and when used on the head, can also cause lacerated injuries — Besides the accused were also armed with lathis — High Court found the appellants guilty, but considering the manner of assault and the surrounding factors, convicted them for offence punishable under S. 326 r/w S. 34 IPC — Impugned judgment does not suffer from any infirmity to warrant interference — Penal Code, 1860, S. 326 r/w S. 34. Mukul Mahto v. State of Jharkhand, (2008) 15 SCC 648: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1146: AIR 2009 SC 335.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2008]

Ch. Madusudhana Reddy v. State of A.P., 1994 SCC (Cri) 275, followed

[5736] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court, held on facts, was justified — Death by burning — Deceased committing suicide within 11 months after her marriage with Appellant 1 — No direct evidence — Appellants not attempting to save the deceased — Trial court acquitting Appellant 1 and his mother, Appellant 2, of all the charges on the grounds that the dying declaration was not recorded in the language in which it was made, there were some minor contradictions in the dying declaration and the report made to the Head Constable, and that there was doubt whether the deceased was in a fit condition to make the dying declaration — Further, the trial court held that the scolding and taunting of the deceased for not preparing proper food or that she was not good-looking was not such a cruelty so as to push her to commit suicide — Where the dying declaration was recorded and signed by the Magistrate, endorsement was made thereon by the doctor that the deceased made the statement in a fit state of mind, and the deceased put a thumb impression on her declaration which was made in Urdu and recorded in English and thereafter explained in Hindi to the deceased, held on facts, the appellants were rightly convicted under Ss. 306 and 498-A by the High Court — Further, High Court rightly held that the continuous taunting or teasing of the deceased by the appellants on one ground or the other amounted to mental cruelty drawing her to end her life — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B, 306 and 498-A

PW 1, the Magistrate has certified that he had signed the dying declaration and had taken the endorsement of the doctor on duty that the deceased was in a fit state of mind to make a statement; the deceased had made the dying declaration in question-answer form in Urdu and he had translated the version and recorded the declaration in English. After recording her statement, he explained the statement in Hindi to the deceased who admitted its correctness. Thereafter, he took the thumb impression of the deceased on her declaration. In cross-examination, he has stated that he could read and speak in Hindi; the deceased had made statement in Urdu which he could understand as Urdu and Hindi languages are almost similar and in Hyderabad, Urdu and Hindi languages are spoken in the same way, there being not much difference. PW 11, the doctor, corroborated the statement of PW 1 to the effect that the deceased was in a fit mental condition to make statement and that he was present when the statement was recorded by the Magistrate. (Para 5)

Whether one spouse has been guilty of cruelty to the other is essentially a question of fact. The impact of complaints, accusations or taunts on a person amounting to cruelty depends on various factors like the sensitivity of the individual victim concerned, the social background, the environment, education etc. Further, mental cruelty varies from person to person depending on the intensity of sensitivity and the degree of courage or endurance to withstand such mental cruelty. Each case has to be decided on its own facts to decide whether the mental cruelty was established or not. In the facts and circumstances of the case, the High Court rightly concluded that the continuous taunting or teasing of the deceased by the appellants on one ground or the other amounted to mental cruelty drawing her to end her life. Out of 11 months of married life, the deceased was forced to live in her parents' house and could live with her husband for a period of two months in different spells. The High Court also took note of the fact that the appellants did not try to save the deceased although they were present when the burn injuries were caused to her. (Para 6)

(13) Conviction/Reversal of acquittal justified (contd.)

Having regard to the evidence brought on record and looking to the reasons recorded by the High Court, the trial court committed manifest error in disbelieving the dying declaration and the evidence of PWs 3 to 7. The High Court was right and justified in reversing the order of acquittal and convicting and sentencing the appellants for the offences under Sections 306 and 498-A IPC. However, having regard to the fact that both the appellants were in imprisonment for about two months, the incident took place on 9-3-1988, Appellant 2 is the mother of Appellant 1 and she is aged 60 years, it would be just and appropriate to modify the sentence of imprisonment to the period already undergone. (Para 8). Mohd. Hoshan v. State of A.P., (2002) 7 SCC 414: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1765: AIR 2002 SC 3270.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-2002]

[5737] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court, held on facts, was proper — Murder — Reversal of acquittal by High Court — Propriety — Death by strangulation — Murder by pressing the neck of B using a piece of cloth (11/2 m x 1 m) rolled into the shape of a rope — Prosecution case that PWs 4 and 5 (police personnel on patrol duty) on hearing the shrieks of B entered the house and saw the accused persons strangulating B in a garage, who by that time had died — Defence version that on finding a dead body lying in the garage the accused A-1 informed the police about it, but the police came and arrested all the three accused — Medical evidence and entry made in daily diary report corroborating the testimony of PWs 4 and 5 — Defence plea highly improbable and unnatural — No reason to implicate the accused-appellants falsely — Considering the defence contention that the ligature mark was not tallying with the diameter of the rope, held on facts, there was no inconsistency between the testimony of the eyewitnesses and the medical evidence — Absence of evidence on the point of motive, on facts, not fatal — Prosecution case against appellants proved beyond any shadow of doubt — Conviction upheld — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 34

The entry made at 9.30 p.m. on 23-12-1989 in DDR of Police Post Sector 36 indicates that PWs 4 and 5 (constables) had been deputed for night patrol duty in Sector 35. Further, the entry made at 1.05 a.m. on 24-12-1989 records that PW 4 had given information about the incident to the police post in Sector 36 by telephone. The two constables could not have cooked up a false story regarding three persons assaulting a man in the short period which elapsed between their reaching there and in giving telephonic information at about 1.05 a.m. (Para 11)

The documentary evidence and also the promptness with which the FIR was lodged, its copy was sent to the Ilaqa Magistrate and the body was sent to the mortuary lends great assurance to the truthfulness of the prosecution case. The medical evidence on record also corroborates the testimony of eyewitnesses. (Para 11)

The accused-appellants have led no evidence in support of their defence. Even otherwise, the plea taken by them in their statement under Section 313 CrPC appears to be highly improbable and unnatural. The defence case that someone else placed the dead body in the garage of the kothi is not at all worthy of belief. The appellants have not even given any suggestion in the cross-examination of the eyewitnesses (PW 4 and PW 5) as to why they had given false statement to implicate them in a serious case like murder. There is not even an iota of evidence on the record which may even remotely suggest that PW 4 or PW 5 had any grouse against the appellants or any cause to implicate them falsely. (Para 12)

The width of the ligature mark would very much depend upon the type of the cloth, how tightly and strongly it was rolled over and was converted into a rope and how soon it was removed. In the present case, the cotton cloth used for strangulating was removed immediately as the witnesses reached the spot and caught hold of the assailants. In such circumstances, the width of the ligature mark could be much smaller and need not tally with the diameter of the rope. Thus, there is no inconsistency between the testimony of the eyewitnesses and the medical evidence and the case of the prosecution does not suffer from any infirmity on that account. (Paras 17 and 15)

The prosecution has succeeded in establishing its case against the appellants beyond any shadow of doubt. (Para 21). Thaman Kumar v. State of Union Territory of Chandigarh, (2003) 6 SCC 380: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1362: AIR 2003 SC 3975: 2003 Cri LJ 3070.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2003]

Punjab Singh v. State of Haryana, 1984 Supp SCC 233: 1984 SCC (Cri) 484; Anil Rai v. State of Bihar, (2001) 7 SCC 318: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1009, followed

Modi's Medical Jurisprudence (22nd Edn.), referred to

[5738] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court, held on facts, was proper — Appreciation of evidence — Accused persons assaulting PWs 1 to 3 and G — Death of G and inju- ries sustained by PWs 1 to 3 in said incident — High Court confirming conviction of A-1 under S. 307 IPC and that of A-5 and A-6 under S. 324 IPC, but reversing the acquittal of A-2, A-7, A-8 & A-11 and convicting A-2 under S. 324 and A-7, A-8 & A-11 under Ss. 302/34 — Evidence of PWs 1 to 3 corroborated by PWs 8, 14 and 17 — No inherent improbability in the prosecution evidence — Having perused the medical evidence, held, it was clear that a group of persons attacked the deceased — Incident happened all of a sudden — Reversal of acquittal by High Court justified — But having regard to the peculiar nature of the circumstances which led to the death of G, conviction of A-7, A-8 and A-11 altered from Ss. 302/34 to Ss. 304 Pt. I/34 — Conviction and sentence passed against A-1, A-2, A-5 and A-6, held, was not liable to be interfered with — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 or S. 304, Ss. 302/34 or Ss. 304 Pt. I/34 and Ss. 307, 324

There is no inherent improbability in the evidence adduced by the prosecution. It is true that PW 1 to PW 3 did not give a very consistent version of the nature of attack mounted by the group of people, but on a perusal of the evidence of these three witnesses, along with the evidence of PW 8, PW 14 and PW 17, it is clear that the accused who have been found guilty were instrumental in causing fatal injuries to the deceased. Thus, there is no reason to disagree with the views expressed by the High Court especially when the rejection of the evidence of PW 8, PW 14 and PW 17 by the Sessions Court was mostly on flimsy reasons. But, having regard to the peculiar nature of the circumstances which led to the death of the deceased it is held that the offence committed by A-7, A-8 and A-11 would only come within the ambit of the offence punishable under Section 304 Part I IPC. (Paras 6 to 9). Kunhimodeenkutty v. State of Kerala, (2002) 10 SCC 352: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1452: AIR 2003 SC 836.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2002]

[5739] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Reversal of acquittal by High Court, on facts, justified. Badri v. State of U.P., (1975) 4 SCC 609: 1975 SCC (Cri) 644: AIR 1975 SC 1985: 1975 Cri LJ 1739: 1976 MLJ (Cri) 317.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, P.N. Bhagwati and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-1975]

[5740] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Acquittal not justified — Acquittal by trial court relying on certain rulings of the Supreme Court, despite its observation that evidence against acquitted accused was as nearly cogent as the one against convicted accused — Held, acquittal was not proper — Hence, rightly interfered with by the High Court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/34 (Paras 29 to 34). Parasa Raja Manikyala Rao v. State of A.P., (2003) 12 SCC 306: AIR 2004 SC 132: 2004 Cri LJ 390.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2003]

(14) Conviction altered

[5741] — S. 386 — Alteration of conviction by High Court under S. 302 IPC, from S. 396 IPC — Appellant along with other accused tried under S. 396 IPC, alternatively under S. 302 IPC for causing death of the deceased while attempting to commit dacoity — Trial court convicted all the accused under S. 396 IPC and sentenced them to life imprisonment — High Court considering the facts that there was no actual commission of dacoity and that there was a specific allegation in the charge against the appellant of commission of murder of the deceased and also finding that the evidence proved that appellant alone caused the death of the deceased, altered the conviction of the appellant to that under S. 302 IPC while maintaining the sentence of life imprisonment — Held, appellant had not been prejudiced by the alteration of the conviction in view of the specific alternative charge — There was no acquittal of the appellant under S. 302 IPC either expressly or impliedly — Hence alteration sustainable — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 396. Ramdeo Rai Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1990) 2 SCC 675: 1990 SCC (Cri) 413: AIR 1990 SC 1180: 1990 Cri LJ 1183: (1990) 2 Crimes 47.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-3-1990]

Lakhan Mahto v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 1742: 1966 Cri LJ 1349, distinguished

Distinguished in Raj Kumar v. State of Uttaranchal, (2008) 11 SCC 709

[5742] — S. 386 — Appeal to Supreme Court against acquittal by High Court allowed — But conviction altered from Ss. 302/34 to S. 326, Penal Code, 1860. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Vishwa Bandhu, (1978) 4 SCC 420: 1978 SCC (Cri) 556.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-1978]

(15) Remand/Final disposal by High Court

[5743] — S. 386 — Appeal before High Court against acquittal — Remand to trial court — If proper, on facts — Charge against appellant under Ss. 420, 477-A IPC and S. 5(2) r/w S. 5(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act for cheating the Bank by falsifying bank account while working as Branch Manager during 1984-86 — While audit reports of 1984 and 1985 showing no lapses, audit report of

(15) Remand/Final disposal by High Court (contd.)

1986 referring to the irregularities on the basis of which complaint lodged against appellant — Trial court after considering oral and documentary evidence acquitting the appellant taking the view that prosecution ought to have taken into account the earlier audit reports of 1984 and 1985 before filing charge-sheet against appellant — Evidence of material witnesses considered in a perfunctory manner and various other circumstances relied upon by prosecution overlooked by trial court — High Court observing that trial court should have considered the evidence adduced during the trial to find out the guilt or otherwise of appellant and accordingly remanding the matter back to trial court for disposal in accordance with law as some of the documents should also have been brought on record for effective disposal of the controversy raised in the case and to do justice between the parties — Held on facts, High Court was justified in doing so — Thereby it cannot be said that High Court had afforded opportunity to the prosecution to cure the lacunae in its evidence — High Court had also not faulted in preferring to remand the matter instead of recording additional evidence in terms of S. 391 — Trial court will strictly adhere to the observations and directions given by the High Court in its judgment — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 477-A — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(2) & 5(1)(d). V. Srinivasa Reddy v. State of A.P., (1998) 9 SCC 331: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1023: AIR 1998 SC 2079.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.P. Kurdukar and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-2-1998]

Ukha Kolhe v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 1531: (1964) 1 SCR 926; Mohd. Iqbal Ahmed v. State of A.P., (1979) 4 SCC 172: 1979 SCC (Cri) 926, distinguished [5744] — Ss. 386, 378 and 360 — Remand — Matter remitted again by High Court with same direction, if proper — High Court convicting the accused remanding the matter to trial Magistrate to pass appropriate sentence exercising liberty in respect of the applicability of benevolent provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act and consideration of report of District Probation Officer — Magistrate, exercising discretion granted by High Court, sentencing the accused with three years' rigorous imprisonment — Sentence having been affirmed by the Sessions Court, matter remanded again by High Court with same direction — Having regard to the liberty granted by High Court to Magistrate while passing appropriate sentence, held that the Magistrate passed the sentence in accordance with the earlier direction of High Court — Order of High Court remitting the matter again, for considering the same issue, merely on ground of absence of District Probation Officer's report, held, was not justified — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A (Para 3). C. Gopinathan v. Krishnan Ayyappan, (2000) 9 SCC 430: 2001 SCC (Cri) 413.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-3-2000]

[5745] — S. 386(a) — Punishment for dishonour of cheque due to insufficiency of funds — Imposition of sentence by appellate court — Remission of case to trial court for imposition of sentence, if not proper — Held, appellate court itself is empowered under S. 386(a) CrPC to impose sentence once it concludes that offence under S. 138 has been committed — Appellate court is not supposed to remit the case to trial court for imposing sentence — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138

The powers of the appellate court, in an appeal from an order of acquittal, are enumerated in Section 386(a) CrPC. Those powers do not contemplate that an appellate court, after recording conviction, can remit the matter to the trial court for passing appropriate order of sentence. The judicial function of imposing appropriate sentence can be performed only by the appellate court when it reverses the order of acquittal and not by any other court. Having regard to the scheme of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 after finding the appellant guilty under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the judicial discretion of imposing appropriate sentence could not have been abdicated by the Single Judge of the High Court, in favour of the Magistrate. Having found the appellant guilty under Section 138 of the Act it was the bounden duty of the High Court to impose appropriate sentence commensurate with the facts of the case. (Para 26). Kumar Exports v. Sharma Carpets, (2009) 2 SCC 513.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-2008]

[Ed.: The Supreme Court however reversed the High Court's finding that the appellant was guilty under Section 138.]

(16) Rehearing/retrial

[5746] — S. 386 — Rehearing of appeal by High Court — When warranted — Appeals before High Court disposed of in absence of counsel for accused-appellants — It was specifically stated before Supreme Court that after the case was entrusted to a particular lawyer, he had suffered from some mental ailment and was not attending court, and that is how appeals came to be disposed of in absence of counsel for accused-appellants —

In view of these peculiar circumstances, held, it would be appropriate for High Court to rehear the appeals. Lallu Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2005) 10 SCC 242: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1511.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-10-2004]

[5747] — S. 386 — Retrial cannot be ordered without setting aside judgment passed by the trial court. Avtar Singh v. Bhajan Singh, (1998) 2 SCC 750: 1998 SCC (Cri) 680: AIR 1998 SC 2910.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and V.N. Khare, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-11-1997]

[5748] — Ss. 386, 311 and 391 — Retrial — Approach to be taken by trial court — Material to be considered — Moulding of relief — Retrial ordered by High Court — Though a retrial not found to be warranted on facts, since retrial as directed by High Court had already commenced and much further evidence had already been recorded, Supreme Court declining to set aside retrial and whole judgment of High Court — In light of certain observations of High Court likely to prejudice the accused, Supreme Court, however, cautioning trial court to make its decision in said retrial uninfluenced by such observations and on basis of all the evidence on record (recorded both at the initial trial and retrial) — Constitution of India — Art. 136

The Supreme Court was informed that before it had stayed operation of the impugned judgment, the retrial as directed by the High Court had already commenced. The trial Judge had recorded the statement of the father of the deceased and only the remaining part of the evidence was to be recorded.

Held:

In exercise of the discretionary jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution and keeping in view the stage of retrial the whole judgment of the High Court is not being set aside. However, the trial Judge, after retrial, shall take a decision on the basis of the entire evidence on record and strictly in accordance with law, without in any manner, being influenced or inhibited by anything said on the evidence in the judgment of the High Court or the Supreme Court. (Paras 20, 21 and 28). Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115: 2005 SCC (Cri) 276: 2005 Cri LJ 648: (2004) 3 KLT 1098.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-2004]

[5749] — Ss. 386 and 157 — Retrial — Dishonest and faulty investigation — High Court coming to definite conclusion as to — Held, per se sufficient justification to have directed retrial of the case (Para 70). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Karnel Singh v. State of M.P., (1995) 5 SCC 518: 1995 SCC (Cri) 977; Paras Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1999) 2 SCC 126: 1999 SCC (Cri) 104; Ram Bihari Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1998) 4 SCC 517: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1085; Amar Singh v. Balwinder Singh, (2003) 2 SCC 518: 2003 SCC (Cri) 641, relied on

Clarified in Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115

[5750] — Ss. 386 and 391 — Retrial — Additional evidence taken on record — Held, retrial not a necessary corollary when additional evidence taken on record

It is not that the Court has to be satisfied that the additional evidence would be necessary for rendering a verdict different from what was rendered by the trial court. Merely because the High Court permits additional evidence to be adduced, it does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the judgment of the trial court was wrong. In a given case even after assessing the additional evidence, the High Court can maintain the verdict of the trial court and similarly the High Court on consideration of the additional evidence can upset the trial court's verdict. It all depends upon the relevance and acceptability of the additional evidence and its qualitative worth in deciding the guilt or innocence of the accused. Moreover, whenever additional evidence is accepted, retrial is not a necessary corollary. (Paras 58, 59, 73 and 21). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Clarified in Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115

[5751] — Ss. 386 and 391 — Retrial when to be ordered — Held, whether retrial under S. 386 or taking up of additional evidence under S. 391 proper procedure will depend on facts and circumstances of each case — No straitjacket formula of universal and invariable application can be formulated — Ultimately courts must keep in view their very raison d'être, that is, to find out the truth and dispense justice impartially, in this regard — On facts, case found to be one writ large with serious infirmities, telltale even to the naked eye of an ordinary man, arbitrariness, where truth had become a casualty, without parallel, and which stood on its own as an exemplary one, special of its kind, necessary to prevent its recurrence and therefore fit and proper for retrial — Further held, a retrial in the

(16) Rehearing/retrial (contd.)

case on hand was essentially called for, in order to save and preserve the justice-delivery system, unsullied and unscathed by vested interests — Retrial directed to be taken up on a day-to-day basis, to be concluded by December 2004

Whether a retrial under Section 386 or taking up of additional evidence under Section 391 is the proper procedure will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case for which no straitjacket formula of universal and invariable application can be formulated. In the ultimate analysis whether it is a case covered by Section 386 or Section 391 CrPC, 1973, the underlying object which the court must keep in view is the very reason for which the courts exist i.e. to find out the truth and dispense justice impartially and ensure also that the very process of courts is not employed or utilized in a manner which gives room to unfairness or lend themselves to be used as instruments of oppression and injustice. (Paras 52, 53 and 73)

It is not necessary to highlight all the infirmities in the judgment of the High Court or the approach of the trial court lest nothing credible or worth mentioning remains in the process. There are several infirmities which are telltale even to the naked eye of an ordinary common man. The entire approach of the High Court suffers from serious infirmities, its conclusions lopsided and lacks proper or judicious application of mind. Arbitrariness is found writ large on the approach as well as the conclusions arrived at in the judgment under challenge, in unreasonably keeping out relevant evidence from being brought on record. This appears to be a case where the truth has become a casualty in the trial. It is a fit and proper case, in the background of the nature of additional evidence sought to be adduced and the perfunctory manner of trial conducted on the basis of tainted investigation, where a retrial is a must and essentially called for in order to save and preserve the justice-delivery system unsullied and unscathed by vested interests. The case on hand is without parallel and comparison to any of the cases where even such grievances were sought to be made. It stands on its own as an exemplary one, special of its kind, necessary to prevent its recurrence. (Paras 73, 70, 59 and 21)

If the accused persons were not on bail at the time of conclusion of the trial, they shall go back to custody, if on the other hand they were on bail that order shall continue unless modified by the court concerned. It would be appropriate if the retrial is taken up on day-to-day basis keeping in view the mandate of Section 309 CrPC and completed by the end of December 2004. (Para 85). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Clarified in Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115

[5752] — Ss. 386(b), 374(2) and 218 — Joint sessions trial — Misjoinder of charges pleaded in appeal by the sixteen convicted out of forty-two put on trial — No appeal by State against the acquittals — Held, High Court could not in appeal under S. 374(2) order retrial de novo and reverse the acquittals in such situation

The High Court failed to appreciate that in an appeal by the respondents under S. 374(2) of the Code, the order of acquittal passed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge as against the 26 other accused could not be interfered with. The retrial directed by the High Court must necessarily revise the prosecution and must result in a trial de novo against the 42 accused. The 26 other accused acquitted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge were not impleaded as parties to the appeals before the High Court. In the absence of an appeal preferred by the State Government against their acquittal, the High Court could not under S. 386(b) on an appeal by the respondents against their conviction, alter the acquittal nor can there be a splitting up of the trial. State of W.B. v. Laisal Haque, (1989) 3 SCC 166: 1989 SCC (Cri) 513: AIR 1989 SC 129: 1989 Cri LJ 865.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-9-1988]

State of Karnataka v. Narsa Reddy, (1987) 4 SCC 170: 1987 SCC (Cri) 744, followed

(17) Interference by Supreme Court

See also S. 386, '(18) Remand/Final disposal by Supreme Court', below

See fully under CONSTITUTION OF INDIA, Arts. 134 to 136 in Vol. 8, Complete Digest of Supreme Court Cases, 2nd Edn.

[5753] — S. 386 — Question of appreciation of evidence and not a substantial question of law raised in appeal under Art. 136 — Both the views of trial court and High Court on the evidence possible — In the circumstances, held, Supreme Court would not ordinarily interfere with the view taken by the High Court — Constitution of India — Art. 136. State of A.P. v. P. Anjaneyulu, (1984) 2 SCC 445: 1984 SCC (Cri) 269: AIR 1982 SC 1598.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-11-1982]

[5754] — S. 386 — Criminal appeal — Supreme Court's interference with High Court's judgment when called for, restated — Constitution of India — Art. 136

The appellate court will not abjure its duty to prevent miscarriage of justice by interfering where interference is imperative. Where doubt is based on irrelevant grounds or where the court allows itself to be deflected by red herrings drawn across the track, or where the evidence accepted by the trial court is rejected by the High Court after a perfunctory consideration or where the baneful approach of the court has resulted in vital and crucial evidence being ignored or for any such adequate reason, the court should feel obliged to secure the ends of justice, to appease the judicial conscience, as it were. (Para 7). State of M.P. v. Dharkole, (2004) 13 SCC 308: 2005 SCC (Cri) 225: AIR 2005 SC 44: 2005 Cri LJ 108.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-10-2004]

[5755] — S. 386 — Appeal against acquittal — In absence of any illegality in the judgment of the High Court, no interference of Supreme Court called for. State of Maharashtra v. Sadruddin Jan Mohd. Bardia, 1992 Supp (3) SCC 77: 1992 SCC (Cri) 974.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-1-1992]

[5756] — S. 386 — Appeal against High Court's reversal of acquittal — Supreme Court can re-examine the evidence. Bollavaram Pedda Narsi Reddy v. State of A.P., (1991) 3 SCC 434: 1991 SCC (Cri) 586: AIR 1991 SC 1468: 1991 Cri LJ 1833.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-1991]

[5757] — S. 386 — Appeal by special leave — Concurrent findings — Conviction recorded by trial court and confirmed by High Court based on appreciation of evidence — Supreme Court would not interfere. Shrishail Nageshi Pare v. State of Maharashtra, (1985) 2 SCC 341: 1985 SCC (Cri) 235: AIR 1985 SC 866: 1985 Cri LJ 1173.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-3-1985]

[5758] — S. 386 — Appeal to Supreme Court against conviction — One of several accused succeeding in appeal — Held, where findings interdependent and inextricably integrated the benefit will go to non-appealing co-accused as well — Constitution of India — Art.136. Hari Nath v. State of U.P., (1988) 1 SCC 14: 1988 SCC (Cri) 14: AIR 1988 SC 345: 1988 Cri LJ 422.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-1987]

[5759] — S. 386 — Criminal appeal — Though Supreme Court may view the evidence differently interference with acquittal by High Court not justified when the view taken by it was reasonably possible. State of U.P. v. Gopi, 1980 Supp SCC 160: 1979 SCC (Cri) 630: 1979 Cri LJ 1121: 1979 ALJ 985.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-3-1979]

[5760] — S. 386 — Normally Supreme Court would not interfere with High Court's conclusion based on proper appreciation of evidence. Ram Sharan Yadav v. Thakur Muneshwar Nath Singh, (1984) 4 SCC 649: AIR 1985 SC 24.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-10-1984]

[5761] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — High Court while disposing of appeal not applying its mind to the facts of the case — Merely repeating what was stated in the judgment of the trial court — Held, necessary for Supreme Court to carefully scrutinise the evidence on record since the High Court, even though the first court of appeal, failed to do so — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 1). Hans Raj v. State of Haryana, (2004) 12 SCC 257: AIR 2004 SC 2790: 2004 Cri LJ 1759.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-2004]

Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1088; Sanju v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1141; State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73: 1994 SCC (Cri) 107, relied on [5762] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Acquittal by High Court — Interference by Supreme Court, when not permissible — Appeal against acquittal — Interference with the finding of the High Court — Held, not permissible where the view taken by the High Court is a possible and reasonable view — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 21). Vimal Suresh Kamble v. Chaluverapinake Apal S.P., (2003) 3 SCC 175: 2003 SCC (Cri) 596: AIR 2003 SC 818: 2003 Cri LJ 910.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-2003]

[5763] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Acquittal by High Court based on perverse reasoning, held, not proper — Appeal against acquittal — Interference by Supreme Court — When justified — Reasoning of High Court for acquitting the accused wholly perverse — Evidence on record giving only one view which was neither ambivalent nor capable of an alternate appreciation consistent with innocence of the accused — Held, judgment of High Court liable to be set aside — Convictions recorded

(17) Interference by Supreme Court (contd.)

by trial court, affirmed — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 9 and 23 to 25). Prithvi v. Mam Raj, 2005 SCC (Cri) 198: AIR 2004 SC 2729.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-2-2004]

Harijana Thirupala v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of A.P., (2002) 6 SCC 470: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1370; Kali Ram v. State of H.P., (1973) 2 SCC 808: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1048, distinguished on facts

State of U.P. v. Gokaran, 1984 Supp SCC 482: 1985 SCC (Cri) 41, relied on [5764] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Interference by Supreme Court — When justified — Reasoning of High Court for acquitting the accused wholly perverse — Evidence on record giving only one view which was neither ambivalent nor capable of an alternate appreciation consistent with innocence of the accused — Held, judgment of High Court liable to be set aside — Convictions recorded by trial court, affirmed — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 9 and 23 to 25). Prithvi v. Mam Raj, (2004) 13 SCC 279: 2005 SCC (Cri) 198: AIR 2004 SC 2729.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-2-2004]

Harijana Thirupala v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of A.P., (2002) 6 SCC 470: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1370; Kali Ram v. State of H.P., (1973) 2 SCC 808: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1048, distinguished on facts

State of U.P. v. Gokaran, 1984 Supp SCC 482: 1985 SCC (Cri) 41, relied on [5765] — Ss. 386, 374(2) and 368(c) — Reversal of judgment of trial court by High Court — Interference by Supreme Court — Scope — Held, normally, unless the finding of the High Court is either arbitrary or perverse, Supreme Court would not interfere — On facts, judgment of High Court acquitting accused who was awarded death sentence, held, proper — Constitution of India, Arts. 134 and 136 (Para 5). State of T.N. v. Sundar, (2003) 12 SCC 695: AIR 2004 SC 1216: 2004 Cri LJ 913.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2003]

[5766] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — High Court in an appeal against conviction reversing the finding of fact recorded by the trial court and acquitting nine accused of the charges under Ss. 302/149 etc. IPC as well as altering the conviction of one accused from S. 302 to S. 304 Pt. I IPC — Held, where the High Court had discussed all the aspects having bearing on the question in issue, the said finding of the High Court could not be disturbed in an appeal against acquittal under Art. 136 merely because a different view such as the one adopted by the trial court could be taken — Circumstances in which such an interference is permissible, restated — On facts, any interference with the finding of fact reached by the High Court in favour of the accused persons, held, was not called for — However, acquittal of the accused-Respondent 1 by the High Court, held, was not justified as he had clearly exceeded the right of private defence

The learned Sessions Judge recorded the finding that the accused formed themselves into an unlawful assembly with the common object of taking forcible possession of the land in question which was in possession of PW 5. The Sessions Court did not accept the plea that the accused acted in exercise of the right of private defence of property. The High Court did not agree with the trial court's findings as regards possession of the land. The High Court was of the view that the deceased and his partisans went to the field to take possession thereof forcibly and in order to ward off their attempts and to save the property from their onslaughts, the accused had to defend themselves. The High Court held that Respondent 10, who gave the fatal blow to deceased B with a deadly weapon, exceeded his right of self-defence and therefore he was liable to be punished under Section 304 Part I instead of Section 302. The High Court observed that Respondents 1 to 9 were within their rights to inflict injuries on the complainant party short of causing death in exercise of the right of private defence of property. (Paras 4 and 5)

In this appeal against acquittal under Article 136, the Supreme Court cannot disturb the finding of fact reached by the High Court unless it is perverse or the material evidence is overlooked or an erroneous legal approach is adopted. The High Court had discussed all the aspects having a bearing on the question of possession. One more aspect noticed by the High Court in doubting the prosecution story is that no evidence has been let in to prove the allegation that crop was damaged by the cattle allegedly let loose by the accused. Thus, the finding of the High Court cannot be disturbed merely because a different view such as the one adopted by the trial court could be taken. (Paras 5 and 6)

The judgment of the High Court cannot be faulted excepting insofar as the acquittal of Respondent 1 is concerned. PW 6 suffered a grievous hurt within the meaning of clause eighthly of Section 320 on account of stab injuries inflicted by Respondent 1 with bhala. Such a brutal attack on PW 6 could have been avoided by Respondent 1, especially when PW 6 was unarmed and the other accused, at least two of them, had simultaneously started attacking him. The fourth clause of Section

99 IPC lays down the extent to which the right of private defence is available. Thus, Respondent 1 clearly exceeded his right of private defence and caused much more harm than necessary. Therefore, he is liable to be punished under Section 326 read with Section 322 IPC. (Paras 7, 9, 8 and 10). State of Haryana v. Sher Singh, (2002) 9 SCC 356: AIR 2002 SC 3223.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-9-2002]

[5767] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Reversal of conviction by High Court — Interference under Art. 136 by the Supreme Court — Reversal of conviction by High Court under a total misconception of principles of law and vital facts proved — Interference in such case, held, permissible — Constitution of India — Art. 136

Where the High Court is shown to have completely failed in appreciating the true effect of the materials brought on record and its findings are erroneous, perverse and result in miscarriage of justice, the Supreme Court will have no hesitation to interfere, all the more so when the High Court has chosen to reverse a verdict of conviction recorded by the learned trial Judge, under a total misconception of the principles of law as well as the vital and essential facts proved. (Para 7). Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Jaspal Singh, (2003) 10 SCC 586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-2003]

[5768] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Supreme Court's interference under Art. 136 justified where High Court's order of acquittal setting aside conviction recorded by trial court is perverse, illegal or unjustified — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 — Constitution of India — Art. 136

The scope of appeals under Art. 136 is very much limited. The Supreme Court does not exercise its overriding powers under Art. 136 to reweigh the evidence. The Court does not disturb the concurrent findings of fact reached upon proper appreciation. Even if two views are reasonably possible, one indicating conviction and other acquittal, Court will not interfere with the order of acquittal. But the Court will not hesitate to interfere if the acquittal is perverse in the sense that no reasonable person would have come to that conclusion, or if the acquittal is manifestly illegal or grossly unjust. State of U.P. v. Anil Singh, 1988 Supp SCC 686: 1989 SCC (Cri) 48: AIR 1988 SC 1998.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-1988]

[5769] — Ss. 386 and 378 — Appeal against acquittal — Acquittal affirmed by High Court — Interference with, in absence of any reason therefor, held, not warranted

Coming to the appeal filed by the State in respect of which both the trial court and the High Court recorded acquittal, it is seen that there was no acceptable material. This aspect has been analysed in great detail by the trial court and the High Court and there is no reason to interfere with the conclusions of the courts below in that regard. (Para 36). Bodhraj v. State of J&K, (2002) 8 SCC 45: AIR 2002 SC 3164.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ruma Pal and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-2002]

[5770] — Ss. 386 & 378 — Appeal as of right by accused whose acquittal by trial court reversed by the High Court — Scope of appeal before Supreme Court — Held extends to all questions of facts and law — Therefore tests laid down by Supreme Court in appeals by special leave under Art. 136 for finding substantial and compelling reasons on behalf of the High Court to sustain its exercise of power under Ss. 378 and 386, Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, held not relevant. Bhajan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1978) 4 SCC 77: 1978 SCC (Cri) 515: AIR 1978 SC 1759: 1979 Cri LJ 7.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Jaswant Singh and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-1978]

[5771] — S. 386 — Interference by Supreme Court — Justified where High Court completely misdirected itself in reversing order of conviction passed by trial court — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Gauri Shanker Sharma v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 656: AIR 1990 SC 709: (1990) 1 Crimes 196.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-1990]

[5772] — S. 386 — Criminal appeal — Acquittal by High Court not justified on facts and reversed. State of U.P. v. Nagau, (1979) 3 SCC 427: 1979 SCC (Cri) 647: AIR 1979 SC 1568: 1979 Cri LJ 1082.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-3-1979]

[5773] — S. 386 — Criminal appeal — Reversal of acquittal justified where the High Court misread the evidence and based its findings on mere conjectures. Mohan Lal v. Ajit Singh, (1978) 3 SCC 279: 1978 SCC (Cri) 378: AIR 1978 SC 1183: 1978 Cri LJ 1107.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Shinghal and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1978]

(17) Interference by Supreme Court (contd.)

[5774] — S. 386 — Interference by Supreme Court — Identification and motive of accused and recovery of crime weapon from them — Conviction recorded by trial Court on the basis of evidence regarding — High Court finding the evidence to be unreliable — View of the High Court also reasonable and not perverse or wholly unsound — Thus at the most, two views can be said to be possible — Hence Supreme Court's interference under Art. 136 with High Court's acquittal not called for — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 148, 302, 323, 324, 395 and 396 — Constitution of India — Art.136. State of U.P. v. Lalla Singh, (1990) 2 SCC 687: 1990 SCC (Cri) 410: AIR 1990 SC 1013: (1990) 2 Crimes 280.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-1990]

[5775] — S. 386 — Acquittal by courts below under S. 401 IPC — Upheld by Supreme Court — No alternative charge under S. 410 IPC — Nor plea for conviction under S. 410 IPC canvassed in courts below — In such situation Supreme Court cannot in appeal under Art. 136 convict under S. 410 especially when findings of fact were that none of the acquitted were found in possession of stolen property knowing it to be stolen — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 410 and 401. Pandara Nadar v. State of T.N., 1991 Supp (2) SCC 458: 1991 SCC (Cri) 1069: AIR 1991 SC 391: 1991 Cri LJ 468.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-11-1990]

[5776] — S. 386 — Practice — Criminal appeal — Acquittal based on construction of statutory provision not approved by Supreme Court — However other defences had not been considered — In view of peculiar circumstances acquittal not disturbed. Balakrishna Pillai v. Matha Medicals, (1991) 2 SCC 203: 1991 SCC (Cri) 461: 1991 Cri LJ 691: (1991) 1 Crimes 448.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and J.S. Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-1-1991]

[5777] — S. 386 — State seeming not interested in pursuing the prosecution — Besides criminal proceedings pending for more than 10 years — Directed to be dropped in the interest of justice. Munshi Ram Ram Niwas v. Collector, Food and Supplies Department, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 310: 1991 SCC (Cri) 1037: AIR 1993 SC 1203: (1991) 55 ELT 452.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.H. Kania, N.M. Kasliwal and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-1991]

[5778] — S. 386(b) — Scope of appellate power under — Where more than one person charged with the aid of S. 34 or 149 or 120-B IPC but only one convicted and others acquitted by trial court, held, it is still open to appellate court, if it disagrees with trial court's conclusion of facts, to ascertain involvement of the acquitted persons for the limited purpose of finding criminality of other accused with the aid of Ss. 34/149/120-B

In the matter of appreciation of the evidence the powers of the appellate court are as wide as that of the trial court. It has full power to review the whole evidence. It is entitled to go into the entire evidence and all relevant circumstances to arrive at its own conclusion about the guilt or innocence of the accused. The provisions of S. 386(b) do not create a bar against the appellate court considering indirectly and incidentally a case against the person who was acquitted, if that becomes necessary when dealing with the case in the appeal presented on behalf of the other accused who are convicted. In considering the evidence as a whole, the appellate court may come to the conclusion that the evidence against the person acquitted was also good and need not have been discarded. When several persons are alleged to have committed an offence in furtherance of the common intention and all except one are acquitted, it is open to the appellate court to find out on a reappraisal of the evidence that some of the accused persons have been wrongly acquitted, although it could not interfere with such acquittal in the absence of an appeal by the State Government. The effect of such a finding is not to reverse the order of acquittal into one of conviction or visit the acquitted person with criminal liability. The finding is relevant only in invoking against the convicted person his constructive criminality. (Para 8). Brathi v. State of Punjab, (1991) 1 SCC 519: 1991 SCC (Cri) 203: AIR 1991 SC 318: 1991 Cri LJ 402.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-10-1990]

Sunder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1962 SC 1211: 1962 Supp 2 SCR 654: (1962) 2 Cri LJ 290, relied on

(18) Remand/Final disposal by Supreme Court

See also S. 386, '(17) Interference by Supreme Court', above

See also under CONSTITUTION OF INDIA, Art. 136 in Vol. 8, Complete Digest of Supreme Court Cases, 2nd Edn.

[5779] — S. 386 — Appeal against acquittal — Juristic status of rules altered — Remittal of case for rehearing — Accused-respondent acquitted by trial court on ground of contravention of relevant Rules — Meanwhile, Supreme Court in another case however holding the concerned Rule to be purely directory — Trial court having acquitted the respondent on that one point alone, he had no occasion to raise other points in his defence — Hence, acquittal set aside and case remitted to trial court for disposal after hearing both parties — Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, R. 22. Municipal Corpn. of Delhi v. Singh Cheung Co., (1982) 1 SCC 487: 1982 SCC (Cri) 259.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-3-1980]

[5780] — S. 386 — Improper disposal of appeal — High Court acted improperly in setting aside the conviction by merely brushing aside the testimony of eyewitnesses on the solitary testimony in opposition without discussing the evidence and without reaching any conclusion of unworthiness or unreliability against the eyewitnesses — Matter remanded for disposal afresh — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/149, 148 and 147. State of U.P. v. Raj Nath, (1983) 1 SCC 204: 1983 SCC (Cri) 162: AIR 1983 SC 187: 1983 Cri LJ 347: 1983 ALJ 817.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-12-1982]

[5781] — Ss. 386 and 374 — Remand — High Court not examining the testimony of the witnesses and other evidence on merits — Matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 18 and 50 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 27). State of H.P. v. Pawan Kumar, (2005) 4 SCC 350: 2005 SCC (Cri) 943: AIR 2005 SC 2265: 2005 Cri LJ 2208.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-4-2005]

[5782] — Ss. 386 and 374 — Plea raised in respect of a fact not considered by High Court — Since the crucial plea of alibi raised by appellant escaped discussion and a finding in relation thereto by the High Court, matter remanded to High Court for disposal afresh — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 r/w S. 34 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 11 — Alibi

The plea of alibi has not been considered at all by the High Court in the appeal filed by the appellant. There appears to be no reason as to why the crucial plea raised by the appellant escaped discussion and a finding by the final fact-finding court. Therefore, it is difficult to consider the correctness of the said plea in this appeal filed under Article 136. (Para 4). Akanti Gopala Rao v. State of A.P., (2002) 10 SCC 265.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2000]

[5783] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Acquittal by High Court based on erroneous conclusion arrived at without applying mind to the evidence on record objectively — Matter remitted to High Court for decision afresh — Thirteen persons killing all family members of PW 4 and M (including children) — Names of accused-respondents indicated in FIR but not in so-called dying declaration made by PW 4 (who survived later on) — Acquittal of respondents by High Court merely on the said ground — Held on facts, was not proper — High Court did not apply its mind to the evidence on record objectively — Matter remitted for decision afresh — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/149, 307/149, 452, 148 and 147 (Para 6). State of U.P. v. Veer Singh, (2004) 10 SCC 117: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1672: 2004 All LJ 2809: 2004 Cri LJ 3835.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2004]

[5784] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Acquittal by High Court based on unsatisfactory analysis of evidence and erroneous approach to the statutory prescriptions — Held, matter was required to be remitted to High Court for decision afresh in accordance with law — Charas weighing 100 kg concealed in cavity of jeep — Recovery of, when jeep brought at Customs Office and searched in the presence of Superintendent, Customs — Conviction of accused driver, the sole occupant of jeep — Reversal of, by High Court — Propriety — Acquittal by High Court on grounds that (i) the owner of the vehicle and two other persons who accompanied the accused for a part of the journey were real culprits, (ii) the accused only possessed Rs 150 at the time of his arrest and he did not run away, (iii) prosecution failed to prove conscious possession, and (iv) that there was violation of S. 42, NDPS Act, held, was based on surmises and conjectures — Since High Court had not considered the effect of (i) admission of the accused before the Customs Authorities, (ii) presumption under S. 54, NDPS Act, and (iii) evidence relating to dispatch of information to the superior authorities, held, matter was required to be adjudicated afresh in accordance with law taking into account the evidence on record and applicable provisions of the governing statute — Hence, remitted to High Court — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 20(b)(ii), 23 and 54 (Paras 14 and 15). Union of India v. Munna, (2004) 7 SCC 178: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1905: 2004 All LJ 3244.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2004]

(18) Remand/Final disposal by Supreme Court (contd.)

[5785] — S. 386 — Practice — Final disposal by Supreme Court — Conviction (under S. 148 RPC 1989 Smvt.) set aside — But instead of adopting the usual course of remanding the matter to the High Court, accused acquitted, having regard to long lapse of time and simple injuries sustained by the complainant — Constitution of India, Art. 134. Naba Parray v. State of J & K, AIR 1982 SC 1200.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-1982]

[5786] — S. 386 — Charge wrongfully quashed by High Court — Even so matter should not be restored where in the fact situation owing to delay it would be difficult to collect the evidence to sustain the charge — Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956. State of A.P. v. P. Jagannadhan, (1982) 3 SCC 365: 1983 SCC (Cri) 47.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and O. Chinnappa Reddy, J. [Date of decision: 9-11-1982]

[5787] — Ss. 386 & 370 — Appeal before Supreme Court against acquittal of accused — High Court's order of acquittal made without considering the evidence — Reasons given for acquittal, found unsustainable — High Court's decision, though could be reversed on that ground alone, the evidence also scrutinised by the Supreme Court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/149, 307/149 and 148. State of U.P. v. Ram Swarup, 1988 Supp SCC 262: 1988 SCC (Cri) 552: AIR 1988 SC 1028: 1988 ALJ 555: (1988) 1 Crimes 994.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.L. Oza, B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-1988]

[5788] — Ss. 386 and 374(2) — Reversal of conviction by High Court by a non-reasoned judgment — Considering the long passage of time, matter not remanded to High Court and Supreme Court deciding the case by analysing the evidence on record (Para 15). Raj Kishore Jha v. State of Bihar, (2003) 11 SCC 519: 2004 SCC (Cri) 212: AIR 2003 SC 4664.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2003]

[5789] — S. 386 — Reversal of conviction by High Court not justified — Murder — Motive — Accused having an evil eye on the deceased established as a motive of the crime — Evidence of sole eyewitness, sister of deceased's husband, found reliable — Dying declaration of the deceased who was in a position to speak for about 10-15 minutes made to her mother-in-law who immediately reached there found acceptable — Recovery of revolver from the possession of the accused and evidence of ballistic expert that that very revolver had been used in firing at the deceased — Held, in the circumstances of the case, reversal of conviction by the High Court not justified — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. State of M.P. v. Dhirendra Kumar, (1997) 1 SCC 93: 1997 SCC (Cri) 54: AIR 1997 SC 318.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-1996]

[5790] — S. 386(b) — When Supreme Court's interference not called for — The High Court in appreciating the evidence as a whole kept in mind the well accepted principles and while recording a contrary finding taken care to dispel the reasons given by the Sessions Judge effectively — Held, High Court's judgment does not suffer from any infirmity — Hence Supreme Court's interference not called for (Paras 7, 21 and 22). Brathi v. State of Punjab, (1991) 1 SCC 519: 1991 SCC (Cri) 203: AIR 1991 SC 318: 1991 Cri LJ 402.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-10-1990]

[5791] — S. 386(b)(iii) — Improper reduction of sentence by High Court in serious offences — State not filing appeal against — Supreme Court expressing dismay on — Duty of State — Duty to ensure adequate sentencing of convicts — Improper reduction of sentence by High Court in serious offences committed by police personnel under Ss. 393 and 458 IPC — State not filing appeal against — Supreme Court expressing dismay on (Para 11). Ajmer Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 6 SCC 633: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1481.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2005]

[5792] — Ss. 386(b)(iii), 374(2) and 377 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — Enhancement of sentence from life imprisonment to death sentence by High Court — Propriety of — Trial court having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case and upon hearing the accused thought it proper to impose life imprisonment — Neither any appeal preferred nor any argument advanced by the State for enhancement of sentence, before the High Court — Imposition of death penalty by High Court, held on facts, was not proper — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 498-A (Para 25). Sardar Khan v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 2 SCC 442: 2004 SCC (Cri) 564: AIR 2004 SC 1695: 2004 Cri LJ 910.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-2004]

— S. 387 See Ss. 357 and 421 & 431 and 374 and 389 & 387

— S. 388 See Ss. 386 and 388

— S. 389 See also S. 426, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1227 in Vol. 2

— S. 389 See Ss. 357 and 421 & 431 and 374 and 389 & 387

See also Ss. 432, 433-A, 389 and 482

See also Ss. 436, 389, 437, 441 and 445

See also Ss. 437, 439, 438 and 389

See also Ss. 439 and 389

See also Ss. 439, 437 and 389

[5793] — S. 389 — Applicability — Bail pending appeal against conviction — Parameters to be adopted while dealing with application for bail by suspension of sentence during pendency of appeal, restated — On facts, Respondent 2 convicted for offences punishable under Ss. 302 and 506 IPC — High Court allowing prayer for bail during pendency of appeal — Sustainability — Appellant informant contending that approach of High Court was clearly erroneous and as conviction was recorded by trial court after finding the evidence credible and cogent, High Court should not have by a cryptic order granted bail — Held, High Court's order shows complete non-application of mind and non-consideration of relevant aspects — Impugned order, therefore, unsustainable — Bail cancelled and matter remitted to High Court for reconsideration in accordance with law (Paras 10, 3, 2, 5, 7, 12 and 13). Khilari v. State of U.P., (2008) 11 SCC 180: AIR 2008 SC 1882: (2008) 3 All LJ 488.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-2008]

Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohammad, (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669, relied on [5794] — S. 389 — Applicability — Parameters to be observed by High Court while dealing with application for suspension of sentence and grant of bail, restated — On facts, respondents convicted by trial court, granted bail by High Court primarily on grounds that when bail was granted during trial liberty was not misused, that there was likelihood of delay in disposal of appeals and in one case because evidence appeared to be scanty — Sustainability — Contention of State that bail was granted without indicating any plausible reason, much less, the reasons contemplated under S. 389 and seriousness of allegations for which respondent-accused were convicted was completely lost sight of — Held, parameters to be applied in cases where life or death sentence is imposed, may not be applicable to other cases, but, the gravity of offence, sentence imposed and several other similar factors need to be considered by the court — Fact that accused were on bail during trial was certainly not a relevant factor — Herein, reasons indicated by High Court for granting bail do not satisfy the parameters — Trial court considering the gravity of offence had directed the sentences to run consecutively — This aspect was also not considered by High Court — In the circumstances, impugned order in each case is indefensible and is set aside — Considering that High Court had not applied correct principles, matter remitted to it for reconsidering all relevant aspects and passing orders in accordance with law (Paras 10, 4, 6 and 11). State of Maharashtra v. Madhukar Wamanrao Smarth, (2008) 5 SCC 721: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 52: AIR 2008 SC 1793: 2008 Cri LJ 2591.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-3-2008]

Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Vasant Tukaram Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1052, relied on [5795] — S. 389 — Effect of order under, suspending sentence or order appealed against — Held (per curiam), what is suspended under S. 389 is not the conviction or sentence — It is only the execution of the sentence or order which is suspended; and it is suspended, not obliterated (Para 42). K. Prabhakaran v. P. Jayarajan, (2005) 1 SCC 754: 2005 SCC (Cri) 451: AIR 2005 SC 688: (2005) 1 KLT 510.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J.[1] and Shivaraj V. Patil[1], K.G. Balakrishnan[2], B.N. Srikrishna[1] and G.P. Mathur[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-2005]

Bengal Immunity Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, (1955) 2 SCR 603: AIR 1955 SC 661, relied on

[5796] — S. 389 — Power of appellate court to suspend conviction

Section 389(1), speaks of suspending "the execution of the sentence or order", it does not expressly speak of suspension of conviction. Even so, it may be possible to say that in certain situations, the appellate court may also have the power to suspend the conviction. Director of Collegiate Education (Admn.) v. S. Nagoor Meera, (1995) 3 SCC 377: 1995 SCC (L&S) 686: (1995) 29 ATC 574: AIR 1995 SC 1364: (1995) 2 SLR 379.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Jeevan Reddy and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-2-1995]

[5797] — S. 389 — Power of the appellate court under — Scope — The appellate court, held, can suspend only the execution of the sentence and not the sentence itself — An order of the appellate court suspending the sentence, held, has to be treated as erroneously worded and should be understood as suspending only the execution of the sentence — Such an order, further held, would not remove the disqualification incurred by a candidate under S. 8(3) of Representation of the People Act — Representation of the People Act, 1951, Ss. 8 to 10-A

Contending that the second respondent was not disqualified for the membership of the State Legislature, the respondents submitted that: (a) the High Court's order suspending the sentence passed against the second respondent was tantamount to suspension of her conviction and that culminated in suspension of the disqualification, (b) under Section 8(3) of the Representation of the People Act (for short "the Act"), the disqualification was attracted on the date on which a person was convicted of any offence and sentenced to imprisonment for not less than two years. Since the conviction and the sentence could be on different dates it was unworkable that the disqualification should operate from the date of conviction which could precede the date of sentence and therefore, the conviction referred to in Section 8(3) should be taken to be that confirmed by the appellate court because it was only in the appellate court that conviction and sentence would be on the same day, (c) the disqualifications set down in Section 8 of the Act would not apply until a final court had affirmed the conviction and sentence and the principles underlying Section 8(4) should be read down so as to extend the principles underlying therein to non-legislators as well, otherwise Article 14 would stand violated, and (d) The presumption of innocence continued until the final judgment affirming the conviction and sentence was passed and, therefore, no disqualification operated at the present stage against the accused. Rejecting these contentions,

Held :

The High Court's order suspending the sentence of imprisonment awarded to the second respondent has to be read in the context of Section 389 under which the power was exercised. Under that provision it is not within the power of the appellate court to suspend the sentence; it can only suspend the execution of the sentence pending the disposal of appeal. The suspension of the sentence, as the Madras High Court erroneously called it, was in fact only the suspension of the execution of the sentences pending the disposal of the appeals filed by the second respondent. The fact that second respondent secured the suspension of the execution of the sentences against her did not alter or affect the convictions and the sentences imposed on her and she remained disqualified from seeking legislative office under Section 8(3). (Para 34). B.R. Kapur v. State of T.N., (2001) 7 SCC 231: AIR 2001 SC 3435.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: S.P. Bharucha[1], G.B. Pattanaik[2], Y.K. Sabharwal, Ruma Pal and Brijesh Kumar[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-2001]

[5798] — S. 389 — Conviction of candidate standing for election for criminal offence — Grant of stay of conviction by court before last date of filing nomination — Effect of stay would be to render the order of conviction non-operative from the date of stay and consequently the disqualification arising out of conviction would also cease to operate

Where the conviction itself is stayed, the effect is that the conviction will not be operative from the date of stay. An order of stay, of course, does not render the conviction non-existent, but only non-operative. Be that as it may. Insofar as the present case is concerned, an application was filed specifically seeking stay of the order of conviction specifying the consequences if conviction was not stayed, that is, the appellant would incur disqualification to contest the election. The High Court after considering the special reason, granted the order staying the conviction. As the conviction itself is stayed in contrast to a stay of execution of the sentence, it is not possible to accept the contention of the respondent that the disqualification arising out of conviction continues to operate even after stay of conviction. On the dates of nomination and election, in view of the said order staying conviction, the appellant was not disqualified. The question whether subsequently the conviction was set aside in appeal or whether the matter is in further challenge before the Supreme Court is of no relevance for deciding the point in issue. (Paras 15 and 17). Ravikant S. Patil v. Sarvabhouma S. Bagali, (2007) 1 SCC 673: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 417: (2007) 1 KLT 685.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J. and C.K. Thakker and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-11-2006]

State of T.N. v. A. Jaganathan, (1996) 5 SCC 329: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1026, relied on

Union of India v. Atar Singh, (2003) 12 SCC 434: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 461; State of Maharashtra v. Gajanan, (2003) 12 SCC 432: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 459; B.R. Kapur v. State of T.N., (2001) 7 SCC 231, distinguished

[5799] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence by the appellate court — Implication of — The sentence based on conviction get postponed or is kept in abeyance during pendency of appeal — Conviction however continues till it is set aside — Disciplinary action, such as dismissal or removal, against the govt. servant based on such conviction, held, will stand unimpaired during the pendency of the appeal

Under Section 389 of the CrPC, the appellate court has power to suspend the execution of sentence and to release the accused on bail. When the appellate court suspends execution of the sentence and grants bail to an accused, the effect of the order is that the sentence based on conviction is for the time being postponed, or kept in abeyance during the pendency of the appeal. In other words, by suspension of execution of sentence under Section 389 of CrPC an accused avoids undergoing sentence pending criminal appeal. However, the conviction continues and is not obliterated and if the conviction is not obliterated, any action taken against a government servant on a misconduct which lead to his conviction by the court of law does not lose its efficacy merely because the appellate court has suspended the execution of sentence. Such being the position of law, the Administrative Tribunal fell in error in holding that by suspension of execution of sentence by the appellate court, the order of dismissal passed against the respondent was liable to be quashed and the respondent is to be treated under suspension till disposal of criminal appeal by the High Court. Union of India v. Ramesh Kumar, (1997) 7 SCC 514: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1774: AIR 1997 SC 3531.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Venkataswami and V.N. Khare, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-1997]

[5800] — S. 389 — Suspension of "order appealed against" — Precondition for — Appellate court can suspend order of conviction only when the convict specifically shows the consequences that may follow if the order is not suspended or stayed — Further, grant of stay of conviction can be resorted to in rare cases depending upon the special facts of the case — Appellant charged of causing death of a person by inflicting fist-blows on head — Trial court acquitting the appellant — He then contested election and was elected as MP — But in State's appeal against acquittal, High Court convicted him under S. 304 Pt. II IPC and sentenced him to three years' RI and fine of Rs 1 lakh — In view of the order of conviction and sentence passed by High Court, appellant incurred a disqualification under S. 8(3) of Representation of the People Act, 1951 — Though he could have availed the protection under S. 8(4) of the Act of continuing to remain MP despite the disqualification by filing an appeal within three months, but he instead resigned from membership of Lok Sabha on moral ground and then chose to contest election again — Appellant filed appeal against High Court's order before Supreme Court which by an interim order suspended execution of the sentence — Appellant then moved application before Supreme Court seeking suspension or stay of High Court's order of conviction so as to enable him to contest the election — Having regard to prosecution evidence, judgments of trial court and High Court and other facts and circumstances, held, order of conviction deserved to be suspended/stayed — While considering the limited question whether the order of conviction should be suspended or stayed, submission that even if stay or suspension is granted the appellant would not be absolved of the disqualification is misplaced — Representation of the People Act, 1951, Ss. 7 and 8(3) & (4)

According to prosecution, when on 27-12-1988 the car, in which the deceased and his companions were travelling was obstructed by the vehicle of the appellant, the deceased raised objection on which the appellant lost his temper. He got down from his car, abused the deceased, dragged him out of the car and gave fist-blows as a result of which the deceased fell down and the appellant then escaped from the place. When the deceased was brought to the hospital, doctors declared him dead. In the post-mortem examination subdural haemorrhage in the temporal region of head was found present but there was no external injury. The doctor was unable to explain the cause of death but in cross-examination he opined that subdural haemorrhage is not fatal in all cases. The pathological examination report showed that the deceased had a very weak heart and his main arteries were blocked. The medical board after nearly a fortnight gave its opinion attributing the death to the effects of head injury and cardiac condition and not to any external injury. In the FIR lodged by a companion of the deceased as also in his statement in court recorded after more than 4 years, he did not assign any role of causing injury on the head of the deceased to the appellant. The appellant was tried for charge under Section 302 IPC but was acquitted by the trial court on 22-9-1999. The appellant thereafter was elected as a Member of Parliament. But pursuant to the State's appeal against acquittal, the High Court in December 2006 allowed the appeal and convicted the appellant under Section 304 Part II IPC and sentenced him to three years' RI and fine of Rs 1 lakh. Consequently, the appellant incurred a disqualification under Section 8(3) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 from being chosen as MP. The appellant filed an appeal before the Supreme Court against the judgment and order of the High Court. The Supreme Court passed an interim order staying execution of the sentence. The appellant then moved an application before the Supreme Court seeking suspension or stay of operation of the High Court's order of conviction pending the appeal on the ground that he was a sitting Member of Parliament on the date of the conviction and though he would not have incurred any disqualification and could have continued to remain as Member of Parliament by merely filing an appeal within three months and the protection would have enured to his benefit till the decision of the appeal by virtue of Section 8(4) of the Act but in order to set high standards in public life he immediately resigned from the membership of the Lok Sabha. He now wants to seek a fresh mandate from the electorate and wants to contest the election for membership of the Lok Sabha which is due to take place shortly on account of his resignation and that since now he wants to seek the mandate of the electorate again, the disqualification is required to be removed for that purpose.

Allowing the application,

Held :

Section 389(1) CrPC confers power not only to suspend the execution of sentence and to grant bail but also to suspend the operation of the order appealed against which means the order of conviction. Thus an appellate court can suspend or grant stay of order of conviction. But the person seeking stay of conviction should specifically draw the attention of the appellate court to the consequences that may arise if the conviction is not stayed. Unless the attention of the court is drawn to the specific consequences that would follow on account of the conviction, the person convicted cannot obtain an order of stay of conviction. Further, grant of stay of conviction can be resorted to in rare cases depending upon the special facts of the case. (Paras 4 and 6)

In this case, the incident happened all of a sudden without any premeditation. The deceased was wholly unknown to the appellant. There was no motive for commission of the crime. The medical evidence does not conclusively establish that the death occurred due to blow given on the head. If in the FIR, which is the earliest version, and, also in his statement in the court which was recorded after more than 4 years, the PW did not assign any role of causing injury on the head of the deceased to the appellant, whether his subsequent statement given after several years, wherein he assigned the specific role to the appellant of hitting the deceased on the head by a fist and thereby making him responsible for causing the death of the deceased should be believed, will certainly require consideration at the time of hearing the appeal. If the statement which the PW gave after several years wherein he attributed the head injury to the appellant is not accepted for the reason that it is at variance with the version in the FIR and his earlier statement, the appellant cannot be held guilty under Section 304 Part II IPC. These features of the case which touch upon the culpability of the appellant, prima facie appear to be in his favour. Another feature which has a bearing is that the findings on factual aspects of the case recorded in favour of the appellant by the Sessions Judge resulting in acquittal have been reversed in appeal by the High Court. (Para 17)

The incident which took place in 1988 has no correlation with the public life of the appellant which he entered much later in 2004 when he was elected as a Member of Parliament. It is not a case where he took advantage of his position as MP in commission of the crime. It was not necessary for the appellant to have resigned from the membership of Parliament as he could in law continue as MP by merely filing an appeal within a period of 3 months and had he adopted such a course he could have easily avoided incurring any disqualification at least till the decision of the appeal. However, he has chosen to adopt a moral path and has set high standards in public life by resigning from his seat and in seeking to get a fresh mandate from the people. In the event prayer made by the appellant is not granted he would suffer irreparable injury as he would not be able to contest for the seat which he held and has fallen vacant only on account of his voluntary resignation which he did on purely moral grounds. Having regard to the entire facts and circumstances mentioned above it must be held that it is a fit case where the order of conviction passed by the High Court deserves to be suspended. (Para 18)

The contention that the appellant would not be absolved of the disqualification even if an order of suspension or stay of the conviction is passed by the Supreme Court has no force. The Court here is dealing with the limited question viz. the prayer made by the appellant for suspending or staying the order of conviction. The Court is not required to adjudicate upon the question as to what will be the effect of the order and further whether he will continue to be disqualified for the purpose of contesting the election even if the prayer made by the appellant is granted as such an issue is wholly alien to the present controversy which can arise only in an election petition where the validity of the election may be called in question. (Para 22). Navjot Singh Sidhu v. State of Punjab, (2007) 2 SCC 574: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 627: AIR 2007 SC 1003: 2007 Cri LJ 1427: (2007) 52 AIC 174 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-1-2007]

Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513; Ravikant S. Patil v. Sarvabhouma S. Bagali, (2007) 1 SCC 673, relied on

B.R. Kapur v. State of T.N., (2001) 7 SCC 231; K. Prabhakaran v. P. Jayarajan, (2005) 1 SCC 754: 2005 SCC (Cri) 451, distinguished

[5801] — S. 389 — Stay or suspension of order of conviction — Distinction between — Effect of — Appellate court has power not only to suspend execution of sentence but also to stay order of conviction appealed against — Stay of order of conviction results in rendering the order temporarily non-operative — But this result does not ensue in case of suspension of the order under appeal — Where a person seeking to contest election to Legislative Assembly or Parliament, having incurred disqualification under S. 8(3) of RP Act, 1951 due to order of conviction of an offence and sentence passed against him by trial court, prefers appeal thereagainst and the appellate court only suspends the order of trial court and grants him bail, held, it would not amount to temporarily wiping out the conviction so as to remove the disqualification — Representation of the People Act, 1951, Ss. 8(3) and 100

By an order dated 9-5-2002 passed by the Addl. CJM, the appellant was convicted under Section 420 r/w Section 34 IPC and Section 468 r/w Section 34 IPC and was sentenced to two years' RI on each count and also under Section 471 IPC and sentenced to one year's RI. The appellant filed an appeal against the order before the Addl. Sessions Judge. He also filed an application before the appellate court under Section 389 CrPC seeking suspension of the sentence.

The appellate court by order dated 31-5-2002 suspended the judgment and order of the trial court dated 9-5-2002 and released the appellant on bail. The appellant filed nomination papers for election to Legislative Assembly. But in his affidavit filed along with the nomination, he did not disclose about the order of conviction and sentence passed against him. Therefore, his nomination was not cancelled by the Returning Officer. After counting of votes, the appellant was declared elected defeating the first respondent. The respondent filed an election petition alleging that the appellant was disqualified under Section 8(3) of the RP Act, 1951 in view of the order of conviction and sentence passed against him.

The defence of the appellant was that the judgment and order dated 9-5-2002 of the trial court having been stayed by the appellate court on 31-5-2002, he was not disqualified under Section 8(3) of the RP Act. The Single Judge of the High Court held that the Returning Officer committed an illegality in accepting the nomination of the appellant because the appellant's conviction was not stayed but suspended. Therefore, incumbent was disqualified at the time of scrutiny and accordingly the Single Judge decided this issue in favour of the election petitioner and consequently, the election petition was allowed and election was set aside.

In appeal before the Supreme Court, the question for consideration was whether suspension of the order of conviction and sentence by the appellate court in the criminal case amounted to staying of conviction of the appellant.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

It has been held in recent decisions of the Supreme Court that the appellate court has power to stay the execution of the conviction and if the appellate court has stayed the conviction then in that case, this will not operate as a disqualification. But simply order of suspension of the sentence will not operate as staying the conviction. It was specifically mentioned that the stay of order of the conviction will mean it is temporarily non-operative. (Para 11)

In the present case, the appellate court suspended the order of the trial court dated 9-5-2002 and granted the bail to the accused-appellant. The suspension does not mean the stay of the conviction. The application moved by the appellant before the Addl. Sessions Judge was a routine application under Section 389 whereby the appellant sought for the suspension of sentence. There is nothing in that application to suggest that the applicant therein had sought the stay of conviction in contradistinction to the suspension of sentence. Suspension does not amount to temporarily washing out the conviction. The conviction still remains, only the operation of the order and the sentence remain suspended but that does not amount to temporary stay of the conviction. A specific order staying conviction has to be sought. If the incumbent had been vigilant enough, he could have moved the court even later on for obtaining stay of the conviction, particularly in view of the fact that he wanted to contest the election but that was not done. (Paras 12 and 14). Lalsai Khunte v. Nirmal Sinha, (2007) 9 SCC 330: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.K. Mathur and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2007]

K. Prabhakaran v. P. Jayarajan, (2005) 1 SCC 754: 2005 SCC (Cri) 451; Sarat Chandra Rabha v. Khagendranath Nath, AIR 1961 SC 334; Ravikant S. Patil v. Sarvabhouma S. Bagali, (2007) 1 SCC 673: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 417; Navjot Singh Sidhu v. State of Punjab, (2007) 2 SCC 574: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 627; Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513, relied on [5802] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence and grant of bail by High Court pending appeal, does not obliterate the conviction — Imposition of penalty in departmental enquiry on conviction of criminal charge — Legality — Canara Bank employee convicted under Ss. 420, 477-A, IPC and S. 5(2) read with S. 5(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act — Notwithstanding the suspension of his sentence and grant of bail to him by the appellate court his conviction, held, not obliterated — Hence, provision in R. 11 of Discipline and Appeal Regulations for imposing penalty without following the ordinary procedure, held, attracted — Since the person concerned was not governed by Art. 311(2), the question whether disciplinary action could be taken during the pendency of criminal proceedings, left open — Canara Bank Officer Employees' (Discipline and Appeal) Regulations — Regns. 11, 6, 7 & 8 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420 and 477-A — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(1)(d) & (2) — Constitution of India, Art. 311(2). S. Vasundara v. Canara Bank, (1997) 9 SCC 523: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1204: (1997) 1 CLR 181: (1997) 1 LLJ 687.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-1996]

[5803] — Ss. 389 and 374 — Stay of conviction — Held, can be granted by court under S. 389 — But such stay to be granted only in exceptional and rare circumstances where non-grant of stay would lead to injustice and irreversible consequences — Person seeking stay must draw attention of the appellate court to specific consequences that may arise if conviction is not stayed, otherwise stay cannot be granted — In this case, appellant in his application [filed in his pending appeal under S. 374 CrPC] sought stay of his conviction under S. 376 IPC mentioning specific consequence of non-grant of stay i.e. that he would incur disqualification to contest election — Considering the facts and circumstances of the case High Court granted stay of the conviction — Effect of stay, on the disqualification bar under S. 8, RPA, 1951 discussed — Propriety of the stay was not in question

The Supreme Court in K.C. Sareen case observed that when conviction is on a corruption charge against a public servant, the appellate court should not suspend the order of conviction during the pendency of the appeal, even if the sentence of imprisonment is suspended. The Bench further observed that it would be a sublime public policy that the convicted public servant is kept under disability of the conviction in spite of keeping the sentence of imprisonment in abeyance till the disposal of the appeal or revision. These observations would equally apply when a prayer for stay of order of conviction is made so as to remove the disability to contest an election except, in a very exceptional and rare case. (Para 16.3)

Where the conviction itself is stayed, the effect is that the conviction will not be operative from the date of stay. An order of stay, of course, does not render the conviction non-existent, but only non-operative. Be that as it may. Insofar as the present case is concerned, an application was filed specifically seeking stay of the order of conviction specifying the consequences if conviction was not stayed, that is, the appellant would incur disqualification to contest the election. The High Court after considering the special reason, granted the order staying the conviction. As the conviction itself is stayed in contrast to a stay of execution of the sentence, it is not possible to accept the contention of the respondent that the disqualification arising out of conviction continues to operate even after stay of conviction. On the dates of nomination and election, in view of the said order staying conviction, the appellant was not disqualified. The question whether subsequently the conviction was set aside in appeal or whether the matter is in further challenge before the Supreme Court is of no relevance for deciding the point in issue. (Paras 15 and 17). Ravikant S. Patil v. Sarvabhouma S. Bagali, (2007) 1 SCC 673: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 417: (2007) 1 KLT 685.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J. and C.K. Thakker and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-11-2006]

Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513, followed

K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186, applied

State of T.N. v. A. Jaganathan, (1996) 5 SCC 329: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1026, relied on

Union of India v. Atar Singh, (2003) 12 SCC 434: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 461; State of Maharashtra v. Gajanan, (2003) 12 SCC 432: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 459; B.R. Kapur v. State of T.N., (2001) 7 SCC 231, distinguished

[5804] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending appeal and release of appellant on bail — Order in respect of, held, has to be passed by recording reasons — Hence, said order to be passed after careful consideration of relevant aspects and not as a matter of routine — Bail distinguished from suspension of sentence — Conviction of appellant under Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 for offence of possession of property disproportionate to his known sources of income — Appeal against — Prayer made therein for suspension of sentence and grant of bail — Rejection of — One of the reasons which weighed with the High

Court was that fine imposed by trial court was not deposited — But, fine subsequently deposited — That apart, relevance of the forfeiture of the attached property not considered — Hence, High Court directed to reconsider the application under S. 389 — While doing so, effect and relevance of the order of conviction and sentence passed against appellant in another case involving offences under Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and IPC, also to be considered — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(1)(e) r/w S. 13(2) (Paras 7 and 8). Vasant Tukaram Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1052: 2005 Cri LJ 2531.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-4-2005]

[5805] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending appeal; release of appellant on bail — Power of — Parameters and considerations for exercise of — Settled law emphasised — Single Judge suspending conviction of respondent-accused without assigning any reasons during pendency of appeal — Held, though the power to suspend an order of conviction, apart from the order of sentence, is not alien to S. 389(1) of the Code, its exercise should be limited to very exceptional cases — Merely because the convicted person files an appeal in challenge of the conviction the court should not suspend the operation of the order of conviction — Court has a duty to look at all aspects including the ramifications of keeping such conviction in abeyance — Impugned order directing the suspension/stay of the conviction as well as the order refusing to recall the said order unsustainable and hence set aside — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7 & 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) (Paras 3, 7 and 12). State of Punjab v. Navraj Singh, (2008) 11 SCC 71: AIR 2008 SC 2962: 2008 Cri LJ 3864.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-2008]

K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186; State of Maharashtra v. Gajanan, (2003) 12 SCC 432: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 459; Union of India v. Atar Singh, (2003) 12 SCC 434: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 461; State of Haryana v. Hasmat, (2004) 6 SCC 175: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1757, relied on [5806] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence — If justified — Relevant factors — Mere fact that during trial accused were granted bail and there was no allegation of misuse of liberty by them, held, not relevant — But High Court took into account grant of bail to respondents during trial and without appreciating respondents' case on merits and demerits, allowed their petition for suspension of sentence — Held, High Court's order directing suspension of sentence and grant of bail unsustainable — If fresh application is moved before High Court, it shall consider the matter in its proper perspective in accordance with law. Gajraj Yadav v. Rajendra Singh, (2008) 15 SCC 573: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1120: (2008) 71 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-10-2008]

Vijay Kumar v. Narendra, (2002) 9 SCC 364: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1195; Ramji Prasad v. Rattan Kumar Jaiswal, (2002) 9 SCC 366: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1197; Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Vasant Tukaram Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1052; Gomti v. Thakurdas, (2007) 11 SCC 160: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 644, relied on [5807] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending appeal — Propriety — Conviction under Ss. 7 and 13(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, stipulating minimum statutory punishment of six months — Appellant-accused awarded 3 years' imprisonment, and he undergoing more than one year and eight months' custody — Submission that appellant was only a peon who had no authority to issue any domicile certificate, hence, conviction should not have been recorded — Held, where accused is convicted under Prevention of Corruption Act, it would not be prudent and desirable to give him protection under S. 389 — Taking into consideration circumstances of the case High Court directed to dispose of appeal expeditiously — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7 and 13(2) (Paras 3 to 5, 7 and 8). Shiv Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 17 SCC 122.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-2008]

Bhagwan Rama Shinde Gosai v. State of Gujarat, (1999) 4 SCC 421: 1999 SCC (Cri) 553; Vijay Kumar v. Narendra, (2002) 9 SCC 364: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1195, distinguished [5808] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending appeal and release on bail — Factors that may be considered — Murder trial — Appellant nearly 70 years old and in jail for nearly one year, and on bail during trial — He directed to be released on bail on his furnishing the stipulated security — However, clarified that release of Appellant 1 was only directed on considering his age and not on consideration of merits of the case — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 342 and 302 (Paras 2, 7 and 8). Anil Ari v. State of W.B., (2009) 11 SCC 363: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1377: AIR 2009 SC 1564: 2009 Cri LJ 1328: (2009) 75 AIC 107 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-2-2009]

Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Vasant Tukaram Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1052; Gomti v. Thakurdas, (2007) 11 SCC 160: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 644, relied on

[5809] — S. 389 — Bail pending appeal against conviction — Considerations for grant of, stated — In the present case, judgment of trial court convicting both appellants of offences punishable under Ss. 304-B and 498-A IPC upheld by High Court — Appellant 1 being the sole bread earner of family, held, no ground for releasing him on bail — Though convicted of serious offence, considering the old age of Appellant 2, that is, 80 years and that she had been in custody for more than a year, interim bail granted to her — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B and 498-A

Disposing of the application for the grant of bail,

Held :

Cases where a serious offence had been committed and the accused had been held guilty for the said offence, then his application for grant of bail should not be decided leniently during the pendency of the appeal. The seriousness and gravity of the offence must be looked into before granting the bail. In the instant case, accused were convicted by the trial court for harassing, torturing and compelling the deceased to end her life by committing suicide, and the said conviction had been confirmed by the High Court. (Para 10)

Insofar as the first appellant is concerned, the only reason assigned for grant of bail is that he is the only bread earner of the family. In the light of decisions of the Supreme Court, this contention of the appellant does not impress to release him on bail for the alleged offence for which he had been convicted by the courts. Therefore, for the present he is not entitled to the relief sought in the application. (Para 12)

Looking at the age of Appellant 2 it does not seem fair to hold her back in jail during the pendency of appeal even if she had been convicted for the alleged serious offence, against which she has come before the Supreme Court. That Appellant 2 is an old lady of 80 years of age and she had already been in jail for more than one year, she is entitled for the relief prayed in the application. Accordingly, interim bail to the second appellant granted. (Paras 13 and 14). Bakshish Ram v. State of Punjab, (2009) 6 SCC 561.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-2009]

Talab Haji Hussain v. Madhukar Purshottam Mondkar, AIR 1958 SC 376: 1958 SCR 1226; State of Maharashtra v. Anand Chintaman Dighe, (1990) 1 SCC 397: 1990 SCC (Cri) 142; Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 291: 1977 SCC (Cri) 559, relied on

Bakshish Ram v. State of Punjab, Criminal Appeal No. 487-SB of 1994 decided on 26-3-2008, referred to [5810] — S. 389 — Refusal of bail, during pendency of appeal — When not justified — Appellant convicted under Prevention of Corruption Act and sentenced to undergo two years' rigorous imprisonment and to pay fine — Since there was no likelihood of hearing of the appeal in near future and the sentence awarded was only of two years, held, High Court was not justified in rejecting the bail application — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7, 13(1)(d) and (2) (Paras 2 and 3). S. Venkatesh v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 15 SCC 579.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.P. Sethi and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-2002]

[5811] — Ss. 389 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Impropriety — Cancellation — Prayer for grant of bail during pendency of appeal against conviction rejected twice by High Court — However, liberty granted in latter case to renew prayer after six months — High Court by impugned judgment granting bail to respondent-accused noticing the same — Held, merely liberty was granted to renew the prayer after six months which does not in any way show that there was entitlement for getting bail — Impugned order shows total non-application of mind, and hence, set aside — Matter remitted to High Court for reconsideration on merits with a direction to pass a reasoned order (Paras 3 and 8 to 13). Bhuvaneshwar Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2008) 15 SCC 467: AIR 2009 SC 1452: (2008) 72 AIC 114 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-2008]

Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157, considered and relied on

V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 560; Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974; Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohammad, (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669, relied on [5812] — Ss. 389 and 354(3) — Supreme Court upholding conviction but since appellant suffering from paralysis allowing 3 months' time to surrender. Kashiben Chhaganbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 17 SCC 100: 2009 Cri LJ 1156: (2009) 1 Guj LR 876: (2009) 74 AIC 82 (SC): (2009) 2 ECrN 1484 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-12-2008]

[5813] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending the appeal — Prayer for should be considered liberally unless there is any statutory restriction — If the sentence of limited duration not suspended matter should be expedited — Appellate court may impose similar conditions when bail is granted — On facts, since High Court was not inclined to hear the appeal expeditiously, the sentence be suspended subject to some stringent conditions

When a convicted person is sentenced to a fixed period of sentence and when he files an appeal under any statutory right, suspension of sentence can be considered by the appellate court liberally unless there are exceptional circumstances. Of course if there is any statutory restriction against suspension of sentence it is a different matter. Similarly, when the sentence is life imprisonment the consideration for suspension of sentence could be of a different approach. But if for any reason the sentence of a limited duration cannot be suspended every endeavour should be made to dispose of the appeal on merits more so when a motion for expeditious hearing of the appeal is made in such cases. Otherwise the very valuable right of appeal would be an exercise in futility by efflux of time. When the appellate court finds that due to practical reasons such appeals cannot be disposed of expeditiously the appellate court must bestow special concern in the matter of suspending the sentence so as to make the appeal right, meaningful and effective. Of course appellate courts can impose similar conditions when bail is granted. (Para 3). Bhagwan Rama Shinde Gosai v. State of Gujarat, (1999) 4 SCC 421: 1999 SCC (Cri) 553: AIR 1999 SC 1859.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-1999]

[5814] — Ss. 389, 397 and 401 — Suspension of sentence — Imposition of conditions for — Propriety — Offence under S. 138 Negotiable Instruments Act — Revision — Requiring the revisionist to remit part of the fine in the court within a certain period for granting suspension of sentence during pendency of revision, held, advisable — Where the trial court had sentenced the revisionist to imprisonment and imposed fine in a large sum of Rs 20 lakhs, High Court's order requiring the accused revisionist to remit Rs 4 lakhs within a specified period as a condition to suspend the sentence, held, was not unjust or unconscionable — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Para 2). Stanny Felix Pinto v. Jangid Builders (P) Ltd., (2001) 2 SCC 416: 2001 SCC (Cri) 345: AIR 2001 SC 659.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-1-2001]

[5815] — S. 389 — Power to suspend conviction — Held, should be exercised by appellate or revisional court in very exceptional cases having regard to all aspects including ramification of such suspension

Though the power to suspend an order of conviction, apart from the order of sentence, is not alien to Section 389(1) of the Code, its exercise should be limited to very exceptional cases. Merely because the convicted person files an appeal to challenge his conviction the court should not suspend the operation of the order of conviction. The court has a duty to look at all aspects including the ramifications of keeping such conviction in abeyance. (Para 11). K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186: AIR 2001 SC 3320.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-2001]

[5816] — S. 389 — Suspension of conviction, pending appeal — Sustainability — Grounds of possible delay in disposal and presence of arguable points, in appeal, for suspending sentence — Sufficiency of — Held, such an order is not to be readily granted — On facts, held, High Court not assigning any special reasons while passing the order of suspension of conviction — Possible delay in disposal of appeal and presence of arguable points, by itself, may not be sufficient to grant suspension of sentence — Hence, on facts, held, High Court was not correct in its view — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7 and 13(2)

The respondent, a public servant, was proceeded against in a case under Sections 7 and 13(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, in which he was sentenced to 18 months' RI with a fine of Rs 1000. He preferred an appeal thereagainst, wherein an application was filed by him under Section 389 CrPC for suspension of conviction recorded under the PC Act. By reason of order dated 11-1-2005, the said application was allowed.

An application was filed by the appellant State herein for vacation of stay of conviction granted to the respondent by reason of the said order with a prayer to recall the same. By reason of the impugned judgment, while the Court accepted that an order suspending the conviction could be allowed only in a very exceptional case, it dismissed the application. Hence this present appeal.

Counsel for the appellant submitted that the High Court being aware of the decisions of the Supreme Court holding that ordinarily the suspension of conviction should not be granted, must be held to have committed a manifest error in passing the impugned judgment.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

An order of suspension of conviction admittedly is not to be readily granted. The High Court in its order dated 11-1-2005 passed a judgment irrespective of conviction and sentence, only on two grounds:

(i) A long time may be taken to decide the appeal.

(ii) There are good points to argue. (Para 6)

While passing the said order, the High Court did not assign any special reasons. Possible delay in disposal of the appeal and that there are arguable points by itself may not be sufficient to grant suspension of a sentence. The High Court while passing the said order merely noticed some points which could be raised in the appeal. The grounds so taken do not suggest that the respondent was proceeded against by the State, mala fide or in any bad faith. (Para 7)

The High Court was not correct in its view. Therefore, both the orders set aside. (Para 11). State of Punjab v. Deepak Mattu, (2007) 11 SCC 319: (2007) 59 AIC 220 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2007]

K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186; State of Maharashtra v. Gajanan, (2003) 12 SCC 432: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 459, relied on

[5817] — S. 389 — Suspension of execution of sentence during pendency of criminal appeal against conviction and sentence — Effect — Dismissal on ground of conduct which had led to conviction on a criminal charge — Suspension on arrest of respondent govt. servant for accepting illegal gratification — Subsequent dismissal pursuant to conviction and sentence under S. 5(2) of Prevention of Corruption Act — Appeal against conviction admitted and execution of sentence suspended during pendency of the appeal — Held, that would not entitle the respondent to be treated as being under suspension till disposal of the criminal appeal — Vigilance Manual — Chap. VII, paras 15.2 and 15.3 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(2) — Central Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1965, R. 19(i)

The respondent was arrested on the ground that he accepted illegal gratification. He was placed under suspension. The trial court convicted him under Section 5(2) Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947. As a result of this conviction, the Disciplinary Authority dismissed him from service by invoking Rule 19 of the CCS (CCA) Rules, 1965 without holding detailed disciplinary enquiry. The High Court admitted the respondent's appeal against his conviction and passed the following interim order : "Pending hearing of the appeal, the execution of the sentence shall remain suspended and he shall be released on furnishing a personal bond in the sum of Rs 5000 with one surety in the like amount ...." After four years of his dismissal respondent filed an application in the Central Administrative Tribunal seeking his reinstatement in service. The Tribunal allowed the application. Reversing the order of the Tribunal,

Held :

Under Rule 19 of the CCS (CCA) Rules, 1965, the Disciplinary Authority is empowered to take action against a government servant on the ground of misconduct which has led to his conviction on a criminal charge. The rules, however, do not provide that on suspension of execution of sentence by the appellate court, the order of dismissal based on conviction stands obliterated and the dismissed government servant has to be treated under suspension till disposal of appeal by the appellate court. The rules also do not provide the Disciplinary Authority to await disposal of the appeal by the appellate court for taking action against him on the ground of misconduct which has led to his conviction by a competent court of law. Having regard to the provisions of the rules, the order dismissing respondent from service on the ground of misconduct leading to his conviction by a competent court of law has not lost its sting merely because a criminal appeal was filed by the respondent against his conviction and the appellate court has suspended the execution of sentence and enlarged the respondent on bail. Union of India v. Ramesh Kumar, (1997) 7 SCC 514: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1774: AIR 1997 SC 3531.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Venkataswami and V.N. Khare, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-1997]

State of Maharashtra v. Chandrabhan Tale, (1983) 3 SCC 387: 1983 SCC (L&S) 391: 1983 SCC (Cri) 667: AIR 1983 SC 803, distinguished [5818] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence — Should be ordered liberally in absence of any exceptional circumstances — Appellants sentenced to imprisonment for a fixed period, approaching High Court for suspension of sentence — High Court refusing to do so by passing a one-line sentence — Held, High Court erred in refusing to suspend the sentence in absence of any exceptional circumstances. Suresh Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 10 SCC 338.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-2000]

Bhagwan Rama Shinde Gosai v. State of Gujarat, (1999) 4 SCC 421: 1999 SCC (Cri) 553, followed

[5819] — Ss. 389 and 482 — Power to suspend conviction and sentence pending appeal/revision — Grounds — Such power can be exercised only when damage caused to the appellant/revisionist cannot be undone if he ultimately succeeds — Trifling matters should not be taken into consideration — Loss of stipend etc. not valid consideration — Moral conduct of public servant is a relevant consideration — Conviction of Police Inspector under Ss. 392, 218 and 466 IPC while other public servants convicted under Prevention of Corruption Act — Held, discretionary power to suspend conviction under S. 389(1) or S. 482 cannot be exercised — High Court's order of suspension of conviction set aside — However, order of suspension of sentences maintained. State of T.N. v. A. Jaganathan, (1996) 5 SCC 329: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1026: AIR 1996 SC 2449.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Faizan Uddin and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-1996]

[5820] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending appeal and release of appellants on bail — Discretion of High Court — Scope and manner of exercise of — Considerations involved — Held, High Court has to consider each case on the basis of (i) nature of the offence, (ii) manner in which occurrence had taken place, and (iii) whether in any manner bail granted earlier had been misused — High Court has ample power and discretion to suspend sentence, but that discretion has to be exercised judiciously depending on the facts and circumstances of each case — No straitjacket formula can be applied in exercising the discretion — Facts and circumstances of each case will govern the exercise of judicial discretion — Considering the fact position in its entirety, Supreme Court suspending sentence pending appeal and directing release of appellants on bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 326 and 34

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

When an appeal is preferred against conviction in the High Court, the High Court has ample power and discretion to suspend the sentence, but that discretion has to be exercised judiciously depending on the facts and circumstances of each case. While considering the suspension of sentence, each case is to be considered on the basis of nature of the offence, manner in which occurrence had taken place, whether in any manner bail granted earlier had been misused. In fact, there is no straitjacket formula which can be applied in exercising the discretion. The facts and circumstances of each case will govern the exercise of judicial discretion while considering the application filed by the convict under Section 389 CrPC. (Para 14)

In the present case, the appellants were on bail during the pendency of the case before the Sessions Court. The Sessions Court has acquitted most of the accused persons after trial except the appellants who were convicted under Section 326 read with Section 34 IPC and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs 2000. It is not the case of the other side, that, when the accused were on bail they had indulged themselves in any offence either under the provisions of the Penal Code or any other statute. It is also not the case of the prosecution that when the appellants were on bail they had either jumped the bail or were any way responsible for prolonging the proceedings before the Sessions Court, and it is also not the case of the other side that they would abscond and would not be available to undergo the sentence if the appellate court affirms the order passed by the Sessions Court. (Paras 23 and 13)

Taking into consideration an overall view of the matter and in particular the offence alleged and sentence imposed and further taking into consideration the acquittal of the other accused persons, who were also charge-sheeted for the same offences as that of the appellants and further taking into consideration the conduct of the appellants during the trial before the Sessions Court when they were on bail, the High Court could have suspended the sentence and granted bail to the appellants. Therefore, interference with the discretion exercised by the High Court would be justified under Article 136 of the Constitution. The sentence is suspended and the appellants are directed to be released on bail on each one of them executing a bond with two solvent sureties to the satisfaction of the trial court. (Para 24). Angana v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 3 SCC 767.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-2-2009]

Takht Singh v. State of M.P., (2001) 10 SCC 463: 2003 SCC (Cri) 800; Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 291: 1977 SCC (Cri) 559; Babu Singh v. State of U.P., (1978) 1 SCC 579: 1978 SCC (Cri) 133; Emperor v. H.L. Hutchinson, AIR 1931 All 356; Bhagwan Rama Shinde Gosai v. State of Gujarat, (1999) 4 SCC 421: 1999 SCC (Cri) 553; Suresh Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 10 SCC 338: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1043, relied on

Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Vasant Tukaram Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1052; Sidhartha Vashisht v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 5 SCC 230: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 571; Gomti v. Thakurdas, (2007) 11 SCC 160: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 644, considered

[5821] — S. 389 and S. 482 — Suspension of sentence pending appeal, release of appellant on bail — High Court suspending conviction of respondent-accused imposed by trial court by an unreasoned order — Sustainability — Order of High Court, held, unsustainable and hence, set aside — Case law pertaining to scope and ambit of S. 389 discussed (Paras 3, 4, 7 and 12). CBI v. M.N. Sharma, (2008) 8 SCC 549: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 572.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-7-2008]

K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186; State of Maharashtra v. Gajanan, (2003) 12 SCC 432: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 459; Union of India v. Atar Singh, (2003) 12 SCC 434: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 461; State of Haryana v. Hasmat, (2004) 6 SCC 175: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1757, considered and relied on [5822] — S. 389 — Suspension of conviction, pending appeal — Power of the appellate or the revisional court to suspend conviction — Order should not be passed mechanically — Held, though such a discretion is undoubtedly granted, yet the Supreme Court can always weigh the correctness of the discretion exercised and pass appropriate orders in the event it comes to a contrary conclusion — On facts held, the High Court erred in suspending conviction only on the ground that non-suspension may entail removal of the delinquent public service from office — Constitution of India — Art.136 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13 (Para 3). Union of India v. Atar Singh, (2003) 12 SCC 434.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-10-2001]

K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186, relied on

Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513; Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, distinguished [5823] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending appeal; release of appellant on bail — Powers of the appellate court — Ingredients and requirements for the exercise of — Held, appellate court duty-bound to objectively assess the matter and record reasons for its conclusions — Relevant factors to be considered while granting benefit under S. 389 in case involving serious offence like murder, stated by referring to various case-laws — Ground relied on in the instant case, held, was not of much significance — Bail distinguished from suspension of sentence — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 r/w S. 34 (Paras 4 to 6, 8 and 9). Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-2004]

[5824] — Ss. 389 and 439 — Non-application of mind — Suspension of execution of sentence and grant of bail in case of serious offence like murder — Proper application of mind to relevant factors and recording of reasons germane to justify grant of bail by court, held, is essential — High Court in its first order granting bail indicated no reason except stating that appellant-accused were on bail during trial and in its second order indicated the reason that co-accused persons had already been released on bail, that presence of the applicant accused at the time of occurrence was doubtful as he was medically examined on the next day of lodging the report, that he had gone to lodge the report along with the complainant and that he was in jail for about four years — Held, orders directing suspension of sentences and grant of bail unsustainable and so set aside. Gomti v. Thakurdas, (2007) 11 SCC 160: (2007) 53 AIC 48 (SC): (2007) 3 All LJ 614: 2007 Cri LJ 2431.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-2007]

Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Vasant Tukaram Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1052, relied on [5825] — S. 389 — Power of suspension of sentence under — Held, the normal practice in cases like murder is not to suspend the sentence — It is only in exceptional cases that the benefit of suspension of sentence can be granted — In the instant case, the first respondent, who was convicted under S. 302 IPC by the trial court, granted bail in appeal pending before the High Court at the first instance itself — No reason given by the High Court for adopting this exceptional course in a case of murder — Hence, High Court's impugned order set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Ramji Prasad v. Rattan Kumar Jaiswal, (2002) 9 SCC 366: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1197: AIR 2000 SC 3564.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-4-2000]

[5826] — S. 389 — Power to grant bail in pending appeal — Murder case — Conviction by trial court — High Court by a cryptic, non-speaking order granting bail to accused-respondents in appeal pending before it — Hence, High Court's order granting bail set aside — Relevant factors to be taken into account by the court while considering the prayer for bail in a case involving serious offence like murder, restated — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/34

The High Court has neither given any reason nor has indicated any exceptional circumstance for granting bail to the respondents. It is difficult for us to even surmise the circumstance which prompted the learned Single Judge to consider the accused persons to be entitled to the discretionary relief of bail pending the appeal. The principle is well settled that in considering the prayer for bail in a case involving a serious offence like murder punishable under Section 302 IPC, the court should consider the relevant factors like the nature of the accusation made against the accused, the manner in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, the gravity of the offence, and the desirability of releasing the accused on bail after they have been convicted for committing the serious offence of murder. The High Court did not take into consideration the relevant factors while passing the bail order. In the context of the facts and circumstances of the case the High Court was in error in passing the order releasing the respondents on bail. (Para 10). Vijay Kumar v. Narendra, (2002) 9 SCC 364.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2002]

Ramji Prasad v. Rattan Kumar Jaiswal, (2002) 9 SCC 366, relied on

[5827] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence and release on bail — Jurisdiction and exercise of power in respect of — Appellate court (Supreme Court in the present case) held, is empowered to suspend sentence — Such action can however be taken after affording opportunity to Public Prosecutor if offence is punishable with death or life imprisonment or ten years' or more imprisonment, and after recording reasons — Mere admission of appeal by the Supreme Court is not in itself a ground for suspension of sentence — Person acquitted by trial court but convicted by High Court cannot be considered an innocent person, deserving suspension of sentence — It is also not sufficient that the applicant was on bail during trial and he did not misuse this liberty — Real consideration is whether reasons exist to suspend execution of sentence and grant of bail — On facts held, applicant's appeal was on board and was therefore likely to be heard within "measurable distance of time" — Keeping in view that the applicant was convicted by High Court under S. 302 IPC, no case made out for exercise of power under S. 389 CrPC — Application therefore rejected — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

This was an application filed under Section 389 CrPC, for suspension of sentence and releasing the applicant on bail pending consideration of his appeal by the Supreme Court. The applicant was charged under Section 302 IPC. He was acquitted by trial court but convicted by High Court. He filed appeal under Section 2(a) of the Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 1970. The appeal had since been admitted by the Supreme Court on 7-3-2007. On 2-4-2007, the Supreme Court, passed bail orders for other accused persons but in respect of the applicant, the Court fixed final hearing of the matter. However, final hearing did not take place up to 12-2-2008. Application under Section 389 CrPC was filed mainly on the ground that the applicant was in jail and if his appeal was not heard for a considerably long time, serious prejudice would be caused to him.

Rejecting the application,

Held :

During pendency of appeal, an appellate court is empowered to suspend sentence on the appellant by releasing him on bail. Such action, however, can be taken only after affording opportunity to the Public Prosecutor in case of offence punishable with death or life imprisonment or imprisonment for ten years or more and after recording reasons in writing. (Para 26)

It has been held in Kashmira Singh case, (1977) 4 SCC 291, that so long as the Supreme Court is not in a position to hear the appeal of an accused within a reasonable period of time, the Court should ordinarily, unless there are cogent grounds for acting otherwise, release the accused on bail where special leave has been granted to the accused to appeal against his conviction and sentence. The other consideration, however, is equally important and relevant. When a person is convicted by an appellate court, he cannot be said to be an innocent person until the final decision is recorded by the superior court in his favour. (Para 29)

Mere fact that during the period of trial, the accused was on bail and there was no misuse of liberty, does not per se warrant suspension of sentence and grant of bail. What is really necessary is to consider whether reasons exist to suspend execution of sentence and grant of bail. (Para 32)

On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, this is not a fit case to exercise power under Section 389 CrPC. Though the trial court has acquitted the applicant accused for the offences with which he was charged, the High Court reversed the order of acquittal and convicted him under Section 302 IPC and ordered him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for life. Being aggrieved by the said order, he has filed an appeal which has been admitted, is already on board and awaits final hearing. Hence, within "measurable distance of time" the appeal is likely to be heard. Keeping in view the seriousness of offence, the manner in which the crime was said to have been committed and the gravity of offence, no case has been made out by the applicant for suspension of sentence and grant of bail. (Para 33). Sidhartha Vashisht v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 5 SCC 230: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 571: 2008 Cri LJ 3524.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2008]

Emperor v. H.L. Hutchinson, AIR 1931 All 356: 32 Cri LJ 1271: 134 IC 842; Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 291: 1977 SCC (Cri) 559; State of Haryana v. Hasmat, (2004) 6 SCC 175: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1757, relied on [5828] — Ss. 389 and 437 — Bail while appeal pending — Granted in the interest of justice — Old age and pending arrears as factors — Conviction under Ss. 302/34 IPC, sentence, life imprisonment — Age of accused above 70 — Application for suspension of sentence not allowed by High Court due to gravity of offence and prima facie merit of case — Held, in the interest of justice, taking into account age of accused, who in custody for 71/2 years, and arrears in High Court, accused may be released on conditional bail — Conditions include duty to intimate address, stay out of municipal limits NCT of Delhi and to report weekly to local police station. Pritpal Singhal v. State of Delhi, (1999) 1 SCC 169: 1999 SCC (Cri) 73.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and A.P. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-9-1998]

[5829] — S. 389 — Bail during pendency of appeal against conviction in offences of murder, attempt to murder, etc. — Grant of, held on facts, was not justified — Bail cancelled by exercising power under Art. 136 of the Constitution — Grave apprehension of likelihood of accused tampering with evidence — Grant of bail by High Court during pendency of appeal against conviction in relation to said offences — High Court not considering the gravity of the crime, the said apprehension of the prosecution and threats to the life of the complainant and other witnesses given by the accused — It passing the bail order in a mechanical fashion without proper application of mind and without going into the merits and evidence on record against the accused persons — In such circumstances, restating the object of cancellation of bail, held, the Supreme Court will be justified under Art. 136 in interfering with the order of the High Court granting bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136

Allowing the appeals filed by the complainant against the non-speaking orders passed by the High Court granting bail,

Held :

The object underlying the cancellation of bail is to protect the fair trial and secure justice being done to the society by preventing the accused who is set at liberty by the bail order from tampering with the evidence in the heinous crime and if there is delay in such a case the underlying object of cancellation of bail practically loses all its purpose and significance to the greatest prejudice and the interest of the prosecution. It hardly requires to be stated that once a person is released on bail in serious criminal cases where the punishment is quite stringent and deterrent, the accused in order to get away from the clutches of the same indulge in various activities like tampering with the prosecution witnesses, threatening the family members of the deceased victim and also create problems of law and order situation. (Para 13)

There was total non-application of mind by the Court to the gravity of the crime, the apprehension of tampering with the evidence and threats to the life of the complainant and other witnesses given by the accused. The High Court passed the impugned order in a mechanical fashion without proper application of mind and without going into the merits and evidence on record against the accused persons. The High Court failed to see and appreciate that the accused respondents herein who are the main Accused 1 to 3 are the masterminds behind the crime committed. The High Court has not considered the material evidence available on record against the accused which prima facie establishes the criminal liability of the respondents. The High Court also failed to see that the learned Sessions Judge, after taking into consideration the seriousness and the gravity of the crime convicted the accused for the crime. (Para 11)

Thus, looking into the gravity of the crime, apprehension of tampering with the evidence and threats to the life of the complainant and other witnesses given by the accused, it is held that the High Court did not take into proper account the grave apprehension of the prosecution that there was a likelihood of the accused persons tampering with the prosecution witnesses. In the peculiar nature of the case revealed from the allegations and the position of the accused in relation to the eyewitnesses it was incumbent upon the High Court to give proper weight to the serious apprehension of the complainant which was urged before it in resisting the application for bail. The High Court had failed to properly appreciate the entire position. Therefore, the Supreme Court will be justified under Article 136 of the Constitution in interfering with the discretion exercised by the High Court in granting bail to the accused persons. (Para 18). Panchanan Mishra v. Digambar Mishra, (2005) 3 SCC 143: 2005 SCC (Cri) 660: AIR 2005 SC 1299: 2005 Cri LJ 1721.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-1-2005]

Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41; State (Delhi Admn.) v. Sanjay Gandhi, (1978) 2 SCC 411: 1978 SCC (Cri) 223, followed

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237; Mehboob Dawood Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 2 SCC 362: 2004 SCC (Cri) 551, distinguished [5830] — S. 389 — Requirement under, that the accused preferring criminal appeal before Supreme Court has to surrender prior to registration of said appeal — Contention that once bail granted by trial court in terms of S. 389(3) CrPC, Supreme Court cannot insist that the accused should surrender in terms of Or. 21 R. 13-A, Supreme Court Rules — Sustainability of — Per Altamas Kabir, J., held, said contention not sustainable as S. 389(3) CrPC empowers the trial court to release a convicted person on bail only for such period as will afford him sufficient time to present an appeal and obtain orders of the appellate court under sub-section (1) of S. 389 — Grant of bail in appeal presupposes surrender by the convicted person — Provisions of S. 389 CrPC and that of the 1966 Rules are independent provisions and will have to be considered on their own standing — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. 21 R. 13-A (Para 19). Mayuram Subramanian Srinivasan v. CBI, (2006) 5 SCC 752: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 83: AIR 2006 SC 2449: 2006 Cri LJ 3285: (2006) 3 KLT 489.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-6-2006]

[5831] — S. 389 — Expeditious disposal of cases — High Court directed to dispose of the pending appeal within a period of one year — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 4). Union of India v. Shiv Saran Gupta, (2005) 12 SCC 354.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2005]

[5832] — S. 389 — Interim order granting bail passed by Supreme Court — No misuse of bail — Interim order confirmed — It will remain operative till the disposal of criminal appeal pending before High Court — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 2 and 3). Sudarshana Devi v. State of Punjab, (2005) 10 SCC 213: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1512.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-2005]

[5833] — S. 389 — Interim bail during appeal before Supreme Court — Sentence already undergone and time to be taken in final disposal of appeal — Consideration of — Appellant awarded sentence of 10 years' imprisonment — He had already undergone sentence of 8 years and 8 months' imprisonment — Final disposal of appeal may take further time due to reference of matter to larger Bench by Supreme Court — Hence, appellant directed to be released on interim bail pending disposal of appeal finally — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 10). Vijaysinh Chandubha Jadeja v. State of Gujarat, (2007) 1 SCC 433: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 370: (2007) 1 Guj LR 768.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, Dalveer Bhandari and Lokeshwar Singh Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-11-2006]

[5834] — S. 389 — Sentence under S. 26, NDPS Act — Held, cannot be suspended by the trial court by resorting to S. 389(3), CrPC — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 32-A & 26. Maktool Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 3 SCC 321: 1999 SCC (Cri) 417: AIR 1999 SC 1131.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-3-1999]

Jyotiben Ramlal Purohit v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 3 Recent CrR 607, overruled

[5835] — Ss. 389, 437 and 439 — Conviction for rape with life imprisonment — Suspension of sentence and enlargement on bail — Propriety — High Court by impugned judgment granting bail and suspending sentence of life imprisonment passed against respondent-accused for offence punishable under Ss. 376 and 450 IPC — Victim a British journalist and businesswoman who was staying in guest house belonging to respondent-accused, where he forcibly barged into her room and raped her — Held, it was not a fit case where sentence awarded should have been suspended and accused released on bail — High Court totally unjustified in granting bail to accused, or in suspending the sentence — Impugned judgment set aside and High Court directed to dispose of the appeal expeditiously — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376 and 450 (Paras 3, 5 and 6). Suzanne Louise Martin v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 4 SCC 376.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-2009]

[5836] — Ss. 389, 437 and 439 — Suspension of sentence and grant of bail in appeal against conviction — Grant of — Propriety — Reasoned order/Speaking order — Necessity — High Court by impugned order granting bail to respondent-accused convicted under Ss. 302 and 506 IPC by cryptic order without applying its mind and not considering relevant aspects — Impermissibility — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 506 (Paras 11 and 12). Khilari v. State of U.P., (2009) 4 SCC 23.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-1-2009]

Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohammad, (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669, followed [5837] — S. 389 — Release on bail and suspension of sentence pending appeal — Power of appellate court — Scope of — Need for reasoned order — Respondents accused of offence punishable under S. 302 IPC — Bail granted and sentence suspended by High Court through an unreasoned order — Release granted in absence of an application — Even during trial, accused persons had not been released on bail — Accused persons had also escaped from custody and were convicted for such escape — No opportunity given to Public Prosecutor to oppose the release — High Court's order, held, indefensible — Respondent-accused directed to surrender to custody. Masood Ali Khan v. State of U.P., (2009) 3 SCC 492.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-2-2009]

Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021; Vasant Tukaram Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 281: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1052; Gomti v. Thakurdas, (2007) 11 SCC 160: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 644, relied on [5838] — S. 389 — Bail pending appeal — Entitlement to, when bail granted to accused earlier misutilised by him — Accused while on bail in another case committing the offence of murder in question — High Court during pendency of appeal against conviction granting bail to accused — Held, the accused who misutilised the liberty granted to him earlier was not entitled to the privilege of being released on bail — Bail cancelled and accused directed to be taken into custody forthwith — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 2). Ramesh Kumar Singh v. Jhabbar Singh, (2003) 10 SCC 195.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-8-2002]

[5839] — S. 389 — Bail pending appeal — When to be granted — Appeal against conviction under Ss. 304-B and 498-A IPC — No chance of said appeal being heard in the near future — Accused already suffered sentence of 3 years and 6 months — In these circumstances, held, accused should be released on bail on his furnishing bail bond and surety to the satisfaction of the trial court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B and 498-A (Para 3). Salim Javed v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 9 SCC 602: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 354.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-2006]

[5840] — S. 389 — Bail pending appeal in a case under S. 302 IPC — Grant of — Propriety — High Court while granting bail, pending appeal not considering the fact that accused was convicted under S. 302 and subsequently involved in another case under S. 302 IPC — Held, the present case was not a fit one for grant of bail — High Court's order set aside — Constitution of India — Art.136 (Paras 4 and 5). Veer Sen v. Jai Singh, (2005) 12 SCC 252.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-3-2005]

[5841] — S. 389 — Conviction under Ss. 302, 307, 148 r/w S. 149, IPC — Suspension of sentence and grant of bail during pendency of appeal — Direction by High Court in respect of, merely on the ground that during the period of parole accused did not misuse the liberties, held, unsustainable — Bail distinguished from suspension of sentence — Appellate court to consider whether reasons exist to suspend the execution of sentence and thereafter grant bail — Recording of reasons for conclusion that the case warrants suspension of execution of sentence and grant of bail, held, essential — Relevant factors to be considered while granting benefit under S. 389 in cases involving serious offence like murder, stated by referring to various case-laws — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 148 r/w S. 149

Section 389 CrPC deals with suspension of execution of sentence pending the appeal and release of the appellant on bail. There is a distinction between bail and suspension of sentence. One of the essential ingredients of Section 389 is the requirement for the appellate court to record reasons in writing for ordering suspension of execution of the sentence or order appealed. Thus the appellate court is duty-bound to objectively assess the matter and to record reasons for the conclusion that the case warrants suspension of execution of sentence and grant of bail. The mere fact that during the period of parole the accused has not misused the liberties does not per se warrant suspension of execution of sentence and grant of bail. What really was necessary to be considered by the High Court was whether reasons existed to suspend the execution of sentence and thereafter grant bail. (Paras 6 to 8)

In Vijay Kumar v. Narendra, (2002) 9 SCC 364 and Ramji Prasad v. Rattan Kumar, (2002) 9 SCC 366, it was held that in cases involving conviction under Section 302 IPC, it is only in exceptional cases that the benefit of suspension of sentence can be granted. The impugned order of the High Court does not meet the requirement. In Vijay Kumar case it was held that in considering the prayer for bail in a case involving a serious offence like murder, the Court should consider the relevant factors like the nature of accusation made against the accused, the manner in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, the gravity of the offence, and the desirability of releasing the accused on bail after they have been convicted for committing the serious offence of murder. These aspects have not been considered by the High Court, while passing the impugned order. Hence, the order directing suspension of sentence and grant of bail is clearly unsustainable and is set aside. (Paras 9 and 10). State of Haryana v. Hasmat, (2004) 6 SCC 175: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1757: AIR 2004 SC 3936.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-7-2004]

Vijay Kumar v. Narendra, (2002) 9 SCC 364: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1195; Ramji Prasad v. Rattan Kumar Jaiswal, (2002) 9 SCC 366: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1197, followed

[5842] — Ss. 389, 439, 432 and 433 — Parole — Power to grant — Held, lies entirely with the State Govt. and the High Court can only release an accused either for a full term or a short term, in exercise of the powers conferred upon it under the CrPC — Supreme Court expressing strong displeasure at the High Court's callous way in releasing the accused in the garb of parole for one month and further extending it for another month, despite Supreme Court's earlier order cancelling his bail — More so since the Supreme Court had cancelled the order granting bail considering the gravity of the offence and the seriousness of the charges, where three murders had been committed in broad daylight (Paras 2 and 4). Rakesh Kumar Pandey v. Udai Bhan Singh, (2008) 17 SCC 764.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, Ruma Pal and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-9-2002]

[5843] — S. 389 — Conviction under S. 302 r/w S. 34 IPC — Suspension of sentence and grant of bail during pendency of appeal — Held, it is only in exceptional cases that such benefit can be granted — Direction by High Court in respect of, merely on the ground that during trial, the accused who were on bail did not misuse liberties provided, unsustainable (Paras 6 and 9). Kishori Lal v. Rupa, (2004) 7 SCC 638: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2021.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-2004]

State of Haryana v. Hasmat, (2004) 6 SCC 175: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1757, relied on

Vijay Kumar v. Narendra, (2002) 9 SCC 364: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1195; Ramji Prasad v. Rattan Kumar Jaiswal, (2002) 9 SCC 366: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1197, followed

[5844] — S. 389 — Refusal by High Court to grant bail pending disposal of appeal — Propriety — Held, was not proper since appellant had already served a substantial period of the sentence (i.e. about 2 years and four months out of seven years) — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B — Constitution of India, Art. 136 (Para 2). Kamal v. State of Haryana, (2004) 13 SCC 526.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2004]

[5845] — S. 389 — Release on bail of appellant sentenced to life imprisonment pending disposal of his appeal by special leave — Held, justified where the Court is not in a position to dispose of the appeal expeditiously — Past practice of Supreme Court no longer just

No practice howsoever sanctified by usage and hallowed by time can be allowed to prevail if it operates to cause injustice. Every practice of the Court must find its ultimate justification in the interest of justice. The practice not to release on bail a person who has been sentenced to life imprisonment was evolved in the High Courts and in the Supreme Court on the basis that once a person has been found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment, he should not be let loose, so long as his conviction and sentence are not set aside, but the underlying postulate of this practice was that the appeal of such person would be disposed of within a measurable distance of time, so that if he is ultimately found to be innocent, he would not have to remain in jail for an unduly long period.

The rationale of the above practice can have no application where the Court is not in a position to dispose of the appeal for five or six years. It would indeed be a travesty of justice to keep a person in jail for a period of five or six years for an offence which is ultimately found not to have been committed by him.

Therefore so long as the Supreme Court is not in a position to hear the appeal of an accused within a reasonable period of time, the Court should ordinarily, unless there are cogent grounds for acting otherwise, release the accused on bail in cases where special leave has been granted to the accused to appeal against his conviction and sentence. The very fact that the Supreme Court has granted to the appellant special leave to appeal against his conviction shows that, in the opinion of this Court, he has prima facie a good case to consider and in the circumstances it would be highly unjust to detain him in jail any longer during the hearing of the appeal. Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 291: 1977 SCC (Cri) 559: AIR 1977 SC 2147: 1977 MLJ (Cri) 559: 1977 Cri LJ 1746.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and A.C. Gupta, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-1977]

But see Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2007) 1 SCC 70

[5846] — Ss. 389, 432 & 433 — Courts powers under, held, cannot be legislated away — Held, S. 32-A, NDPS Act, 1988 partly unconstitutional — S. 32-A, NDPS Act is unconstitutional to the extent it takes away the right of the court to suspend the sentence of a person convicted under

Act and thus intermeddles with the right of appeal in such a way as to actually take away the power of judicial review, the heart and soul of the constitutional scheme — Taking away of the right of the executive to suspend, remit and commute sentences under the Act, however, held valid — Clarified that S. 32-A does not affect in any way the powers of authorities to grant parole — Further clarified that only appellate court can suspend a sentence imposed under the Act and that too, strictly subject to the conditions set out in S. 37 — Contention rejected that S. 32-A was enacted in discharge of international obligations — Held, petitioners may apply for parole and suspension of sentence, but cannot claim them as a matter of right — Constitution of India — Art.21 — U.N. Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, 1988 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 32-A

Partly allowing the petitions,

Held :

The distinction between convicts under the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 and under other statutes, insofar as it relates to the exercise of executive powers under Sections 432 and 433 of the Code is concerned, cannot be termed to be either arbitrary or discriminatory being violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. Such deprivation of the executive can also not be stretched to hold that the right to life of a person has been taken away except, according to the procedure established by law. It is not contended on behalf of the petitioners that the procedure prescribed under the Act for holding the trial is not reasonable, fair and just. The offending section, insofar as it relates to the executive in the matter of suspension, remission and commutation of sentence, after conviction, does not, in any way, encroach upon the personal liberty of the convict tried fairly and sentenced under the Act. (Para 15)

Awarding sentence, upon conviction, is concededly a judicial function to be discharged by the courts of law established in the country. It is always a matter of judicial discretion, however, subject to any mandatory minimum sentence prescribed by the law. The award of sentence by a criminal court wherever made subject to the right of appeal cannot be interfered or intermeddled with in a way which amounts to not only interference but actually taking away the power of judicial review. Awarding the sentence and consideration of its legality or adequacy in appeal is essentially a judicial function embracing within its ambit the power to suspend the sentence under the peculiar circumstances of each case, pending the disposal of the appeal. (Para 16)

However, providing atleast one right of appeal would negate the due process of law in the matter of dispensation of criminal justice. There is no doubt that the right of appeal is the creature of a statute and when conferred, a substantive right. Providing a right of appeal but totally disarming the court from granting interim relief in the form of suspension of sentence would be unjust, unfair and violative of Article 21 of the Constitution particularly when no mechanism is provided for early disposal of the appeal. The pendency of criminal litigation and the experience in dealing with pending matters indicate no possibility of early hearing of the appeal and its disposal on merits atleast in many High Courts. In this view of the matter, the appellate powers of the court cannot be denuded by executive or judicial process. (Para 17)

When a convicted person is sentenced to a fixed period of sentence and the appellate court finds that due to practical reasons the appeal cannot be disposed of expeditiously, it can pass appropriate orders for suspension of sentence. The suspension of the sentence by the appellate court has, however, to be within the parameters of the law prescribed by the legislature or spelt out by the courts by judicial pronouncements. The exercise of judicial discretion on well-recognised principles is the safest possible safeguard for the accused which is at the very core of criminal law administered in India. The legislature cannot, therefore, make law to deprive the courts of their legitimate jurisdiction conferred under the procedure established by law. (Para 18)

The offending section is stated to have been enacted in discharge of the international obligations as claimed by the Minister concerned in Parliament. This submission appears to be without any substance. Countries, parties to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, 1988, in the 6th plenary meeting held on 19-12-1988 resolved to adopt means and measures to curb the rising trend in the illicit production or demand for and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances which posed a serious threat to the health and welfare of human beings and adversely affected the economic, cultural and political foundations of society. (Para 21)

A perusal of the agreement of the Convention to which India is claimed to be a party, clearly and unambiguously shows that the court's jurisdiction with respect to the offences relating to narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances was never intended to be ousted, taken away or curtailed. The declaration was made, subject to "constitutional principles and the basic concepts of its legal system prevalent in the polity of a member country". The international agreement emphasised that the courts of the member countries shall always bear in mind the serious nature of offences sought to be tackled by the declaration while considering the eventuality of early release of persons convicted of such offences. There was no international agreement to put a blanket ban on the power of the court to suspend the sentence awarded to a criminal under the Act, notwithstanding the constitutional principles and basic concepts of its legal system. It cannot be denied that judicial review is the heart and soul of the constitutional scheme. The judiciary is constituted the ultimate interpreter of the Constitution and is assigned the delicate task of determining the extent and scope of the powers conferred on each branch of the Government, ensuring that action of any branch does not transgress its limits. (Para 23)

Judged from any angle, the section insofar as it completely debars the appellate courts from the power to suspend the sentence awarded to a convict under the Act cannot stand the test of constitutionality. Thus Section 32-A of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act insofar as it ousts the jurisdiction of the court to suspend the sentence awarded to a convict under the Act is unconstitutional. (Para 25)

However the declaration of Section 32-A to be unconstitutional, insofar as it affects the functioning of the courts in the country, would not render the whole of the section invalid, the restriction imposed by the offending section being distinct and severable. (Para 26)

Holding Section 32-A as void insofar as it takes away the right of the courts to suspend the sentence awarded to a convict under the Act, would neither entitle such convicts to ask for suspension of the sentence as a matter of right in all cases nor would it absolve the courts of their legal obligations to exercise the power of suspension of sentence within the parameters prescribed under Section 37 of the Act. (Para 27)

Under the circumstances the writ petitions are disposed of by holding that:

(1) Section 32-A does not in any way affect the powers of the authorities to grant parole.

(2) It is unconstitutional to the extent it takes away the right of the court to suspend the sentence of a convict under the Act.

(3) Nevertheless, a sentence awarded under the Act can be suspended by the appellate court only and strictly subject to the conditions spelt out in Section 37 of the Act, as dealt with in this judgment. (Para 29). Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 437: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528: AIR 2000 SC 3203.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2000]

Bhagwan Rama Shinde Gosai v. State of Gujarat, (1999) 4 SCC 421: 1999 SCC (Cri) 553; Denny v. Mattoon, 2 Allen 361; S.S. Bola v. B.D. Sardana, (1997) 8 SCC 522; S.P. Sampath Kumar v. Union of India, (1987) 1 SCC 124: (1987) 2 ATC 82, relied on

Ram Charan v. Union of India, (1991) 9 LCD 160 (All), approved

Ishwar Sinh M. Rajput v. State of Gujarat, (1990) 2 Guj LR 1365: (1991) 2 Crimes 160, overruled

Maktool Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 3 SCC 321: 1999 SCC (Cri) 417, partly overruled

[5847] — S. 389 (Ch. XXIX) — Held S. 32-A, NDPS Act, overrides the provisions of CrPC — "So far as may be applicable" — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 32-A. Maktool Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 3 SCC 321: 1999 SCC (Cri) 417: AIR 1999 SC 1131.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-3-1999]

But S. 32-A held partly unconstitutional in Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 437: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528

[5848] — S. 389 (Ch. XXIX) — Powers of High Court under Ch. XXIX of CrPC preserved by S. 36-B, NDPS Act — Scope — Held, does not include the power to suspend during pendency of appeal, the sentence passed on a convict under the Act — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 36-B and 32-A

Section 32-A of the Act has taken away the powers of the court to suspend a sentence passed on persons convicted of offences under the Act (except Section 27) either during pendency of any appeal or otherwise. Similarly, the power of the Government under Sections 432, 433 and 434 of the CrPC have also been taken away. Section 32-A would have an overriding effect with regard to the powers of suspension, commutation and remission provided under the Criminal Procedure Code. Maktool Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 3 SCC 321: 1999 SCC (Cri) 417: AIR 1999 SC 1131.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-3-1999]

But S. 32-A held partly unconstitutional in Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 437: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528

[5849] — S. 389 — Repeat offender — Bail during pendency of appeal by High Court merely on the ground that his co-accused had been granted bail — Held, not justified — Legislative intent of the NDPS Act, held, totally ignored by the High Court

The respondent herein was convicted by the Special Judge, NDPS Court, Lucknow, under Section 21 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 (for short "the Act"). Since he was a previous offender, the court awarded him the enhanced punishment provided under Section 31 of the Act. The other accused (A-1), who was a first offender, was sentenced under Section 21 of the Act.

The High Court while entertaining an appeal against the said conviction filed by the respondent herein, did not grant the respondent's prayer for bail. Consequently, the said application for bail was rejected. On a second application filed by the respondent for grant of bail, the High Court allowed the said application by the impugned order dated 4-3-2003 solely on the ground that A-1 from whom the contraband was recovered was released on bail and the contraband in question was not recovered from the respondent. The Union of India challenged the said order of the High Court by filing the instant appeal before the Supreme Court.

Allowing the appeal and setting aside the impugned order,

Held :

The learned Judge has totally ignored the legislative intent of the Act. In the impugned judgment there has been absolutely no application of mind to the requirement of law while granting bail to the respondent. The learned Judge seriously erred in granting bail to a repeat offender merely on the ground that a co-accused has been granted bail. (Para 10). Union of India v. Mahaboob Alam, (2004) 4 SCC 105: 2004 SCC (Cri) 912: 2004 All LJ 1071: 2004 Cri LJ 1789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2004]

Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 437: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528; Union of India v. Ram Samujh, (1999) 9 SCC 429, relied on [5850] — S. 389 — Bail — Grant of, merely on the ground that there was no prospect of early hearing of the appeal — Propriety of — Held on facts, was not proper — The same was in disregard of the statutory provisions — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 37 (Paras 4 and 5). Union of India v. Abdul Momin, (2005) 13 SCC 144: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 130.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2005]

[5851] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending the appeal — Release of appellant on bail — Refusal by High Court — Propriety — Appellant, guilty of offence punishable under Ss. 8/18 and 8/15 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, awarded sentence of rigorous imprisonment for 10 years with fine of Rs 1 lakh on each count, had already undergone more than seven years of imprisonment — No likelihood of the appeal being heard in the near future — On such facts, on the appellant depositing the amount of fine, the execution of the sentence of imprisonment shall remain suspended during the hearing of the appeal by the High Court, and the appellant shall be released on bail — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 8/18 and 8/15 (Paras 2, 3 and 4). Mansingh v. Union of India, (2004) 13 SCC 42.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and P.K. Balasubramanyan and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-9-2004]

[5852] — Ss. 389 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Propriety — Provisions of S. 37, NDPS Act not taken into consideration or complied with — Hence, impugned order set aside — Bail application would stand rejected — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 37 (Para 4). Union of India v. Shiv Saran Gupta, (2005) 12 SCC 354.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2005]

[5853] — Ss. 389 and 439 — Bail, pending appeal — Grant of, without considering condition contained in S. 37, NDPS Act with regard to enlarging of accused on bail, held, not proper — Contention that since Public Prosecutor did not oppose the bail application, S. 37 would not apply, not sustainable — The very fact that the Public Prosecutor appeared would suggest that he appeared to oppose the bail application — In any event, High Court's order did not suggest that the Public Prosecutor had agreed for bail being granted — Hence, bail cancelled — Constitution of India — Art.136 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 37 (Para 4). Narcotics Control Bureau v. Karma Phuntsok, (2005) 12 SCC 480.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-8-2005]

[5854] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence — Similar treatment to all accused similarly situated — Need for — Four accused convicted under Ss. 364/302/34 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment — During pendency of appeal preferred by all the accused before High Court, sentences passed on three of the accused suspended and order passed for their release on bail by High Court but prayer for suspension of sentence made by appellant rejected — Held, case of the appellant cannot be distinguished from cases of other accused as regards role assigned to them in the incident — Therefore, it would be just and proper not to deny similar relief to appellant also (Paras 3 and 4). Sham Lal v. State of Haryana, (2004) 13 SCC 469.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 6-8-2004]

[5855] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence as well as of conviction of the respondent public servant convicted under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 by the High Court while entertaining appeal — Held, such power should be exercised by the appellate or the revisional court only in exceptional cases, considering all aspects including ramification of such suspension — High Court in the instant case had passed the impugned order only to enable the respondent to continue in service despite conviction, which cannot be said to be exceptional circumstances — Hence High Court's order cannot be sustained — Constitution of India — Art. 32 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 7 (Paras 4 and 5). State of Maharashtra v. Gajanan, (2003) 12 SCC 432: AIR 2004 SC 1188: 2004 Cri LJ 919.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2003]

K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186; Union of India v. Atar Singh, (2003) 12 SCC 434, followed [5856] — S. 389 — Suspension of sentence pending the appeal — Release of appellant on bail — Refusal of, by High Court — Propriety — Conviction and sentence under S. 302 r/w S. 34 IPC — Co-accused, to whom a stab injury by knife was attributed, already released on bail — The only allegation against the appellant was that he caused an injury with a piece of brick — Under the said circumstances, held, appellant was also entitled to be enlarged on bail — Sentence passed against him suspended, pending the criminal appeal (Para 6). Jagan v. State of Haryana, (2004) 13 SCC 507.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Shivaraj V. Patil and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-2004]

[5857] — S. 389 — Bail — Interim bail — Grant of during pendency of appeal — Grounds for — Appellant convicted under Ss. 409, 420, 467, 468, 471/465 and 477-A r/w S. 120-B IPC and S. 13(2) r/w Ss. 13(1)(c) & (d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 and sentenced to imprisonment for four years by trial court — High Court rejecting his application for bail observing that he may renew his prayer for bail after serving half sentence — Appellant in jail for nearly two years, and no possibility of his appeal being heard in near future — Hence, interim bail granted to him — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 409, 420, 467, 468, 471/465 and 477-A r/w S. 120-B — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 13(1)(c) & (d) r/w S. 13(2) (Paras 1, 4 and 5). Dinesh Kumar Sinha v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 6 SCC 628.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-5-2009]

[5858] — S. 389 — Power under — Exceptional exercise of — Application for suspension/stay of conviction, pending appeal — Petitioner-appellant found guilty under S. 3 and S. 7 r/w Ss. 25(1-A) and (1-B), Arms Act, 1959 and sentenced to six years' RI — Appeal thereagainst, pending consideration before Supreme Court, during which petitioner was granted bail — Petitioner desirous of contesting election, but in view of S. 8(3), RP Act, 1951, because of aforesaid conviction and sentence, he incurring disqualification from contesting election — Therefore, petition filed by him under S. 389, praying that execution of order of his conviction and sentence be suspended, pending final hearing of appeal, to enable him to contest election — Tenability — Held, petitioner was convicted for serious offences, which lies challenged before Supreme Court — Petitioner is a cine artist and son of well-known film actor/politician — He is not a habitual criminal nor had been involved in any other criminal case — Despite all these favourable circumstances, this is not a fit case where conviction and sentence could be suspended so that bar under S. 8(3), RP Act, 1951 will not operate against petitioner — In face of S. 8(3), RP Act, 1951, power of court under S. 389 CrPC shall be exercised only under exceptional circumstances — Hence, in view of serious offence for which petitioner was convicted, held, his conviction and sentence, cannot be suspended — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 25(1-A) and (1-B) — Representation of the People Act, 1951, S. 8(3) — Suspension of conviction to enable contesting of election — Permissibility (Paras 10 to 12 and 14). Sanjay Dutt v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 5 SCC 787.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and P. Sathasivam and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-2009]

Navjot Singh Sidhu v. State of Punjab, (2007) 2 SCC 574: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 627, distinguished [5859] — Ss. 389 and 374 — Suspension of sentence pending the appeal — Appeal before High Court — Conviction under Ss. 460, 376, 325 and 506 IPC — During the pendency of appeal High Court rejecting appellant's application for suspension of sentence — Held, the normal rule is that when the appeal of a person convicted and sentenced is pending the sentence passed on him should be suspended unless any exceptional reason existing therein requires the denial of the same — There being no exceptional reason recorded in the impugned order, Supreme Court suspending the sentence and directing release of appellant on bail — Constitution of India — Art.136 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376, 460, 325 and 506. Kiran Kumar v. State of M.P., (2001) 9 SCC 211.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-2000]

Bhagwan Rama Shinde Gosai v. State of Gujarat, (1999) 4 SCC 421: 1999 SCC (Cri) 553, followed

[5860] — Ss. 389 and 421 — Sentence under S. 70, IPC levying fine — Limitation period for levy of fine — Applicability — Recovery of fine stayed during pendency of appeal before Supreme Court against conviction and sentence and thus fine ceased to be leviable — Held, limitation for recovery of fine would not begin till passing of order of Supreme Court confirming conviction and sentence — On facts held, recovery proceedings initiated after order confirming conviction and sentence was within time. State of U.P. v. Kamal Kishore, (1992) 1 SCC 148: 1992 SCC (Cri) 79: (1992) 1 MWN (Cr) 39.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-12-1991]

Mehtab Singh v. State of U.P., (1979) 4 SCC 597: 1980 SCC (Cri) 142, followed

— S. 389(1) See also Ss. 389(3) & (1)

[5861] — S. 389(1) — For public servant convicted for corruption, order of conviction should not be suspended though sentence of imprisonment may be suspended till disposal of the appeal — It would be a sublime public policy that the convicted public servant is kept under disability of the conviction in spite of keeping the sentence of imprisonment in abeyance till the disposal of the appeal or revision

The appellant, a Bank Officer, was convicted by Special Judge inter alia under Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and was sentenced to one year's RI and fine of Rs 500. The appellant preferred appeal against the conviction and sentence before High Court which admitted the appeal and suspended the sentence passed against him. Meanwhile disciplinary proceedings were initiated against the appellant and on the strength of the conviction recorded by the trial court, the bank authorities dismissed him from service. The appellant then moved the High Court to have the conviction also suspended. That motion was dismissed by the High Court. But the appellant once again moved the High Court at a later stage by supplying certain additional facts to the High Court for fresh consideration of his plea for suspension of the conviction. One of the causes stated by him was the order of dismissal passed against him on the premise of his conviction. Another ground highlighted by him was that his appeal in the High Court was not likely to be heard for next years and that itself would defeat the ends of justice. Alternatively he made a bid to show that the conviction was based on very slender reasoning and hence he has "a fair chance of getting acquitted in appeal". But the High Court again declined to suspend the conviction by observing that no ground was made out therefor. Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Though the power to suspend an order of conviction, apart from the order of sentence, is not alien to Section 389(1) of the Code, its exercise should be limited to very exceptional cases. Merely because the convicted person files an appeal to challenge his conviction the court should not suspend the operation of the order of conviction. The court has a duty to look at all aspects including the ramifications of keeping such conviction in abeyance. (Para 11)

No doubt when the appellate court admits the appeal filed in challenge of the conviction and sentence for the offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act, the superior court should normally suspend the sentence of imprisonment until disposal of the appeal, because refusal thereof would render the very appeal otiose unless such appeal could be heard soon after the filing of the appeal. But suspension of conviction of the offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act, dehors the sentence of imprisonment as a sequel thereto, is a different matter. (Para 11)

When conviction is on a corruption charge against a public servant the appellate court or the revisional court should not suspend the order of conviction during the pendency of the appeal even if the sentence of imprisonment is suspended. It would be a sublime public policy that the convicted public servant is kept under disability of the conviction in spite of keeping the sentence of imprisonment in abeyance till the disposal of the appeal or revision. (Para 13)

When a public servant is found guilty of corruption after a judicial adjudicatory process conducted by a court of law, judiciousness demands that he should be treated as corrupt until he is exonerated by a superior court. The mere fact that an appellate or revisional forum has decided to entertain his challenge and to go into the issues and findings made against such public servants once again should not even temporarily absolve him from such findings. If such a public servant becomes entitled to hold public office and to continue to do official acts until he is judicially absolved from such findings by reason of suspension of the order of conviction, it is public interest which suffers and sometimes, even irreparably. When a public servant who is convicted of corruption is allowed to continue to hold public office, it would impair the morale of the other persons manning such office, and consequently that would erode the already shrunk confidence of the people in such public institutions besides demoralising the other honest public servants who would either be the colleagues or subordinates of the convicted person. If honest public servants are compelled to take orders from proclaimed corrupt officers on account of the suspension of the conviction, the fallout would be one of shaking the system itself. Hence it is necessary that the court should not aid the public servant who stands convicted for corruption charges to hold public office until he is exonerated after conducting a judicial adjudication at the appellate or revisional level. It is a different matter if a corrupt public officer could continue to hold such public office even without the help of a court order suspending the conviction. The above policy can be acknowledged as necessary for the efficacy and proper functioning of public offices. (Paras 12 and 13)

Therefore, the High Court had rightly refused to suspend the conviction in this case. It is open to the appellant to move the High Court for early hearing. If the High Court is satisfied that the appellant has a reasonably good prospect of being exonerated or that there is any other special reason, it is hoped that the High Court would board the appeal for hearing on an early date. (Para 16). K.C. Sareen v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 584: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1186: AIR 2001 SC 3320.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-2001]

Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513; Dy. Director of Collegiate Education (Admn.) v. S. Nagoor Meera, (1995) 3 SCC 377: 1995 SCC (L&S) 686: (1995) 29 ATC 574; State of T.N. v. A. Jaganathan, (1996) 5 SCC 329: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1026, relied on

Akhtari Bi v. State of M.P., (2001) 4 SCC 355: 2001 SCC (Cri) 714, distinguished

[5862] — Ss. 389(1) and 482 & 373 — 'Execution of sentence or order appealed against be suspended' — 'Order' in the context — Meaning — Order must be executable, such as orders of sentence or compensation or fine — Order of conviction can also be executable in certain situations, such as when it incurs disqualification of Managing Director of a company under S. 267(c) of Companies Act, 1956 — In appropriate case High Court in appeal on being satisfied about need for suspending the order of conviction, can grant interim stay — But person approaching the High Court should invite the court's attention to the specific consequence which is likely to fall upon conviction so as to enable the court to apply its mind on that point before granting the stay

Section 389(1) empowers the Appellate Court to order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended pending the appeal. What can be suspended under this provision is the execution of the sentence or the execution of the order. The order referred to in Section 389(1) must be an order capable of execution. An order of conviction by itself is not capable of execution under the Code. It is the order of sentence or an order awarding compensation or imposing fine or release on probation which are capable of execution and which, if not suspended, would be required to be executed by the authorities. (Para 15)

However, if the order of conviction is to result in some disqualification of the type mentioned in Section 267 of the Companies Act, a narrow meaning should not be given to Section 389(1) of the Code to bar the Court from granting an order staying operation of order of conviction in a fit case. In certain situations the order of conviction can be executable, in the sense, it may incur a disqualification as in the instant case. In such a case the power under Section 389(1) of the Code could be invoked. The appeal under Section 374 is essentially against the order of conviction because the order of sentence is merely consequential thereto; albeit even the order of sentence can be independently challenged if it is harsh and disproportionate to the established guilt. Therefore, when an appeal is preferred under Section 374 of the Code the appeal is against both the conviction and sentence and therefore, there is no reason to place a narrow interpretation on Section 389(1) of the Code not to extend it to an order of conviction, although that issue in the instant case recedes to the background because High Courts can exercise inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 of the Code if the power was not to be found in Section 389(1) of the Code. In a fit case if the High Court feels satisfied that the order of conviction needs to be suspended or stayed so that the convicted person does not suffer from a certain disqualification provided for in any other statute, it may exercise the power because otherwise the damage done cannot be undone; the disqualification incurred by Section 267 of the Companies Act and given effect to cannot be undone at a subsequent date if the conviction is set aside by the Appellate Court. But while granting a stay or suspension of the order of conviction the Court must examine the pros and cons and if it feels satisfied that a case is made out for grant of such an order, it may do so and in so doing it may, if it considers it appropriate, impose such conditions as are considered appropriate to protect the interest of the shareholders and the business of the company. (Para 19)

In a situation where the order of conviction may incur a disqualification, as in this case, the attention of the Appellate Court must be specifically invited to the consequence that is likely to fall to enable it to apply its mind to the issue since under Section 389(1) it is under an obligation to support its order "for reasons to be recorded by it in writing". No one can be allowed to play hide and seek with the Court; he cannot suppress the precise purpose for which he seeks suspension of the conviction and obtain a general order of stay and then contend that the disqualification has ceased to operate. Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513: (1995) 83 Comp Cas 194.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and R.M. Sahai and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-1-1995]

[5863] — S. 389(3) — Applicability of provisions under, which empower the trial court to release a convicted person on bail for such period as will afford him sufficient time to present an appeal and obtain orders of release on bail therein — Held, S. 389(3) has application when there is a right of appeal — Where prayer for grant of certificate of High Court to appeal under Art. 136 or Art. 134-A of the Constitution is made, there is no right of appeal involved — Therefore, in such cases S. 389(3) has no application — But, position is different when a case falls under Art. 134(1)(a) or Art. 134(1)(b) being covered under S. 2 of the Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 1970 — Appeal under S. 10 of the Special Court (Trial of Offences Relating to Transactions in Securities) Act, 1992, falls to the category of cases where there is right of appeal (Para 5). Mayuram Subramanian Srinivasan v. CBI, (2006) 5 SCC 752: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 83: AIR 2006 SC 2449: 2006 Cri LJ 3285: (2006) 3 KLT 489.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-6-2006]

Ram Kumar Pandey v. State of M.P., (1975) 3 SCC 815: 1975 SCC (Cri) 225; Chandra Mohan Tiwari v. State of M.P., (1992) 2 SCC 105: 1992 SCC (Cri) 252, relied on [5864] — Ss. 389(3) & (1) — Suspension of sentence pending appeal — Suspension of sentence for certain period by trial court acting under Special Court (Trial of Offences Relating to Transactions in Securities) Act, 1992 — Extension of said period by Supreme Court in appeal under the said Act — Power in relation to — Exercise of, held, was discretionary but subject to mandatory provisions of Or. 21 R. 13-A of the Supreme Court Rules, 1966 (which require that the accused must first surrender or seek exemption from surrendering before his appeal can be registered) — Contention that Or. 21 R. 13-A cannot in any way affect the powers available to the trial court under S. 9(4) of the 1992 Act, not sustainable (Para 13). Mayuram Subramanian Srinivasan v. CBI, (2006) 5 SCC 752: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 83: AIR 2006 SC 2449: 2006 Cri LJ 3285: (2006) 3 KLT 489.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-6-2006]

— S. 390 See also S. 427, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1227 in Vol. 2

[5865] — S. 390 — Issue of warrant — Appellant complainant not present in court when her appeal against acquittal of the accused came up for hearing — High Court issuing bailable warrant against her — On appeal to the Supreme Court against the order of the High Court, Supreme Court directing the Registry to obtain information from the High Court as to the reasons for issue of the bailable warrant — In the meantime case coming up for hearing before another Judge in the High Court and in the absence of the appellant complainant, he issuing a non-bailable warrant against her — Passing of such orders deprecated — Held, some degree of care must be taken before passing an order of issue of warrants, bailable or non-bailable — State of U.P. asked to pay compensation. Omwati v. State of U.P., (2004) 4 SCC 425: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1287.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Brijesh Kumar and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-1-2004]

[5866] — Ss. 390 and 378 — Arrest of accused in appeal from acquittal — Power of High Court under S. 390 — Held, High Court has the power to rearrest the accused pending disposal of appeal against acquittal — On facts, appellant and five others acquitted by trial court for offences under S. 396 r/w Ss. 3 and 35 of Arms Act, 1959 — In appeal, High Court noting that in test identification parade and trial, PW 18 correctly identified the accused persons — Forensic science laboratory report confirmed foot moulds taken were of the accused and seized hair from hands of deceased tallied with that of accused in DNA test — Finding that trial court had not considered evidence in proper perspective, High Court directed arrest of two accused persons and release of others on bail pending disposal of appeal — Held, no infirmity in the order warranting interference — Penal Code, 1860, S. 396 — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 3 and 35 (Paras 13, 16 and 17). Amin Khan v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 3 SCC 776.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-2-2009]

[5867] — S. 390 — Grant of special leave against order of acquittal on capital charge — Held, the Supreme Court can exercise the same powers which the High Court has under S. 427, CrPC, 1898 and issue a non-bailable warrant for the arrest and committal to prison of the accused-respondent — Such exercise of power does not offend Art. 21 — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 427

As soon as the High Court on perusing a petition of appeal against an order of acquittal, considers that there is sufficient ground for interfering and issuing process to the respondent, his status as an accused person and the proceedings against him, revive. The question of judging his guilt or innocence in respect of the charge against him, once more becomes sub judice.

Similar is the position when the Supreme Court, in its discretion, grants special leave to appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution, against an order of acquittal passed by the High Court.

Whether in the circumstances of the case, the attendance of accused-respondent can be best secured by issuing a bailable warrant or non-bailable warrant, is a matter which rests entirely in the discretion of the Court. Although the discretion is exercised judicially, it is not possible to computerise and reduce into immutable formulae the diverse considerations on the basis of which this discretion is exercised. Broadly speaking, the Court would take into account the various factors, such as the nature and seriousness of the offence, the character of the evidence, circumstances peculiar to the accused, possibility of his absconding, larger interest of the public and State. In addition, the Court may also take into consideration the period during which the proceedings against the accused were pending in the courts below and the period which is likely to elapse before the appeal comes up for final hearing in the Supreme Court. State of U.P. v. Poosu, (1976) 3 SCC 1: 1976 SCC (Cri) 368: AIR 1976 SC 1750: (1976) 3 SCR 1005: 1976 Cri LJ 1373.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: A.N. Ray, C.J. and M.H. Beg, R.S. Sarkaria, P.N. Shinghal and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-1976]

— S. 391 See also S. 428, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1228 in Vol. 2

— S. 391 See Ss. 157, 161, 164, 311 and 391
See also Ss. 311, 386 and 391
See also Ss. 311 and 391
See also Ss. 311, 391 and 386
See also Ss. 344, 311 and 391
See also Ss. 386, 311 and 391
See also Ss. 386 and 391
See also Ss. 482, 311, 391, 173(8), 216 and 24

[5868] — S. 391 — Nature, scope and object of — Legislative intent behind, indicated — Power under when and for whom to be exercised, discussed in detail — Wide discretion of appellate court — Requirement of recording of reasons safety valve on — Importance of pragmatic considerations — Impermissibility of filling of any lacunae — Question of sufficiency of evidence already on record vis-à-vis the admissibility of additional evidence sought to be adduced — Held, it cannot be laid down as a rule of universal application that the court has to first find out whether evidence already on record is sufficient — Both exercises, that is, whether evidence already on record is sufficient and admissibility of additional evidence sought to be adduced, have to be taken up together — Further held, when circumstances clearly indicate prima facie substance in application for adduction of additional evidence, appropriate course for courts would be to admit additional evidence for final adjudication, so that acceptability or otherwise of evidence tendered by way of additional evidence can be tested properly, and legally tested in the context of the probative value of the two versions — There cannot be a straitjacket formula or rule of universal application when alone it can be done and when not — Whether appellate court maintains or upsets verdict of trial court depends upon relevance and acceptability of the additional evidence and its qualitative worth in deciding the guilt or innocence of the accused — This is not a factor in determining the admissibility of additional evidence sought to be adduced

Section 391 CrPC, 1973 is another salutary provision which clothes the courts with the power to effectively decide an appeal. Though Section 386 envisages the normal and ordinary manner and method of disposal of an appeal, yet it does not and cannot be said to exhaustively enumerate the modes by which alone the court can deal with an appeal. Section 391 is one such exception to the ordinary rule and if the appellate court considers additional evidence to be necessary, the provisions in Section 386 and Section 391 have to be harmoniously considered, to enable the appeal to be considered and disposed of in the light of the additional evidence as well. For this purpose it is open to the appellate court to call for further evidence before the appeal is disposed of. The appellate court can direct the taking up of further evidence in support of the prosecution; a fortiori it is open to the court to direct that the accused persons may also be given a chance of adducing further evidence, who may file an application in this regard, in an appropriate case. Section 391 is in the nature of an exception to the general rule and the powers under it must also be exercised with great care, especially on behalf of the prosecution lest the admission of additional evidence for the prosecution operates in a manner prejudicial to the defence of the accused. The legislative intent in enacting Section 391 appears to be the empowerment of the appellate court to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the persons prosecuted by arriving at the truth, that is, the prevention of the guilty man's escape through some careless or ignorant proceedings before a court or vindication of an innocent person wrongfully accused: and if the appellate court finds that certain evidence is necessary in order to enable it to give a correct and proper finding, it would be justified in taking action under Section 391. However, there is no question of filling of any lacuna in the case on hand. (Paras 47, 48, 58, 21 and 50)

There is no restriction in the wording of Section 391 either as to the nature of the evidence, or that the provisions of the section are only to be invoked when formal proof for the prosecution is necessary. The matter is one of discretion of the appellate court and any approach without pragmatic consideration defeats the very purpose for which Section 391 CrPC, 1973 has been enacted. However, the same has to be exercised judicially and the legislature has put a safety valve by requiring the recording of reasons. The necessity for additional evidence arises when the court feels that some evidence which ought to have been before it is not there or that some evidence has been left out or erroneously brought in. It is true that merely because an affidavit has been filed stating that the witnesses were threatened, as a matter of routine, additional evidence should not be permitted. But when the circumstances, as in this case, clearly indicate that there is some truth or prima facie substance in the grievance made, having regard to background of events that happened, the appropriate course for the courts would be to admit additional evidence for final adjudication, so that the acceptability or otherwise of evidence tendered by way of additional evidence can be tested properly, and legally tested in the context of the probative value of the two versions. There cannot be a straitjacket formula or rule of universal application when alone it can be done and when, not. (Paras 49, 59, 58, and 73)

In all cases, it cannot be laid down as a rule of universal application, that the court has to first find out whether the evidence already on record is sufficient. The nature and quality of the evidence on record is also relevant. If the evidence already on record is shown or found to be tainted, tailored to suit or help a particular party or side and the real truth has not and could not have been spoken or brought forth during trial, it would constitute merely an exercise in futility, if it is considered first whether the evidence already on record is sufficient to dispose of the appeals. Disposal of appeal does not mean disposal for statistical purposes but effective and real disposal to achieve the object of any trial. The exercise has to be taken up together. It is not that the Court has to be satisfied that the additional evidence would be necessary for rendering a verdict different from what was rendered by the trial court. Merely because the High Court permits additional evidence to be adduced, it does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the judgment of the trial court was wrong. In a given case even after assessing the additional evidence, the High Court can maintain the verdict of the trial court and similarly the High Court on consideration of the additional evidence can upset the trial court's verdict. It all depends upon the relevance and acceptability of the additional evidence and its qualitative worth in deciding the guilt or innocence of the accused. Moreover, whenever additional evidence is accepted, retrial is not a necessary corollary. (Paras 58, 59, 73 and 21)

Nowhere has the High Court effectively dealt with the application under Section 391 as a part of the exercise to deal with and dispose of the appeal. In fact the High Court dealt with it practically in one paragraph, accepting the stand of counsel for the accused that the consideration of the appeal has to be limited to the records sent up under Section 385(2) CrPC for disposal of the appeal under Section 386. This perception of the powers of the appellate court and misgivings as to the manner of disposal of an appeal per se vitiates the decision rendered by the High Court. If the stand of counsel for the accused as was accepted by the High Court is maintained, it would mean that Section 391 CrPC would be a dead letter in the statute-book. (Para 58). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Rambhau v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 4 SCC 759: 2001 SCC (Cri) 812; Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1062; Ram Chander v. State of Haryana, (1981) 3 SCC 191: 1981 SCC (Cri) 683; Jamatraj Kewalji Govani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 178: (1967) 3 SCR 415: 1968 Cri LJ 231; Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271: 1991 SCC (Cri) 595, relied on

Clarified in Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115

[5869] — Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247 — Purpose of and role of court in criminal trial — Presiding Judge — Purpose of and role of — Held, is the discovery, vindication and establishment of truth — Hence, the trial should be a search for the truth and not a bout over technicalities — Presiding Judge must cease to be a spectator and a mere recording machine — He must become a participant in the trial evincing intelligence, active interest and eliciting all relevant materials necessary for reaching the correct conclusion to find out the truth, and administer justice with fairness and impartiality both to the parties and to the community — Restraints on processes for determining the truth

Right from the inception of the judicial system it has been accepted that discovery, vindication and establishment of truth are the main purposes underlying the existence of the courts of justice. Restraints on the processes for determining the truth are multifaceted. They have emerged in numerous different ways, at different times and affect different areas of the conduct of legal proceedings. (Paras 30 and 32)

A criminal trial is a judicial examination of the issues in the case and its purpose is to arrive at a judgment on an issue as to a fact or relevant facts which may lead to the discovery of the fact issue and obtain proof of such facts at which the prosecution and the accused have arrived by their pleadings; the controlling question being the guilt or innocence of the accused. Since the object is to mete out justice and to convict the guilty and protect the innocent, the trial should be a search for the truth and not a bout over technicalities, and must be conducted under such rules as will protect the innocent, and punish the guilty. If a criminal court is to be an effective instrument in dispensing justice, the Presiding Judge must cease to be a spectator and a mere recording machine by becoming a participant in the trial evincing intelligence, active interest and elicit all relevant materials necessary for reaching the correct conclusion, to find out the truth, and administer justice with fairness and impartiality both to the parties and to the community it serves. The courts administering criminal justice cannot turn a blind eye to vexatious or oppressive conduct that has occurred in relation to proceedings, even if a fair trial is still possible, except at the risk of undermining the fair name and standing of the judges as impartial and independent adjudicators. (Paras 37 and 35)

The courts have always been considered to have an overriding duty to maintain public confidence in the administration of justice-often referred to as the duty to vindicate and uphold the "majesty of the law." Due administration of justice has always been viewed as a continuous process, not confined to determination of the particular case, protecting its ability to function as a court of law in the future as in the case before it. (Para 35). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 2006 SC 1367: (2006) 2 KLT 350: 2006 Cri LJ 1694: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

[Ed.: See also Shortnote K in Zahira (1) case, (2004) 4 SCC 158.]

[5870] — Ss. 391, 311, 386, 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 and 247 — Purpose of and role of court in criminal trial — Presiding Judge — Purpose of and role of — Held, is the discovery, vindication and establishment of truth — Hence, the trial should be a search for the truth and not a bout over technicalities — Presiding Judge must cease to be a spectator and a mere recording machine — He must become a participant in the trial evincing intelligence, active interest and eliciting all relevant materials necessary for reaching the correct conclusion to find out the truth, and administer justice with fairness and impartiality both to the parties and to the community — Restraints on processes for determining the truth

Right from the inception of the judicial system it has been accepted that discovery, vindication and establishment of truth are the main purposes underlying the existence of courts of justice. However, restraints on the processes for determining the truth are multifaceted. They have emerged in numerous different ways, at different times and affect different areas of the conduct of legal proceedings. (Paras 30 and 32)

A criminal trial is a judicial examination of the issues in the case and its purpose is to arrive at a judgment on an issue as to a fact or relevant facts which may lead to the discovery of the fact issue and obtain proof of such facts at which the prosecution and the accused have arrived by their pleadings; the controlling question being the guilt or innocence of the accused. Since the object is to mete out justice and to convict the guilty and protect the innocent, the trial should be a search for the truth and not a bout over technicalities, and must be conducted under such rules as will protect the innocent, and punish the guilty. If a criminal court is to be an effective instrument in dispensing justice, the Presiding Judge must cease to be a spectator and a mere recording machine, by becoming a participant in the trial evincing intelligence, active interest and eliciting all relevant materials necessary for reaching the correct conclusion, to find out the truth, and administer justice with fairness and impartiality both to the parties and to the community it serves. Courts administering criminal justice cannot turn a blind eye to vexatious or oppressive conduct that has occurred in relation to the proceedings, even if a fair trial is still possible, except at the risk of undermining the fair name and standing of the judges as impartial and independent adjudicators. (Paras 35, 38, 43, 46 and 55). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Jennison v. Baker, (1972) 1 All ER 997: (1972) 2 QB 52: (1972) 2 WLR 429 (CA), relied on

[5871] — Ss. 391 and 231, 242, 244, 233, 243 & 247 — Admissibility of evidence initially or as additional evidence distinguished from its efficacy, reliability and acceptability — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 5 and 3

The question of admission of evidence, initially or as additional evidence under Section 391 CrPC, is distinct from the efficacy, reliability and its acceptability for consideration of claims in the appeal on merits. (Paras 59 and 24)

The High Court has observed that the question of accepting the application for additional evidence would be dealt with separately, but has in fact dealt with it in a cryptic manner, practically in one paragraph, and did not think it necessary to accept the additional evidence — but at the same time made threadbare analysis of the affidavits as if it had accepted them as additional evidence and was testing their acceptability. The High Court should not have thrown out the application, as well as the materials sought to be brought on record, even at the threshold and yet gone on to surmise on reasons, at the same time, professing to decide on its correctness. (Paras 59, 24 and 71). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[5872] — Ss. 391 and 311 — Additional evidence — Application for — Powers of the appellate court re — Held, court should objectively consider acceptability of such application — If any witness wants to give evidence different from that given by him earlier at the trial, appellate court would consider genuineness of the prayer in the context as to whether the witness concerned had fair opportunity to speak the truth earlier and should not accept it in a routine manner — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 137

The evidence of the eyewitnesses (PWs 5 and 6) was attacked by the accused-appellants on the ground that their presence at the alleged spot of occurrence was not believable. PW 6 made an application before the trial court alleging pressure on him to depose falsely and for getting examined afresh. The application was rejected. Again the defence filed a similar application. The Court considered the same and found it to be without substance. The High Court elaborately dealt with this issue and concluded that the prayer was rightly held to be not tenable. It was contended before the Supreme Court that no cogent reasons have been given to discard the prayer made by PW 6 for his fresh examination.

Held :

This contention was specifically urged before the High Court and the High Court after consideration held that the plea appeared to be an afterthought and there was no cogent reason for accepting the prayer. It is true that in a given case the accused can make an application for adducing additional evidence to substantiate his claim of innocence. Whenever any such application is filed before the court, acceptability of the prayer in question is to be objectively considered. (Para 11)

It is not that in every case where the witness who had given evidence before court wants to change his mind and is prepared to speak differently, that the court concerned should readily accede to such request by lending its assistance. If the witness who deposed one way earlier comes before the appellate court with a prayer that he is prepared to give evidence which is materially different from what he has given earlier at the trial with the reasons for the earlier lapse, the court can consider the genuineness of the prayer in the context as to whether the party concerned had a fair opportunity to speak the truth earlier and in an appropriate case, accept it. It is not that the power is to be exercised in a routine or cavalier manner, but being an exception to the ordinary rule of disposal of appeal on the basis of records received in exceptional cases or extraordinary situation the court can neither feel powerless nor abdicate its duty to arrive at the truth and satisfy the ends of justice. In the instant case, a bare reading of the application made by PW 6 shows that the same is extremely vague and bereft of substance. Though it was stated that pressure was put on him and he was subjected to third-degree treatment, he has not specifically named anybody and made vague mention about "some police officials". Hence the High Court was justified in rejecting his application. (Paras 9 and 12). Anil Sharma v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 5 SCC 679: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1706: AIR 2004 SC 2294: 2004 Cri LJ 2527.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-2004]

[5873] — S. 391 — Appellate Court's discretionary power to take additional evidence in a suitable case — Discretion should not be exercised to fill up gaps or lacunae in the prosecution evidence. Bir Singh v. State of U.P., (1977) 4 SCC 420: 1977 SCC (Cri) 640: AIR 1978 SC 59: 1978 Cri LJ 177: 1978 ALJ 365.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-8-1977]

[5874] — S. 391 — Appellate court's power to receive additional evidence — It is not intended to fill up gap in the prosecution and to cause prejudice to accused but to oversee that concept of justice prevails — Additional evidence can be taken to rectify any irregularity — "Irregularity" — Meaning — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 13(1)(d) r/w 13(2)

The High Court recorded it to be a mere irregularity and there is no reason as to why such a course ought not to be permitted to be taken recourse to, in the fact situation of the matter under consideration. The omission cannot but be ascribed to be a mere irregularity. The word "irregularity" in common English parlance means and implies contrary to rule. (Paras 12 and 6)

There is available a very wide discretion in the matter of obtaining additional evidence in terms of Section 391 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But this additional evidence cannot and ought not to be received in such a way so as to cause any prejudice to the accused. It is not a disguise for a retrial or to change the nature of the case against the accused. The order must not ordinarily be made if the prosecution has had a fair opportunity and has not availed of it. However, it is the concept of justice which ought to prevail and in the event, the same dictates exercise of power as conferred by the Code, there ought not to be any hesitation in that regard. Section 391 was introduced in the statue-book for the purpose of making it available to the court, not to fill up any gap in the prosecution case but to oversee that the concept of justice does not suffer. (Paras 2 and 6). Rambhau v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 4 SCC 759: 2001 SCC (Cri) 812: AIR 2001 SC 2120: 2001 Cri LJ 2343.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-2001]

Rajeswar Prasad Misra v. State of W.B., AIR 1965 SC 1887: 1965 Cri LJ 817; Martin Burn Ltd. v. Corpn. of Calcutta, AIR 1966 SC 529, relied on

Corpn. of Calcutta v. Chandoolal Bhai Chand Modi, (1952-53) 57 CWN 882: AIR 1953 Cal 773, approved

[5875] — S. 391 — Contradictions/ inconsistency between evidence adduced earlier and additional evidence sought to be adduced — Admissibility of additional evidence in light of — Creditworthiness and acceptability of depositions made in earlier evidence or additional evidence due to contradictions/inconsistencies therebetween, to be considered only after admission — Additional evidence not to be rejected at threshold merely because of contradictions, especially in sensitive cases like the present one — Witness claiming that he did not speak truthfully before trial court but was willing to speak the truth before appellate court — Power under S. 391 to be exercised and such testimony to be accepted only if appellate court is satisfied for reasons on record that such a course should be adopted — In this regard, the court can consider whether the party concerned had a fair opportunity to speak the truth earlier

It is only after admission, that the court should consider in each case whether on account of a contradiction between the evidence adduced earlier before the court and the testimony allowed to be given as additional evidence, which of them or any one part or parts of the depositions are creditworthy and acceptable, after a comparative analysis and consideration of the probabilities and probative value of the materials for adjudging the truth. To reject additional evidence merely because of contradictions, and that too in a sensitive case like this one, with a horror and terror oriented history of its own, would amount to a conspicuous omission and deliberate dereliction of discharging functions judiciously and with a justice-oriented mission. In a given case when the court is satisfied that for reasons on record the witness had not stated truthfully before the trial court and was willing to speak the truth before it, the power under Section 391 CrPC, 1973 is to be exercised. However, it is not that in every case where the witness, who had given evidence before court, wants to change his mind and is prepared to speak differently, that the court concerned should readily accede to such a request by lending its assistance. If the witness who deposed one way earlier comes before the appellate court with a prayer that he is prepared to give evidence which is materially different from what he has given earlier at the trial with the reasons for the earlier lapse, the court can consider the genuineness of the prayer in the context as to whether the party concerned had a fair opportunity to speak the truth earlier and in an appropriate case, accept it. (Paras 59, 24, 71 and 45)

Whether the witness had told the truth before the trial court or as stated in the affidavit, were matters for assessment of evidence when admitted and tendered, and when the affidavit itself was not tendered as evidence, the question of analysing it to find fault was not the proper course to be adopted by the High Court. The affidavits were filed to emphasise the need for permitting additional evidence to be taken and for being considered as the evidence themselves. Even the conclusions arrived at with reference to those affidavits do not appear to be correct and seem to suffer from apparent judicial obstinacy and an avowed determination to reject them. For example, to brand a person as not truthful because a different statement was given before the trial court, unmindful of the earliest statement given during investigation and the reasons urged for turning hostile before the trial court negates the legislative intent and purpose of incorporating Section 391 in CrPC, 1973. (Paras 59, 24 and 71)

Even if the appellant Z had taken different stands as concluded by the High Court, it was obligatory for the Court to find out as to what was the correct stand and the real truth, which could have been decided and examined by accepting the prayer for additional evidence. The disclosed purpose in the State Government's prayer with reference to the affidavits was to bring to the High Court's notice the situation which prevailed during trial and the reasons as to why the witnesses gave the version as noted by the trial court. (Paras 24 and 71). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[5876] — S. 391 — Grounds for not admitting additional evidence — Held, that the affidavits sought to be adduced as additional evidence were also filed in the Supreme Court, in another proceeding, is no reason in the eye of the law to refuse to take on record additional evidence (Para 24). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[5877] — S. 391 — Grounds for not admitting additional evidence — Veracity of affidavits sought to be adduced as additional evidence doubted by High Court on grounds that witnesses who had filed them were of unsound mind, untruthful, capable of being manipulated, and were in hands of persons using them with "oblique motives", without any material or reasonable and concrete basis to support such conclusions — Such finding made by High Court after holding that the affidavits were not being taken on record — Held, course adopted by High Court improper and logic applied by High Court to reject the affidavits unsustainable

After having held that the affidavits were not to be taken on record, the High Court has recorded findings regarding the contents of those affidavits, and has held that the affidavits are not truthful and are false. The High Court has gone to the extent of saying that the appellant Z has been used by some persons with oblique motives. The witnesses who filed affidavits have been termed to be of unsound mind, untruthful and capable of being manipulated, without any material or reasonable and concrete basis to support such conclusions. In any event, the logic applied by the High Court to discard the affidavits of Z and others, that they have fallen subsequently into the hands of some who remained behind the curtain, can be equally applied to accept the plea that the accused or persons acting at their behest had only created fear in the minds of the appellant Z and others by threats on the earlier occasion before deposing in court. (Paras 20, 11 and 12). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[5878] — Ss. 391 and 386 — Relative operation of Ss. 391 and 386 — Held, S. 386 does not and cannot be said to exhaustively enumerate the modes by which alone the court can deal with an appeal — Ss. 391 and 386 are to be harmoniously considered to enable the appeal to be considered and disposed of in the light of additional evidence as well — S. 391 is in the nature of an exception to the general rule

Though Section 386 envisages the normal and ordinary manner and method of disposal of an appeal, yet it does not and cannot be said to exhaustively enumerate the modes by which alone the court can deal with an appeal. Section 391 is one such exception to the ordinary rule and if the appellate court considers additional evidence to be necessary, the provisions in Section 386 and Section 391 have to be harmoniously considered, to enable the appeal to be considered and disposed of in the light of the additional evidence as well. For this purpose it is open to the appellate court to call for further evidence before the appeal is disposed of. The appellate court can direct the taking up of further evidence in support of the prosecution; a fortiori it is open to the court to direct that the accused persons may also be given a chance of adducing further evidence, who may file an application in this regard, in an appropriate case. Section 391 is in the nature of an exception to the general rule and the powers under it must also be exercised with great care, especially on behalf of the prosecution lest the admission of additional evidence for the prosecution operates in a manner prejudicial to the defence of the accused. (Para 47)

Nowhere has the High Court effectively dealt with the application under Section 391 as a part of the exercise to deal with and dispose of the appeal. In fact the High Court dealt with it practically in one paragraph, accepting the stand of counsel for the accused that the consideration of the appeal has to be limited to the records sent up under Section 385(2) CrPC for disposal of the appeal under Section 386. This perception of the powers of the appellate court and misgivings as to the manner of disposal of an appeal per se vitiates the decision rendered by the High Court. If the stand of counsel for the accused as was accepted by the High Court is maintained, it would mean that Section 391 CrPC would be a dead letter in the statute-book. (Para 58). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

[5879] — S. 391 — Additional evidence at appellate stage — Application for examining a witness made after a lapse of seven years from the date of the occurrence — Held, in the circumstances, rightly rejected by the High Court. Nishar Ahmed Fajmohmed Kaji v. State of Gujarat, (1998) 9 SCC 23: 1998 SCC (Cri) 967.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and M. Srinivasan, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-1997]

[5880] — S. 391 — Additional evidence before High Court to remove technical or formal defect — While report of Mint Master that article seized was made of pure gold already placed on record, additional evidence sought to prove the report — Held, High Court erred in refusing to adduce the additional evidence merely on ground of lapse of six years

On a search conducted by the Superintendent of Customs on the person of respondent 1 while he was travelling by train, a waistchain (kandora) worn by him weighing 820 grammes, which according to the prosecution, was made of pure gold and was coated with mercury so as to give an appearance of being made of silver, was seized. The trial court acquitted the respondent of the charges under S. 85 of the Gold (Control) Act as well as S. 135(1) read with S. 111 of the Customs Act and also found that the presumption under S. 123 of the Customs Act could not be raised as the Superintendent of Customs who had made the seizure could not have "entertained a reasonable belief" that the article in question was made of smuggled gold. The trial court also found fault in regard to the proof of report of the Mint Master that the article in question was made of pure gold of the specified fineness. The High Court confirmed the acquittal on all the three grounds. The request made by the Assistant Public Prosecutor for adducing additional evidence under S. 391, CrPC in order to remove the alleged formal defect in the proof of the Mint Master was rejected.

Held :

To deny the opportunity to remove the formal defect was to abort a case against an alleged economic offender. The mere fact that six years had elapsed, for which time-lag the prosecution was in no way responsible, was no good ground for refusing to act in order to promote the interests of justice in an age when delays in the court have become very common. The High Court was therefore altogether unjustified in rejecting the application invoking the powers of the court under S. 391 CrPC.

Ends of justice are not satisfied only when the accused in a criminal case is acquitted. The community acting through the State and the Public Prosecutor is also entitled to justice. The cause of the community deserves equal treatment at the hands of the court in the discharge of its judicial functions. The community or the State is not a persona non grata whose cause may be treated with disdain. The entire community is aggrieved if the economic offenders who ruin the economy of the State are not brought to book. A disregard for the interest of the community can be manifested only at the cost of forfeiting the trust and faith of the community in the system to administer justice in an even-handed manner without fear of criticism. State of Gujarat v. Mohanlal Jitamalji Porwal, (1987) 2 SCC 364: 1987 SCC (Cri) 364: AIR 1987 SC 1321: 1987 Cri LJ 1061: (1987) 13 ECC 12.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-3-1987]

[5881] — S. 391 — Additional evidence before Supreme Court — Submission that one of the accused was a juvenile not taken note of by Supreme Court because the birth certificate was not brought on record earlier but had come into existence much after completion of trial and disposal of appeal by High Court (Paras 8 and 9). Chaman v. State of Uttaranchal, (2008) 17 SCC 431: AIR 2009 SC 1036: (2009) 1 All LJ 680: 2009 Cri LJ 978: (2009) 75 AIC 129 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-12-2008]

— S. 392 See also S. 429, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1229 et seq. in Vol. 2

[5882] — S. 392 — Judges of appeal equally divided — Reference to third Judge — Third Judge is free to decide the appeal in the manner he thinks fit — He is not obliged, either as a rule of prudence or on the score of judicial etiquette, to accept the view of one of the Judges holding in favour of acquittal of the accused — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 429

The plain reading of Section 392 clearly indicates that it is for the third Judge to decide on what points he shall hear arguments, if any, and it necessarily postulates that the third Judge is free to decide the appeal by resolving the difference in the manner, he thinks proper.

Where a case is referred to a third Judge under Section 392 CrPC, such Judge is not only entitled to decide on what points he shall hear the arguments, if any, but his decision will be final and the judgment in the appeal will follow his decision.

In the scheme of Section 392 CrPC, the view that the third Judge, as a rule of prudence or on the question of judicial etiquette, will lean in favour of the view of one of the Judges in favour of acquittal of the accused, cannot be sustained. There is no manner of doubt that the third Judge has a statutory duty under Section 392 CrPC to consider the opinions of the two Judges whose opinions are to be laid before the third Judge for giving his own opinion on consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case. Tanviben Pankajkumar Divetia v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 156: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1004: AIR 1997 SC 2193: 1997 Cri LJ 2535: (1997) 1 Guj LH 851: (1997) 2 Guj LR 1346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1997]

Babu v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 1467: (1965) 2 SCR 771; Hethubha v. State of Gujarat, (1970) 1 SCC 720: 1970 SCC (Cri) 280; Union of India v. B.N. Ananti Padmanabiah, (1971) 3 SCC 278: 1971 SCC (Cri) 535; State of A.P. v. P.T. Appaiah, (1980) 4 SCC 316 ; 1980 SCC (Cri) 960, followed

*Empress v. Debi Singh, 1886 All WN 275; Narsiah, In re, AIR 1959 AP 313: 1959 Cri LJ 689: 1959 An LT 139, overruled

Balku v. Emperor, AIR 1948 All 237: 1948 All LJ 102: 49 Cri LJ 264; Nemai Mondal v. State of W.B., AIR 1966 Cal 194: 1966 Cri LJ 522; Dharam Singh v. State of U.P., (1964) 1 Cri LJ 78: 1962 All LJ 748 (SC), approved

[5883] — S. 392 — Judges of appeal equally divided — Reference to third judge — Course open to — Held, the third judge is not obliged, either as a rule of prudence or on the score of judicial etiquette, to accept the view of one of the Judges holding in favour of acquittal — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 429

The criminal appeal filed by the appellants in the present case was heard by a Division Bench of High Court consisting of judges S and K. There was a difference of opinion between the two learned Judges. One of the judges i.e. S was of the opinion that the appeal should be allowed and the conviction of the appellants and the sentences imposed thereunder were liable to be set aside. In view of the said difference of opinion, the appeal was placed for hearing before a third judge U, who came to the conclusion that the appeal deserved to be dismissed. Before the Supreme Court, it was contended by the appellants that the third judge should have leaned in favour of the view taken by S as a rule of prudence and should not have differed from the findings recorded by Judge S unless the same were perverse or there were strong and weighty reasons for doing so.

Held :

Section 392 CrPC lays down that when an appeal under Chapter XXIX is heard by a High Court before a Bench of Judges and they are divided in opinion, the appeal with their opinions, shall be laid before another Judge of that Court, and that Judge, after such hearing as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion and the judgment and order shall follow that opinion. The settled position being that the third judge is under no obligation to accept the view of one of the Judges holding in favour of acquittal of the accused either as a rule of prudence or on the score of judicial etiquette, it is not possible to accept the contention raised by the appellant. (Paras 8 and 10). Radha Mohan Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 2 SCC 450: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 661: AIR 2006 SC 951: (2006) 1 KLJ 535: (2006) 2 All LJ 242: 2006 Cri LJ 1121.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, Arun Kumar and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-2006]

Tanviben Pankajkumar Divetia v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 156: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1004; Dharam Singh v. State of U.P., (1964) 1 Cri LJ 78: 1962 Supp (3) SCR 769, followed

Babu v. State of U.P., (1965) 2 SCR 771: AIR 1965 SC 1467: (1965) 2 Cri LJ 539; Hethubha v. State of Gujarat, (1970) 1 SCC 720: 1970 SCC (Cri) 280; State of A.P. v. P.T. Appaiah, (1980) 4 SCC 316: 1980 SCC (Cri) 960, relied on [5884] — S. 392 — Reference of appeal to third Judge — Appeal as a whole must be laid before him — Appeal against acquittal of 32 accused — Division Bench agreeing on acquittal of 22 accused but disagreeing with regard to remaining accused — Upholding the acquittal of the said 22 accused the Division Bench making reference of the remaining accused to third Judge — Pursuant to the opinion of the third Judge acquittal of only 2 accused partly reversed — Held, order of acquittal of 22 accused by the Division Bench is non est — Even though order pursuant to the opinion of third Judge related to 10 out of 32 accused the order must be regarded as the final order whereby appeal of the State was partly allowed with only 2 of them being convicted and remaining acquitted. State of U.P. v. Dan Singh, (1997) 3 SCC 747: 1997 SCC (Cri) 469: AIR 1997 SC 1654: 1997 Cri LJ 1150: 1997 All LJ 647.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-1997]

[5885] — S. 392 — Third Judge, before whom the case is laid for opinion under, held, is competent to deal with the whole case and is not bound to confine his judgment only to the matter concerning difference of opinion between the other two Judges — On facts, view taken by the third Judge not being unreasonable and perverse, held, is not open to challenge — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 429. State of A.P. v. P.T. Appaiah, (1980) 4 SCC 316: 1980 SCC (Cri) 960: AIR 1981 SC 365: 1980 Cri LJ 1410.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and A.C. Gupta, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-1980]

[5886] — S. 392 — Reference to third Judge — Double murder — Except brief reference to the testimony of one eyewitness, no independent consideration of the testimony of other two eyewitnesses by the third Judge to whom the matter was referred due to the difference of opinion between the two Judges of Division Bench — Held, where the Judges in different dissenting opinions had given detailed reasons, for and against the acceptance of version as deposed to by the said eyewitnesses, the third Judge was required to independently examine the matter and express his opinion — Matter remitted for disposal afresh by a third Judge — Practice and Procedure — In limine dismissal/Speaking order necessity — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 — Allahabad High Court Rules, 1952, Ch. V, R. 6. Mattar v. State of U.P., (2002) 6 SCC 460: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1360: AIR 2002 SC 2783.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-2002]

[5887] — S. 392 — Scope of, compared with S. 429 of the old Code — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 429

In the present Code a proviso has been added to Section 392. But for this proviso effect of Section 429 of the old Code and Section 392 of the present Code would appear to be the same. Sajjan Singh v. State of M.P., (1999) 1 SCC 315: 1999 SCC (Cri) 44: AIR 1998 SC 2756.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-1998]

[5888] — Ss. 392 and 379 — Third Judge to whom the case is referred to, under S. 392 — Jurisdiction, powers and duty of — Held, he is required to examine independently the entire case including the points on which the two Judges of the Division Bench had concurred — His position is not that of a Judge sitting in a three-Judge Bench where majority opinion prevails — His opinion is rather the material one and it is against the judgment that follows therefrom that an appeal lies under Art. 136 or 134 of the Constitution or under S. 379 CrPC — On facts, therefore, the third Judge was bound to examine appeal of the three accused whose conviction had been upheld by both the Judges — However, despite the third Judge having not followed the correct procedure, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, matter decided by Supreme Court itself on merits and not remanded — Constitution of India — Arts. 136, 142 and 134 — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 429

Eleven persons, including the three appellants herein, were tried for offences under Sections 302/149 IPC. Two of them were charged also under Section 404. The trial court acquitted one B and convicted the rest ten under Sections 302/149 and sentenced them to life imprisonment. Their appeal was heard by a Division Bench of the High Court. Both the Judges comprising the Division Bench upheld the acquittal of B. But so far as the rest ten were concerned, one of the Judges opined that the conviction of all of them should be upheld while the other Judge felt that the conviction of only three of them should be upheld and that the rest seven should be acquitted. The matter was referred to a third Judge who acquitted four persons and upheld the conviction of six persons including the three persons convicted by both the Judges of the Division Bench. The third Judge did so without at all examining the cases of the said three persons as he thought himself to be bound by the opinion of the two Judges of the Division Bench. He rejected the plea that he had to independently examine the appeal of the said three persons. One of the new three convictees viz. SS and two of the three persons who had been convicted unanimously by the two Judges of the Division Bench, viz., M and B approached the Supreme Court. Dismissing the appeal of M and allowing that of B and SS,

Held :

Where a case is laid before a third Judge under Section 392 CrPC, 1973, it is the third Judge whose opinion matters and it is against the judgment that follows therefrom that an appeal lies to the Supreme Court by way of special leave petition under Article 136 of the Constitution or under Article 134 of the Constitution or under Section 379 of the Code. The third Judge is, therefore, required to examine whole of the case independently and it cannot be said that he is bound by that part of the two opinions of the two Judges comprising the Division Bench where there is no difference. As a matter of fact the third Judge is not bound by any such opinion of the Division Bench. He is not hearing the matter as if were sitting in a three-Judge Bench where the opinion of majority would prevail. Hence, in the instant case, the third Judge was not right in his approach and his hands were not tied as far as the three appellants, viz., G, M and B, in respect of whom both Judges of the Division Bench opined that they were guilty and their conviction and sentences were to be upheld.

Out of them only M and B are appellants herein. In normal circumstances the case might have to be remanded back to the third Judge to examine the matter afresh so far as these two appellants are concerned. However, in the instant case it would not be proper to adopt that course in respect of the third appellant, namely, SS, whose case was considered by the third Judge independently and who is also one of the appellants herein. In view of the matter having been heard by the Supreme Court in respect of all the three appellants at length it would not be desirable at this stage to remand the matter when only some of the appellants could be said to have been prejudiced because of the approach adopted by the third Judge. Sajjan Singh v. State of M.P., (1999) 1 SCC 315: 1999 SCC (Cri) 44: AIR 1998 SC 2756.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-1998]

Babu v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 1467: (1965) 2 SCR 771; State of U.P. v. Dan Singh, (1997) 3 SCC 747: 1997 SCC (Cri) 469; Tanviben Pankajkumar Divetia v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 7 SCC 156: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1004, followed

— S. 393 See also S. 430, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1231 in Vol. 2

— S. 393 See Ss. 374, 393 & 401
See also Ss. 378, 386 and 393

[5889] — S. 393 — Second appeal — Against conviction and sentence — Entire matter along with question of sentence fusing into one becomes subject matter of appeal — Hence second appellate court/authority will also have the powers conferred on the first appellate court/authority. Director of Enforcement v. New Central Jute Mills Co. Ltd., 1991 Supp (2) SCC 34: 1991 SCC (Cri) 843: AIR 1991 SC 719.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Ranganath Misra, C.J. and M.H. Kania and Kuldip Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-1990]

— S. 394 See also S. 431, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1232 et seq. in Vol. 2

[5890] — S. 394 — Abatement of appeal — Criminal appeal — Death of appellant during pendency of appeal — Appeal abated — Legal representative of the appellant cannot be permitted to pursue the remedy regarding outstanding claims from the department concerned which was due to the appellant — Legal representative can pursue the remedy departmentally in accordance with law — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Narain Lal Nirala v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 SCC (Cri) 1404: AIR 1994 SC 118.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-4-1993]

[5891] — S. 394 — Limitation — Appeal against quashing of detention order — Death of the detenu during pendency of appeal — Abatement — Fact of death of the detenu known to the appellant but no application for substitution of the heirs of the deceased made within the prescribed period of limitation — Application for setting aside abatement after condonation of delay also not made — Pendency of other appeals against quashing of notices to the sons of the deceased under S. 6 of the SAFEMA in which question of validity of detention order of the deceased was also to be determined — Held, merely because in connected appeals the heirs of the deceased were already on record it could not be said that there was no question of abatement of appeal against quashing of the detention order — Hence application for substitution of heirs liable to be rejected as being time-barred. Union of India v. Ghamandiram Kewalji Gowani, (1995) 1 SCC 40: 1995 SCC (Cri) 14.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-1994]

Mahabir Prasad v. Jage Ram, (1971) 1 SCC 265: (1971) 3 SCR 301, distinguished [5892] — S. 394 — Abatement of appeal — Appeal to Supreme Court against acquittal by High Court of accused and his abettor — On death of the accused, held, the appeal would abate not only against him but also the abettor — Constitution of India — Art.136. State of Maharashtra v. Eknath Yeshwant Pagar, (1981) 2 SCC 299: 1981 SCC (Cri) 462: AIR 1981 SC 1571.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-1981]

[5893] — S. 394 — Abatement of criminal appeal on death of accused — Whether S. 431, CrPC, 1898, applicable to an appeal by special leave under Art. 136 against a composite sentence of imprisonment and fine — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 431

Though strictly speaking S. 431, CrPC, 1898 does not apply to appeals by special leave, yet, in the interests of uniformity there is no valid reason for applying to appeals under Art. 136 a set of rules different from those which govern appeals under the Code in the matter of abatement.

Now every appeal against conviction abates on the death of accused except an appeal from a sentence of fine. An appeal from a sentence of fine is excepted from the all-pervasive rule of abatement of criminal appeals for the reason that the fine constitutes a liability on the estate of the deceased and the legal representatives on whom the estate devolves are entitled to ward off that liability. The sentence of fine remains outstanding though the right to recover the fine is circumscribed by a sort of a period of limitation prescribed by S. 70, IPC.

Though an appeal from a composite order of sentence is ordinarily directed against both the substantive imprisonment and the fine, it does not cease to be an appeal from a sentence of fine. The plain meaning of S. 431 is that every criminal appeal abates on the death of the accused "except an appeal from a sentence of fine". The section for its application requires that the appeal must be directed to the sentence of fine and not that it must be directed to that sentence only. If by the judgment under appeal a sentence of fine is imposed either singularly or in conjunction with a sentence of imprisonment the appeal against conviction would be an appeal from a sentence of fine within the meaning of S. 431. All that is necessary is that a sentence of fine should have been imposed on the accused and the appeal filed by him should involve the consideration of the validity of that sentence.

In this regard it is incorrect to state that even after finding that the conviction is illegal, the Court must only set aside the sentence of fine permitting the illegal conviction and the substantive sentence founded upon it to remain. Harnam Singh v. State of H.P., (1975) 3 SCC 343: 1974 SCC (Cri) 951: AIR 1975 SC 236: 1975 Cri LJ 276: 1975 MLJ (Cri) 493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and P.N. Bhagwati, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-1974]

Applied in State of A.P. v. S. Narasimha Kumar, (2006) 5 SCC 683; Shankar Prasad Ghosh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 11 SCC 373*

[5894] — S. 394 — Abatement of appeal — Death of accused-employees during pendency of appeals against acquittal — Appeals against deceased-accused abated and remaining accused convicted — Charge of conspiracy against the accused-respondents and the deceased-accused common and evidence against them same — Held, in the circumstances, legal heirs of deceased-accused not entitled to claim any arrears of wages and/or any service benefits

It is no doubt correct that the appeals against the deceased accused have abated and their acquittal by the High Court cannot be technically interfered, but having allowed these appeals and convicting the respondents even on the charge of conspiracy, it would not be in the interest of justice to permit the legal heirs of deceased accused persons to claim arrears of wages on the ground that their acquittal has not been set aside because of the abatement of the appeals. The charge of conspiracy against accused-respondents and the deceased-accused was common. The same evidence which has been believed qua the respondents is also directed against the deceased-accused. Under these circumstances it would be wholly unjust to permit the legal heirs of the deceased-accused to take advantage of their acquittal by the High Court and claim huge amount of arrears of wages from the Corporation.

[In order to do complete justice between the parties, the Supreme Court directed that the legal heirs of the deceased-accused whose acquittal could not be set aside due to the intervention of death shall not be entitled to claim any arrears of wages and/or any service benefits.]. State of T.N. v. T. Thulasingam, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 405: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1504: AIR 1995 SC 1314.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1994]

[5895] — S. 394 — Abatement of appeals — Delay in filing application in Supreme Court — High Court upholding appellant's conviction under Ss. 409, 477-A read with Ss. 34, 467 and 471 IPC and S. 5(2) read with S. 4(1)(c) and S. 5(1)(d) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — During pendency of appeal in Supreme Court appellant S dying and after about 5 years applications filed under S. 394(2) to bring on record the LRs for continuing the appeal — Statutory period for making such application was 30 days — No explanation offered for the delay — Without going into the question of condonation of delay, appeal held to have abated on death of appellant S — Principles underlying S. 394 apply to appeals before Supreme Court (Paras 1 to 3 and 7). Shankar Prasad Ghosh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 11 SCC 373: (2008) 67 AIC 99 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3188.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-6-2008]

State of A.P. v. S. Narasimha Kumar, (2006) 5 SCC 683: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 54; S.V. Kameswar Rao v. State, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 377: 1991 SCC (Cri) 694; Harnam Singh v. State of H.P., (1975) 3 SCC 343: 1974 SCC (Cri) 951, applied

[5896] — S. 394 — Applicability — Abatement of State appeal under Art. 136 pending in Supreme Court on death of accused — Appeal filed by State against order of High Court which set aside conviction and sentence of accused — Held, said appeal abated on death of accused — Bondada Gajapathy Rao, AIR 1964 SC 1645 and Harnam Singh, (1975) 3 SCC 343 followed (Para 8). State of A.P. v. S. Narasimha Kumar, (2006) 5 SCC 683: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 54: AIR 2006 SC 2924: (2006) 3 KLT 505.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-2006]

Bondada Gajapathy Rao v. State of A.P., (1964) 7 SCR 251: AIR 1964 SC 1645: (1964) 2 Cri LJ 598; Harnam Singh v. State of H.P., (1975) 3 SCC 343: 1974 SCC (Cri) 951, applied

Applied in Shankar Prasad Ghosh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 11 SCC 373

[5897] — S. 394(2) — Abatement of appeal before Supreme Court — Delay in applying for substitution of LRs of deceased accused — Unsatisfactory explanation — Effect — Matter adjourned several times and delayed by one year (limitation period being 30 days) — Plea of ignorance of LRs regarding substitution application and consequential failure to inform counsel regarding death of accused — Held, was without substance — Therefore, appeal abated — Principles underlying S. 394 apply to appeals before Supreme Court — Gold (Control) Act, 1968, Ss. 85(1)(ii), (iii), (viii) and (ix) — Customs Act, 1962, S. 135(1)(b)(i) — Limitation Act, 1963, Ss. 5 and 3

The appellant-accused was convicted for offences punishable under Section 135(1)(b)(i) of the Customs Act, 1962 (the Customs Act) and Sections 85(1)(ii), (iii), (viii) and (ix) of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968 (the Gold Act) by the trial court. The High Court by the impugned order set aside the conviction and sentence for the offence punishable under Section 135(1)(b)(i) of the Customs Act while upholding the conviction for the offence punishable under Section 85 of the Gold Act. An application was filed on 4-1-2008 for substitution for bringing legal representatives of the appellant on record along with the application for condonation of delay. The only ground indicated in the application seeking condonation was that the legal heirs of the appellant were not aware that the death of their father has to be intimated to the counsel at Delhi for preparing and filing the application for substitution. The moment they knew about this requirement they contacted their counsel and application was filed.

Disposing the appeal,

Held :

The appeal has abated on the death of the appellant and has to be disposed of accordingly. There is no need to go into the question as to whether there is scope for condonation of delay as no acceptable explanation has been offered for the delayed presentation. The plea that the legal heirs did not know the requirement is clearly without any substance. The period of 30 days has been statutorily fixed under Section 394 CrPC for making an application by the legal heirs, however, in the instant case, the application was filed nearly after one year. Moreover, several times the matter was adjourned at the request of learned counsel who appeared for the original appellant. (Paras 10 and 9). Hari Prasad Chhapolia v. Union of India, (2008) 7 SCC 690: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 220: (2008) 227 ELT 345: (2008) 68 AIC 129 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3198.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-6-2008]

State of A.P. v. S. Narasimha Kumar, (2006) 5 SCC 683: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 54; S.V. Kameswar Rao v. State, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 377: 1991 SCC (Cri) 694; Harnam Singh v. State of H.P., (1975) 3 SCC 343: 1974 SCC (Cri) 951, relied on [5898] — S. 394(2) — Appeal to Supreme Court against conviction under S. 5(2) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 read with S. 161, IPC — Death of appellant during the pendency of the appeal — Substitution of near relatives granted — Held, appeal would not abate — Concession by State to strike off the imposition of fine therefore immaterial. Lakshmi Shanker Srivastava v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1979) 1 SCC 229: 1979 SCC (Cri) 269: AIR 1979 SC 451: 1979 Cri LJ 207.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.S. Kailasam, D.A. Desai and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-1978]

[5899] — S. 394(2) proviso — Abatement of appeal — Death of appellant Government servant during pendency of appeal against his conviction and sentence under S. 4(1) of Prevention of Corruption Act r/w S. 161 IPC — Application made by his son ten years after appellant's death for leave to continue the appeal and for condonation of delay so that in case of acquittal, he could secure consequential benefits — No explanation given nor sufficient cause shown for not approaching the court within prescribed period and making undue and inordinate delay — Held, appeal abated. S.V. Kameswar Rao v. State, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 377: 1991 SCC (Cri) 694: AIR 1991 SC 2085.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

Applied in Shankar Prasad Ghosh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 11 SCC 373

[5900] — S. 394(2) proviso — Permission to continue appeal subsequent to death of accused-appellant — Sought by widow of appellant after "delay of 149 days" — Condoning the delay, Supreme Court granting the said permission — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 431 (Para 11). Girja Prasad v. State of M.P., (2007) 7 SCC 625: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 475: (2007) 4 KLT 99: (2007) 58 AIC 230 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2007]

— S. 395 See also S. 432, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1234 in Vol. 2

— S. 395 See Ss. 319 and 395
See also Ss. 374 and 395

[5901] — Ss. 395 & 396 — Order passed by criminal court (such as one under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code) ceasing to be operative (e.g. by efflux of time) — Held, High Court not justified in dealing with the reference and pronouncing its view on such order as also giving its findings on rights, title, property etc., merely on ground of avoiding future complications. Mohd. Ibrahim v. City Magistrate, Varanasi, (1983) 2 SCC 153: 1983 SCC (Cri) 365.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.N. Ray, C.J. and M.H. Beg and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-1976]

— S. 396 See Ss. 395 & 396

— S. 397 See also S. 435, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1234 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 397 See Ss. 125 and 397
See also Ss. 125, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 145, 146 and 397 & 401
See also Ss. 156, 157, 465, 401 and 397
See also Ss. 204 and 397
See also Ss. 227 & 228, 401 & 397 and 482
See also Ss. 245, 227, 397 and 482
See also Ss. 245, 397, 399 and 482
See also Ss. 321, 227, 239 and 397
See also Ss. 321 and 397
See also Ss. 321, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 357, 358 and 397
See also Ss. 374, 384, 386, 401 & 397
See also Ss. 376, 384 and 397
See also Ss. 389, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 398 and 397
See also Ss. 401, 377(3), 397 & 386
See also Ss. 401 & 397
See also Ss. 401, 397 and 204
See also Ss. 401 & 397 and 227 & 228
See also Ss. 401, 397 and 228
See also Ss. 401, 397, 235, 248 and 255
See also Ss. 401, 397 and 239
See also Ss. 401, 397 and 378
See also Ss. 401, 397 and 398
See also Ss. 401, 397 & 482 and 197
See also Ss. 401, 399 & 397
See also Ss. 401(3) & 397
See also Ss. 401(3), 397, 399 and 386
See also Ss. 403, 397 to 399 and 401
See also Ss. 482, 245, 397 and 399
See also Ss. 482, 374(2), 386 and 397
See also Ss. 482 and 397
See also Ss. 482, 397, 166-A and 401
See also Ss. 482, 397, 227 & 228
See also Ss. 482, 397 and 399
See also Ss. 482, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 482, 397, 401, 239, 240 and 173

[5902] — S. 397 — Orders not interlocutory under — Held, indisputably issuance of summons is not an interlocutory order within the meaning of S. 397 (Para 6). Dhariwal Tobacco Products Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 2 SCC 370.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-2008]

[5903] — S. 397 — Revision — Scope of discretionary power of High Court

Under S. 397, the High Court possesses the general power of superintendence over the actions of courts subordinate to it which discretionary power when administered on administration side, is known as the power of superintendence and on the judicial side as the power of revision. In exercise of the discretionary powers conferred on the High Court under the provisions of this section, the High Court can, at any stage, on its own motion, if it so desires and certainly when illegalities and irregularities resulting in injustice are brought to its notice, call for the records and examine them. The words in the Section are, however, very general and they empower the High Court to call for the record of a case not only when it intends to satisfy itself about the correctness of any finding, sentence or order but also as to the regularity of any proceeding of any subordinate court. Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305: 1993 SCC (Cri) 36: AIR 1993 SC 892.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-1992]

[5904] — S. 397 — Revisional jurisdiction under — Concept and Scope of

Per Fazal Ali and Sen, JJ.

The term 'interlocutory order' used in the Code of Criminal Procedure has to be given a very liberal construction in favour of the accused in order to ensure complete fairness of the trial because the bar contained in S. 397(3) of the Code would apply to a variety of cases coming up before the courts not only being offences under the Penal Code but under numerous Acts. If, therefore, the right of revision was to be barred, the provision containing the bar must be confined within the four corners of the spirit and the letter of the law. In other words, the revisional power of the High Court or the Sessions Judge could be attracted if the order was not purely interlocutory but intermediate or quasi final. V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695: AIR 1980 SC 962: 1980 Cri LJ 690: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 664.

Bench Strength 4. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], P.N. Shinghal[2], D.A. Desai[3] and A.P. Sen[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1979]

[5905] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revisional power of High Court — Scope — Held, cannot be exercised as a second appellate power — In exercise of revisional power High Court cannot undertake in-depth and minute re-examination of entire evidence and upset concurrent findings of trial court and first appellate court

Section 401 CrPC is a provision enabling the High Court to exercise all powers of an appellate court, if necessary, in aid of power of superintendence or supervision as a part of power of revision conferred on the High Court or the Sessions Court. It is for the purpose, as set out in Section 397, that if necessary, the High Court or the Sessions Court can exercise all appellate powers. Section 401 CrPC conferring powers of an appellate court on the revisional court is with the above limited purpose. The provisions contained in Section 395 to Section 401 CrPC, read together, do not indicate that the revisional power of the High Court can be exercised as a second appellate power. The High Court is required to exercise self-restraint in a revision under Section 397. In this case the High Court exceeded its revisional jurisdiction by embarking upon an in-depth re-examination of the oral and medical evidence and coming to a conclusion, contrary to the consistent one reached by the two courts below. (Paras 22 and 14). State of Maharashtra v. Jagmohan Singh Kuldip Singh Anand, (2004) 7 SCC 659: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2003: AIR 2004 SC 4412: (2004) 172 ELT 19.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2004]

Ram Briksh Singh v. Ambika Yadav, (2004) 7 SCC 665, distinguished

Duli Chand v. Delhi Admn., (1975) 4 SCC 649: 1975 SCC (Cri) 663: AIR 1975 SC 1960, relied on

Followed in Johar v. Mangal Prasad, (2008) 3 SCC 423

[5906] — Ss. 397, 398 and 401 — Superintendence of criminal trials by High Court — Need for proactive note, stressed — Criminal justice system — Insulation of, from external influences aimed to subvert trials — Positive intervention called for — General guidelines issued for assuming a more proactive role — Held, authority of High Court of superintendence over subordinate courts has great dynamism — It is time to add to it another dimension for monitoring and protection of criminal trials — Superintendence should not be confined only to posting, transfer and promotion of the officers of the subordinate judiciary — Power of control should also be exercised to protect them from external interference that may sometimes appear overpowering to them and to support them to discharge their duties fearlessly — Constitution of India, Arts. 227 and 235

At the root of this odious affair is the way the BMW trial was allowed to be constantly interfered with till it almost became directionless. All this and several other similar developments calculated to derail the trial would not have escaped the notice of the Chief Justice or the Judges of the Delhi High Court. But there is nothing to show that the High Court, as an institution, as a body took any step to thwart the nefarious activities aimed at undermining the trial and to ensure that it proceeded on the proper course. As a result, everyone seemed to feel free to try to subvert the trial in any way they pleased. This indifferent and passive attitude is not confined to the BMW trial or to the Delhi High Court alone. It is shared in greater or lesser degrees by many other High Courts. (Paras 337 to 339)

Every failed trial is also, in a manner of speaking, a negative comment on the State's High Court that is entrusted with the responsibility of superintendence, supervision and control of the lower courts. It is, therefore, high time for the High Courts to assume a more proactive role in such matters. A step in time by the High Court can save a criminal case from going astray. An enquiry from the High Court Registry to the quarters concerned would send the message that the High Court is watching; it means business and it will not tolerate any nonsense. Even this much would help a great deal in insulating a criminal case from outside interferences. In very few cases where more positive intervention is called for, if the matter is at the stage of investigation the High Court may call for status report and progress reports from police headquarters or the Superintendent of Police concerned. That alone would provide sufficient stimulation and pressure for a fair investigation of the case. (Para 341)

In rare cases if the High Court is not satisfied by the status/progress reports it may even consider taking up the matter on the judicial side. Once the case reaches the stage of trial the High Court obviously has far wider powers. It can assign the trial to some judicial officer who has made a reputation for independence and integrity. It may fix the venue of the trial at a proper place where the scope for any external interference may be eliminated or minimised. It can give effective directions for protection of witnesses and victims and their families. It can ensure a speedy conclusion of the trial by directing the trial court to take up the matter on a day-to-day basis. (Para 342)

The High Court has got ample powers for all this both on the judicial and administrative sides. Article 227 of the Constitution of India that gives the High Court the authority of superintendence over the subordinate courts has great dynamism and now is the time to add to it another dimension for monitoring and protection of criminal trials. Similarly, Article 235 of the Constitution that vests the High Court with the power of control over subordinate courts should also include a positive element. It should not be confined only to posting, transfer and promotion of the officers of the subordinate judiciary. The power of control should also be exercised to protect them from external interference that may sometimes appear overpowering to them and to support them to discharge their duties fearlessly. (Para 343). R.K. Anand v. Delhi High Court, (2009) 8 SCC 106: (2009) 161 DLT 130.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Agrawal, G.S. Singhvi and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2009]

[5907] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Scope and object of revisional power of High Court under

Exercise of the revisional power by the High Court under Section 397 read with Section 401 is to call for the records of any inferior criminal court and to examine the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order, recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior court and to pass appropriate orders. The Court of Sessions and the Magistrates are inferior criminal courts to the High Court and Courts of Judicial Magistrate are inferior criminal courts to the Sessions Judge. Ordinarily, in the matter of exercise of power of revision by any High Court, Section 397 and Section 401 are required to be read together. Section 397 gives powers to the High Court to call for the records as also suo motu power under Section 401 to exercise the revisional power on the grounds mentioned therein, i.e., to examine the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order, recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior court, and to dispose of the revision in the manner indicated under Section 401 of the Code. The revisional power of the High Court merely conserves the power of the High Court to see that justice is done in accordance with the recognised rules of criminal jurisprudence and that its subordinate courts do not exceed the jurisdiction or abuse the power vested in them under the Code or to prevent abuse of the process of the inferior criminal courts or to prevent miscarriage of justice.

The object of Section 483 and the purpose behind conferring the revisional power under Section 397 read with Section 401, upon the High Court is to invest continuous supervisory jurisdiction so as to prevent miscarriage of justice or to correct irregularity of the procedure or to mete out justice. In addition, the inherent power of the High Court is preserved by Section 482. The power of the High Court, therefore, is very wide. However, the High Court must exercise such power sparingly and cautiously when the Sessions Judge has simultaneously exercised revisional power under Section 397(1). However, when the High Court notices that there has been failure of justice or misuse of judicial mechanism or procedure, sentence or order is not correct, it is but the salutary duty of the High Court to prevent the abuse of the process or miscarriage of justice or to correct irregularities/incorrectness committed by inferior criminal court in its juridical process or illegality of sentence or order. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241: 1997 SCC (Cri) 544: AIR 1997 SC 987: 1997 Cri LJ 1519: (1997) 1 Mah LJ 509.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K. Ramaswamy, S. Saghir Ahmad and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-1997]

[5908] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision — Nature and scope of — Respondent filed revision petition before High Court against order of trial court permitting examination of three defence witnesses — High Court without examining acceptability of challenge suspended the said order and directed trial court to dispose of the case — Held, High Court granted final relief at an interim stage — Hence, orders passed by High Court set aside and High Court directed to hear revision petition on merits

In the application filed by the petitioner under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, the order dated 12-12-2006 passed by the IIIrd Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, was questioned. The High Court noted that because of the order of stay passed by the High Court in an earlier proceeding in Criminal RC No. 2026 of 2006, the trial court was justified in completing the trial.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

It is to be noted that in Criminal Revision No. 2026 of 2006 Respondent 1 had questioned the correctness of the order permitting the examination of the three defence witnesses. Without examining the acceptability of the challenge the High Court could not have directed disposal of the trial itself while directing suspension of the order impugned before it. In other words, the final relief was granted at an interim stage. When the petition, which is the subject-matter of the consideration in the appeal, was taken up by the High Court a fait accompli was presented that the orders have been passed pursuant to the earlier order of the High Court. In the circumstances the orders dated 8-12-2006 and 19-12-2006 passed by the High Court were set aside. The High Court shall now hear Criminal RC No. 2026 of 2006 and decide it on merits. As a consequence of this order, if any adjudication has been done by the trial court the same shall get nullified. (Paras 5 to 7). Sri Krishna Tyres v. J.K. Industries Ltd., (2009) 13 SCC 554: AIR 2009 SC 2538.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

[5909] — Ss. 397, 401, 228 and 227 — Revision — Scope — Suo motu revision by High Court — Unsustainably erroneous framing of charge by Sessions Judge — Observations and correctional suggestions by High Court ultimately resulting in denial of selection grade to appellant Sessions Judge against whose judgment revision undertaken — Propriety of such remarks — Appellant Sessions Judge though having requisite experience to frame correct charge, framing charge under S. 304 IPC when there was a prima facie case under S. 302 IPC — Appellant not giving any reasons for such unjustified dilution of charge — Single Judge, High Court therefore, suggesting to High Court on administrative side that if appellant was not yet confirmed, his probation should continue and if his services were already confirmed, his performance be verified before giving him the higher scale — Since appellant's service had been confirmed, High Court administrative side after checking his record and finding serious deficiencies, denying him selection grade — On facts, observations and correctional suggestions, held, were necessary and justified — Suggestions did not have any adverse or disparaging remarks — Plea that Revisional Court did not reopen criminal case on higher charges is not tenable as accused had already undergone 5 years' RI — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 or S. 304 — Constitution of India, Arts. 227 and 235

The appellant, a retired Additional Sessions Judge challenged the judgment and order rendered by a Single Judge of the High Court in a suo motu criminal revision, wherein the Single Judge had made certain observations against the appellant affecting his career to the effect of denying him higher scale of pay. These remarks were made on account of the appellant not framing the charge under Section 302 IPC and instead framing charge under Section 304 IPC against the accused in that case, when the material on record warranted framing of that charge.

Dismissing the appeal.

Held :

There is no reason to interfere in the impugned order making certain observations and suggestions which were necessary in the facts and circumstances of the case. The appellant was responsible for an unjustified dilution of the charge and, therefore, the thorough checking of his service record was necessary which is what was directed in the impugned order. (Paras 31 and 30)

The impugned order did not make any adverse or disparaging remarks but only made a correctional suggestion to the High Court Administration which the Administration accepted. It was suggested to the High Court Administration, that if the appellant was not yet confirmed, his probation should wait and if his services were already confirmed, his performance be verified before giving him the higher scale. Since the appellant was already confirmed in service, all that the High Court did on the administrative side was to check his record, and thereafter to deny him the selection grade. (Paras 28 and 29)

It cannot be said that the appellant did not have requisite experience to pass a correct legal order under Section 228 CrPC. The impugned order of the Single Judge deciding revision notes that the appellant had been functioning in the rank of the District Judge from August 1991 onwards i.e. for nearly 5 years prior to his order dated 21-3-1996. The impugned order further states in para 5 that a judicial officer, before being posted as an Additional Sessions Judge, gets an experience of taking the sessions cases as Assistant Sessions Judge. (Para 27)

The appellant cannot take advantage of the fact that the High Court, while passing the impugned order in revision, did not reopen the case under Section 401 CrPC. By the time the suo motu revision was decided, the accused had already undergone the punishment of rigorous imprisonment of 5 years. (Para 30)

The selection grade is not to be conferred as a matter of right. The record of the Judge concerned has to be seen, and that having been done in the present case (in pursuance to the observations of the Single Judge), and having noted the serious deficiencies, the High Court has denied the selection grade to the appellant. (Para 29). R.S. Mishra v. State of Orissa, (2011) 2 SCC 689.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2011]

'K' A Judicial Officer, In re, (2001) 3 SCC 54; V.K. Jain v. High Court of Delhi, (2008) 17 SCC 538; Parkash Singh Teji v. Northern India Goods Transport Co. (P) Ltd., (2009) 12 SCC 577: (2010) 1 SCC (L&S) 160, distinguished [5910] — Ss. 397, 399 and 401 — Maintainability of revision — Dismissal of S. 319 petition for proceeding against appellant by Magistrate — Persons who may bring revision against — Person neither the complainant nor having any connection with alleged offence — Long lapse of time — Effect — In a case of theft of idols, trial court convicted four persons for offences under Ss. 457, 380, 411 and 414 IPC — Magistrate dismissing prosecution's petition under S. 319 for proceeding against appellant since final report of police found no case against appellant — Sessions Court ex parte allowing revision petition filed by a third party two years thereafter for proceeding against appellant and directing Magistrate to take cognizance of offence — Appellant not having any information about these subsequent events — High Court dismissing writ petition of appellant thereagainst — Matter remitted to High Court to consider maintainability of revision petition at the instance of third party after such delay, with requirement of opportunity of hearing to appellant and notice to informant — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 457, 380, 411, 413 and 414 — Constitution of India — Arts. 226 and 227 (Paras 11 and 12). Ram Naresh Prasad v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 11 SCC 299: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1336: (2009) 77 AIC 221 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-2009]

Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117, impliedly followed

[5911] — Ss. 397 & 401, 386 and 313 — Powers of revisional or appellate court — Interference with conviction and sentence — Mere omission by trial court to put any question to an accused, even if it is of a vital nature, held, cannot be a ground for appellate or revisional court to set aside the conviction and sentence as an inevitable consequence

The respondent failed to show that there was any failure of justice on account of the omission to put a question concerning such formal evidence when he was examined under Section 313 of the Code. No objection was raised by the accused, either in the trial court or in the appellate court, on the ground of such omission. Even if the said omission is of a vital nature, it alone should not result in setting aside the conviction and sentence as an inevitable consequence. Effort should be made to undo or correct the lapse. If it is not possible to correct it by any means, the court should then consider the impact of the lapse on the overall aspect of the case. After keeping that particular item of evidence aside, if the remaining evidence is sufficient to bring home the guilt of the accused, the lapse does not matter much, and can be sidelined justifiably. But if the lapse is so vital as would affect the entire case, the appellate or revisional court can endeavour to see whether it could be rectified. Such an omission does not ipso facto vitiate the proceedings unless any prejudice having been caused to the accused is established by him before the court. At any rate, the omission to put the question concerning evidence, which is purely of a formal nature, is too insufficient for holding that the proceedings were vitiated. (Paras 12, 16 and 6). State of Punjab v. Naib Din, (2001) 8 SCC 578: 2002 SCC (Cri) 33: AIR 2001 SC 3955.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2001]

Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87, relied on [5912] — S. 397 — Revision power of High Court cannot be restricted on technical grounds such as limitation — Magistrate acquitting the accused in a food adulteration case relying upon a Supreme Court decision — Supreme Court overruling that decision thus rendering the acquittal order unsustainable — High Court held not justified in dismissing the revision petition on ground of limitation. Municipal Corpn. of Delhi v. Girdharilal Sapru, (1981) 2 SCC 758: 1981 SCC (Cri) 598: AIR 1981 SC 1169: 1981 Cri LJ 632.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1981]

[5913] — S. 397 — Scope of revisional power under — Detailed appreciation of facts not open in revision

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

There is no appeal provided by the Act against an order giving consent under S. 321. But the order is revisable under S. 397 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 397 gives the High Court or the Sessions Judge jurisdiction to consider the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order and as to the regularity of the proceedings of any inferior court. While considering the legality, propriety or the correctness of a finding or a conclusion, normally, the revising court does not dwell at length upon the facts and evidence of the case. The court in revision considers the materials only to satisfy itself about the correctness, legality and propriety of the findings, sentence or order and refrains from substituting its own conclusion on an elaborate consideration of evidence.

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.

The revisional power exercised by the High Court under S. 397 is couched in words of widest amplitude and in exercise of this power can satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any order passed by the Magistrate or as to the regularity of any proceedings of such Magistrate. When Supreme Court is hearing an appeal against an order made by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional power under S. 397 it is the same revisional power which Supreme Court would be exercising and Supreme Court therefore certainly can interfere with the order made by the Magistrate and confirmed by the High Court if it is satisfied that the order is incorrect, illegal, or improper. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[5914] — Ss. 397, 401, 91, 311 and 200 — Exercise of power of revision — Denial of right of hearing — Effect of — Application by respondent before trial court under S. 91 seeking directions for production of personal documents in possession of appellant — Also application under S. 311 for recalling appellant for cross-examination — Trial court rejecting both applications — High Court in revision petition allowing the applications of respondent without issuing notice to appellant — High Court concluding that production of documents would cause no prejudice to appellant — Held, the very nature of documents was such that issuing a notice to appellant was imperative — More so because appellant had not been cross-examined in respect of those documents — Moreover, revision of the orders in question was barred under S. 397(2) — Hence, High Court's order set aside (Para 4). Sethuraman v. Rajamanickam, (2009) 5 SCC 153.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2009]

[5915] — S. 397 — Revision — Direct recourse to High Court — Permissibility — Held, revision can be preferred directly before High Court against order of CJM, instead of first moving Sessions Court — There is no bar for High Court to entertain such revision petition — Held on facts, High Court erred in criticising CBI for filing petition under S. 397 directly before it bypassing Sessions Court (Paras 3 and 5). CBI v. State of Gujarat, (2007) 6 SCC 156: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 65: AIR 2007 SC 2522: (2007) 56 AIC 65 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-6-2007]

[5916] — Ss. 397 & 401 and Ss. 156(3) & 200 — Revisional powers of High Court — Exercise of, in absence of accused — Sustainability — Respondent 1, a registered company filing a complaint petition before Metropolitan Magistrate alleging commission of offences purported to be under Ss. 323, 382, 420, 465, 468, 471, 120-B, 506 and 34 IPC accompanied by an application under S. 156(3) — Metropolitan Magistrate refusing to direct investigation in terms of S. 156(3) and complainant asked to lead pre-summoning evidence — However, High Court in revision application filed thereagainst wherein only State was impleaded, without hearing accused setting aside said order and directing Metropolitan Magistrate to examine matter afresh after calling report from police authorities — Held, one of the questions which arises for consideration is as to whether the learned Magistrate has taken cognizance of the offence — Indisputably, if he had taken cognizance of the offence and merely issuance of summons upon the accused persons had been postponed, in a criminal revision filed on behalf of the complainant, the accused was entitled to be heard before the High Court — S. 401(2) refers not only to an accused but also to any person and if he is prejudiced, he is required to be heard — An order was passed partially in his favour as Metropolitan Magistrate had refused to exercise its jurisdiction under S. 156(3) — Had an opportunity of hearing been given to the appellant, he could have shown that no revision application was maintainable and/or even otherwise, no case has been made out for interference with the impugned judgment — Besides, in the instant case learned Magistrate had taken cognizance — He had applied his mind and refused to exercise his jurisdiction under S. 156(3) — He arrived at a conclusion that the dispute is a private dispute in relation to an immovable property and, thus, police investigation is not necessary — It was only with that intent in view, he directed examination of the complainant and his witnesses — Hence, impugned judgment cannot be sustained and is accordingly set aside — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 323, 382, 420, 465, 468, 471, 120-B, 506 and 34 (Paras 4 to 6, 11 to 14 and 19 to 23). Raghu Raj Singh Rousha v. Shivam Sundaram Promoters (P) Ltd., (2009) 2 SCC 363.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-2008]

Mohd. Yousuf v. Afaq Jahan, (2006) 1 SCC 627: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 460, distinguished on facts

Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430; Makkapati Nagaswara Sastri v. S.S. Satyanarayan, (1981) 1 SCC 62: 1981 SCC (Cri) 111; P. Sundarrajan v. R. Vidhya Sekar, (2004) 13 SCC 472: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 345; Vadilal Panchal v. Dattatraya Dulaji Ghadigaonkar, AIR 1960 SC 1113; Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 9, considered

[5917] — S. 397 — Revision — Speaking order giving reasons in brief and indicating application of mind on the facts or pleas raised before the Court necessary — Merely saying that no illegality, impropriety or jurisdictional error was found without even a whisper of the merit of the matter or nature of pleas raised not good enough — Matter remitted for consideration afresh — Bald order — Nature of — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 279 and 304-A

The appellant was convicted and sentenced under Section 279 read with Section 304-A IPC. The appeal preferred against the conviction and sentence was dismissed. In revision before the High Court one of the pleas raised was that the appellant, a Driver in the Police Deptt., had been acting under the colour of his official duty while driving the official vehicle at the time of the occurrence and as such it was obligatory to obtain sanction before initiation of the prosecution which is otherwise barred under Section 140 of the Delhi Police Act and that the prosecution was bad for want of sanction by the competent authority. It was also submitted that there was no eyewitness account alleging rash or negligent driving on the part of the appellant and the courts below erred in fastening the guilt upon the appellant only by application of the maxim res ipsa loquitur. The High Court dismissed the revision passing the following order:

"I have heard the learned counsel for the petitioner. I find no illegality, impropriety or jurisdictional error in the judgment under challenge. Dismissed."

Question before the Supreme Court was whether the revision should have been disposed of by means of a bald and non-speaking order by the High Court. It was submitted that probably the revision had been disposed of by the High Court having the provisions of Section 115 CPC in mind since the order observed about "no jurisdictional" error having been committed by the courts below. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The question of error in exercise of jurisdiction may arise sometimes in criminal revisions as well. Be that as it may, the submissions made on behalf of the appellant could not be negated without examining them on merit. The order impugned however does not indicate any trace of application of mind on the facts or the pleas raised before the court. The reasons, howsoever brief they may be, are to be indicated in an order disposing of any matter, more so when such orders are subject to appeal or review before the higher forum. It is true that it may depend upon the nature of the matter which is being dealt with by the court and the nature of jurisdiction being exercised as to in what manner the reasons may be recorded e.g. in an order of affirmance detailed reasons or discussion may not be necessary but some brief indication by which application of mind may be traceable to affirm an order would certainly be required. Mere ritual of repeating the words or language used in the provisions, saying that no illegality, impropriety or jurisdictional error is found in the judgment under challenge without even a whisper of the merit of the matter or nature of pleas raised does not meet the requirement of decision of a case judicially. It is a matter in which the High Court may consider the matter afresh and pass an appropriate order in accordance with law. (Paras 7 to 9). Paul George v. State, (2002) 2 SCC 406: 2002 SCC (Cri) 340: AIR 2002 SC 657: 2002 Cri LJ 996.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-1-2002]

S.N. Mukherjee v. Union of India, (1990) 4 SCC 594: 1991 SCC (L&S) 242: 1990 SCC (Cri) 669; Maharashtra State Board of S. & H.S. Education v. K.S. Gandhi, (1991) 2 SCC 716; M.J. Sivani v. State of Karnataka, (1995) 6 SCC 289; State of A.P. v. Rajagopala Rao, (2000) 10 SCC 338: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1379, relied on [5918] — S. 397 — Revision — Ex parte disposal of — Revision petition filed by appellant, being accused of offence under S. 494 IPC, against orders passed by trial Magistrate (Addl. CJM) and appellate court (Distt. & Sessions Judge) — Even though appellant's counsel failed to appear on the date fixed, revision petition dismissed by High Court by refusing to interfere with the concurrent findings of the courts below — Application filed to recall the ex parte order of dismissal of the revision also dismissed by High Court — Appellant's stand that he had always been diligently pursuing the remedy not disputed, nor the circumstances pointed out by appellant due to which his counsel could not appear on the date fixed disbelieved, nor was it the case of respondent that appellant was in any manner responsible for delay in the proceedings — In the circumstances held, High Court's orders dismissing the revision petition and application for recall liable to be set aside — High Court shall hear the matter on merits. Ram Abhilakh v. State of U.P., (2007) 3 SCC 155: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 54: 2007 Cri LJ 1439: (2007) 2 All LJ 691: (2007) 51 AIC 57 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-2007]

[5919] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision — Notice to respondent(s) — Necessity — High Court allowing revision petition filed by Respondent 2, without issuing notice to appellants and other parties — Impugned order passed by High Court by only hearing Respondent 2 — Impermissibility — Relying on the position of law, impugned order set aside and matter remitted back to High Court for consideration afresh after issuing notice to respondents in revision (Paras 3 and 4). Uma Nath Pandey v. State of U.P., (2009) 12 SCC 40: AIR 2009 SC 2375: (2009) 77 AIC 132 (SC): (2009) 237 ELT 241: (2009) 4 All LJ 515.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-3-2009]

Canara Bank v. V.K. Awasthy, (2005) 6 SCC 321; Suresh Chandra Nanhorya v. Rajendra Rajak, (2006) 7 SCC 800, followed

[5920] — S. 397 — Revision — Disposal without assigning any reasons, is improper — Constitution of India, Art. 227

The dismissal of the revision petition by the High Court in the manner done is clearly unsustainable. The absence of reasons has rendered the High Court's order unsustainable. (Para 6). Iqbal Bano v. State of U.P., (2007) 6 SCC 785: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 258: AIR 2007 SC 2215: (2007) 3 KLT 63: (2007) 4 All LJ 587: (2007) 55 AIC 4 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-6-2007]

[5921] — S. 397 — Petition under, held, cannot be dismissed merely on failure to enclose a copy of the impugned order when the original order is in the court — Punjab and Haryana High Court Rules and Orders — Vol. V. Chapter I-A(b), Rules 3-A (as applicable to Delhi) (Per Krishna Iyer, J.). Raj Kapoor v. State, (1980) 1 SCC 43: 1980 SCC (Cri) 72: AIR 1980 SC 258: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 439: (1980) 17 ACC 110.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer[1] and R.S. Pathak[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 26-10-1979]

[5922] — Ss. 397, 399 and 401 — Both parties must be heard in proceedings before High Court — On failure to give party or his counsel notice, order of High Court set aside and matter remanded — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 435 and 438. Makkapati Nagaswara Sastri v. S.S. Satyanarayan, (1981) 1 SCC 62: 1981 SCC (Cri) 111: AIR 1981 SC 1156: 1981 Cri LJ 617.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-1980]

[5923] — Ss. 397, 399 and 401 — Ex parte disposal of revision — Permissibility — Persons to be heard. Ram Naresh Prasad v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 11 SCC 299: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1336: (2009) 77 AIC 221 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-2009]

Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117, impliedly followed

[5924] — Ss. 397, 401, 204 and 199(2) — Revision against issue of process — Scope of High Court's revisional jurisdiction — High Court has only to see the complaint and accompanying papers — Where in revision petition accused joined names of persons who were not parties before the trial court, held, High Court justified in directing deletion of their names

Process was issued by trial court against accused petitioners on the basis of a complaint filed by the State Government under S. 500, IPC with sanction under S. 199(2), CrPC as one of the persons alleged to be defamed was the Director General of Police. The accused preferred a revision petition before the High Court under Ss. 397 and 401, CrPC against this issue of process. In the revision petition, in addition to the State Government (respondent 1), the accused joined the Director General of Police (respondent 2) and the Chief Minister of the State (respondent 3) also as parties. The High Court admitted the petition and ordered issue of notices to the respondents but directed deletion of the names of respondents 2 and 3 holding that they were not necessary parties to the proceedings. The accused filed appeal by special leave before the Supreme Court questioning the propriety and correctness of the order of deletion of names of respondents 2 and 3.

Held :

When the trial court issued the process respondents 2 and 3 were not parties before it. Therefore, the High Court in revision while examining the propriety and correctness of the order of issue of process was justified in ordering deletion of names of those respondents by confining itself to looking into the complaint and the accompanying papers.

When the court calls for the record in exercising powers under S. 397, CrPC it is expected to examine the records for the purpose of satisfying itself about legality, propriety and correctness of the order passed and also about the regularity of the proceedings. When the issue of process is challenged in the revision petition before the High Court what the High Court is expected to see is as to whether the complaint and the papers accompanying the complaint prima facie indicate that an offence is made out. If the complaint and the papers accompanying the complaint, in the opinion of the High Court, are such which do not prima facie disclose an offence then it will be open to the High Court to entertain the revision and quash the proceedings. The question about anyone else being instrumental in getting the prosecution launched or questions which are foreign are not to be considered in a revision where the issue of process is being challenged and therefore the further question as to whether the party against whom the allegation is made is or is not a necessary party in the proceedings also is of no avail.

Section 401(2) contemplates a situation where a person may not be an accused person before the court below but one who might have been discharged and therefore if the revisional court after exercising jurisdiction under S. 401 wants to pass an order to the prejudice of such a person, it is necessary that person should be given an opportunity of hearing but it does not contemplate any contingency of hearing of any person who is neither party in the proceedings in the court below nor is expected at any stage even after the revision to be joined as party.

That the proceedings had been launched by the State Government on behalf of respondent 2 and therefore indirectly respondent 2 being the complainant is a party to the proceedings is a tall proposition. The prosecution was launched by the State Government and before the court below i.e. the trial court the only parties were the petitioners who were accused persons and the State Government which stood in the place of a complainant. There are prosecution witnesses and there may even be defence witnesses. But the witnesses are not parties to the proceedings. A.K. Subbaiah v. State of Karnataka, (1987) 4 SCC 557: 1987 SCC (Cri) 768.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji and G.L. Oza, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-1987]

[5925] — Ss. 397, 377 & 401 — Provision of appeal against inadequacy of sentence does not take away High Court's power to enhance sentence suo motu in exercise of revision powers

The High Court's power of enhancement of sentence, in an appropriate case, by exercising suo motu power of revision is extant under S. 397 read with S. 401, Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, inasmuch as the High Court can by 'itself' call for the record of proceedings of any inferior criminal court under its jurisdiction. The provision of S. 401(4) is a bar to a party, who does not appeal when appeal lies but applies in revision. Such a legal bar under S. 401(4) does not stand in the way of the High Court's exercise of power of revision suo motu which continues as before in the 1973 Code also. Eknath Shankarrao Mukkawar v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 3 SCC 25: 1977 SCC (Cri) 410: AIR 1977 SC 1177: (1977) 3 SCR 513: 1977 MLJ (Cri) 421: 1977 Cri LJ 964.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, P.K. Goswami and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1977]

[5926] — Ss. 397, 401, 374, 377 and 386 — High Court competent to enhance sentence in exercise of its suo motu revisional jurisdiction in an appeal against conviction even if no appeal against sentence filed by State — However, notice and opportunity of hearing on question of sentence must be afforded to the convict

In this case the appellants were convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge on three counts and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year under S. 148, IPC; for six months under Ss. 323/149, IPC and imprisonment for life and a fine of Rs 200 under Ss. 302/149, IPC. The appellants preferred an appeal against the order of conviction and sentence passed by the trial Judge. No appeal was filed by the State against sentence awarded by the trial Judge on the ground of its inadequacy. The High Court while dismissing their appeal clarified that their conviction was on six counts and altered the fine awarded under Ss. 302/149, IPC from Rs 200 to Rs 5000 in respect of each appellant per count, i.e. Rs 30,000 per appellant. No notice of enhancement of fine or opportunity of hearing on question of inadequacy of sentence was given to the appellant. Aggrieved by this enhancement the appellants preferred appeal to the Supreme Court which was limited to the question of enhancement of sentence only.

Held :

From a conjoint reading of Ss. 377, 386, 397 and 401 it is clear that if the State Government is aggrieved about the inadequacy of the sentence it can prefer an appeal under S. 377(1). The failure on the part of the State Government to prefer an appeal does not, however, preclude the High Court from exercising suo motu power of revision under S. 97 read with S. 401 since the High Court itself is empowered to call for the record of the proceeding of any court subordinate to it. Sub-section (4) of S. 401 operates as a bar to the party which has a right to prefer an appeal but has failed to do so but that sub-section cannot stand in the way of the High Court exercising revisional jurisdiction suo motu. But before the High Court exercises its suo motu revisional jurisdiction to enhance the sentence, it is imperative that the convict is put on notice and is given an opportunity of being heard on the question of sentence either in person or through his advocate. The revisional jurisdiction cannot be exercised to the prejudice of the convict without putting him on guard that it is proposed to enhance the sentence imposed by the trial court.

In the present case the appeal was filed under S. 374(2) by the convicts against the order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge. No appeal was filed by the State under S. 377(1) of the Code against the sentence awarded by the trial court for the offence under Ss. 302/149, IPC on the ground of its inadequacy. Nor did the High Court exercise suo motu revisional powers under S. 397 read with S. 401. If the High Court was minded to enhance the sentence the proper course was to exercise suo motu powers under S. 397 read with S. 401 by issuing notice of enhancement and hearing the convicts on the question of inadequacy of sentence. Without following such procedure it was not open to the High Court in the appeal filed by the convicts to enhance the sentence by enhancing the fine. The High Court clearly acted without jurisdiction.

Sentence of trial court restored. Additional fine if paid, be refunded. Sahab Singh v. State of Haryana, (1990) 2 SCC 385: 1990 SCC (Cri) 323: AIR 1990 SC 1188: 1990 Cri LJ 1202: (1990) 2 Crimes 97.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-1990]

[5927] — Ss. 397, 401 and 321 — Order of Special Judge declining to grant consent for withdrawal of the prosecution — Whether appeal at the instance of the State Government maintainable — Question not decided. V.S. Achuthanandan v. R. Balakrishna Pillai, (1994) 4 SCC 299: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1185: AIR 1995 SC 436.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: J.S. Verma, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and S.P. Bharucha, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1994]

[5928] — Ss. 397, 401 and 378 — Revision application filed by the appellant in the High Court against order of acquittal — State's application for grant of leave to appeal filed thereafter, dismissed — High Court, by impugned order, dismissing the revision on the ground that by dismissal of State's application, the revision petition has become not entertainable — Propriety — Held, High Court should have heard both the applications together — Directions to the High Court to hear both the applications together issued — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 148 and 302 r/w S. 149 — Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, S. 3(2)

An appeal was filed by the informant questioning the correctness of the order of the Division Bench of the High Court, dismissing the revision application of the appellant under Section 397 read with Section 401 CrPC against the order of acquittal passed by the trial court in respect of the accused. The accused were tried for offences punishable under Sections 148 and 302 read with Section 149 IPC and Section 3(2) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. By judgment dated 22-6-2004 the trial court held the accused persons to be not guilty and directed their acquittal. The State filed application under Section 378(3) CrPC before the High Court for grant of leave to appeal. By order dated 29-4-2005 the said application was rejected. Much before that date i.e. on 20-9-2004, the appellant had filed an application for revision of the order of acquittal, in the High Court. By the impugned order the High Court dismissed the revision application on the ground that the State's application for grant of leave having been dismissed the revision petition was not entertainable.

Allowing the appeal partly,

Held :

The ideal situation would have been to hear both the applications together. It would be appropriate to direct the High Court to hear both the applications for grant of leave as filed by the State and the revision application filed by the informant together in accordance with law. (Paras 10 and 11). Suga Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 8 SCC 641: AIR 2006 SC 3258.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Lokeshwar Singh Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2006]

[5929] — Ss. 397 and 125 — Findings of Magistrate on disputed questions of fact recorded after full consideration of evidence — Should not be disturbed by revisional court in absence of any error of law. Bakulabai v. Gangaram, (1988) 1 SCC 537: 1988 SCC (Cri) 189: (1988) 1 KLT 413: 1988 Mah LJ 330.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-1988]

Pathumma v. Muhammad, (1986) 2 SCC 585: 1986 SCC (Cri) 212, relied on

[5930] — Ss. 397 and 125 — Revision — Scope of — High Court in exercise of revisional jurisdiction in a matter relating to S. 125 CrPC giving directions for initiation of departmental proceedings — Unsustainability of — Issues involving appellant's marriage/double marriage pending adjudication in a title suit — High Court adjudicating that an offence under S. 494 IPC was made out — High Court's direction for departmental proceedings in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction while deciding a S. 125 CrPC matter, held, erroneous — Penal Code, 1860, S. 494 — Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, S. 5(i)

The High Court was clearly in error in directing initiation of departmental proceedings while dealing with an application for revision in the matter relating to Section 125 CrPC. The High Court while dealing with the application under Section 125 CrPC has essentially adjudicated that an offence punishable under Section 494 IPC is made out. A title suit was pending where prayer was made for declaration that the respondent was not his wife. Whether there was a second marriage as contended and whether L (respondent) was his wife as claimed by her or C was the wife of the appellant as claimed by him has yet to be decided. (Para 8). Taraknath Kar v. Lipika Kar, (2008) 5 SCC 387: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 618: AIR 2008 SC 2310.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-2008]

[5931] — Ss. 397 & 156(3) — Proper mode for disposal of revision — Application (against direction for investigation by CBI by Magistrate) — Order of Magistrate directing CBI to investigate the case relating to theft of muddamal property without affording opportunity to CBI to explain that the case being of routine nature did not require CBI investigation — Magistrate's order based on letter written by Nazir of District Court requesting therein to hand over the case to CBI — Application filed by CBI before the Magistrate praying for recalling of its order — Application rejected by order of Magistrate without giving any opportunity to CBI — CBI moved the High Court under S. 397 against both the orders of the Magistrate — High Court observed that CBI was a litigant like any other litigant and cannot be placed in a special or privileged category, that instead of approaching it directly, CBI could have moved Sessions Court and that approach of CBI deserved to be deprecated and with that view it imposed a costs of Rs 1000 holding that CBI had chosen a wrong path and was not respecting or adhering to the law — Held, High Court was not right in its approach

In CBI v. State of Rajasthan the Supreme Court held that magisterial power cannot be stretched under Section 156(3) beyond directing the officer in charge of a police station to conduct the investigation and no such direction can be given to CBI. In the instant case, the first information report was already registered and in that sense Section 156(3) CrPC had no application. There is substance in the plea that routine matters should not be entrusted to CBI as the investigating agencies of various States can effectively investigate such matters. Of course, where it is shown that the investigating agency is not doing proper investigation and/or that there is reason to believe that there is laxity in the investigation, a direction may be given to CBI to investigate the matter in appropriate cases. This case is not one where any complexity was involved. It was a routine case of theft of muddamal property. The Sessions Judge, therefore, rightly appears to have set aside the orders passed by the Chief Judicial Magistrate. The High Court had no basis to doubt the bona fides of CBI in moving the application before it under Section 397 CrPC. There was no bar for the High Court to entertain the said petition. The criticism levelled against CBI and its officers and costs imposed do not have any legal sanction. They are accordingly set aside. (Para 5). CBI v. State of Gujarat, (2007) 6 SCC 156: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 65: AIR 2007 SC 2522: (2007) 56 AIC 65 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-6-2007]

CBI v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 3 SCC 333: 2001 SCC (Cri) 524, relied on

[5932] — Ss. 397 and 173(8) — Revision — Interference in Magistrate's discretionary power under S. 173(8) — When permissible — Further investigation — When not warranted — Investigation being done by two independent agencies — Magistrate not finding investigating officers biased, rather finding them as responsible police officers — Complainant not specifying the subjects and hidden truths warranting further investigation — Counsel, from the material on record, failing to show involvement of A-3 to A-10 — Investigating officer giving detailed statements for dropping A-3 to A-10 — Investigating officer even after a thorough investigation not finding any material to establish any connection between the complainant's money and A-3 to A-10 — Investigating officer finding that the alleged amount of Rs 4.65 crores was given to A-2 for both trading in gold and silver on the basis of orally agreed terms and all transactions and payments had been made through cheques only — Other litigations were pending by and between the parties inter se — Effect — Direction for further investigation by Magistrate, held, unwarranted — Revisional court, therefore, justified in interfering with the discretionary jurisdiction of Magistrate

The appellant complainant lodged an FIR against A-1 to A-9 (later A-10 was added) alleging that they had connived and cheated him to the tune of Rs 4.65 crores by denying to return money which they had taken for the purchase of gold. Although the accused admitted the liability to the extent of Rs 4.95 crores, they neither returned any gold nor money to the complainant. Investigations made by two independent investigating agencies of the State did not reveal anything against A-3 to A-10 and therefore, the Magistrate, upon receipt of police report under Section 173(2) CrPC, took cognizance only against A-1 and A-2. The complainant approached the High Court under Section 482 CrPC against the Magistrate's order of not taking cognizance against A-3 to A-10. The High Court remanded the matter to the Magistrate to consider the option of further investigation under Section 173(8) CrPC. Further investigation was allowed by the Magistrate. A-2 filed revisional application thereagainst before the High Court. By reason of the impugned judgment, the revision was allowed.

Dismissing the appeal of the complainant,

Held :

There is no doubt that the Revisional Court should not interfere with the discretionary jurisdiction exercised by the Magistrate unless a jurisdictional error or an error of law is noticed. It is also not necessary nor desirable to notice the statements recorded by IO. The question, however, is as to whether in a case of this nature a direction for further investigation would be necessary. The Magistrate did not find that the investigating officer was in any way biased towards the complainant. Rather he found that the investigation had been carried out by two different agencies and by responsible police officers. The complainant did not specify the subjects and hidden truths requiring further investigation which had not been carried out. The counsel also could not show involvement of A-3 to A-10 from the material on record. (Paras 24 to 26, 16 and 17)

The investigating officer stated in great detail as to why A-3 to A-10 were dropped. After a thorough investigation he did not find any material to establish any connection between the complainant's money and A-3 to A-10. The amount of Rs 4.65 crores was given to A-2 for both trading in gold and silver on the basis of orally agreed terms and all transactions and payments had been made through cheques only. He also considered the dealings and litigations by and between the parties inter se. (Paras 23, 18 and 20). Kishan Lal v. Dharmendra Bafna, (2009) 7 SCC 685: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 611: 2009 Cri LJ 3721: (2009) 81 AIC 141 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-7-2009]

(2008) 1 Mad LW (Cri) 432, affirmed

[5933] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision — Concurrent findings of fact recorded by courts below — Interference with, by High Court on an erroneous assumption — Propriety — Cow milk — Non-conformity with prescribed minimum standard — Sample taken found to be deficient in milk solid as well as solid fat — Concurrent findings of the trial court and the Sessions Court, based on evidence on record, indicating that the sample milk was properly stirred as required by law and the sample was made representative and homogeneous — High Court however granting benefit of doubt on erroneous assumption that though there was deficiency of solid fat contents in the seized sample, the sample may not have been properly stirred — Held, High Court erred in acquitting the accused on such erroneous assumption which had no foundation at all — High Court cannot substitute the factual foundation available on record, by an assumption, to give benefit of doubt — Conviction and sentence by the trial court, restored — Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, R. 5 r/w Appendix B, Items 11.01.01 and 11.01.11 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, S. 16(1)(a)(i)

Both the courts below on the material available on record have come to the conclusion that the sample milk in question was properly stirred as required by law and the sample was made representative and homogeneous. This finding is based on the evidence found on the record. In this background, the High Court rather casually came to an erroneous assumption that there was improper stirring for which there is no foundation at all, as could be seen from the finding noticed by this Court of the two courts below. The High Court could have substituted a factual foundation available on record, by an assumption, to give benefit of doubt to the respondent. (Para 15)

The High Court order acquitting the respondent is set aside and the conviction and sentence imposed on the respondent by the trial court as confirmed by the Sessions Court is restored and the respondent is directed to serve out the sentence awarded by the trial court. (Para 16). State of Haryana v. Daya Nand, (2004) 7 SCC 670: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2024: AIR 2004 SC 4358.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2004]

Food Inspector, Municipal Corpn., Baroda v. Madanlal Ramlal Sharma, (1983) 1 SCC 135: 1983 SCC (Cri) 131, distinguished on facts

[5934] — Ss. 397 and 401 — High Court's power of revision in application filed by de facto complainant against acquittal order — Reappreciation of evidence — Impermissibility — Where the acquittal order did not suffer from any procedural illegality or manifest error of law and the court passing that order had not overlooked the evidence clinching the issue, held, High Court could not reappreciate the entire evidence and take a view to the contrary for setting aside the acquittal order — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 143, 147, 148, 307 and 149

The trial court had convicted and sentenced the accused person under Sections 143, 147, 148 and 307 read with Section 149 IPC. The appellate court, after appreciating the evidence acquitted the accused persons. In a revision application filed by the de facto complainant, the High Court arrived at the conclusion that although the injured persons belonged to the rival party, that did not render their evidence interested and partisan and that there was no reason for not relying upon their testimony as in case of an attack by a large organised group armed with lethal weapons, local people, due to terror, might be unwilling to testify. The High Court, therefore, set aside the appellate court's order and remitted the matter to the trial court for deciding the case afresh.

Allowing the appeal against the High Court's order,

Held :

In a revision application filed by the de facto complainant against the acquittal order, the Court's jurisdiction under Section 397 read with Section 401 CrPC is limited. The law as enunciated by the Supreme Court does not empower the Court exercising the revisional jurisdiction to reappreciate the evidence. (Paras 6 and 7)

In the present case, the High Court has not found any procedural illegality or manifest error of law in the order passed by the appellate court. It is nobody's case that the appellate court has shut out or has overlooked the evidence which clinched the issue. The High Court has only reappreciated the entire evidence and has taken contrary view for setting aside the acquittal order. This is not permissible while exercising the revisional jurisdiction at the instance of the de facto complainant against the order of acquittal. (Para 10). Thankappan Nadar v. Gopala Krishnan, (2002) 9 SCC 393.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, Bisheshwar Prasad Singh and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-2002]

Akalu Ahir v. Ramdeo Ram, (1973) 2 SCC 583: 1973 SCC (Cri) 903; Vimal Singh v. Khuman Singh, (1998) 7 SCC 223: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1574; Logendranath Jha v. Polai Lal Biswas, AIR 1951 SC 316: 1951 SCR 676; K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1962 SC 1788: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 8; Mahendra Pratap Singh v. Sarju Singh, AIR 1968 SC 707: 1968 Cri LJ 865; Pakalapati Narayana Gajapathi Raju v. Bonapalli Peda Appadu, (1975) 4 SCC 477: 1975 SCC (Cri) 543; Ayodhya Dube v. Ram Sumer Singh, 1981 Supp SCC 83: 1982 SCC (Cri) 471, relied on

[5935] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision — Suo motu exercise of power by High Court — Held, does not extend to converting the proceedings initiated in suo motu revision into an appeal against acquittal and convicting the appellants thereunder

— High Court should have setting the acquittal aside, sent the matter back for retrial — Setting aside conviction passed by High Court, matter remitted to trial court for disposal in accordance with law — Appellant permitted to apply for bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376, 342 and 506 r/w S. 34. Naresh Kumar v. Registrar, High Court of P&H, (2001) 10 SCC 510.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-1998]

[5936] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Nature and extent of revisional jurisdiction — When may be exercised — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 435 and 439

The High Court in exercising its revisional powers should not lightly interfere with the order of the Sessions Judge. The revisional jurisdiction can be exercised only in exceptional cases where the interest of public justice requires interference for the correction of a manifest illegality or the prevention of gross miscarriage of justice. The jurisdiction is not ordinarily invoked or used merely because the lower court has taken a wrong view of the law or misappreciated the evidence on record. Thakur Das v. State of M.P., (1978) 1 SCC 27: 1978 SCC (Cri) 21: AIR 1978 SC 1: 1978 Cri LJ 1: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 255: (1977) 3 ALR 720: (1978) 1 ALT 81.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.K. Goswami, N.L. Untwalia and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-10-1977]

[5937] — S. 397 — Sessions Court finding that 'at the most' the accused-appellant had 'not performed his duties as Medical Officer properly or with due care', committing him for trial for offence under — On facts, held, High Court in revision not justified in setting aside the Sessions Court's order — Penal Code, 1860, S. 201. Supdt. & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. S.K. Majumdar, 1983 SCC (Cri) 187.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-8-1980]

[5938] — S. 397 — Revision — Where a bus driver was convicted under S. 304-A IPC in connection with an accident which resulted in the death of one person, held, High Court erred in allowing respondent bus driver's revision petition and upsetting concurrent findings of fact of lower courts without considering evidence on record and without indicating how lower courts were wrong in reaching their conclusions and without giving any reasons as to why the revision was being allowed (Para 4). State of A.P. v. Rajagopala Rao, (2000) 10 SCC 338.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Kirpal and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-1999]

[5939] — S. 397 — Revision — Refusal by High Court to exercise revisional jurisdiction on ground that no question of law had arisen therein — Legality — Held, was not justified as in terms of S. 397, the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order may fall for consideration of the revisional court — Hence, in revision filed by the appellant challenging his conviction under S. 354 IPC, the High Court should have tested the prosecution case from the angle that the trial Judge had acquitted all the three accused who were said to have shared a common intention with the appellant not only in relation to the offences under Ss. 323, 504 and 506 IPC but also in relation to offence under S. 354 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 354, 323, 504 and 506 (Para 22). Pandurang Sitaram Bhagwat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 9 SCC 44: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1198: AIR 2005 SC 643: 2005 Cri LJ 880.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-2004]

[5940] — S. 397 — Revision — Scope — Revision against order granting police remand, though not maintainable, even if assumed to be maintainable, held, its scope was limited to the legality of the order impugned — High Court in revision could not have gone into the merits of the case — Hence, findings recorded by it that accused was illegally detained and ill-treated by police, investigation conducted was not bona fide and records were fabricated to implicate the accused, held, not proper — It was for trial court to record any finding in respect thereof — Any party aggrieved by the findings of the trial court will have a right of appeal before the High Court after the case is decided

Per G.P. Mathur, J. (for Rajendra Babu, C.J. and himself)

The High Court was hearing a criminal revision petition filed under Section 397 CrPC against an order passed by a Metropolitan Magistrate granting police custody of the accused. The scope of the revision, even if it is assumed to be maintainable, was a limited one viz. whether the order granting police remand was legally correct or not having regard to the material placed before the learned Magistrate. The High Court at that stage could not have gone into the merits of the prosecution case as if hearing an appeal against an order of conviction or acquittal as the trial of the accused is yet to begin. The only material available before the High Court was the affidavit filed by the accused, copies of telegrams and the reply-affidavits filed by the police officials concerned. The affidavit of the accused has been accepted as a gospel truth and very disparaging and strong remarks have been made against the investigating officers and the investigation done by them. (Para 16)

Chapter XVIII CrPC contains detailed and exhaustive provisions for the trial of an accused before the Court of Session. The accused would get full and complete opportunity to defend herself in the trial. It is for the trial court to weigh the evidence adduced by the prosecution and then record a finding on its basis whether the investigation has been fair or not or whether any records have been fabricated. If any party feels aggrieved by the findings recorded and ultimate order passed by the learned Sessions Judge deciding the case, it will have a right of appeal before the High Court. The High Court has virtually scuttled the trial even before it has commenced and that too by a process wholly unknown to law. (Para 17)

Per Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, J. (concurring)

What has got to be decided in a full-fledged trial, the High Court merely on the pleadings of the parties has given a finding that the order granting police custody and the consequent confession and the alleged recovery had no evidentiary value whatsoever in the case. The High Court has also given a finding that records were created to implicate the accused. Needless to state that any further investigation in the case permitted by the learned Judge would be an exercise in futility in the context of such finding which could be given only during the course of a full-fledged trial. (Para 24). State v. N.M.T. Joy Immaculate, (2004) 5 SCC 729: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1722: AIR 2004 SC 2282: 2004 Cri LJ 2515.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, C.J.[1] and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan [2] and G.P. Mathur[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2004]

2002 MLJ (Cri) 661, reversed

[5941] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Presumptions under Ss. 139 and 118, NI Act, 1881 — Rebuttal of — Dishonour of cheque — Complaint — Uncertainty as to whether the cheque was issued prior to, or subsequent to, the closure of the account and difference of handwritings and ink on the cheque, held, did not rebut the statutory presumptions under Ss. 139 and 118 — Hence, could not sustain the revisional order of the High Court setting aside the order of conviction and sentence — Matter remanded for disposal in accordance with law after affording opportunity to both the parties — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 139, 118 and 138 (Para 4). P.K. Manmadhan Kartha v. Sanjeev Raj, (2002) 7 SCC 150: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1626.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2002]

[5942] — Ss. 397, 401 and 353 — Revisional jurisdiction of High Court should not be lightly exercised particularly when invoked by a private party — Revision against acquittal filed by a private party — High Court without going into merits of the case reversing the acquittal on ground that lower appellate court dictated only operative portion of order — Held, High Court's order not sustainable — In view of long lapse of time instead of remanding the case the Supreme Court restored the order of acquittal passed by the lower appellate court. Ramu v. Jagannath, 1995 SCC (Cri) 181: AIR 1994 SC 26: 1994 Cri LJ 66.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and R.C. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-1992]

[5943] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision against acquittal by a private party — Powers of Revisional Court in, held, are very limited — It can interfere only if there is any procedural irregularity or material evidence has been overlooked or misread by the subordinate court — Interference not permissible if upon reappraisal of evidence two views are possible — On facts, no procedural irregularity found by the High Court in the order of the Sessions Court acquitting the accused — Hence, High Court was not justified in interfering with that order in exercise of its revisional powers — Penal Code, 1860, S. 376 (Para 3). Hydru v. State of Kerala, (2004) 13 SCC 374.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-9-2004]

[5944] — Ss. 397 and 359 — Revision at the instance of private party — Scope — Revisional court allowing the revision application and remitting the matter to trial court on two grounds viz. (i) examination of K, brother of the accused, as witness was erroneously refused by the trial court; and (ii) trial court was not justified in disbelieving the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution inasmuch as in its opinion two views were possible — Held, order of remand based upon extraneous considerations and not upon the grounds permissible under law since neither according to prosecution nor evidence, K was a witness to the alleged occurrence — Moreover, it is well settled that at the instance of a private prosecutor, the revisional court can grant relief only in exceptional circumstances when compelling grounds are made out — However in such cases it has no jurisdiction to reverse the acquittal, but is vested with only power of remand either for retrial or reconsideration as the necessities of the case may require — In the instant case, none of the grounds warranted remand and as such the order of remand suffers from serious legal infirmity and the High Court was not justified in refusing to interfere with it — Impugned orders of High Court as well as Sessions Court set aside and order of acquittal passed by trial court restored (Paras 2 and 3). Raj Kumar Khemka v. State of U.P., (2008) 17 SCC 662.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-2003]

[5945] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision against acquittal preferred by a private party — Scope — Held, there is very little scope to interfere — High Court by impugned judgment had allowed the revision and directed reconsideration of matter observing that appreciation of evidence by the trial court was not correct and it should not have taken the view it had taken — Held, it was not as if the trial court had ignored any important piece of evidence, or had chosen not to appreciate the same, or had illegally permitted any evidence to come on record, or there was some serious defect in the trial affecting merits of the matter, or the court trying him lacked the jurisdiction to do so — Hence, approach of the Revisional Court was not correct, because after all it was a revision against acquittal at the instance of a private party — Besides, the Revisional Court had directed not even retrial but reappraisal of evidence

Appellant-accused was married to deceased in 1992. From the beginning their marital life was not smooth as he suspected her fidelity. It was alleged that he ill-treated her. The dead body of deceased was found in a well with injuries on her head, back and all over the body. Appellant-accused was charged under Sections 302 and 201 IPC for committing murder of his wife by hitting her with a wooden log on her head. The Sessions Judge acquitted the accused specifically holding that it was not proved that the appellant had hit the deceased with log. No appeal was filed thereagainst by the State. But father of the deceased filed a criminal revision which was admitted by the High Court. It was pending when the State filed an appeal against acquittal, which was delayed by 801 days. The Division Bench after considering application for condonation of delay dismissed the same and hence appeal against acquittal could not proceed. Strangely, however, it was not pointed out by the State counsel that a revision had already been filed and was pending against acquittal. Ultimately the revision came up for hearing before the Single Judge of the High Court who by impugned judgment allowed the same and directed reconsideration of the matter on basis of evidence already recorded. Hence, the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The Division Bench in not allowing the condonation of delay has effectively dismissed the appeal in the sense that it has not allowed the State Government to proceed with the appeal for which there was a provision. This was a prosecution not based on a private complaint but on the police report. Therefore, the State Government had a right under Section 378(2) CrPC to file an appeal and very conspicuously the private party did not have that right. The private complainant, therefore, could only excite the general powers of revision by the High Court. (Para 20)

It is undoubtedly true that sub-section (3) of Section 378 CrPC specifically provides that the appeal under sub-sections (1) and (2) cannot be entertained except with the leave of the High Court and, therefore, an application for leave in such appeal filed by the State Government is a must. The limitation for filing the appeal is 90 days from the date of the order while the same article provides for 30 days of limitation from the date of grant of special leave. Therefore, what was before the High Court was the appeal itself and the petitioner prayed the condonation of delay of 801 days in filing the appeal against acquittal. When the High Court declined to grant that permission, it, in effect, refused to entertain the appeal against the order of the trial court, thus making it final. (Para 22)

Thus, if the judgment was rendered final by the Division Bench of the High Court then there could not be any subsequent order to the contrary by the Single Judge even if the effect of the pendency of the revision was not brought to the notice of the Division Bench. There is no review power under the Criminal Procedure Code to the criminal court including the High Court. Such a review power exists only in the Supreme Court. As such, once the High Court had passed the order refusing the condonation of delay of appeal and thereby awarding the finality to the trial court's judgment, that order could be considered and upset only by the Supreme Court on a proper appeal having been filed in the Supreme Court by the State Government. As against the State Government, the order of the trial court acquitting the appellant-accused had become final. Therefore, the only course left open then in law was to challenge that order refusing to condone the delay in filing appeal against acquittal. (Para 23)

Such appeal was never filed and the order of the Division Bench became final. Under such circumstances revision against the same order could not have been entertained, much less allowed upsetting the finality of the trial court's judgment, which finality was confirmed by the order of the High Court by refusing to condone the delay in filing the appeal against the same trial court judgment. That would be the true import of the appellate powers of the High Court. (Para 24)

In the instant case the revision was not only entertained but also allowed by the High Court because of the colossal callousness on part of the State Government counsel, appellant-accused as also the Registry of the High Court which failed to join the appeal filed along with the application for condonation of delay with the revision pending against the same judgment of acquittal. The revision could not have been proceeded and appellant-accused must succeed on that point alone. (Paras 36 and 38)

Now, considering the judgment of the learned Single Judge on merits of the matter. In a revision against acquittal preferred by a private party, there is a very little scope to interfere. It is not as if the trial court had ignored any important piece of evidence or it had chosen not to appreciate the same. It is again not as if there was any piece of evidence which was illegally not permitted to come on record. Again, it is also not a case where there was some serious defect in the trial affecting the merits of the matter. Further, the Court trying the appellant-accused did not lack the jurisdiction also to try and convict or acquit the appellant-accused. All that the High Court has observed is that the appreciation of evidence by the trial court was not correct and the trial court should not have taken the view that it has taken of the evidence. (Para 39). K. Ramachandran v. V.N. Rajan, (2009) 14 SCC 569: (2009) 82 AIC 119 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 4413.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-7-2009]

[5946] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision preferred by private complainant — When maintainable — Categories of cases, where such revision maintainable stated

Without making the categories exhaustive, revisional jurisdiction can be exercised by the High Court at the instance of a private complainant

(1) where the trial court has wrongly shut out evidence which the prosecution wished to produce,

(2) where the admissible evidence is wrongly brushed aside as inadmissible,

(3) where the trial court has no jurisdiction to try the case and has still acquitted the accused,

(4) where the material evidence has been overlooked either by the trial court or the appellate court or the order is passed by considering irrelevant evidence, and

(5) where the acquittal is based on the compounding of the offence which is invalid under the law. (Para 12). Sheetala Prasad v. Sri Kant, (2010) 2 SCC 190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-2009]

[5947] — Ss. 397, 401 and 360 — Revisional power — Proper mode of exercise of, by High Court — Revision preferred by private complainant (State or accused not preferring appeal) — Scope of interference — Sessions Court convicting appellants under Ss. 324/149 IPC and directing their release on probation of good conduct — High Court in revision after reappreciation of evidence holding that appellants not guilty under Ss. 324/149 IPC but under Ss. 308/149 IPC and directing Sessions Court to pass order of conviction accordingly — Legality — Held, High Court exercised its revisional jurisdiction illegally — When the said jurisdiction was invoked by a private complainant High Court should not have exercised it lightly — High Court should have considered that: (1) S. 401(3) CrPC prohibits conversion of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, (2) that in such cases retrial or rehearing of the appeal might be ordered, and (3) that it could not have directed acquittal in respect of conviction under Ss. 324/149 IPC when the accused had not preferred an appeal — Judgment of Sessions Court restored — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 308/149 and 324/149

The Sessions Court held that the appellant-accused were guilty of offences under Sections 324/149 IPC and released the appellants on probation of good conduct. However, the High Court while entertaining a private complainant's appeal (State not having preferred appeal) directed conviction of the appellants under Section 308 and acquittal of the appellants under Section 324 IPC.

Allowing the appeal of the accused persons,

Held :

On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the High Court exercised revisional jurisdiction with material illegality and irregularity resulting into miscarriage of justice to the appellants. The revisional jurisdiction under Section 401 CrPC, when invoked by a private complainant against an order of acquittal, cannot be exercised lightly and that it can be exercised only in exceptional cases where the interest of public justice requires interference for correction of manifest illegality or the prevention of gross miscarriage of justice. In these cases, or cases of similar nature, retrial or rehearing of the appeal may be ordered. Section 401(3) CrPC prohibits conversion of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. (Paras 17, 13, 12 and 16)

After discussing the medical evidence and evidence of the injured witness in great detail the High Court prima facie came to the conclusion that a case under Section 308 IPC is made out against the appellants. Such a conclusion could have been recorded only in a properly constituted appeal, filed by the State Government. The High Court further concluded that no offence punishable under Section 324 IPC is committed by the appellants. This finding could have been recorded only in an appeal filed by the appellants. (Paras 14 and 15)

In the face of prohibition contained in Section 401(3) CrPC, it was all the more incumbent upon the High Court to see that it does not convert the finding of acquittal into one of conviction by the indirect method. On remand the trial court was left with no judicial discretion but to convict the appellants under Section 308 read with Section 149 IPC and impose punishment on them as directed by the High Court in exercise of its power of revision under Section 401 CrPC. After recording guilt of an accused under a particular provision of IPC, the matter could not have been remitted to the Sessions Court for passing an appropriate order of conviction and punishment. (Paras 15 and 16)

The earlier judgment of the Sessions Judge is restored. (Para 19). Sheetala Prasad v. Sri Kant, (2010) 2 SCC 190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-2009]

[5948] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision by private party against acquittal — Case requiring a detailed scrutiny and evaluation of evidence particularly because no appeal against acquittal filed by the State — Summary dismissal of revision by the High Court not justified — Case remitted to the High Court for disposal of revision afresh after considering merits of the case (Para 8). Gurshinder Singh v. Joga Singh, 1999 SCC (Cri) 1311: AIR 2000 SC 3418.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-1999]

[5949] — S. 397 or S. 482 — Quashment of criminal proceedings — Grounds — Dishonour of cheque — Revisional court, held, erred in quashing the complaint proceedings on the ground that the debt or liability was barred by limitation and therefore there was no legally enforceable debt or liability as against the drawer — The plea of non-existence of such a debt or liability could be agitated as a defence before the trial court — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138, 118 and 139 — Contract Act, 1872, S. 25(3) — Limitation Act, 1963, S. 18

The appellant filed a complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 against the respondent, alleging that the cheque issued by the respondent in favour of the appellant in respect of a sum advanced to the respondent by the appellant four years ago was dishonoured by the bank for the reason "account closed". The Magistrate issued summons to the respondent. In a criminal revision filed by the respondent, the Sessions Court quashed the entire proceedings on the ground that since the alleged borrowing was barred by limitation at the time of issuance of the cheque, there was no legally enforceable debt or liability against the respondent under the Explanation to Section 138 and therefore the complaint was not maintainable. The High Court upheld that decision.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

In view of Sections 118 and 139 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, Section 25(3) of the Contract Act, 1872 and in the presence of a documentary evidence which might amount to acknowledgment reviving the period of limitation, the present case was not one where the cheque was drawn in respect of a debt or liability, which was completely barred from being enforced under law. However, these are matters to be agitated before the Magistrate by way of defence of the respondent. But at this stage of the proceedings, to say that the cheque drawn by the respondent was in respect of a debt or liability which was not legally enforceable, was clearly illegal and erroneous. Therefore, it is held that the Sessions Court and the High Court erred in quashing the complaint proceedings. (Paras 6, 5 and 7). A.V. Murthy v. B.S. Nagabasavanna, (2002) 2 SCC 642: AIR 2002 SC 985: (2002) 108 Comp Cas 838: 2002 Cri LJ 1479.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.P. Sethi and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-2-2002]

[5950] — Ss. 397, 401 and 482 — Quashing of charges on the basis of report filed by Central Vigilance Commission (CVC) — Respondent, a Senior Bank Manager at the relevant time was charged with four other accused persons by Special Judge of defrauding/cheating Bank by resorting to cheating and forgery of documents in the nature of valuable securities and for using those documents for getting loan facilities — Charges were extremely serious and included also the charge of conspiracy with a view to defraud the Bank — Revision petition preferred by respondent before the High Court on the ground that respondent was in fact exonerated by CVC and in its report, he was found to be innocent — High Court allowed revision quashing proceedings — On facts it was found that CVC had not given clean chit to the respondent — Held, report of CVC may be a relevant factor but it cannot be held to be the "be all or end all" when accused is being prosecuted for serious offences — Order of High Court set aside — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-B r/w Ss. 420/467/468/471 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(d)

After perusing the report of Central Vigilance Commission, it cannot be held that the Central Vigilance Commission had given a clean chit to the respondent-accused. Though the report of the Central Vigilance Commission may be a relevant factor, it cannot be held to be "be all or end all" of the matter for prosecuting the accused persons of such serious offences. The High Court has treated the said report to be "be all or end all" of the matter. The High Court was not correct in doing so. (Paras 7, 9 and 10)

The High Court did not bother to examine the charge-sheet and the allegations made therein nor did it examine the statement of the witnesses and/or the reports of the handwriting experts which were the part of the charge-sheet. (Paras 6 and 14). CBI v. V.K. Bhutiani, (2009) 10 SCC 674.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-8-2009]

P.S. Rajya v. State of Bihar, (1996) 9 SCC 1: 1996 SCC (Cri) 897, distinguished [5951] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Offence alleged under both the SC & ST Act and IPC — Proceedings under IPC if may continue if proceeding under 1989 Act vitiated — Accused charged under Ss. 376 and 506 IPC and S. 3(1)(xii) of the Act — High Court in revision against framing of charges quashed the entire proceedings — Investigation was carried out by IO in absence of authorisation by competent authority — Held, investigation of an offence under S. 3 of the Act by an officer not appointed in terms of R. 7 is illegal and invalid — But when the offence complained is also under IPC the investigation by a competent police officer in accordance with CrPC cannot be quashed — The proceedings shall proceed for the offences punishable under IPC notwithstanding investigation and the charge-sheet being not liable to be accepted for cognizance of offence under S. 3 of the Act — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376 and 506 — Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, Ss. 9 & 3 r/w R. 7 (Paras 5 and 7 to 9). State of M.P. v. Chunnilal, (2009) 12 SCC 649: (2009) 77 AIC 33 (SC): (2009) 2 KLT 335.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-4-2009]

[5952] — Ss. 397 and 401 — Revision — Quashing of criminal complaint by High Court without giving reasons as to why the Special Judge erred in taking cognizance of the offence against the accused — Held, not justified — High Court's order set aside (Para 6). Rajmata Vijaya Raje Scindia v. State of M.P., (2003) 12 SCC 429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-10-2003]

[5953] — S. 397 r/w S. 401 — Reasoned order/Speaking order — Necessity of — High Court summarily dismissing revision petition by a non-speaking order — Unsustainability — Held, reasons introduce clarity in an order — On plainest consideration of justice, High Court ought to have set forth its reasons, howsoever brief, in its order, indicative of an application of its mind — Absence of reasons rendered High Court's judgment unsustainable — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 332, 353, 504 and 506 (Paras 2, 9 and 11). Jagtamba Devi v. Hem Ram, (2008) 3 SCC 509: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 103: 2008 Cri LJ 1623.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2008]

State of Punjab v. Bhag Singh, (2004) 1 SCC 547, followed

[5954] — S. 397 r/w S. 401 — Revision — Reasoned order/speaking order necessity — High Court by impugned order dismissing appellant's revision petition without indicating any reasons therefor and without analysing his stands — It was not a case that no arguable point was involved — As a matter of fact, the relevance of the dying declaration and its effect on the prosecution case has not been considered by the High Court at all — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for fresh expeditious disposal — In the meantime, appellant granted liberty to move High Court for bail — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B and S. 304 Pt. II — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, Ss. 3 and 4 (Paras 1 and 7 to 11). Mohd. Shakeel v. State Police, (2008) 15 SCC 378: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1006: AIR 2009 SC 680: (2009) 73 AIC 196 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-2008]

[5955] — S. 397 r/w S. 401 and S. 156(3) — Revision against order under S. 156(3) disposed of by learned Single Judge without issuing notice to appellants — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for reconsideration — Parties directed to appear without further notice (Paras 1 and 6). Rameshan P.O. v. Rakesh Kumar Yadav, (2009) 13 SCC 546: (2009) 5 All LJ 505: (2009) 2 APLJ 62 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-4-2009]

[5956] — S. 397 r/w S. 401 and S. 377 r/w S. 386(c) — High Court's power of enhancing sentence under — Nature and scope of — Held, High Court can even suo motu enhance the sentence but must provide predecisional opportunity of showing cause and hearing to the accused

The High Court enjoys the power of enhancing the sentence either in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 397 read with S. 401 or in its appellate jurisdiction under S. 377 read with S. 386(c) of the Criminal Procedure Code where the sentence awarded by the subordinate courts is grossly inadequate or unconscionably lenient or 'flea-bite' or is not commensurate with the gravity of the offence. It is permissible for the High Court while exercising its revisional jurisdiction under S. 397 read with S. 401, IPC to exercise the power of a court of appeal under S. 386(c) for enhancement of sentence. The High Court notwithstanding the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction under S. 377 has powers to act suo motu to enhance the sentence in appropriate cases while exercising its revisional jurisdiction even in the absence of an appeal against the inadequacy of the sentence as provided under S. 377.

However, the High Court both in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 397 read with S. 401, CrPC and its appellate jurisdiction under S. 377 read with S. 386(c) of CrPC in matters of enhancement of sentence should give the accused a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against such enhancement as contemplated under the first proviso to S. 386 as well under sub-section (3) of S. 377 of the Code. The rules of natural justice as also the prescribed procedure require issuing of notice to the appellant and affording an opportunity to be heard on the proposed action for enhancement of sentence.

In the present case the High Court has enhanced the sentence unmindful of the relevant provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and also the rules of natural justice and by overstepping its jurisdiction adopted a leeway in enhancing the sentence from 3 years to 7 years for the conviction under S. 201, IPC which exercise of powers in violation of the prescribed procedure, is impermissible. Therefore, the High Court's order enhancing the sentence is set aside and the order of the trial court inflicting the sentence of 3 years' rigorous imprisonment and the fine of Rs 2500 with the default clause is restored. Govind Ramji Jadhav v. State of Maharashtra, (1990) 4 SCC 718: 1991 SCC (Cri) 33: (1990) 2 Crimes 256.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-3-1990]

Surjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1984 Supp SCC 518: 1985 SCC (Cri) 90; Sahab Singh v. State of Haryana, (1990) 2 SCC 385, followed

[Ed.: In Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5, the Supreme Court has also held that the requirement under S. 235(2), CrPC of affording opportunity of hearing before passing an order of sentence is mandatory and that the sentence imposed without substantial compliance with S. 235(2) is liable to be replaced by an appropriate order of sentence.]

[5957] — S. 397 r/w Ss. 401 and 482 — Dismissal of criminal revision — Non-appearance of counsel of accused — Propriety — Appellant-accused convicted and sentenced for offence under S. 409 IPC for alleged misappropriation of cash — Appeal dismissed upholding the conviction and sentence — In criminal revision in terms of S. 397 r/w Ss. 401 and 482 CrPC, as none appeared for appellant-accused, High Court dismissed revision petition after hearing counsel for the State — Submissions that as counsel for appellant-accused in High Court was appointed as counsel for the State, therefore, he could not have appeared for appellant — Also, as the position was not brought to the notice of appellant, therefore, he should not be made to suffer — Held, it is not in dispute that counsel appearing for appellant in criminal revision was appointed counsel for the State and so could not have appeared for appellant — Also, no material to show that appellant after having knowledge of such appointment of his counsel failed to appoint another lawyer — In the facts of the case, held, impugned order of High Court set aside and matter remitted to High Court for hearing afresh — Counsel for appellant undertaking to engage another counsel for appellant before High Court — Since matter was pending before High Court for nearly seven years, hence, High Court requested to dispose of criminal revision expeditiously if possible — Penal Code, 1860, S. 409 (Paras 3, 4, 6 and 7). Satin Chandra Pegu v. State of Assam, (2006) 12 SCC 446: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 92: AIR 2007 SC 457: 2007 Cri LJ 309: (2007) 49 AIC 432 (SC): (2006) 204 ELT 517.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Lokeshwar Singh Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-11-2006]

[5958] — S. 397(1) — High Court's jurisdiction under — Where Sessions Judge is the appellate court, held, revision against its final order would lie to High Court alone under sub-section (1) and sub-sections (2) and (3) would be inapplicable

The trial court imposed a sentence below seven years on the appellant. Sessions Judge, to which an appeal lay under S. 374(2) of the Code, dismissed the appeal by a final order. Question for determination was whether the Sessions Judge could entertain a revision application or only the High Court had revisional jurisdiction under S. 397(1).

Held :

The Sessions Judge, being the appellate court, could not exercise the power of revision. The Sessions Judge, having dismissed the appeal, revision would only lie under S. 397(1) to the High Court. A second revision would not be competent under S. 397(3) as it applies only in a case where an application in a revision has been filed either before the Sessions Judge or the High Court and either of them has exercised the power, so that no further revision would lie to the High Court. In the instant case, sub-section (3) has no application. The bar under S. 397(2) against exercise of revisional power, being in relation to an inter-locutory order, is also not applicable in this case as here the order passed by the Sessions Judge was a final one. Asghar Khan v. State of U.P., 1981 Supp SCC 78: 1982 SCC (Cri) 146: AIR 1981 SC 1697: 1981 ALJ 965.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-1981]

— S. 397(2) See Ss. 482, 341 and 397(2)
See also Ss. 482 and 397(2)

[5959] — S. 397(2) — "Interlocutory order" — Meaning of

Per Fazal Ali and Sen JJ.

If an order is not a final order, it would be an interlocutory order. An interlocutory order merely decides some points or matter essential to the progress of the suit or collateral to the issues sought but is not a final decision or judgment on the matter in issue. So that in ordinary sense of the term, an interlocutory order is one which only decides a particular aspect or a particular issue or a particular matter in a proceeding, suit or trial but which does not, however, conclude the trial at all. One of the tests is to see if the order is decided in one way, it may terminate the proceedings but if decided in another way, then the proceedings would continue. A final order finally disposes of the rights of the parties.

Per Singhal, J.

The expression "interlocutory order" has been used in S. 397(2) of the Code in a restricted sense. It 'denotes' orders of a purely interim or temporary nature which do not decide or touch the important rights or liabilities of the parties and any order which substantially affects the rights of the accused is not an interlocutory order. On that reasoning an order for the framing of a charge against the accused in this case cannot be said to be an interlocutory order. V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695: AIR 1980 SC 962: 1980 Cri LJ 690: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 664.

Bench Strength 4. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], P.N. Shinghal[2], D.A. Desai[3] and A.P. Sen[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1979]

[5960] — S. 397(2) — "Interlocutory order" — Whether the order is final or interlocutory must be judged from the point of view of the person seeking revision

The appellant was asked under S. 94, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 to appear in court and make her denial of possession of the document on oath and be subject to questions by the court. Revision against this order was refused on the ground that it was "interlocutory".

Held :

If the order is directed against a person who is not a party to the enquiry or trial, and he will have no opportunity to challenge it after a final order is made affecting the parties concerned, then for such a person the order could not be said to be interlocutory. An order may be conclusive with reference to the stage at which it is made, and it may also be conclusive as to a person who is not a party to the enquiry or trial, against whom it is directed. Parmeshwari Devi v. State, (1977) 1 SCC 169: 1977 SCC (Cri) 74: AIR 1977 SC 403: (1977) 2 SCR 160.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, A.C. Gupta and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-1976]

[5961] — S. 397(2) — Revision — Interlocutory order — Magistrate's order of discharge of accused on the basis of police report, held, not interlocutory order and hence revision before High Court open. Haryana Land Reclamation and Development Corpn. Ltd. v. State of Haryana, (1990) 3 SCC 588: 1990 SCC (Cri) 515.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1990]

[5962] — S. 397(2) — Revision — "Interlocutory order" — Test to determine — Whether revisional power was exercised by High Court in relation to an interlocutory order and hence revision was not maintainable — Question not raised before High Court — Need not be decided by Supreme Court

The interdict contained in Section 397(2) is that the powers of revision shall not be exercised in relation to any interlocutory order. Whether an order is interlocutory or not, cannot be decided by merely looking at the order or merely because the order was passed at the interlocutory stage. The safe test is this: if the contention of the petitioner who moves the superior court in revision, as against the order under challenge is upheld, would the criminal proceedings as a whole culminate? If they would, then the order is not interlocutory in spite of the fact that it was passed during any interlocutory stage. (Para 8)

However, the objection regarding maintainability of the revision petition should have been raised before the court which invoked such a revisional jurisdiction. Inasmuch as the same was not done, that question is left undecided. (Para 11). Bhaskar Industries Ltd. v. Bhiwani Denim & Apparels Ltd., (2001) 7 SCC 401: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1254: AIR 2001 SC 3625.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2001]

Madhu Limaye v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 551: 1978 SCC (Cri) 10: AIR 1978 SC 47; V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695: AIR 1980 SC 962; Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pande v. Uttam, (1999) 3 SCC 134: 1999 SCC (Cri) 393; K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195: 2001 SCC (Cri) 200, relied on [5963] — S. 397(2) — Revision — Maintainability — Order directing issuance of process against accused — Nature of, whether "interlocutory" — Revision against it, if maintainable — Held, said question was academic as the High Court did not interfere with the order passed by the Sessions Judge in revision on the ground that the said revision was not maintainable in view of the prescription in S. 397(2) — But, since High Court had not considered the legality of the order directing issuance of process in second complaint, keeping in view the law laid down by the Supreme Court, matter remitted to High Court to record positive findings on the relevant issues (Paras 13 and 14). Poonam Chand Jain v. Fazru, (2004) 13 SCC 269: 2005 SCC (Cri) 190: AIR 2005 SC 38: 2005 Cri LJ 100.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2004]

Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pande v. Uttam, (1999) 3 SCC 134: 1999 SCC (Cri) 393; K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195: 2001 SCC (Cri) 200; V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695; Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876: 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770, relied on [5964] — S. 397(2) — Revision — Maintainability — Order directing issuance of process against accused — Nature of, whether "interlocutory" — Revision against it, if maintainable — Held, said question was academic as the High Court did not interfere with the order passed by the Sessions Judge in revision on the ground that the said revision was not maintainable in view of the prescription in S. 397(2) — But, since High Court had not considered the legality of the order directing issuance of process in second complaint, keeping in view the law laid down by the Supreme Court, matter remitted to High Court to record positive findings on the relevant issues (Paras 13 and 14). Poonam Chand Jain v. Fazru, 2005 SCC (Cri) 190.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2004]

Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pande v. Uttam, (1999) 3 SCC 134: 1999 SCC (Cri) 393; K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195: 2001 SCC (Cri) 200; V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695; Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876: 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 770, relied on [5965] — S. 397(2) — Abetment of suicide — Quashment of charge in revision — Held, on facts, High Court in revision was not justified in quashing the charge under S. 306 holding that the suicide was not the result of abetment by accused-respondent merely because suicide was committed 20 days after deceased was accused of stealing 10 gm of gold — Whether or not the allegation was based on truth would have to be decided on basis of evidence presented by prosecution before the Court — Penal Code, 1860, S. 306 (Para 4). State of Haryana v. Surinder Kumar, (2000) 10 SCC 337.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-1999]

[5966] — S. 397(2) — Revision not exercisable in relation to interlocutory order — Interlocutory order — Test to determine — Order passed during interim stage is not the sole test — If the objection raised by a party is such that it would result in culminating the proceedings, then order passed on such objection would not amount to interlocutory order — Where in revision filed by appellant against Magistrate's order taking cognizance of offences alleged in respondent's complaint appellant raising an objection that the complaint was barred by limitation under S. 161 of Bombay Police Act, the objection if upheld would have the effect of terminating the entire prosecution proceedings against the appellant and hence the Magistrate's order cannot be treated as interlocutory and would not be hit by S. 397(2)

In deciding whether an order challenged is interlocutory or not as for Section 397(2) CrPC, the sole test is not whether such order was passed during the interim stage. The feasible test is whether by upholding the objections raised by a party, it would result in culminating the proceedings, if so any order passed on such objections would not be merely interlocutory in nature as envisaged in Section 397(2) CrPC. In the present case, if the objection raised by the appellants were upheld by the Court the entire prosecution proceedings would have been terminated. Hence, as per the said standard, the order was revisable. (Para 11). K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195: 2001 SCC (Cri) 200: AIR 2000 SC 3346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2000]

Amar Nath v. State of Haryana, (1977) 4 SCC 137: 1977 SCC (Cri) 585; Madhu Limaye v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 551: 1978 SCC (Cri) 10; V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695; Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pande v. Uttam, (1999) 3 SCC 134: 1999 SCC (Cri) 393, relied on [5967] — S. 397(2) — Order granting police remand — Revision against — Maintainability of — Held, said order being a purely interlocutory order, revision against it not maintainable — "Interlocutory order" — Meaning, taken note of

In relation to a murder case, one Ms J surrendered herself before the court. J was remanded to judicial custody. On application moved by IO for grant of police remand of J, she was given in police custody for one day by the Magistrate concerned. During the said police custody, J made some confessional statements and at her instance a wristwatch and shirt of the deceased and also the nylon rope used in the commission of murder were recovered. Two weeks thereafter, J filed a revision petition before the High Court wherein it was prayed that the order of the Magistrate granting police custody be set aside as the same was against the principles laid down in Section 167 CrPC. Prayer was also made to pass such other and further orders as the court may deem fit and proper. In affidavit filed therein, serious allegations against the police personnel were made. The High Court disposed of the revision petition by issuing several directions. The High Court directed (a) that the order granting police custody in respect of J was ex facie illegal and, consequently, it was non est and had to be erased from the records, (b) that since the said order became non est, the consequent so-called confession and alleged recovery had no evidentiary value, (c) that the investigation conducted by the police concerned was not bona fide and false records had been created to implicate J, (d) that J had been wrongfully and illegally detained by the police for four days and was harassed and tortured by the police personnel, (e) that the Commissioner of Police must take departmental action against the police personnel who were responsible for the illegal detention and other obscene acts committed on J, and (f) that the Government of State concerned will pay a compensation of Rs 1,00,000 to J. A direction was also issued to the State Government to issue circulars to all the police stations that women accused/witnesses should not be brought to the police station and they must be inquired only by the women police at the place where they reside.

Allowing the appeals and setting aside the impugned judgment and order of the High Court, Held :

The order of remand has no bearing on the proceedings of the trial itself nor can it have any effect on the ultimate decision of the case. If an order of remand is found to be illegal, it cannot result in acquittal of the accused or in termination of proceedings. A remand order cannot affect the progress of the trial or its decision in any manner. Therefore, applying the test laid down in Madhu Limaye case, (1977) 4 SCC 551, it cannot be categorised even as an "intermediate order". The order is, therefore, a pure and simple interlocutory order and in view of the bar created by sub-section (2) of Section 397 CrPC, a revision against the said order is not maintainable. The High Court, therefore, erred in entertaining the revision against the order of the Metropolitan Magistrate granting police custody of the accused. (Para 13). State v. N.M.T. Joy Immaculate, (2004) 5 SCC 729: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1722: AIR 2004 SC 2282: 2004 Cri LJ 2515.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, C.J.[1] and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan[2] and G.P. Mathur[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2004]

K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195: 2001 SCC (Cri) 200; Madhu Limaye v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 551: 1978 SCC (Cri) 10, relied on

S. Kuppuswami Rao v. R., AIR 1949 FC 1: 49 Cri LJ 625; Salaman v. Warner, (1891) 1 QB 734: 60 LJQB 624 (CA), considered

2002 MLJ (Cri) 661, reversed

[5968] — S. 397(2) — Criminal revision petition against order granting police remand — Said order already acted upon — Held, petition to set aside that order became infructuous — High Court erred in allowing the same (Paras 24 and 7). State v. N.M.T. Joy Immaculate, (2004) 5 SCC 729: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1722: AIR 2004 SC 2282: 2004 Cri LJ 2515.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, C.J.[1] and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan[2] and G.P. Mathur[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2004]

[5969] — Ss. 397(2), 190 and 204 — Revision against an interlocutory order — Bar of — Order taking cognizance of offence and summoning accused — Nature of, whether interlocutory — Revision against it, if maintainable — Supreme Court not expressing any opinion in this regard (Paras 3 and 2). S.K. Bhatt v. State of U.P., (2005) 3 SCC 634: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1183: 2005 Cri LJ 1747.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 11-3-2005]

[Ed.: See also 2005 SCC (Cri) 190; 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; (2004) 7 SCC 338; (2000) 6 SCC 195; (1998) 3 SCC 594; (1992) 1 SCC 217]

[5970] — Ss. 397(2) and 204 — Revision — Interlocutory order — What is not — Order of Magistrate directing issuance of — Process is not an interlocutory order and, therefore, is amenable to revisional jurisdiction

It would not be appropriate to hold that an order directing issuance of process is purely interlocutory and, therefore, the bar under sub-section (2) of Section 397 would apply. On the other hand, it must be held to be intermediate or quasi-final and, therefore, the revisional jurisdiction under Section 397 could be exercised against the same. Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pande v. Uttam, (1999) 3 SCC 134: 1999 SCC (Cri) 393: AIR 1999 SC 1028: 1999 Cri LJ 1620.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1999]

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88; Amar Nath v. State of Haryana, (1977) 4 SCC 137: 1977 SCC (Cri) 585; Madhu Limaye v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 551: 1978 SCC (Cri) 10; V.C. Shukla v. State, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695, followed [5971] — Ss. 397(2), 401, 91 and 311 — Orders issued by trial court on application filed under Ss. 91 and 311 — Nature of — Held, orders are interlocutory in nature — Revision of such orders by High Court, further held, is barred under S. 397(2) (Para 5). Sethuraman v. Rajamanickam, (2009) 5 SCC 153.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2009]

[5972] — Ss. 397(2) & 482 — Expression "interlocutory order" — Object and meaning of — Magistrate accepting police report and discharging accused — Dismissal thereafter by Magistrate of private complaint against the same accused — Sessions Judge ordering further inquiry in revision — Magistrate issuing summons to accused automatically — Not an interlocutory order — Can be revised by High Court either under S. 397 or S. 482

The concept of interlocutory order qua the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court was completely foreign to the earlier 1898 Code and the 1955 Amendment to that Code. Under the 1955 Amendment widest possible powers of revision had been given to the High Court under Ss. 435 and 439 of the 1898 Code and the High Court could examine the propriety of any order, whether final or interlocutory, passed by any subordinate court in any matter. In the 1973 Code S. 397(2) was incorporated with the avowed purpose of cutting out delays and ensuring that the accused persons got a fair trial without much delay and the procedure was not made complicated. Section 397(2) provided that the powers of revision shall not be exercised in relation to any interlocutory order. The paramount object in inserting this new provision was to safeguard the interests of the accused.

The term "interlocutory order" in S. 397(2) of the 1973 Code has been used in a restricted sense and not in any broad or artistic sense. It merely denotes orders of a purely interim or temporary nature which do not decide or touch the important rights or the liabilities of the parties. Any order which substantially affects the right of the accused, or decides certain rights of the parties cannot be said to be an interlocutory order so as to bar a revision to the High Court against that order, because that would be against the very object which formed the basis for insertion of this particular provision in S. 397 of the 1973 Code. Thus, for instance, orders summoning witnesses, adjourning cases, passing orders for bail, calling for reports and such other steps in aid of the pending proceeding, may no doubt amount to interlocutory orders against which no revision would lie under S. 397(2) of the 1973 Code. But orders which are matters of moment and which affect or adjudicate the rights of the accused on a particular aspect of the trial cannot be said to be interlocutory so as to be outside the purview of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.

In the present case, a complaint was made to the police that the appellants had taken part in a murder. The police after investigation had submitted their final report under S. 173 of the Code stating that no case was at all made out against them. The report was accepted by the judicial Magistrate, who set the appellants at liberty, and a revision against that order to the Sessions Judge by the complainant had also failed. Thus, the appellants by virtue of the order of the Judicial Magistrate as affirmed by the Sessions Judge acquired a valuable right of not being put on trial unless a proper order was made against them. At that stage, the complainant made a private complaint before the Judicial Magistrate which was also dismissed on merits. The Sessions Judge in revision, however, set aside that order dismissing the complaint and ordered further inquiry. The Magistrate on receiving the order of the Sessions Judge summoned the appellants straightaway, which meant that the appellants were to be put on trial. The order of the Magistrate summoning the appellants was undoubtedly a matter of moment to the appellants and a valuable right of the appellants had been taken away by the Magistrate passing an order in a mechanical fashion without applying his mind. It is difficult to hold that such an order summoning the appellants was merely an interlocutory order, and the High Court erred in holding that it could not be revised under S. 397 or S. 482. A revision against that order was fully competent under S. 397(1) or under S. 482 of the 1973 Code because the scope of these two sections in a matter of this kind is more or less the same. Amar Nath v. State of Haryana, (1977) 4 SCC 137: 1977 SCC (Cri) 585: AIR 1977 SC 2185: 1977 Cri LJ 1891: 1977 MLJ (Cri) 561.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-1977]

[5973] — Ss. 397(2) and 482 — No power in High Court to revise "interlocutory" order — Inherent powers cannot be exercised when there is an express bar in a provision of the Code

A harmonious construction of Ss. 397 and 482, Criminal Procedure Code, would lead to the irresistible conclusion that where a particular order is expressly barred under S. 397(2) and cannot be subject to revision by the High Court then, to such a case, the provisions of S. 482 dealing with the inherent powers of the High Court would not apply.

The inherent powers of the Court can ordinarily be exercised when there is no express provision on the subject-matter. Where, however, there is an express provision barring a particular remedy the Court cannot resort to the exercise of inherent powers. Amar Nath v. State of Haryana, (1977) 4 SCC 137: 1977 SCC (Cri) 585: AIR 1977 SC 2185: 1977 Cri LJ 1891: 1977 MLJ (Cri) 561.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-1977]

See also (1977) 4 SCC 551

[5974] — Ss. 397(2) and 482 — Revisional power and inherent power — Inherent power may be invoked for quashing interlocutory order even though revision is prohibited — "Interlocutory order" — Meaning of — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 435 & 561-A

The 1973 Code puts a bar on the power of revision in order to facilitate expeditious disposal of cases. But in S. 482 it was provided that nothing in the Code, which would include S. 397(2) also, shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent powers of the High Court. On a harmonious construction it should be held that the bar provided in S. 397(2) operates only in exercise of the revisional power of the High Court, meaning thereby, that the High Court will have no power of revision in relation to any interlocutory order. But in such a case, the inherent power will come into play there being no other provision in the Code for the redress of the grievance of the aggrieved party. In case the impugned order clearly brings out a situation which is an abuse of the process of the court, or for the purpose of securing the ends of justice interference of the High Court is absolutely necessary, then nothing contained in S. 397(2) can limit or affect the exercise of the inherent power of the High Court. Such cases would necessarily be few and far between. One such case would be the desirability of the quashing of a criminal proceeding initiated illegally, vexatiously or as being without jurisdiction. The present case would undoubtedly fall for exercise of the power of the High Court in accordance with S. 482 of the 1973 Code even assuming that the invoking of the revisional power of the High Court is impermissible.

The order of the Sessions Court in the present case is, however, not an interlocutory order pure and simple. The test laid down in S. Kuppuswami Rao v. The King, (1947 FCR 180: AIR 1949 FC 1) was that if the objection of the accused succeeded the proceeding could have ended but not vice-versa and that the order can be said to be a final order only if in either event the action will be determined. On this test an order taking cognizance of an offence by a court whether it was done illegally or without jurisdiction will not be a final order and hence would be an interlocutory order. The High Court in such a case can certainly exercise its inherent power but it is wrong to hold that the test in Kuppuswami Rao's case, that what is not a final order must always be an interlocutory order, is neither warranted nor justified. It is not the intention of the Legislature when it retains the revisional powers of the High Court that only those orders would be revisable which are passed on the final determination of the action but which are not appealable under the Code. The Legislature on the one hand has kept intact the revisional power of the High Court and on the other put a bar on the exercise of that power in relation to an interlocutory order. The real intention of the Legislature was not to equate the expression "interlocutory order" as invariably being converse of the words "final order". There may be an order passed during the course of the proceeding which may not be final but yet it may not be an interlocutory order pure and simple. But a rule of harmonious construction of sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 397 it must be held that the bar in sub-section (2) is not meant to be attracted to such kinds of intermediate orders. It is neither advisable nor possible to make a catalogue of orders to demonstrate which kinds of orders would be interlocutory and which would be final and then prepare an exhaustive list of those types of orders which would fall between the two. Madhu Limaye v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 551: 1978 SCC (Cri) 10: AIR 1978 SC 47: 1978 Cri LJ 165.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.K. Goswami, N.L. Untwalia and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-10-1977]

Amar Nath v. State of Haryana, (1977) 4 SCC 137: 1977 SCC (Cri) 585, explained

— S. 397(3) See also Ss. 482 and 397(3)

[5975] — S. 397(3) — Revision application against order of Magistrate cannot be heard both by Sessions Court and the High Court — Sessions Judge rejecting revision — Further revision to High Court, held, barred — Such revision application cannot also be sustained under Art. 227 of the Constitution more so after the 42nd Amendment

The object of S. 397(3) is clear. It is to prevent a multiple exercise of revisional powers and to secure early finality to orders. Any person aggrieved by an order of an inferior Criminal Court is given the option to approach either the Sessions Judge or the High Court and once he exercises the option he is precluded from invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the other authority. The language of S. 397(3) is clear and peremptory and it does not admit of any other interpretation. It is not permissible to regard the revision application before the High Court as one directed against the order of the Sessions Judge instead of that of the Magistrate. What cannot be done directly cannot be done indirectly. Jagir Singh v. Ranbir Singh, (1979) 1 SCC 560: 1979 SCC (Cri) 348: AIR 1979 SC 381: 1979 Cri LJ 318: (1979) 16 ACC 74.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Jaswant Singh and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-11-1978]

[5976] — Ss. 397(3), 399 & 482 — Second revision application, after dismissal of the first one by Sessions Court — Held, cannot be entertained by High Court in exercise of its inherent power under S. 482. Dharampal v. Ramshri, (1993) 1 SCC 435: 1993 SCC (Cri) 333: AIR 1993 SC 1361: (1993) 1 Crimes 304: (1993) 1 An WR 60 (SC): (1993) 1 BLJR 361.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.B. Sawant and R.M. Sahai, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-1993]

Overruled in (1997) 4 SCC 241

[5977] — Ss. 397(3) and 482 — Relative scope — Prohibition of second revision under S. 397(3), held, does not completely bar High Court's power to entertain a revision petition under S. 482 — Said power under S. 482 can be invoked in appropriate cases as bar under S. 397(3) can be lifted in special cases

The object of the introduction of Section 397(3) is to prevent a second revision so as to avoid frivolous litigation, but, at the same time, the doors to the High Court to a litigant who had lost before the Sessions Judge are not completely closed and in special cases the bar under Section 397(3) can be lifted. The power of the High Court to entertain a petition under Section 482 is not subject to the prohibition under Section 397(3) and is capable of being invoked in appropriate cases. The contention that there is a complete bar under Section 397(3) debarring the High Court from entertaining an application under Section 482 thereof is rejected. (Para 24). Shakuntala Devi v. Chamru Mahto, (2009) 3 SCC 310.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-2-2009]

Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241: 1997 SCC (Cri) 544, followed

[5978] — Ss. 397(3), 401, 482 and 125 & 126(2) — Second revision invoking inherent powers of High Court under S. 482 after the dismissal of first one by Sessions Court — Sessions Court dismissing appellant's revision petition filed against the dismissal by the Magistrate of application under S. 126(2) against ex parte maintenance order — Further revision invoking inherent powers of High Court — Held, the instant case was such where the High Court ought not to have dismissed the said revision solely on the technical ground of non-maintainability but should have gone into the merits so as to find out if it was a fit case calling for interference of the High Court under S. 401 r/w S. 482 — Revision application restored to file (Para 5). Prasanta Kumar Dey v. State of W.B., (2002) 9 SCC 630: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1242: AIR 2003 SC 4412.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-12-2000]

Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241: 1997 SCC (Cri) 544, followed

[5979] — Ss. 397(3), 401, 482 and 483 — Second revision before the High Court after dismissal of first one by the Court of Sessions is barred under S. 397(3) — However, inherent power of the High Court is still available under S. 482 — But such inherent power must be exercised sparingly so as to avoid needless multiplicity of procedure, unnecessary delay in trial and protraction of proceedings — Object and scope of S. 483

Though second revision before the High Court under sub-section (1) of Section 397 is prohibited by sub-section (3) thereof, inherent power of the High Court is still available under Section 482 of the Code and as it is paramount power of continuous superintendence of the High Court under Section 483, the High Court is justified in interfering with the order leading to miscarriage of justice and in setting aside the order of the courts below.

Section 483 enjoins upon every High Court to so exercise its continuous superintendence over the Courts of Judicial Magistrates subordinate to it as to ensure that there is an expeditious and proper disposal of cases by such Magistrates. The power of the High Court of continuous supervisory jurisdiction is of paramount importance to examine the correctness, legality, or propriety of any finding, sentence or order, recorded or passed as also regularity of the proceedings of all inferior criminal courts.

Ordinarily, when revision has been barred by Section 397(3) of the Code, a person — accused/complainant — cannot be allowed to take recourse to the revision to the High Court under Section 397(1) or under inherent powers of the High Court under Section 482 of the Code since it may amount to circumvention of the provisions of Section 397(3) or Section 397(2) of the Code. The High Court has suo motu power under Section 401 and continuous supervisory jurisdiction under Section 483 of the Code. So, when the High Court on examination of the record finds that there is grave miscarriage of justice or abuse of the process of the courts or the required statutory procedure has not been complied with or there is failure of justice or order passed or sentence imposed by the Magistrate requires correction, it is but the duty of the High Court to have it corrected at the inception lest grave miscarriage of justice would ensue. It is, therefore, to meet the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process that the High Court is preserved with inherent power and would be justified, under such circumstances, to exercise the inherent power and in an appropriate case even revisional power under Section 397(1) read with Section 401 of the Code. It may be exercised sparingly so as to avoid needless multiplicity of procedure, unnecessary delay in trial and protraction of proceedings. The object of criminal trial is to render public justice, to punish the criminal and to see that the trial is concluded expeditiously before the memory of the witness fades out. The recent trend is to delay the trial and threaten the witness or to win over the witness by promise or inducement. These malpractices need to be curbed and public justice can be ensured only when trial is conducted expeditiously. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241: 1997 SCC (Cri) 544: AIR 1997 SC 987: 1997 Cri LJ 1519: (1997) 1 Mah LJ 509.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K. Ramaswamy, S. Saghir Ahmad and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-1997]

Madhu Limaye v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 551: 1978 SCC (Cri) 10; V.C. Shukla v. State through CBI, 1980 Supp SCC 92: 1980 SCC (Cri) 695, followed

Dharampal v. Ramshri, (1993) 1 SCC 435: 1993 SCC (Cri) 333, overruled

Rajan Kumar Machananda v. State of Karnataka, 1990 Supp SCC 132: 1990 SCC (Cri) 537; Simrikhia v. Dolley Mukherjee, (1990) 2 SCC 437: 1990 SCC (Cri) 327; Deepti v. Akhil Rai, (1995) 5 SCC 751: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1020, distinguished

See also Asghar Khan v. State of U.P., 1981 Supp SCC 78; Ganesh Narayan Hegde v. S. Bangarappa, (1995) 4 SCC 41

[5980] — Ss. 397(3) and 401 — Bar on simultaneous revisional application to the High Court and Court of Session — Held, not applicable when the State seeks revision under S. 401 — Expression "any person" in S. 397(3) includes juridical persons but does not include State — Penal Code, 1860, S. 11

Under sub-section (3) of Section 397, revisional jurisdiction can be invoked by "any person" but the Code has not defined the word "person". However, under Section 11 of the IPC, "person" includes any company or association or body of persons, whether incorporated or not. The word "person" would, therefore, include not only natural person but also juridical person in whatever form designated and whether incorporated or not. By implication, the State stands excluded from the purview of the word "person" for the purpose of limiting its right to avail the revisional power of the High Court under Section 397(1) of the Code for the reason that the State, being the prosecutor of the offender, is enjoined to conduct prosecution on behalf of the society and to take such remedial steps as it deems proper. Besides, in view of the principle laid down in the maxim ex debito justitiae, i.e., in accordance with the requirements of justice, the prohibition under Section 397(3) on revisional power given to the High Court would not apply when the State seeks revision under Section 401. So the State is not prohibited to avail the revisional power of the High Court under Section 397(1) read with Section 401 of the Code. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241: 1997 SCC (Cri) 544: AIR 1997 SC 987: 1997 Cri LJ 1519: (1997) 1 Mah LJ 509.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K. Ramaswamy, S. Saghir Ahmad and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-1997]

[5981] — Ss. 397(3) and 482 — Bar of second revision after dismissal of first one by the Sessions Court — Inherent powers of High Court cannot be utilised as a substitute for second revision

In the present case, the High Court minutely examined the evidence and came to the conclusion that the wife was living separately without any reasonable cause and that she was able to maintain herself. All this the High Court did in exercise of its powers under Section 482 of the Code which powers are not a substitute for a second revision under sub-section (3) of Section 397 of the Code. The very fact that the inherent powers conferred on the High Court are vast would mean that these are circumscribed and could be invoked only on certain set principles. (Para 11). Rajathi v. C. Ganesan, (1999) 6 SCC 326: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1118: AIR 1999 SC 2374: 1999 Cri LJ 3668.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Saghir Ahmad and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-1999]

[5982] — Ss. 397(3) and 482 — Bar of S. 397(3) cannot be circumvented by invoking inherent jurisdiction of the High Court

Where a revision petition is dismissed by the Sessions Court, a second revision would not lie to the High Court. Merely by saying that the jurisdiction of the High Court for exercise of its inherent power was being invoked the statutory bar could not have been overcome. If that was to be permitted every revision application facing the bar of S. 397(3) of the Code could be labelled as one under S. 482. Rajan Kumar Machananda v. State of Karnataka, 1990 Supp SCC 132: 1990 SCC (Cri) 537.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and S. Ranganathan, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-1987]

[5983] — Ss. 397(3) and 482 — Second revision before High Court after the dismissal of first one by Sessions Court — Bar in respect of — Remedy under S. 482 — Availability of — Grounds for — If on facts, S. 482 rightly invoked — Held, in view of the prohibition under S. 397(3), the complainant or the accused cannot be allowed to take recourse to a second revision, but High Court can entertain a petition under S. 482 when there is serious miscarriage of justice and abuse of the process of the court or when mandatory provisions of law are not complied with and when the High Court feels that the inherent jurisdiction is to be exercised to correct the mistake committed by the revisional court — Sessions Court in first revision confirming the discharge of accused by Magistrate — High Court in further revision however exercising power under S. 482 and setting aside the said order — Allegation in complaint was of a civil nature and no criminal case was made out — Complainant had also initiated arbitration proceedings — Considering the facts, held, High Court was not justified in exercising its inherent power under S. 482 — There was no miscarriage of justice warranting interference by High Court

The appellant and the co-accused Z were partners in a firm. They were running a rice mill. Under the policy of the State Govt., the respondent Corporation entrusted paddy to the said firm for dehusking. There was an agreement between the firm and the Corporation in terms whereof the firm was to supply advance rice to the Corporation. As per the complaint of the Corporation, the firm failed to supply the advance paddy due to the Corporation. According to the Corporation, about 1440 tons of rice was outstanding against the firm. Based on the complaint of the Corporation, a case was registered and a report was filed before the Judicial Magistrate. The appellant filed an application for discharge alleging that he was only a sleeping partner and the entire business of the firm was being conducted by Z. The Judicial Magistrate was of the view that the allegation contained in the complaint was of a civil nature and no criminal case was made out. It also observed that there was no prima facie case to show that the paddy was supplied to the accused and that there was shortage of rice supplied to the Corporation. The order of the Judicial Magistrate was challenged by the Corporation in a revision filed before the Court of Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge, after elaborately considering the question raised, upheld the order passed by the Judicial Magistrate. The Sessions Judge noticed the fact that the Corporation had initiated arbitration proceedings against the firm and had also filed a complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and that the filing of the present complaint alleging commission of offences punishable under Sections 406 and 428 IPC was an abuse of the process of the court. The Corporation filed a further revision before the High Court and by the impugned order the learned Single Judge set aside the orders passed by the Judicial Magistrate and the Sessions Judge. Hence, the present appeals by the accused.

Allowing the appeals, the Supreme Court held as above. Kailash Verma v. Punjab State Civil Supplies Corpn., (2005) 2 SCC 571: 2005 SCC (Cri) 538.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2005]

Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241: 1997 SCC (Cri) 544; Rajathi v. C. Ganesan, (1999) 6 SCC 326: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1118; State v. Navjot Sandhu, (2003) 6 SCC 641: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1545; Bal Kishan Das v. P.C. Nayar, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 412: 1991 SCC (Cri) 1055, followed [5984] — Ss. 397(3) and 125 — Maintainability of revision petition before High Court — Husband filing revision petition against Judicial Magistrate's order for grant of maintenance under S. 125 to wife while wife filing revision petition challenging only quantum of maintenance — Sessions Judge allowing husband's petition and dismissing that of wife — Held, excepting the question of quantum of maintenance, wife's revision petition before High Court against order of Sessions Judge not barred under S. 397(3). Bakulabai v. Gangaram, (1988) 1 SCC 537: 1988 SCC (Cri) 189: (1988) 1 KLT 413: 1988 Mah LJ 330.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-1988]

— Ss. 397/401 See Ss. 227, 228(1)(b) and 397/401

See also Ss. 482 and 397/401

— S. 398 See also S. 436, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1236 in Vol. 2

— S. 398 See Ss. 319, 245 and 398

See also Ss. 401, 397 and 398

See also Ss. 403, 397 to 399 and 401

[5985] — S. 398 — Inquiry directed by Supreme Court — Procedure to be followed — Scope for cross-examination — CPC, 1908, Or. 26 Rr. 10 and 16 to 18 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 137 — Constitution of India — Art. 136

Zahira Habibullah Sheikh, who was projected as the star witness in the Best Bakery case made a grievance that she was intimidated, threatened and coerced to depart from the truth and to make a statement in the court which did not reflect the reality. The trial court on the basis of the statements made by the witnesses in the court directed acquittal of the accused persons. An application under Section 391, CrPC highlighting the necessity for accepting additional evidence was filed before the Gujarat High Court. The foundation was the statement made by Zahira. The High Court did not accept the prayer and that is why appeals came to be filed in the Supreme Court. By its judgment in Zahira (1) case, (2004) 4 SCC 158, the Supreme Court in the exceptional circumstances of the case directed re-trial of the case outside the State of Gujarat, in the State of Maharashtra. While the said re-trial was on before a court in Maharashtra pursuant to the Supreme Court's direction, Zahira gave a press statement in the presence of some government officials that what she had stated before the trial court in Gujarat earlier was correct. A petition was filed before the Supreme Court alleging that Zahira's statement was nothing but contempt of the Supreme Court. At a press conference held on 3-11-2004, a few days before the scheduled appearance of the witnesses in the said re-trial she disowned the statements made in the Supreme Court, and before various bodies like the National Human Rights Commission. While considering the said petition filed, by orders passed in Zahira (3) case, (2005) 4 SCC 292 and Zahira (4) case, (2005) 4 SCC 294, the Supreme Court inter alia directed the Registrar General of the Supreme Court to conduct an inquiry into the matter and submit a report to the Supreme Court within three months. The Registrar General inter alia was to indicate in the report (a) if Zahira Habibullah Sheikh was in any manner threatened, coerced, induced and/or in any manner pressurised to depose/make statement(s) in any particular way, by any person to persons, and (b) if the answer to (a) was in the affirmative, who the person/persons was (or) were. The Court further directed Zahira inter alia to file an affidavit indicating details and sources of her own and her family members' bank accounts, advances, other deposits, amounts invested in movable or immovable properties and advances or security deposits, along with the affidavit to be filed before the Registrar General of the Supreme Court.

Disposing of the applications in the terms below,

Held:

Much has been made by Zahira about some observations made by the inquiry officer in his report. A bare reading of the observations makes it clear that what is being submitted by Zahira is by reading observations out of context. On a bare perusal of the proceedings of the enquiry it is clear that the procedure adopted was quite transparent. The proceedings were conducted in the presence of counsel for the parties and/or the parties themselves. After the questions were asked by the inquiry officer, the counsel and the parties were asked if any further questions were to be asked, and as the records reveal, whenever any question was suggested it was asked by the inquiry officer. It is alleged that scope for "cross-examination" was not given. That is really of no consequence. What questions in the "cross-examination" could have been put by counsel were asked by the inquiry officer whenever any suggestion was made in that regard. If a party did not suggest any question to be put to a witness by the inquiry officer, it is not open for him or her to say that the opportunity for "cross-examination" was not given. (Paras 14 and 15). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 2006 SC 1367: (2006) 2 KLT 350: 2006 Cri LJ 1694: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

[5986] — S. 398 — 'Discharge' — Meaning of — Discharge has to be in substance and effect though there is no formal order — Besides, here it does not mean absolute discharge

The word "discharge" in S. 398 means discharge of an offence relating to the charge within the meaning of Ss. 227, 239, 245 and 249. Refusing to proceed further after issue of process is discharge. The discharge has to be in substance and effect though there is no formal order. The language of the section does not indicate that the word "discharge" should be given a restricted meaning in the sense of absolute discharge where the accused is set at liberty after examination of the whole case. Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1990) 4 SCC 580: 1990 SCC (Cri) 650: AIR 1990 SC 2158: (1990) 3 Crimes 120.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Saikia and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-1990]

[5987] — Ss. 398 and 397 — Delay — Inordinate delay of 1233 days in filing the SLP — SLP dismissed in absence of any satisfactory explanation therefor — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Baldev Raj Taneja v. Bimal Kumar Kejriwal (HUF), (2001) 9 SCC 67.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-2001]

— S. 399 See also Ss. 437 and 438, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1236, 1238 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 399 See Ss. 227, 239, 399 and 401

See also Ss. 229, 241, Ch. XX-A (Ss. 265-A to 265-L) and 368, 399 and 401

See also Ss. 245, 397, 399 and 482

See also Ss. 386, 401 and 399

See also S. 397, above

See also Ss. 397, 399 and 401

See also Ss. 397(3), 399 & 482

See also Ss. 401 and 399

See also Ss. 401 & 399 and 354 & 235

See also Ss. 401, 399 & 397

See also Ss. 401(3), 397, 399 and 386

See also Ss. 403, 397 to 399 and 401

See also Ss. 464 & 215, 386, 399 and 401

See also Ss. 464, 386, 401 and 399

See also Ss. 482, 245, 397 and 399

See also Ss. 482, 397 and 399

[5988] — Ss. 399 and 125 — Revision — Estoppel — If on facts applicable — Trial court directing payment of a certain amount on account of meher — Revision petition filed for enhancing the amount — Revisionist's counsel having already accepted the amount awarded by the trial court but the revisionist not having received the same — In such circumstances, the revisionist, held, not estopped from challenging the trial court's order — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 115 — Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act, 1939, S. 5 — Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Divorce) Act, 1986, S. 3 (Paras 4 and 3). Selina Akhtar v. Matiur Rahaman, (2006) 12 SCC 281: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 575.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-2005]

[5989] — Ss. 399 and 204 — Sessions Judge's power of revision — Scope of, at the stage of issuance of summons by Magistrate — On the evidence Judicial Magistrate making out a prima facie case and issuing summons — Sessions Court entering into the correctness or otherwise of the evidence recorded by the Magistrate, held, was not justified (Paras 57 and 58). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[5990] — Ss. 399 to 401 — Revision — Reasoned order/Speaking order — Necessity of — In a case pertaining to allegation of harassment for dowry, High Court partly allowing revision by complainant under S. 401 on presumptuous conclusions — Impropriety — On facts, revisional court below passing a well-reasoned order — High Court while interfering with such conclusions arrived at on facts, held, ought to have indicated reasons necessitating interference — That was not done and on the contrary on presumptuous conclusions order of revisional court below was partly set aside — Reasons, held, introduce clarity in an order — On plainest consideration of justice, High Court ought to have set forth its reasons, howsoever brief, in its order indicative of an application of its mind — Absence of reasons rendered High Court's judgment unsustainable — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 498-A, 406, 323, 506, 148 and 149 — Dowry Prohi- bition Act, 1961, S. 2 (Paras 2 to 4, 9 and 10). Ran Singh v. State of Haryana, (2008) 4 SCC 70: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 182: AIR 2008 SC 1294: 2008 Cri LJ 1941: (2008) 1 KLT 803.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-1-2008]

State of Punjab v. Bhag Singh, (2004) 1 SCC 547, relied on [5991] — S. 399 — Interlocutory proceedings before Sessions Court in revision — Observations regarding appreciation of evidence made by Sessions Court must be considered to be for limited purpose of those proceedings only — Trial court must decide the case on its own assessments. Rajbir Singh v. Rajbir Singh, 1986 Supp SCC 736: 1987 SCC (Cri) 226.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-1986]

[5992] — S. 399 — Revision before Sessions Court — New plea — Additional ground when can be raised in revision — When revision petitioners (appellants) were challenging the very issuance of process against them, they can raise the additional ground that the complaint against them was barred under S. 161(1) of Bombay Police Act having been filed after the period prescribed therein, even if they had not raised that ground before the trial court

Merely because the appellants did not raise the legal points based on Section 161 of the Bombay Police Act before the Metropolitan Magistrate, they are not estopped from canvassing on that additional ground also before the Sessions Court in revision as they were challenging therein the very issuance of process against them. The position may be different if the Sessions Judge had avoided dealing with the contention based on Section 161(1) of the said Act on the premise that it could be raised before the trial court. But when the Sessions Judge had opted to go into that question and rendered a decision on it on merits it is difficult to concur with the reasoning of the High Court that the said aspect would not be gone into by the High Court as the same was not raised before the trial court. (Para 10). K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195: 2001 SCC (Cri) 200: AIR 2000 SC 3346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2000]

[5993] — Ss. 399, 401 and 354 — Need for findings on/examination of all issues raised — Need for findings on all contentions raised — High Court not dealing with all contentions raised by appellants in writ petition and not considering grounds raised in review petition — Unsustainability — Held, High Court ought to have disposed of writ petition dealing with all contentions raised in view of reliefs sought for in writ petition — Matter remitted for disposal afresh — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 Rr. 5 and 4(2), Or. 41 R. 31, Or. 6 R. 1 and Or. 14 R. 2. Mota Mandir Trust v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 9 SCC 379.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Shivaraj V. Patil and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2004]

[Ed.: See also Art. 136, '(g)(7)(ix)3. Remand — Issues/contentions of fact or law left undecided or erroneously decided', and '(g)(7)(ix)2. Remand — Non-application of mind', pp. 816 et seq. in Vol. 8 and Art. 226, '(f)(2)(vi) Pleas — Consideration of — Findings on', pp. 842 et seq. in Vol. 9, Complete Digest of Supreme Court Cases, 2nd Edn.]

[5994] — Ss. 399, 401 and 354 — Need for findings on/examination of all issues raised — Need for findings on/examination of all issues raised — High Court instead of examining questions involved, by cryptic order dismissing revision petition — Impermissibility — Held, matter required deeper consideration — Hence matter remitted for disposal afresh — Constitution of India — Art.136 — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 Rr. 5 and 4(2), Or. 41 R. 31, Or. 6 R. 1 and Or. 14 R. 2. Rajender Saini v. State of NCT of Delhi, (2006) 9 SCC 380.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

[5995] — Ss. 399, 401 and 354 — Need for findings on/examination of all issues raised — Findings — Need for findings on all contentions raised — Points of law raised by appellant not considered by High Court, and interim order passed without even expressing a prima facie view thereon — Unsustainability — Matter remitted for disposal afresh — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 Rr. 5 and 4(2), Or. 41 R. 31, Or. 6 R. 1 and Or. 14 R. 2. Jawahar Novodaya Vidyalaya v. D.C. Pant, (2004) 13 SCC 39.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ruma Pal and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-2004]

[Ed.: See also Art. 136, '(g)(7)(ix)3. Remand — Issues/contentions of fact or law left undecided or erroneously decided', '(g)(7)(ix)2. Remand — Non-application of mind', pp. 816 et seq. in Vol. 8, Complete Digest of Supreme Court Cases, 2nd Edn.]

— S. 399(3) See Ss. 482 & 399(3) and 245(1) & 246(1)

See also Ss. 484(2)(a) and 399(3)\

— S. 400 See also S. 438, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1238 in Vol. 2

— S. 400 See also Ss. 399 to 401

[5996] — S. 400 — Land sold by bhumidhars/landholders to appellants after its acquisition by Govt. under Land Acquisition Act — Complaint filed by appellant under Ss. 420/448/34 IPC — Cognisance taken and charges framed under those sections by trial court — But revision preferred by the landholders allowed by Addl. Sessions Judge and his decision upheld by High Court without giving any reasons — Held, it was not a fit case for exercising the revisional jurisdiction to quash the charges which had been framed — Prima facie a case was made out for filing the complaint since what was material was that at the time when the land was sold the landholders had no right, title or interest to sell the land in view of the acquisition and whether the sellers were bhumidhars or not was not material — Hence judgments of Addl. Sessions Judge and High Court set aside and the order of trial court restored — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420/448/34. Mohan Singh v. State of Delhi, (2000) 10 SCC 239.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Kirpal and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-10-1999]

— S. 401 See also S. 439, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1238 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 401 See Ss. 125, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 145, 146 and 397 & 401
See also Ss. 156, 157, 465, 401 and 397
See also Ss. 173(8) and 401
See also Ss. 190(1)(b) & 204, 200, 156(3), 468 and 401
See also Ss. 227, 228 and 401
See also Ss. 227 & 228, 401 & 397 and 482
See also Ss. 227, 239, 399 and 401
See also Ss. 228, 227 and 401
See also Ss. 229, 241, Ch. XX-A (Ss. 265-A to 265-L) and 368, 399 and 401
See also Ss. 239 to 249 and 401 & 300
See also Ss. 246(1) and 401
See also Ss. 313, 374, 386 and 401
See also Ss. 319 and 401
See also Ss. 321, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 374, 384, 386, 401 & 397
See also Ss. 374, 386 and 401
See also Ss. 374, 393 & 401
See also Ss. 377(2), 24(8) and 401
See also Ss. 378(1) & (4) and 401
See also Ss. 386, 401 and 247
See also Ss. 386, 401 and 399
See also Ss. 389, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 397, 377 & 401
See also Ss. 397, 399 and 401
See also Ss. 397 & 401
See also Ss. 397, 401, 91, 311 and 200
See also Ss. 397 & 401 and Ss. 156(3) & 200
See also Ss. 397, 401, 204 and 199(2)
See also Ss. 397, 401 and 321
See also Ss. 397, 401 and 353
See also Ss. 397, 401, 374, 377 and 386
See also Ss. 397, 401 and 378
See also Ss. 397 & 401, 386 and 313
See also Ss. 397(2), 401, 91 and 311
See also Ss. 397(3) and 401
See also Ss. 397(3), 401, 482 and 125 & 126(2)
See also Ss. 397(3), 401, 482 and 483
See also Ss. 399 to 401
See also Ss. 399, 401 and 354
See also Ss. 403, 397 to 399 and 401
See also Ss. 406, 407, 401 and 386
See also Ss. 437(1) first proviso and 401
See also Ss. 464 & 215, 386, 399 and 401
See also Ss. 464, 386, 401 and 399
See also Ss. 465 and 401
See also Ss. 473 and 401
See also Ss. 482, 397, 166-A and 401
See also Ss. 482, 397 and 401
See also Ss. 482, 397, 401, 239, 240 and 173
See also Ss. 482 & 401

[5997] — S. 401 — Revisional jurisdiction of High Court — Object and scope

The object of the revisional jurisdiction under S. 401 is to confer power upon superior criminal courts — a kind of paternal or supervisory jurisdiction — in order to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law, irregularity of procedure, neglect of proper precaution or apparent harshness of treatment which has resulted, on the one hand, or on the other hand in some undeserved hardship to individuals. The controlling power of the High Court is discretionary and it must be exercised in the interest of justice with regard to all facts and circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said facts and circumstances which vary greatly from case to case. Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305: 1993 SCC (Cri) 36: AIR 1993 SC 892.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-1992]

Followed in Johar v. Mangal Prasad, (2008) 3 SCC 423

[5998] — S. 401 — Revisional jurisdiction of High Court — Nature and scope of — Cannot be equated with appellate jurisdiction — Reappreciation of evidence not permissible unless it has resulted in gross miscarriage of justice — On facts, High Court exceeded its jurisdiction in interfering with the conviction by reappreciating the evidence and by not examining several items of evidence relied upon by Sessions Judge in confirming the conviction — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 408, 468 and 477-A

In its revisional jurisdiction, the High Court can call for and examine the record of any proceedings for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order. In other words, the jurisdiction is one of supervisory jurisdiction exercised by the High Court for correcting miscarriage of justice. But the said revisional power cannot be equated with the power of an appellate court nor can it be treated even as a second appellate jurisdiction. Ordinarily, therefore, it would not be appropriate for the High Court to reappreciate the evidence and come to its own conclusion on the same when the evidence has already been appreciated by the Magistrate as well as the Sessions Judge in appeal, unless any glaring feature is brought to the notice of the High Court which would otherwise tantamount to gross miscarriage of justice.

In the instant case the High Court exceeded its jurisdiction in interfering with the conviction of the respondent by reappreciating the oral evidence. The High Court also committed further error in not examining several items of evidence relied upon by the Additional Sessions Judge, while confirming the conviction of the respondent. In this view of the matter, the impugned judgment of the High Court is wholly unsustainable in law. State of Kerala v. Puttumana Illath Jathavedan Namboodiri, (1999) 2 SCC 452: 1999 SCC (Cri) 275: AIR 1999 SC 981: 1999 Cri LJ 1443.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1999]

[5999] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Scope of revisional power of High Court restated — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 439, 435 and 423

Although the revisional power of the High Court under S. 439 read with S. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, is as wide as the power of a court of appeal under S. 423 of the Code, it is now well settled that normally the jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 439 is to be exercised only in exceptional cases when there is a glaring defect in the procedure or there is a manifest error on a point of law which has consequently resulted in flagrant miscarriage of justice. The High Court is not expected to act under S. 435 or S. 439 as if it is hearing an appeal. The power being discretionary, it has to be exercised judiciously and not arbitrarily or lightly. Judicial discretion means a discretion which is informed by tradition, methodised by analogy and disciplined system.

In the present case, there is nothing to indicate that there was any glaring defect in the procedure adopted by the lower courts or that there was a manifest error on a point of law in the judgments or orders passed by them which had resulted in flagrant miscarriage of justice which needed to be set right by the High Court. A scrutiny of the evidence shows that there is not even any misappreciation of the evidence on the record by the lower courts which could be said to have resulted in gross failure of justice warranting interference by the High Court. Neither the trial Court nor the Sessions Judge committed any error of fact or law in arriving at their conclusions and the High Court misdirected itself in upsetting their concurrent findings ignoring the well-recognised principles for the exercise of revisional jurisdiction.

Therefore, the order of the High Court acquitting the accused must be set aside and accused must be convicted for the offences with which they were charged and held guilty by the trial Court. State of Orissa v. Nakula Sahu, (1979) 1 SCC 328: 1979 SCC (Cri) 283: AIR 1979 SC 663: 1979 Cri LJ 594: 1979 MLJ (Cri) 456: (1979) 47 CLT 624.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Jaswant Singh and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1978]

[6000] — Ss. 401 and 311 — Revisional power of High Court — It is a discretionary power which has to be exercised to correct miscarriage of justice — Justification for exercise of the power would depend upon facts and circumstances of each particular case — Where trial court acquitted the appellant of offence under S. 307 IPC in absence of any evidence and order of acquittal was not suffering from any perversity or unreasonableness, held on facts and in the circumstances of the case, there was no justification for the High Court to interfere with the trial court's order in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 401 and order a retrial for the purpose of examining the victims under S. 311 who had not been examined either under S. 161 CrPC or in the trial — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 432 and 540

A telephonic message was received at the police station from PW 2 that "two unknown persons" came to the house of the two victims and fired shots at them who were lying in an injured condition. On the basis of that information an FIR was registered. The victims were admitted to hospital where they were medically examined but they left the hospital of their own and made themselves scarce without informing the police. The investigating officer did not get any clue about the identity of the assailants and he arrested the appellant, as admitted by him, under directions of the SP and the DM. A charge-sheet was filed against the appellant for offences under Sections 450/307 IPC. However, the trial court framed charge against the appellant under Section 307 IPC only. At the trial neither the prosecution produced the victims as their whereabouts were not known, nor the SP and the DM appeared as witnesses to disclose as to how and why they had directed arrest of the appellant. On appreciation of evidence, the trial court recorded that there was no indication in the FIR about the identity of the assailants, nor was there any circumstance in the prosecution evidence against the appellant which could implicate him in the commission of the alleged crime. Accordingly, the trial court acquitted the appellant. Respondent 1 filed a petition in the High Court, which was treated as criminal revision petition, in which he asserted that no efforts were made, either by the prosecuting agency or the court to examine the victims and that those two witnesses should be examined and case reopened and a fresh trial conducted. It was asserted that the appellant had been wrongly acquitted on account of the "deliberate" default of the prosecuting agency. The High Court accepted the revision petition and directed examination of the victims under Section 311 CrPC. Hence this appeal by special leave against the order of the High Court.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Though the High Court has revisional jurisdiction under Section 401 CrPC and can exercise its discretionary jurisdiction to correct miscarriage of justice, but whether or not, there is justification for the exercise of that discretionary jurisdiction would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. The controlling power of the High Court under Section 401 CrPC being discretionary, it is required to be exercised only in the interest of justice, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of each particular case and not mechanically. (Para 9)

So the question arose: Was there any justification, in the facts and circumstances of the present case, for the High Court to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction on a petition filed by a third party and not the State? (Para 10)

In this case the submission that the appellant was arrested on a misguided suspicion and for "ulterior motives", in the facts and circumstances of the case, assumes some significance. There was no evidence before the trial court on the basis of which the appellant could have been linked with the alleged offence. The trial court was, thus, justified on the basis of the material before it, to record an order of acquittal. The High Court in its order did not find the order of the trial court to be suffering from any perversity or unreasonableness. Under the circumstances, the High Court ought not to have interfered with the order of acquittal and ordered a retrial for the purpose of examining the two victims under Section 311 CrPC, even though their statements had not been recorded even under Section 161 CrPC by the investigating officer to fill in the lacuna in the prosecution case. In the counter-affidavit filed by the State of Sikkim before the Supreme Court it has been specifically asserted that: "The State did not file an appeal against the order of acquittal, because the acquittal is unassailable." Therefore, the interference by the High Court, in the established facts and circumstances of the case, in a revision petition filed by a third party, with the order of acquittal was not justified. (Paras 11 and 12). T.N. Dhakkal v. James Basnett, (2001) 10 SCC 419.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and N. Santosh Hegde and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-2000]

Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305: 1993 SCC (Cri) 36, relied on

[6001] — Ss. 401, 397 and 378 — High Court's power of revision — Nature and scope — Held, the said power is of exceptional nature and therefore is to be exercised sparingly — Powers of Revisional Court are limited — A Revisional Court cannot convert itself into a regular court of appeal — Further held, rejection of revision application of another party does not affect State's right under S. 378 to apply for leave to appeal

The complainant filed a written complaint with the police that the respondent had inflicted knife injuries on him whereas the respondent's version was that the complainant was flirting with the respondent's wife at the railway station, for which the complainant was beaten by his wife and other persons at the railway station. On the basis of a complaint, a police case was registered against the respondent. Trial was held against him but the trial court acquitted the respondent on the ground that prosecution failed to establish its case beyond reasonable doubt. The complainant filed revision petition and the State filed an application for leave to appeal in the High Court but the High Court dismissed both the petition as well as the application. Application for leave to appeal was dismissed on the ground that judgment of trial court could not be considered as perverse and therefore no interference was called for. The State challenged this order in the Supreme Court.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The case was instituted on the basis of first information report. It was thus a police case. The de facto complainant, therefore, has no right to file an appeal. He preferred revision. Revisional jurisdiction can however be exercised sparingly and only in exceptional cases. A Revisional Court cannot convert itself into a regular court of appeal. Powers of Revisional Court are limited. Rejection of revision application cannot affect powers of the State in invoking statutory remedy available under Section 378 CrPC. (Paras 16 and 17). State of Maharashtra v. Sujay Mangesh Poyarekar, (2008) 9 SCC 475: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 793: (2008) 70 AIC 15 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-2008]

K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1962 SC 1788: (1963) 3 SCR 412, relied on [6002] — S. 401 — Revision — Held, High Court erred in dismissing revision without giving any reason — Case remanded. Jaswinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 1990 Supp SCC 55(1): 1990 SCC (Cri) 610.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.H. Kania and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-1989]

[6003] — S. 401 — Revision — Findings of fact of trial court — Reversal of, by High Court — Propriety — High Court not applying mind to the evidence on record or to the findings recorded by the trial court — Hence said reversal, held, not proper

The judgment and order of the High Court does not disclose application of mind to the evidence on record, or to the findings recorded by the trial court, which were sought to be set aside by the impugned judgment and order. The finding of the High Court is as vague as it can be and it is not possible to cull out the reasons which persuaded the learned Judge to set aside the findings recorded by the trial court. It is well settled that the appellate or revisional court while setting aside the findings recorded by the court below must notice those findings, and if the appellate or revisional court comes to the conclusion that the findings recorded by the trial court are untenable, record its reasons for coming to the said conclusion. Where the findings are findings of fact it must discuss the evidence on record which justify the reversal of the findings recorded by the court below. This is particularly so when findings recorded by the trial court are sought to be set aside by an appellate or revisional court. One cannot take exception to a judgment merely on the ground of its brevity, but if the judgment appears to be cryptic and conclusions are reached without even referring to the evidence on record or noticing the findings of the trial court, the party aggrieved is entitled to ask for setting aside of such a judgment. (Para 11)

Thus, the High Court was not justified in setting aside the findings recorded by the learned Judicial Magistrate. (Para 20). Deb Narayan Halder v. Anushree Halder, (2003) 11 SCC 303: 2004 SCC (Cri) 164: AIR 2003 SC 3174.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-2003]

[6004] — S. 401 — High Court acted improperly in setting aside concurrent findings of fact where the prosecution evidence was not challenged in cross-examination — Penal Code, 1860, S. 408 — Conviction restored and sentence reduced to that already undergone. State of Karnataka v. Marigowda, (1981) 4 SCC 429: 1981 SCC (Cri) 849: AIR 1982 SC 1171.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1981]

[6005] — S. 401 — High Court's power of revision — Interference with concurrent findings of fact by a cryptic order without adverting to reasons — Held, not justified

The respondents were convicted and sentenced under Sections 467 and 468 IPC. They filed appeal before the Sessions Court where the conviction and sentence were confirmed by a detailed and reasoned judgment. When the respondents preferred a revision before the High Court, a Single Judge set aside the conviction and sentence by a cryptic order, observing: "The sole ground on which the conviction is ordered by the courts below is the confession. In such cases, the prosecution is expected to conduct the investigation with all seriousness, which the present case lacks, as the offence alleged is serious in nature namely Sections 467 and 468 IPC and as the accused are bank employees and should have furnished correct information before the courts, in the absence of which the courts below cannot take into consideration the confession as the basis for convicting the accused. In my view the said approach is incorrect. Time and again it is held that confession is not a substantial and conclusive piece of evidence." Remanding the matter to the High Court for disposal of the revision afresh,

Held :

The approach of the High Court is unfortunately very unsatisfactory and is not the way in which a revisional jurisdiction has to be exercised. Exercise of revisional jurisdiction as against concurrent findings on facts should not have been as laconic and supercilious as the impugned judgment. The judicial power of revision has not been exercised in accordance with law in the case. When the Single Judge said that the prosecution is expected to conduct the investigation with all seriousness, he did not advert to any reason to hold that seriousness has not been shown by the investigating officer in this case. Even if there were laches on the part of the investigation, the Single Judge has not stated as to why the oral evidence in support of the prosecution should be discarded. The entire discussion made by the Single Judge is confined to the passage extracted above, which is reflective of the non-exercise of revisional power. (Paras 6 and 5). State of A.P. v. M. Satyanarayana, (2000) 10 SCC 288.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-1999]

[6006] — S. 401 — High Court's power of revision — Reappreciation of evidence, held, not permissible. Vimal Singh v. Khuman Singh, (1998) 7 SCC 223: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1574: AIR 1998 SC 3380.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and V.N. Khare, J. [Date of decision: 8-10-1998]

[6007] — S. 401 — High Court's power of revision is severely restricted — It cannot embark upon a reappreciation of evidence. Duli Chand v. Delhi Admn., (1975) 4 SCC 649: 1975 SCC (Cri) 663: AIR 1975 SC 1960: 1975 Cri LJ 1732: 1976 MLJ (Cri) 345.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, P.N. Bhagwati and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-1975]

[6008] — Ss. 401 and 374(2) — Revision — Manner of disposal of revision when appeal is preferred — Revision petition disposed of by a cryptic and practically non-reasoned order, on the day the appeal was admitted — Held, unwarranted even if appeal admitted

A criminal revision petition against conviction for the offences punishable under Sections 7 and 16 of the Food Adulteration Act, 1954, filed before the High Court, was admitted. But on the same day it was disposed of by a cryptic and practically non-reasoned order.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

That is not the way to dispose of a revision petition which has been admitted. If there was no substance, it should not have been admitted. Since it was admitted, the High Court obviously felt that there was some arguable point. Thereafter to dismiss it without indicating any reason or basis is certainly not the proper way of disposal. Accordingly, the impugned order of the High Court is set aside and the matter remitted back to the High Court for fresh disposal in accordance with law. (Paras 4 and 5). Goverdhan Dass Bansal v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2008) 14 SCC 499.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, C.K. Thakker and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-10-2008]

[6009] — S. 401 — Reappraisal of evidence under — Permissibility — Gang rape — Corroboration of evidence of victim not essential — Uncontroverted testimony of the prosecutrix accepted by courts below — Evidence showing that the victim had protested and struggled while she was subjected to forcible sexual assault by accused persons — Held, this evinces absence of consent on the part of the victim in sexual intercourse, apart from the legal presumption under S. 114-A of Evidence Act — Courts below rightly held that the victim was gang raped by the accused-appellants in the absence of her consent and that the defence case was not substantiated by any cogent evidence — Neither High Court in revision nor Supreme Court in appeal by special leave justified in reappraisal of the evidence in the face of the concurrent findings — Hence conviction under S. 376 and sentence of 3 years' RI upheld — Penal Code, 1860, S. 376(2)(g). Gagan Bihari Samal v. State of Orissa, (1991) 3 SCC 562: 1991 SCC (Cri) 893: (1991) 2 GLH 30: (1991) 72 CLT 322: (1991) 28 ACC 435.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and S.C. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-7-1991]

[6010] — S. 401 — Revision — Summary disposal of, by High Court — On facts, not justified — Accused, by a revision petition, challenging the merits of his conviction and also the quantum of sentence under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act — High Court deciding the legality and propriety of the sentence but not adverting to the legality of the conviction — Such a summary disposal of the revision, held, not justified — Hence, Supreme Court remitting the matter back to High Court for disposal after taking into consideration the merit of the accused's challenge to the legality and propriety of the conviction — Consequently, Supreme Court expressing no opinion on the plea raised by the complainant in his cross-appeal on the question of sentence as the same could now be raised before High Court (Paras 2, 3 and 5). J.L. Prasad v. Sri Rama Krishna Constructions, (2002) 10 SCC 267.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2002]

[6011] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Revisional powers of High Court — High Court interfering with concurrent findings on facts entered by the trial court and the appellate court — Held, the powers under revisional jurisdiction of the High Court must be exercised more seriously and objectively and the High Court must record reasons in the order while interfering with such concurrent findings — Use of general statement that "courts below erred in convicting the accused", held, not sufficient to justify judicial interference with the concurrent findings — Andhra Pradesh Excise Act, 1968 (17 of 1968), S. 34(a) (Para 5). State of A.P. v. M. Poshetty, (2001) 10 SCC 629.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1999]

[6012] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Revisional jurisdiction of High Court — Scope — Interference with factual finding — Trial court holding that accused was not juvenile and thus rejecting his prayer for bail — High Court reversing the said finding and holding the accused to be a juvenile directing his release on bail — Propriety — Held, if the High Court had entertained doubt about the finding arrived at by the trial court, as according to it the documents produced before the trial court called for further verification, it should have remanded the matter to trial court for an inquiry afresh — It should not have reversed trial court's order — Hence, High Court's order set aside — Trial court directed to hold fresh inquiry and then form an opinion in the said matter — However, directed that accused would continue to remain on bail, if released in compliance with High Court's order, but subject to conclusion of inquiry by trial court — Juvenile Justice Act, 1986, Ss. 32 and 18 — Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2000, Ss. 49 and 12 (Paras 4 to 6). Jagan Singh v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 307.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 11-2-2005]

[6013] — Ss. 401 and 374 — Revision — Powers of High Court under — Concurrent findings of fact — Interference with by High Court without giving any reason, held, was not appropriate — High Court, without any reference to the evidence on record or findings of the subordinate courts in respect of the evidence, upsetting the concurrent findings of the courts below — Revisional jurisdiction being supervisory in nature, High Court's interference with the concurrent findings of the courts below, without assigning any reason for such an interference, held, was not proper — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-A. State of A.P. v. Pituhuk Sreeinvanasa Rao, (2000) 9 SCC 537: 2001 SCC (Cri) 642: AIR 2000 SC 3515 (2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-3-2000]

[6014] — Ss. 401, 399 and 397 — Dismissal of criminal revision for default or non-prosecution without going into the merits of the case — Permissibility of — Held, not permissible — Rule laid down by Supreme Court that a criminal appeal cannot be dismissed for default also applies to criminal revision (Paras 4 to 8). Madan Lal Kapoor v. Rajiv Thapar, (2007) 7 SCC 623: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 437: (2007) 58 AIC 71 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-2007]

Bani Singh v. State of U.P., (1996) 4 SCC 720: 1996 SCC (Cri) 848; Parasuram Patel v. State of Orissa, (1994) 4 SCC 664: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1320, applied

Ram Naresh Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 1500: 1987 Cri LJ 1856, held, overruled

[6015] — Ss. 401 and 125 — Revision — Summary dismissal of, when not justified — Constitution of India — Art. 226

The appellant-wife moved an application before the Metropolitan Magistrate for execution of the order for maintenance of herself and her minor son in order to recover the arrears of maintenance. The Metropolitan Magistrate rejected her prayer on the ground that the claim for arrears stood satisfied upon the husband having been sent to jail. The wife then approached the High Court by way of a revisional application. The High Court rejected the revisional application summarily without a speaking order.

Held :

The High Court cannot, by a non-speaking order summarily reject such an important question arising in the context of the petition preferred by a helpless woman. To say the least of it, it betrays total lack of sensitivity on the part of the High Court to the plight of a helpless woman. Were it not so, the High Court would have at least passed a speaking order unfolding the rational process which made the High Court feel helpless in helping a helpless woman and a helpless child. The legal position may now be examined. Kuldip Kaur v. Surinder Singh, (1989) 1 SCC 405: 1989 SCC (Cri) 171: AIR 1989 SC 232: 1989 Cri LJ 794.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-11-1988]

[6016] — S. 401 — Summary dismissal of revision involving important question of law not justified. Attiq-Ur-Rehman v. MCD, (1996) 3 SCC 37: 1996 SCC (Cri) 457: AIR 1996 SC 956.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-2-1996]

[6017] — Ss. 401, 378 and 386 — Revision — Proper mode of disposal — Reasoned order necessary — High Court setting aside acquittal of appellant-accused by allowing revision petition filed by Respondent 1 (informant) without indicating any reasons therefor and neither analysing the evidence recorded — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for fresh disposal — Practice and Procedure — Reasoned order/speaking order necessity — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 364, 366-A, 368 and 120-B (Paras 1, 2, and 5 to 8). Sunil v. Rajesh Das, (2008) 13 SCC 246: (2008) 64 AIC 271 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2008]

[6018] — S. 401 — Revision — Proper mode of disposal — Interference with conviction — Reasoned order necessary — Revision against conviction recorded by trial court and first appellate court — Allowed by High Court acquitting the accused by a non-reasoned judgment — Matter remitted to High Court for fresh disposal by a reasoned judgment — Pondicherry Excise Act, 1970 (12 of 1970), Ss. 31, 33, 37(a) and 38(1)

The respondents were convicted by trial court under Sections 31, 33, 37(a) and 38(1) of the Pondicherry Excise Act and sentenced each of them to 6 months' RI with fine of Rs 10,000. The first appellate court affirmed the conviction but modified the sentence. The accused filed revision petition before the High Court. The High Court allowed the revision without referring to the factual scenario or the evidence of the witnesses and conclusions of the trial court and the first appellate court. It merely referred to certain judgments of the High Court and the Supreme Court without even indicating as to how they were relevant for the purpose of the case.

Held :

When two courts had found the accused persons guilty, the High Court has not even indicated as to how the conclusions of the trial court and the appellate court were without any basis or not sustainable. The manner of disposal of the revision petitions leaves much to be desired. Therefore, the impugned judgment of the High Court is set aside, the matter is remitted to the High Court for a fresh consideration and disposal by a reasoned order. The factual scenario and the evidence has to be analysed by the High Court while deciding the revision petitions afresh. (Paras 6 and 7). State v. M. Janakiraman, (2009) 4 SCC 504.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-2-2009]

[6019] — Ss. 401, 374 and 386 — Revision against remand of case for fresh trial by first appellate court in appeal against conviction — Proper mode of disposal — Need for examination of case on merits — First appellate court remanding case for fresh trial and re-examination to fill lacunae in prosecution version — High Court in revision against said remand order holding that remand is impermissible in law and setting aside the remand order but confirming conviction by trial court but without any examination on merits — Unsustainability — Held, if remand for fresh trial is not permissible, High Court ought to have examined case on merits since first appellate court did not examine case on merits — Matter remitted to High Court for decision on merits — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 408 and 462 (Para 8). Rameshwar Prasad v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 4 SCC 471.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, V.S. Sirpurkar and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2009]

[6020] — S. 401 — Concurrent findings of fact — Interference with, under — Enforcing social disability of Harijan community — Charge against respondents of restraining the complainant party by show of force (threatening to use a gun) from taking water from a newly dug-up borewell on ground that they were untouchables — Conviction under S. 4, Protection of Civil Rights Act, 1955 and sentence of one month's simple imprisonment and fine of Rs 100 each recorded by trial court and appellate court upset in revision by High Court finding discrepancy and inconsistency in the evidence of PWs regarding actual manner in which the accused obstructed the complainant party and the words they uttered — Held, charge proved beyond reasonable doubt — High Court erred in interfering with concurrent findings of fact in exercise of revisional jurisdiction without having regard to sense and effect of the prosecution evidence — Not an essential element in social disability legislation like Protection of Civil Rights Act, 1955 — Protection of Civil Rights Act, 1955, Ss. 4 and 7

The complainant (PW 1) deposed that a borewell was being drilled at a distance of about 15 feet from Harijan colony and water sprouted from the well on the date of the incident at about 9.30 p.m. At that time many persons including the accused persons and some Harijans including PWs 1 to 4 were present there. Two young girls of the Hindu community performed pooja. Thereafter 10/15 Hindus took water from the well for performing pooja at the temple. He further stated that he along with five other persons including PWs, who were all Harijans, also brought pots for taking water from the well. At that time the three respondents told the Harijans not to take water from the well as they were "mahars" and that there was a separate well for them. According to the complainant the three respondents further obstructed the Harijans from taking water saying that if the Harijans insist on taking water the result would be unhappy. Respondent 1 told his men to bring a gun from his house and threatened the Harijans with dire consequences. The complainant further stated that he told the accused persons that the Harijans have also right to take water from the well. On that the respondents-accused told the Harijans not to persist on taking water from the well otherwise the consequences would be serious. The Harijans thereafter left the well without taking water and went to their colony. PWs 2, 3 and 4 also repeated the occurrence in similar words as stated by PW 1. The trial court convicted the five accused under S. 4 of the Act and sentenced them to undergo simple imprisonment for one month and a fine of Rs 100 each and in default to suffer simple imprisonment for further five days. One of the accused viz. Respondent 1 (who later died during pendency of appeal), was further convicted under S. 7 of the Act but no separate sentence was awarded to him for the said offence. The Additional Sessions Judge, on appeal, upheld the conviction and sentence of three accused persons but acquitted two accused. The revision preferred by the three convicted accused was allowed by a Single Judge of High Court and consequently they were acquitted. The High Court disbelieved evidence of all the four witnesses as according to it their evidence was not uniform in regard to actual words uttered by the accused persons and the manner in which they prevented the complainant party from taking water from the well. Allowing the appeal

Held :

Per Kuldip Singh, J.

The charge against the respondents has been proved beyond doubt. The High Court fell into patent error in rejecting the prosecution evidence. There was no infirmity in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. Ordinarily it is not open for the High Court to interfere with the concurrent findings of the courts below specially by reappreciating the evidence in its revisional jurisdiction. The social disability of the Harijan community was enforced on a threat of using a gun. It is proved beyond doubt that the complainants were stopped from taking water from the well on the ground that they were untouchables.

Accordingly the judgment of the High Court is set aside and that of the Additional Sessions Judge is restored.

Per K. Ramaswamy, J. (concurring)

The High Court in appreciating the evidence of PWs 1 to 4 appears to have fallen into the trap of traditional mould and found doubt when none exists. It concentrated more on sequence or absence of parrot-like repetition of ocular words spoken by illiterate persons or play upon words and sought consistence forsaking the sense it conveyed and the effect it produced in preventing PWs 1 to 4 and other Dalits to exercise the right to draw water from public borewell. The High Court gave the benefit of doubt when in fact no such benefit does arise from evidence if considered in proper perspective nor exists to reach the finding of guilty.

While the court is to adopt the psychological approach, reasonable doubt does not mean the mind of a doubting Thomas, nor vacillation, nor pusillanimity, nor deep-seated prejudices or predilections covertly found in other walks of life. The application of the test of a reasonable man acting in similar circumstances and reasonable doubt of a reasonable man is the rule.

The criminal law primarily concerns with social protection, prescribes rules of behaviour to be observed by all persons and punishes them for deviance, transgression or omission. Mens rea is not an essential ingredient in social legislations. State of Karnataka v. Appa Balu Ingale, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 469: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1762: AIR 1993 SC 1126.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh[1] and K. Ramaswamy[1&2], JJ. [Date of decision: 1-12-1992]

[6021] — S. 401 — Driving car in rash and negligent manner causing accident resulting in death of two — High Court on reappraisal of evidence acquitting the accused — It exceeded its revisional power. Shakila Khader v. Nausheer Cama, (1975) 4 SCC 122: 1975 SCC (Cri) 379: AIR 1975 SC 1324: 1975 Cri LJ 1105.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A. Alagiriswami and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1975]

[6022] — S. 401 — Government servant convicted under Ss. 466 and 468 IPC and granted benefit of S. 4 of U.P. First Offenders Act — Revision against — Direction by the High Court that the accused must be deemed to have been in continuous service without break and, therefore, entitled to full pay and DA during the period of his suspension, held, was without jurisdiction. State of U.P. v. Ranjit Singh, (1999) 2 SCC 617: 1999 SCC (Cri) 293: AIR 1999 SC 1201: 1999 All LJ 970: 1999 Cri LJ 1830.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, M.B. Shah and R.C. Lahoti, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-2-1999]

[6023] — S. 401 — Revision before High Court — Pleading — When an additional ground was considered and decided on merits by Sessions Court in revision, held, High Court in further revision erred in refusing to go into that question merely because the same was not raised before the trial court

Merely because the appellants did not raise the legal points based on Section 161 of the Bombay Police Act before the Metropolitan Magistrate, they are not estopped from canvassing on that additional ground also before the Sessions Court in revision as they were challenging therein the very issuance of process against them. The position may be different if the Sessions Judge had avoided dealing with the contention based on Section 161(1) of the said Act on the premise that it could be raised before the trial court. But when the Sessions Judge had opted to go into that question and rendered a decision on it on merits it is difficult to concur with the reasoning of the High Court that the said aspect would not be gone into by the High Court as the same was not raised before the trial court. (Para 10). K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195: 2001 SCC (Cri) 200: AIR 2000 SC 3346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2000]

[6024] — S. 401 — Revision — High Court not justified in refusing to look into evidence on ground that no such specific contention was raised in the memo of the revision petition — Matter remitted back for fresh consideration. Mohd. Sharif v. State of Orissa, 1995 Supp (3) SCC 663: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1111.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and M.K. Mukherjee and S.C. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-1-1995]

[6025] — S. 401 — Revision — High Court's power to suo motu enhance sentence (from life imprisonment to death sentence in this case) — Scope — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The High Court, suo motu in exercise of revisional jurisdiction, can enhance the sentence of an accused awarded by the trial court and the same is not affected merely because an appeal has been provided under Section 377 of the Code for enhancement of sentence and no such appeal has been preferred. But the suo motu powers of enhancement under revisional jurisdiction can be exercised only after giving opportunity of hearing to the accused. In this case no such opportunity of hearing was given to the accused-appellant. Therefore, the High Court was not justified in enhancing the sentence of life imprisonment awarded under Section 302 of the Penal Code to death penalty. (Paras 8 and 9). Surendra Singh Rautela v. State of Bihar, (2002) 1 SCC 266: 2002 SCC (Cri) 165: AIR 2002 SC 260: 2002 Cri LJ 555.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-11-2001]

Nadir Khan v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1976) 2 SCC 406: 1976 SCC (Cri) 622; Eknath Shankarrao Mukkawar v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 3 SCC 25: 1977 SCC (Cri) 410; Jayaram Vithoba v. State of Bombay, AIR 1956 SC 146: 1956 Cri LJ 318; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 4 SCC 754: 1980 SCC (Cri) 174, relied on [6026] — S. 401 — Revision — Reduction of sentence by High Court without issuing notice to State or original complainant improper — Order of High Court set aside and respondents directed to surrender to custody — Case remanded for fresh disposal in accordance with law. Niranjan Lal v. Attar Singh, 1990 Supp SCC 57: 1990 SCC (Cri) 607.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-8-1988]

[6027] — S. 401 — High Court's power of revision — Held, does not include the authority to refuse to hear or entertain a matter on the ground that accused had not surrendered — There is no such requirement under Criminal Procedure Code — High Court was not justified in dismissing the application for revision on the sole ground that accused had not surrendered — In particular where the relevant High Court Rules (Patna in this case) contained no such rule (Para 3). Bihari Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 10 SCC 346.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-1999]

[6028] — S. 401 — Power of High Court to enhance sentence — Must be sparingly exercised — It can enhance the sentence if reasons given by the trial court for awarding lesser sentence are wholly unsatisfactory, irrelevant, unreasonable or perverse — Merely because the High Court looked at the case from a different angle, enhancement of sentence is not justified — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304 Pt I. George Thomas v. State of Kerala, 1995 Cri LJ 3645.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-1994]

[6029] — S. 401 — Suo motu show-cause notice issued by High Court for enhancement of the sentence — Revision application filed by appellants before High Court against their conviction under Ss. 143, 147, 447 and 448 read with S. 149 IPC and sentence of fine of Rs 250 under each count — Notice neither properly served on the appellants nor were the appellants represented through their counsel when the notice was heard by High Court — On facts held, High Court was not justified in taking the suo motu action — Hence instead of remitting the matter to the High Court, its order set aside. V. Sasi v. State of Kerala, 1992 Supp (2) SCC 499: 1992 SCC (Cri) 763: AIR 1992 SC 122: 1992 Cri LJ 106: (1992) 2 BLJR 714.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and S.C. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-8-1991]

[6030] — S. 401 — Sentence — Reduction of in revisional jurisdiction, when not justified — Merely because in revision before High Court, accused persons had not challenged their conviction and had argued only on the question of their sentence, held, High Court was not justified in reducing the sentence to the period accused had been in jail, without even verifying whether they had undergone any sentence at all and without applying its mind to the facts to ascertain whether it was a fit case for exercise of revisional jurisdiction and modifying the sentence — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A

The Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate convicted the respondents (husband and mother-in-law of the victim) for the offence punishable under Section 498-A IPC each and sentenced them to suffer RI for one year and to pay a fine of Rs 1000 and in default in payment of fine to further undergo RI for 3 months each, by holding that the accused persons asked the victim to bring money from her father's house and when she could not arrange for money, all the accused mercilessly beat her and planned to burn her with a burning wooden stick. Appeal preferred by the respondents was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge. The respondents then filed revision petition before the High Court. A Single Judge allowed the revision by a cryptic order holding that the counsel for the accused had not challenged the conviction and had argued only on the question of sentence and that in the circumstances, "by maintaining the conviction for the offence under Section 498-A IPC, I modify the sentence and they are sentenced to undergo RI for the period for which they had been in jail and a fine of Rs 1000 each. They shall be released forthwith on deposit of fine". Allowing the appeal, the Supreme Court

Held :

The High Court has modified the sentence without recording any reasons and without considering the crime prevalent in the society for unjustified demand of dowry. In any case, before exercising its revisional jurisdiction, the Court ought to have considered the facts and applied its mind as to whether it was a fit case for exercise of its revisional jurisdiction and for reducing the sentence. It has also been pointed out that without verifying the fact that the respondents have not undergone any sentence, the High Court had passed the order of reducing the sentence for the period for which they had been in jail. It is the duty of the court to pass appropriate order of sentence and not raising of any argument by counsel for the accused for acquittal is hardly any ground for reduction of sentence. (Para 7). Narsingh Prasad Singh v. Raj Kumar, (2001) 4 SCC 522: 2001 SCC (Cri) 757: AIR 2001 SC 1828: 2001 Cri LJ 2039.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-2001]

[6031] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Revision — Scope — Adequacy of sentence — Conviction under S. 306 IPC for abetment of suicide of wife and sentence of 5 years' RI awarded — In revision High Court reducing sentence to 2 months only — Held, no justification for High Court's order which seems a mockery of law — In the circumstances 3 years' RI plus fine of Rs 5000 adequate for meeting ends of justice — Penal Code, 1860, S. 306. State of A.P. v. Kuna Satyanarayana, (1998) 8 SCC 268.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Kirpal and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-1998]

[6032] — Ss. 401, 377(3), 397 and 386 — Enhancement of sentence on a revision petition filed by the State under S. 401 — Opportunity to show cause under S. 377(3), held, need not be afforded — Besides, on facts, since the appeal of the accused was heard along with they had obtained such opportunity — Enhancement of sentence also, on facts held, justified

Five accused, shouting that the deceased should be taught a lesson, started beating him with their respective weapons such as datar, kirpan etc. as a result of which his left leg was completely severed from his body. One of the accused then took away the chopped off leg after wrapping it in his turban. The deceased succumbed to his injuries. The trial Court convicted the accused under S. 304, Part I read with S. 149 Indian Penal Code but sentenced three of them to RI for 10 years and a fine of Rs 1000 and two of them to RI for 5 years and a fine of Rs 500. The first three accused were also convicted under S. 148 Indian Penal Code and sentenced to RI for 2 years and the other two were convicted under S. 147 Indian Penal Code and sentenced to RI for 1 year. While the accused filed an appeal against their conviction and sentence, the State filed an appeal against their acquittal for offence under S. 302

Penal Code as also a revision petition under S. 401 Criminal Procedure Code for enhancement of the sentence. The High Court making an express order for taking up the revision petition only along with the accuseds' appeal, dismissed the appeal and enhanced the sentence of the three accused to RI for life and of the other two to RI for 10 years. The High Court stated that the State appeal "was partly accepted" but inadvertently omitted to refer to the revision petition in the operative part of its order. On that basis the accused contended that the High Court committed an error of law in enhancing the sentence of the accused without giving them a reasonable opportunity of showing cause under S. 377(3), Criminal Procedure Code. Dismissing the petition for special leave.

Held :

As the State had not filed an appeal against the sentence under S. 377(1) Criminal Procedure Code, there was no illegality in not complying with the requirement of S. 377(3). The revision petition filed under S. 401 Criminal Procedure Code for enhancement of the sentence was clearly maintainable as it was not permissible for the revision petitioner to file an appeal under S. 377. Also the High Court under S. 397 can call for and examine records of proceedings before the trial Court to exercise its revisional power. The High Court's power of revision under S. 401 in the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by it or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, includes, the power conferred on a court of appeal under S. 386 to enhance or reduce the sentence. So when the record of the case was before the High Court in connection with the two appeals and the revision petition, there was nothing to prevent the High Court from invoking its powers under S. 397 read with S. 401 Criminal Procedure Code and to make an order for the enhancement of the sentence.

Moreover, the opportunity of showing cause against the enhancement of the sentence or to plead for their acquittal or for reduction of the sentence was amply furnished in the appeal which was heard along with the revision petition.

Besides, the established facts and circumstances of the case on which the courts below placed reliance, justify the view taken by the High Court that the accused deserved the sentence awarded to them by it. Therefore, the argument that as the accused had undergone a portion of the sentence and as the offence was committed in 1972, the High Court was not justified in enhancing the sentence, is untenable and inconsequential. Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 4 SCC 754: 1980 SCC (Cri) 174: AIR 1980 SC 267.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-1979]

[6033] — S. 401 — Revision — Notice — Need for — Complaint alleging offence punishable under S. 420 IPC having been dismissed by Judicial Magistrate, revision petition filed by the complainant before High Court — High Court without issuing notice to the respondent before it (appellant before the Supreme Court) and without considering the defence available to him, proceeding to consider the material produced by the revision petitioner and directing the Magistrate to proceed with the complaint in accordance with law — Held, order unsustainable as it violated principles of natural justice as also requirements of law of hearing a party before passing an adverse order (Paras 3, 4 and 5). P. Sundarrajan v. R. Vidhya Sekar, (2004) 13 SCC 472.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-2004]

[6034] — S. 401 — Revisional jurisdiction — On facts, High Court erred in quashing the General Diary entry, the investigation undertaken on the basis thereof and the FIR recorded subsequent to the said General Diary entry (Para 24). Supdt. of Police, CBI v. Tapan Kumar Singh, (2003) 6 SCC 175: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1305: AIR 2003 SC 4140: 2003 Cri LJ 2322.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2003]

[6035] — S. 401 — Scope of invoking jurisdiction of High Court in criminal revision, restated — On facts, death of two children due to rash and negligent driving of appellant — Appellant convicted under Ss. 279 and 304-A IPC — Appeal dismissed by first appellate court — High Court dismissing criminal revision — Held, trial court and Revisional Court had analysed the evidence in detail to conclude about the guilt of accused — There was no manifest error in the conclusions or in analysing the evidence — Hence, High Court was justified in law in not exercising its revisional jurisdiction — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 279 and 304-A (Paras 9 to 11, 1, 6 and 12). Raj Kumar v. State of H.P., (2008) 11 SCC 76.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-2008]

Duli Chand v. Delhi Admn., (1975) 4 SCC 649: 1975 SCC (Cri) 663; State of Orissa v. Nakula Sahu, (1979) 1 SCC 328: 1979 SCC (Cri) 283; State of Kerala v. Puttumana Illath Jathavedan Namboodiri, (1999) 2 SCC 452: 1999 SCC (Cri) 275, relied on [6036] — S. 401 — Unwarranted remarks while disposing of revision petition — Propriety — Revision petition against order of acquittal of appellant for offences under Ss. 381 and 411 IPC — While dismissing the revision, High Court observing that departmental proceedings, pending against the accused, should be disposed of on merits without being influenced by the order of acquittal in the criminal case — Held, such observation was unwarranted while dismissing the revision petition — Question regarding effect of the order of acquittal on the departmental proceedings or any civil case has to be decided at the appropriate stage by appropriate forum. D. Paul v. Nawab Ali Akhtar, (2001) 10 SCC 501.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti, J. [Date of decision: 15-1-2001]

[6037] — Ss. 401 and 319 — Summoning person not named as accused in charge-sheet, to appear as accused in sessions trial — High Court's power in revision to direct trial court to issue such summons — Scope of — Trial court dismissing complainant's application under S. 319 twice, once even against High Court's direction to issue summons — Held, where appellants were named in FIR as accused and were also named so by complainant in his evidence during trial, High Court committed no error in issuing impugned directions — If appellants' complicity appeared clear to the court, power under S. 319, held, could be invoked — Court has the discretion in such a matter

An FIR was lodged by PW 1 that the accused persons had attacked his brother and brother-in-law causing the death of the brother on the spot and injuries to the latter. Accused persons were challaned under Sections 307, 302 read with Section 120-B IPC. On the day when the deposition of PW 1 was recorded by the Sessions Judge, PW 1 filed an application under Section 319 CrPC before the Sessions Judge for summoning the appellants to face trial in respect of the said incident. The application was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge. PW 1 filed a criminal revision which was disposed of by the High Court setting aside the impugned order and directing the trial court to pass a fresh order. The Sessions Judge reheard the application and once again dismissed the same.

The dismissal was followed by a second criminal revision petition by Respondent 2 (PW 1). The High Court sought for an explanation from the trial Judge for not complying with its earlier order, and quashing the second dismissal order issued by the trial court, further directed it to issue summons against the appellants for their appearance as accused in sessions trial under Sections 302, 307 and 120-B IPC. This order of the High Court had been impugned in the instant appeal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

All that is required by the court for invoking its powers under Section 319 CrPC is to be satisfied that from the evidence adduced before it, a person against whom no charge had been framed but whose complicity appears to be clear, should be tried together with the accused. The discretion is left to the court to take a decision on the matter. (Paras 8, 9, 16 and 18)

Though the appellants were named in the FIR they were not named as accused in the charge-sheet during the trial. However, PW 1 in his evidence, has named the appellants as persons who were involved in the incident causing the death of the brother and injuries to the brother-in-law. Despite this the trial court, on two separate occasions, rejected the prayer made by Respondent 2 for summoning the appellants under Section 319 CrPC. The High Court, after considering the evidence of PW 1 thought it necessary for the appellants to be summoned. Although certain observations made by the High Court regarding the orders passed by the trial court could and should have been avoided, in view of the evidence of PW 1 during the trial itself, the High Court has not committed any error in directing that the appellants be summoned to stand trial along with the co-accused. (Paras 19 to 21). Ram Pal Singh v. State of U.P., (2009) 4 SCC 423.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-2009]

Kamlesh Singh v. State of U.P., (2008) 60 All Cri C 959, affirmed

[6038] — Ss. 401 and 319 — Revision of order under S. 319 — Grounds for — Held, where a judicious discretion exercised by trial court had led it to pass order under S. 319, High Court exercising revisional jurisdiction could interfere therewith, inter alia, only where legal principles laid down by Supreme Court have been violated (Para 17). Harbhajan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 13 SCC 608: (2009) 82 AIC 29 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 4429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2009]

[6039] — S. 401 — Where even though the second revision by High Court was not maintainable, Supreme Court would not interfere under Art. 136 if the order of the High Court is meant to promote the ends of justice

A revision petition filed against an order of a Special Judge framing charges against the respondent was dismissed by the High Court and the order of the Special Judge was upheld. Meanwhile the Supreme Court decided P. Sirajuddin case [(1970) 1 SCC 595], on the basis of which the respondent raised a question of law before the Special Judge that as the charges were mainly based on the statement of witnesses who had given signed statements earlier under duress or inducement, the charges should be quashed. The Special Judge, however, rejected the contention and framed the charges. A second revision petition was thereupon filed against this order by the respondent and the High Court allowing the same ordered that the Special Judge would exclude from consideration all the statements which had been recorded in violation of Ss. 162 and 163, Criminal Procedure Code and which were self-exculpatory and confessional in character and then decide the matter afresh. An appeal was then filed before the Supreme Court under Art. 136 questioning the maintainability of the second revision. Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Since the previous judgment in the first revision had already been declared and signed by the Court, the second judgment in revision was clearly not maintainable as it amounted to a review of the previous judgment.

However, although the order of the High Court may be wrong or even without jurisdiction, it has passed a correct and just order which is in consonance with the decision of the Supreme Court and is calculated to promote the ends of justice. Therefore, in the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case, and particularly when the High Court has itself sent back the case to the Special Judge, the Supreme Court would in exercise of its discretionary special level jurisdiction refrain from interfering with the order of the High Court. State of Rajasthan v. Gurcharandas Chadha, (1980) 1 SCC 250: 1980 SCC (Cri) 208: AIR 1979 SC 1895: 1979 Cri LJ 1416.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-4-1979]

[6040] — Ss. 401, 397, 235, 248 and 255 — Conviction of government employee — Direction by High Court that conviction will not affect the service career of that employee — Validity of — Held, was without jurisdiction and, therefore, must be treated as invalid and non est — High Court in exercising its criminal jurisdiction has no authority to prevent the legal consequences which follow the conviction of a government servant — Those are matters governed by the Service Rules — The Service Rules must be allowed to operate in such cases (Para 4). Union of India v. State of Bihar, (2006) 10 SCC 509: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 122.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-2005]

[6041] — S. 401 — Revision — Maintainability — Conviction recorded by Special Tribunal and appeal heard by Special Court — In such a case revision under S. 401 CrPC, held, would lie to High Court — Electricity Act, 1910, Ss. 49-C(2), (1) and 49-F (as ins. by A.P. Act 35 of 2000)

In a case where conviction has been recorded by the Special Tribunal and the appeal has been heard by the Special Court under Section 49-C(2), a revision would lie to the High Court under Section 401 CrPC. (Para 16). Transmission Corpn. of A.P. v. Ch. Prabhakar, (2004) 5 SCC 551: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1681.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 26-5-2004]

[6042] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Order passed by Sessions Judge in appeal under S. 59(2), Forest Act, 1927 — Revision against, before High Court under Ss. 401 and 397 CrPC — Maintainability — High Court's view that revision not maintainable, held, correct — Forest Act, 1927, Ss. 59(2) & (3) and 59-B [inserted by H.P. Act 15 of 1991] (Para 3). State of H.P. v. Dhanwant Singh, (2004) 13 SCC 331: 2005 SCC (Cri) 248: AIR 2004 SC 1636: 2004 Cri LJ 1431.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-2004]

[6043] — Ss. 401, 397 and 398 — Revision — Disposal of by High Court on the basis of observations made earlier by a coordinate bench — Held, not proper — High Court in revision must go into the merits of the case — When the trial court, having regard to the High Court's order, took the cognizance of the offence under Ss. 420/120-B IPC against the accused-appellant, dismissal of revision petition, which was filed against the trial court's aforesaid action, by another Single Judge merely on the basis of the observations made earlier by the High Court, held, was not proper — Impugned order resulted in avoidance of the function of judicial determination of the question of acceptability or otherwise of the plea raised by the accused persons for setting aside the cognizance order and for quashing the criminal proceedings — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138/141 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420/120-B

On a perusal of the order under challenge it is clear that the learned Single Judge disposed of the revision petition filed by the appellant Company for setting aside the cognizance order and for quashing the criminal proceedings without entering into the merits of the case. The learned Single Judge did not consider the nature of the contract between the parties and the arrangement for payment of dues by the accused persons to the complainant. Further, there is no finding to the effect that the ingredients of the offence of cheating defined under Section 415 IPC were prima facie made out from the averments in the complaint petition and the statement on oath by the complainant before the learned Magistrate. The learned Single Judge felt bound by the observations made in the order passed on 21-3-1997 in which another Single Judge while accepting the position that the Magistrate rightly did not take cognizance of the offence under Sections 138/141 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, had observed that the learned Magistrate should have taken cognizance of the offence punishable under Section 420 IPC. From the order under challenge it is manifest that the learned Single Judge did not pay due attention to the part of the order in which the learned Magistrate was directed to hold further enquiry into the complaint. While judging the question whether the cognizance order passed by the learned Magistrate was sustainable in law it was incumbent for the learned Single Judge to go into the question whether the complainant has been able to make out a prima facie case for the offence of cheating on the averments in the complaint petition and his statement on oath. The matter should have been examined in the light of the contentions raised by the accused applicant in the revision petition and finding recorded. The learned Single Judge also did not try to find out if the learned Magistrate held any further enquiry before passing the cognizance order and whether the dispute raised in the case is of a civil nature and continuing the criminal proceedings will give rise to abuse of process of court. (Para 8)

Thus, the impugned order reveals that there has been an avoidance of the function of judicial determination of the question of acceptability or otherwise of the plea raised by the accused persons for setting aside the cognizance order and for quashing the criminal proceedings. Hence, the order under challenge being unsustainable in law is set aside and the matter is remitted to the High Court for disposal afresh in accordance with law. (Paras 9 and 10). Indseam Services Ltd. v. Bimal Kumar Kejriwal (HUF), (2001) 8 SCC 15: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1402: AIR 2001 SC 3512.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-2001]

[6044] — Ss. 401 and 125 — Magistrate's findings of fact under S. 125 based on evidence not open to interference by High Court in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 401

Appellant 1 filed an application under S. 125 for maintenance of her own and her minor daughter. The Magistrate after considering evidence adduced by the parties held that appellant 1 was not the wife of the respondent but appellant 2 was the illegitimate daughter of the respondent and was therefore, entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs 25 per month. The appellants preferred revision petitions before the High Court against Magistrate's orders. The High Court upheld the Magistrate's findings against appellant 1 but as regards those against appellant 2, the Court on a re-assessment of the evidence held that she was not even the illegitimate child of the respondent. Accordingly, the Magistrate's order allowing maintenance to appellant 2 was set aside and the entire application under S. 125 stood dismissed.

Held:

The questions whether appellant 1 was the married wife of the respondent and whether appellant 2 was the legitimate or illegitimate child of the respondent, are pre-eminently questions of fact. Therefore, the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction was not justified in making a re-assessment of the evidence and substituting its own views for those of the Magistrate on the question of fact. Pathumma v. Muhammad, (1986) 2 SCC 585: 1986 SCC (Cri) 212: AIR 1986 SC 1436: 1986 Cri LJ 1070.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V. Khalid and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-4-1986]

[6045] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Exercise of revisional jurisdiction at the instance of third party and not the State — Propriety — Question not gone into. T.N. Dhakkal v. James Basnett, (2001) 10 SCC 419.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and N. Santosh Hegde and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-2000]

Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305: 1993 SCC (Cri) 36, relied on [6046] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Revision — Maintainability — Revision petition filed by a third party (complainant in this case) — Held, nonetheless maintainable (Para 6). K. Pandurangan v. S.S.R. Velusamy, (2003) 8 SCC 625: AIR 2003 SC 3318.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2003]

Nadir Khan v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1975) 2 SCC 406: 1975 SCC (Cri) 622, followed

[6047] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Revisional powers of High Court — Abdication of — High Court setting aside the order of conviction on the ground of contradictions and discrepancies in evidence without pointing to a single discrepancy or contradiction therein — Conclusion arrived at by High Court in such a manner without stating any reasons therefor, held, resulted in improper exercise of revisional jurisdiction — Constitution of India — Art. 136

Apart from indicating in an omnibus narrative that the evidence is full of contradictions and material discrepancies, learned Judge did not even point to a single discrepancy or contradiction worth the name in the impugned order. It is the nature and dimension of such contradiction which can have any bearing on the conclusions. But the High Court had said that there were discrepancies and contradictions in the evidence. After mentioning so, learned Single Judge jumped to the conclusion that in view of the contradictions the revision is allowed and the conviction and sentence are set aside. There was abdication of judicial function in exercising revisional jurisdiction of the High Court which is reflected in the impugned order. It is virtually an unreasoned order which is antithesis to judicial function. (Paras 4 and 5). State of A.P. v. Yelamati Venkaataraju, (2001) 10 SCC 728.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-1999]

[6048] — Ss. 401 and 354 — Revisional jurisdiction of High Court — Scope — Direction to trial court to rewrite the judgment not in accordance with the normal norm — Propriety — Revision application filed by a private complainant against judgment and order of acquittal of accused passed by trial court — Interference by High Court with the judgment and order called for only in exceptional cases of gross miscarriage of justice, manifest illegality or perversity and not merely because another view was possible — High Court on perusal of trial court's judgment finding the reasons given therein for recording acquittal to be not proper and justifiable and hence setting aside that judgment and sending the matter back to the trial court for "writing a fresh judgment by giving proper judicial mind to the evidence on record" — Going through the judgment of the trial court, held, High Court exceeded its revisional jurisdiction in setting aside that judgment — Further the direction to re-write the judgment is a significant departure from the normal form of court order and was not justified

The object of the revisional jurisdiction as envisaged under Section 401 is to confer upon superior criminal courts a kind of paternal or supervisory jurisdiction, in order to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law, irregularity of procedure, neglect of proper precautions or apparent harshness of treatment which has resulted on the one hand in some injury to the due maintenance of law and order, or on the other hand in some undeserved hardship to individuals. The main question which the High Court has to consider in an application in revision is whether substantial justice has been done. If however, the same has been an appeal, the applicant would be entitled to demand an adjudication upon all questions of fact or law which he wishes to raise, but in revision the only question is whether the court should interfere in the interests of justice. Where the court concerned does not appear to have committed any illegality or material irregularity or impropriety in passing the impugned judgment and order, the revision cannot succeed. If the impugned order apparently is presentable, without any such infirmity which may render it completely perverse or unacceptable and when there is no failure of justice, interference cannot be had in exercise of revisional jurisdiction. While it is true and now well settled that exercise of power under Section 401 cannot but be ascribed to be discretionary — this discretion, however, as is popularly informed has to be a judicious exercise of discretion and not an arbitrary one. Judicial discretion cannot but be a discretion which stands "informed by tradition, methodised by analogy and disciplined by system" — resultantly only in the event of a glaring defect in the procedural aspect or there being a manifest error on a point of law and thus a flagrant miscarriage of justice, exercise of revisional jurisdiction under this statute ought not to be called for. It is not to be lightly exercised but only in exceptional situations where the justice delivery system requires interference for correction of a manifest illegality or prevention of a gross miscarriage of justice. It is not an appellate forum wherein scrutiny of evidence is possible; neither is the revisional jurisdiction open for being exercised simply by reason of the factum of another view being otherwise possible. It is restrictive in its application though in the event of there being a failure of justice there can be said to be no limitation as regards the applicability of the revisional power. (Paras 9 and 10)

The High Court possesses a general power of superintendence over the actions of courts subordinate to it. On its administrative side, the power is known as the power of superintendence. On the judicial side, it is known as the duty of revision. The High Court can at any stage even on its own motion, if it so desires, and certainly when illegalities or irregularities resulting in injustice are brought to its notice, call for the records and examine them. This right of the High Court is as much a part of the administration of justice as its duty to hear appeals and revisions and interlocutory applications — so also its right to exercise its powers of administrative superintendence. However, the jurisdictional sweep of the process of the High Court under the provisions of Section 401 is very much circumscribed, as noticed above. (Para 11)

In the contextual facts presently under consideration, the High Court cannot but be said to have exceeded its revisional jurisdiction in setting aside the order of acquittal. (Para 12)

In any event, writing of a fresh judgment as directed by the Court is rather a significant departure in the normal disposal of revisional applications or normal form of court orders. Neither the judgment of the trial court would justify the comments of the High Court, nor can it be said to be within the jurisdiction of the High Court to pass the impugned order in exercise of revisional jurisdiction under Section 401 CrPC. (Paras 13 and 14)

Therefore, the High Court's order impugned cannot be sustained and is set aside and the order of the learned Sessions Judge stands restored. The bail bonds, if any, stand discharged. (Para 15). Jagannath Choudhary v. Ramayan Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 659: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1181: AIR 2002 SC 2229: 2002 Cri LJ 2945.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-2002]

K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1962 SC 1788: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 8; D. Stephens v. Nosibolla, AIR 1951 SC 196: 1951 SCR 284: 52 Cri LJ 510; Logendranath Jha v. Polai Lal Biswas, AIR 1951 SC 316: 1951 SCR 676: 52 Cri LJ 1248; Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305: 1993 SCC (Cri) 36; Thakur Das v. State of M.P., (1978) 1 SCC 27: 1978 SCC (Cri) 21, relied on [6049] — S. 401 — Revision — Duty of High Court to examine infirmities in prosecution case while upholding conviction by courts below — Remand — Important witnesses like IO, doctor and informant not examined, three out of five eyewitnesses did not support the prosecution story and post-mortem report not exhibited — PW 3 whose evidence was relied on and who claimed to be the son of the deceased was neither the informant nor was named in the FIR as an eyewitness — Sessions Court affirmed the conviction under Ss. 279 and 304-A IPC and revision filed thereagainst dismissed by High Court — Infirmities of prosecution not considered by High Court — Matter remanded for fresh consideration — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 279 and 304-A (Paras 3 to 5). Shivnath Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2008) 15 SCC 735: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1184: (2008) 72 AIC 112 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-2008]

[6050] — Ss. 401, 397, 404, 378 and 386 — Effect of dismissal of statutory appeal against acquittal on pending revision — Single Judge of High Court by impugned judgment allowing the revision and directing reconsideration of matter on basis of evidence already recorded — However, fact that appeal against acquittal had been dismissed by Division Bench of High Court on grounds of delay not brought to its notice — Similarly, fact that revision was pending at the instance of the father of the deceased was not brought to the notice of the Division Bench then considering application for condonation of delay in filing statutory appeal against acquittal — Strongly deprecating callous casualness on the part of the State counsel, appellant-accused as well as the Registry of the High Court in not pointing out proper facts to both, the Division Bench as well as the Revisional Court, held, awkward situation has arisen wherein appeal had failed, though only on question of limitation, yet, revision against the same judgment continued and was allowed — Division Bench in not allowing the condonation had effectively dismissed the appeal — Thus, there could be no subsequent order to the contrary by the Single Judge even if the pendency of appeal was not brought to its notice — Revision against the same order could not be entertained, much less allowed, upsetting the finality of trial court's judgment (Paras 15 to 20). K. Ramachandran v. V.N. Rajan, (2009) 14 SCC 569: (2009) 82 AIC 119 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 4413.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-7-2009]

Akalu Ahir v. Ramdeo Ram, (1973) 2 SCC 583: 1973 SCC (Cri) 903, considered and relied on [6051] — Ss. 401 and 399 — Revision — Scope — Directions that may be passed at interlocutory stage — Pending investigation in a case under S. 468 r/w 34 IPC, Magistrate handing over custody of certain cars, for purposes of investigation relating to theft of said cars, to police station conducting investigation — High Court, in revision directing that custody of said car(s) be handed over to R-1 at interlocutory stage, also without deciding on maintainability of revision, which was in question — If proper — Held, High Court ought not to have further handed over possession of vehicle(s) in question to R-1 until ownership of said vehicles was duly established in a proper manner, and that too at the interlocutory stage — Appeal allowed, order of Magistrate restored, and High Court directed to consider question of maintainability of revision, and decide it in accordance with law (Para 3). United India Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Arwish C. Marak, (2005) 10 SCC 458: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1584.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, B.P. Singh and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-2004]

[6052] — Ss. 401 & 399 and 354 & 235 — Criminal Revision — Disposal of by non-speaking and non-reasoned order — Impermissibility — Matter remanded for rehearing — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 2). State of A.P. v. B. Satya Rao, (2004) 11 SCC 332.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-10-2004]

[6053] — S. 401 — Dismissal by ex parte order of revision petition by High Court — Application for recall dismissed on ground that impugned order was passed on merits — Reasons for appellant's non-appearance on the day when revision petition was taken up by High Court, explained — Matter remitted to High Court for fresh consideration on merits. Santosh v. State of U.P., (2009) 16 SCC 400.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-3-2009]

[6054] — Ss. 401 and 227 — Revision by High Court — Reasoned order/Speaking order — Necessity — High Court allowing revision petition and discharging accused of alleged commission of offences under Ss. 493 and 376 IPC, by a practically unreasoned order — Order merely stating that FIR did not disclose commission of offence — No basis for the decision or discussion found — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 493 and 376 (Paras 6 to 8)

Accused alleged to have entered the house of informant and raped her, consequent to which she became pregnant. She pressurised the accused for marriage, but when he and his family members refused, FIR was lodged and charge-sheet submitted under Ss. 493 and 376 IPC. Accused filed an application for discharge under S. 227 CrPC primarily on ground that age of informant was not as shown, and therefore no offence under either S. 376 or S. 493 IPC was made out. Trial court declined the prayer for discharge. The High Court by impugned judgment allowed revision petition filed thereagainst by a practically unreasoned order. Hence, the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal, the Supreme Court held as above. Tutul Kumari Sen v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 13 SCC 495: AIR 2009 SC 2547: (2009) 3 CTC 408 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2009]

Cyril Lasrado v. Juliana Maria Lasrado, (2004) 7 SCC 431; State of Rajasthan v. Sohan Lal, (2004) 5 SCC 573: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 53, applied

[6055] — Ss. 401 and 403 — Non-appearance of revision petitioner — Effect — Revision petition filed before High Court by appellant (deceased's brother) against acquittal of accused by trial court on charges under Ss. 498-A/302 r/w S. 34 IPC — On the day the matter was fixed before High Court, counsel for appellant failed to appear and only State's counsel appeared and therefore High Court appointed a counsel as amicus curiae and the State's counsel perused the records and held that there was no case for interference — Appellant submitted that his counsel could not appear because of an accident that took place on the date fixed, and since the amicus curiae had no records with him he could not have rendered any assistance to High Court — Held, since appellant had indicated reason for non-appearance of his counsel, impugned order of High Court is set aside and matter remitted to High Court for fresh disposal in accordance with law. Naresh Kumar v. Kala Wati, (2009) 11 SCC 511: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1470: (2009) 76 AIC 73 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, V.S. Sirpurkar and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-2-2009]

[6056] — S. 401 — Revisional powers of High Court — Scope — High Court quashing charges framed against the accused — Held, revisional powers cannot be exercised in a routine and casual manner — Recourse to such powers for quashing the charges can be taken only if there is a legal bar against the continuance of the criminal proceedings or the framing of charge or where no offence is being made out against the accused considering the entire facts stated in the FIR — In revision, the High Court cannot appreciate the evidence in the manner the trial court and the appellate court are required to do — On facts, it was premature for the High Court to have exercised its revisional powers — Trial court to conduct trial and dispose of the matter on merits — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376, 511, 451 and 354. Munna Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 9 SCC 631: AIR 2002 SC 107.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-11-2001]

[6057] — Ss. 401 & 397 and 228 — Exercise of revisional powers by High Court for quashing charges — Maintainability — Charges of corruption against cooperative bank officials — Charge-sheet under Ss. 409, 420 and 120-B IPC together with S. 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2), PC Act, 1988, filed against respondent-accused, Chairman and Directors of Cooperative Bank, who were also members of the Loan Committee, for sanctioning loans without verifying eligibility of borrowers to receive such loans or the end-use of such loans and intentionally acting in an illegal manner to enable borrowers to avail of the loans — Trial court directing framing of charges — In revision thereagainst, High Court quashing the charges framed on the ground that respondents were members of the Loan Committee and as such members they were only required to consider loan cases which were put up to them by Bank Manager concerned for the grant of loan and it was for the Branch Managers of various branches to verify the facts regarding entitlement for grant of loan before submitting the same to the Loan Committee and hence, it could not be said that respondents had acted illegally and had wrongly sanctioned loans to the borrowers concerned — Sustainability — Appellant, inter alia, contending that in going into factual aspects of the matter, High Court travelled beyond its revisional powers in coming to findings of fact, which were yet to be established on evidence — Tenability — Held, undoubtedly, in the inquiry report of District Vigilance Committee, role attributed to respondents in sanctioning loans was shown to be purely managerial where the groundwork had been completed by Branch Managers, but as members of Loan Sanctioning Committee, they had acted inefficiently — It was also suggested that Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Bank had connived with other accused in defrauding the Bank — Hence, held, High Court erroneously quashed charges framed against respondents — Consequently, orders impugned set aside and charges framed by trial court restored — Trial court directed to proceed with trial — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 409, 420 and 120-B — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) (Paras 5, 10, 43, 44 and 50 to 52). State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1421: (2009) 77 AIC 102 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 2415.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-4-2009]

Indian Oil Corpn. v. NEPC India Ltd., (2006) 6 SCC 736: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 188; Nikhil Merchant v. CBI, (2008) 9 SCC 677: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 859, distinguished [6058] — Ss. 401 & 397 and 227 & 228 — Quashing the charge — Would be justified if even on accepting the entire prosecution case the charged offence would not be made out. State of M.P. v. S.B. Johari, (2000) 2 SCC 57: 2000 SCC (Cri) 311: AIR 2000 SC 665: 2000 Cri LJ 944.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-1-2000]

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjayya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47, relied on

[6059] — Ss. 401 and 397 — Revision filed by State against discharge of accused — Application made by accused for declaring charges framed by Sessions Court to be null and void being vitiated by fraud practised by State — Fraud — Proof of — Charges framed under Official Secrets Act on the basis of documents seized from the possession of accused and interrogation of accused and examination of prosecution witnesses — Allegations made in the application relating to merits of the case — Held on facts, fraud not proved — High Court erred in entertaining and allowing the application thereby ignoring the earlier judgments — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 44 — Official Secrets Act, 1923, Ss. 3 and 5

In the application for declaration of the charge-sheet as null and void the accused stated that the charges were vitiated by fraud as the Panchnama was fabricated as it did not contain his signature and it was ante-dated. It was further averred that for three months even the copies of the remand application filed by the police were denied to the applicant and the orders thereon were not supplied to him. It was also claimed that the complaint was in contradiction with the statement of witnesses. It was stated in the application that if honest and fair answer to the question, if any charge was made out, was given by the State it would have exonerated the applicant but the State committed fraud by keeping the trial Judge in the dark of real facts and induced him to entertain erroneous opinion and pass order framing charges against him. Various sentences from one or the other judgment rendered for or against the accused by different courts at one or the other stage were extracted and it was claimed that the State either knowingly did not place correct facts to substantiate those observations or deliberately concealed the truth and made fraudulent submissions inducing the trial Judge thereby to frame the charges. Emphasis was laid on the submissions advanced by the State and it was stated that it was result of fraudulent submissions that the trial court was induced to frame charges against the accused. Question was did the averments in the application make out a case of fraud and were the statements of fact capable of giving rise to an inference in law that the State was guilty of misleading the court? Answering in the negative and allowing the State's appeal

Held :

From the charge-sheet it is clear that it complied with the requirements of law and mentions not only the offence and the section but the particulars as to time, place and person. Whether prosecution was possessed of sufficient evidence to prove each of the charges is a different matter, but they were framed on basis of documents seized from possession of the accused at the airport, search of his residence, on the next day, interrogations of the accused and examination of prosecution witnesses. The allegations made in the application may or may not be so but that could be relevant when the merits were gone into. It certainly, could not be taken as a ground for claiming that the framing of charge was fraudulent, especially, when these aspects had been thrashed out once before the Single Judge of the High Court who by his order had held that the charges against the accused were made out not only under S. 3 but under S. 5 of the Official Secrets Act. Various sentences extracted from different judgments between the accused and State in various proceedings could not give rise to an inference either in law or fact that the State was guilty of fraud. It is thus not possible to appreciate the worth of such averments to establish fraud. Legal submissions cannot be equated to misrepresentation. The pleadings fell short of legal requirements to establish fraud in this case.

It was complete misapprehension under which the accused was labouring and the High Court not only entertained such application but adopted a course which amounted to reviewing and setting aside orders of his predecessor without sufficient material and accepted the claim that all earlier judgments were liable to be ignored under S. 44 of the Evidence Act as the proceedings were vitiated by fraud. The Judge not only committed an error of procedure but misapplied the law.

'Fraud' is false representation by one who is aware that it was untrue with an intention to mislead the other who may act upon it to his prejudice and to the advantage of the representer. Effect of fraud on any proceeding, or transaction is that it becomes a nullity. Even the most solemn proceedings stand vitiated if they are actuated by fraud. Such being the nature and consequence of it the law requires not only strict pleading of it but strict proof as well. State of Maharashtra v. Dr. Budhikota Subbarao, (1993) 2 SCC 567: 1993 SCC (Cri) 650.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and R.M. Sahai, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-3-1993]

[6060] — Ss. 401 and 237 — Revision — Petitions for discharge of accused-respondent — High Court should not have expressed final opinion on merits of legal interpretation regarding points raised, when trial court had reached almost the final stage of prosecution evidence — Criminal revision petitions, on facts, permitted to be withdrawn — Respondent permitted to raise all contentions which she thinks necessary before trial court at the final stage. State of T.N. v. Selvi J. Jayalalitha, (2000) 9 SCC 444: 2001 SCC (Cri) 415.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2000]

[6061] — Ss. 401, 397 & 482 and 197 — High Court in revision finding that Sessions Court (at Jabalpur) lacked territorial jurisdiction to try the case, held, erred in quashing the entire criminal proceedings — High Court should have transferred the case to the court which it considered to have jurisdiction

When the High Court found that the courts at Jabalpur had no jurisdiction the course adopted by the High Court by quashing the entire criminal proceedings is not permissible in law. The High Court should have transferred the case to the court which the High Court found to be vested with jurisdiction. (Para 7). State of M.P. v. Suresh Kaushal, (2003) 11 SCC 126.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-2001]

[6062] — Ss. 401, 397 and 204 — Revision against order summoning accused — Dropping of proceedings after examining defence on merits — Propriety — Held, was clearly erroneous — It was no stage to examine defence of the respondents — Whether respondents paid certain amount by way of bank drafts after the issue of some of the cheques or that payment was towards some of the amounts covered by the cheques, were all questions which could be decided only at the trial — High Court erred in holding that by making the said payment the respondents had discharged their liability — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Para 3). State Farm Corpn. of India Ltd. v. Nijjer Agro Foods Ltd., (2005) 12 SCC 502.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, B.N. Srikrishna and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-7-2005]

[6063] — Ss. 401, 397 and 228 — Revision — Power to quash charges and substitute new charge — Charges framed by trial court in relation to offences under Ss. 304-B and 498-A IPC — High Court in revision quashing the said charges and directing framing of charge under S. 306 IPC —

Held, High Court was not justified in doing so — Crucial question was whether suicide of deceased was in any way connected with the demand for dowry — That matter required consideration by the Court by proper appreciation of evidence — At the stage of framing charges, the High Court should not have considered the whole evidence and then concluded that there were no materials to frame charges under Ss. 304-B and 498-A IPC — High Court's order set aside — Trial court directed to proceed on the basis of the charges framed under Ss. 304-B and 498-A IPC — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B, 498-A and 306 (Paras 3 and 4). Nemichand Jain v. Roshanlal, (2004) 13 SCC 461.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-2004]

[6064] — Ss. 401, 397 and 239 — Discharge of accused by High Court in exercise of its revisionary power — Discharge based on scrutiny and scanning of evidence and materials produced by prosecution — Propriety of — Respondent, a public servant and another person being tried in a corruption case — Charge-sheet filed against them under Ss. 8, 10, 13(2) and 13(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 read with S. 120-B IPC — Their application for discharge under S. 239 rejected by trial court but High Court in exercise of its revisionary power discharging them — While doing so, the High Court scrutinising the evidence and advancing elaborate arguments — Held, the High Court exceeded its jurisdiction — It acted as if it were considering an appeal against conviction — Discharge therefore set aside — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 22 (Para 6). State of U.P. v. Udai Narayan, (1999) 8 SCC 741: AIR 1999 SC 3845: (1999) 114 ELT 374.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-11-1999]

[6065] — S. 401 — Charges were framed under S. 302 and alternatively under Ss. 304, 325 and 323 IPC — Criminal revision filed by appellant questioning correctness of charges framed, dismissed — Appellant contending that S. 302 IPC had no application herein as he had no intention to kill passengers and at the most it may be S. 304-A — Held, in the instant case, S. 302 IPC prima facie has no application — Accordingly, charges stand altered to S. 304-A along with Ss. 279 and 337 IPC. Naresh Giri v. State of M.P., (2008) 1 SCC 791: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 324: (2007) 60 AIC 15 (SC): (2007) 4 KLT 1115.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-11-2007]

Director of Public Prosecutions v. Camplin, 1978 AC 705: (1978) 2 WLR 679: (1978) 2 All ER 168 (HL); Syad Akbar v. State of Karnataka, (1980) 1 SCC 30: 1980 SCC (Cri) 59; R. v. Briggs, (1977) 1 WLR 605: (1977) 1 All ER 475 (CA); R. v. Caldwell, 1982 AC 341: (1981) 2 WLR 509: (1981) 1 All ER 961 (HL); R. v. Lawrence, 1982 AC 510: (1981) 2 WLR 524: (1981) 1 All ER 974 (HL), relied on

[6066] — Ss. 401 and 482 — Quashing of criminal proceedings — Considerations in — Normal rule is not to interfere with the investigations and criminal proceedings, except when the complaint or FIR broadly read does not disclose any offence and can be termed as abuse of process of law — Complaint filed by Factories Inspector, alleging non-compliance with S. 63 of Factories Act by a company, sought to be quashed by High Court in exercise of its criminal revisional jurisdiction — Having regard to the complaint and relevant provisions and legislative intent of the Factories Act, which is a beneficial piece of legislation, held, High Court was justified in refusing to quash the complaint at the initial stage — Gujarat Factories Rules, 1963, Rr. 87 and 110

The Factories Inspector, on the basis of his visit and inspection of the factory of a company, filed a complaint before the Magistrate alleging therein that on the date and at the time he visited the factory it was running and he found among the adult workers one named worker in Group C working after the prescribed working hours and that the factory had thus violated Section 63 of the Factories Act by allowing the said worker/ordering him to work without putting a note against his name in the attendance register of the adult workers and against the working hours shown in Notice Form 14 displayed in the factory which constituted an offence under Section 92 of the Factories Act. The Vice-President of the Company, who at the material time was the "occupier" under the Factories Act invoked criminal revisional jurisdiction of the High Court for quashing the complaint and process issued in the criminal case pending before the Magistrate. The High Court dismissed the revision.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The Factories Act is a welfare legislation and a complete code in itself. The Act also provides for punishment for violation of any of the provisions. Appointment of Inspectors by the State Government in terms of the provisions of State Rules (in the instant case the Gujarat Factories Rules, 1963) has been effected only for the purposes of giving effect to the beneficial piece of legislation and as such both the Rules and forms introduced thereunder by the State Government and the provisions of the statute shall have to be read in consonance with the intent of the legislature and not dehors the same. The mandate of the Act ought to be interpreted in a manner as to give efficacy to the legislative intent. The requirement of Section 61, in particular, sub-sections (1) and (2) thereof can be easily deciphered since the intent stands clear enough to indicate that an adult worker must know his daily placement and daily workings beforehand — this placement beforehand is the requirement of the statute in Section 63 and in the event of non-compliance, there is a liability for being prosecuted. In the complaint it was alleged that the requirements of Form 14 had not been fulfilled. Compliance with Form 14 and entries to be made therein "beforehand" needs a further scrutiny of facts which at this stage of the proceeding cannot be gone into. User of the expression "beforehand" appears in Section 61 which envisages a specific state of facts, which the complainant alleges as not being complied with — criminal complaints ought not to be scuttled at the initial stages and quashing of complaint at the initial stages is rather an exception than a rule. Beneficial legislations have been engrafted in the statute-book for the benefit of the socially downtrodden and in the wake of such a situation, it would neither be fair nor be reasonable at this stage to nullify the efforts of an Inspector under the Rules. The matter needs further enquiry and investigation as to the factum of entry being made beforehand in the register maintained in terms of Section 61 of the Factories Act. It is too early in the day to say that there would not be even a possibility of non-compliance with Section 63 which in turn envisages non-compliance with Section 61 and Section 62 of the Factories Act. (Paras 14, 16, 19 and 20)

Now, criminal proceedings, in the normal course of events ought not to be scuttled at the initial stage, unless the same amount to an abuse of the process of law. In the normal course of events thus, quashing of a complaint should rather be an exception and a rarity than an ordinary rule. The genuineness of the averments in the FIR cannot possibly be gone into and the document shall have to be read as a whole so as to decipher the intent of the maker thereof. It is not a document which requires decision with exactitude, neither is it a document which requires mathematical accuracy and nicety, but the same should be able to communicate or be indicative of disclosure of an offence broadly and in the event the said test stands satisfied, the question relating to the quashing of a complaint would not arise. However, there cannot possibly be any guiding factor as to which investigation ought to be scuttled at the initial stages and investigations which ought not to be so scuttled. The first information report needs to be considered and if the answer is found on a perusal thereof which leads to disclosure of an offence even broadly, law courts are barred from usurping the jurisdiction of the police since the two organs of the State operate in two specific spheres of activities and one ought not to tread over the other sphere. (Paras 9 and 21)

In the event of commission of a cognizable offence and an offence standing disclosed in the first information report, interest of justice requires further investigation by the investigating agency. Investigation of an offence is within the exclusive domain of the police department and not the law courts. In the event of disclosure of an offence, it is a duty incumbent to investigate into the offence and bring the offender to book in order to serve the cause of justice and it is only thereafter the investigating officer submits the report to the court with a prayer to take cognizance of the offence under Section 190 CrPC and it is on submission of the report that the duty of the police ends, subject however to the provisions as contained in Section 173(8) of the Code. There is thus a clear and well-defined area of operation and demarcated function in the field of investigation of crimes and its subsequent adjudication. (Para 5). S.M. Datta v. State of Gujarat, (2001) 7 SCC 659: 2001 SCC (L&S) 1201: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1361: AIR 2001 SC 3253.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Misra and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-8-2001]

Bhikusa Yamasa Kshatriya (P) Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1963 SC 1591; King Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmad, (1944) 71 IA 203: AIR 1945 PC 18; State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha, (1982) 1 SCC 561: 1982 SCC (Cri) 283; State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426; State of Bihar v. J.A.C. Saldanha, (1980) 1 SCC 554: 1980 SCC (Cri) 272, relied on

Rajesh Bajaj v. State NCT of Delhi, (1999) 3 SCC 259: 1999 SCC (Cri) 401: 1999 Cri LJ 1833; S.M. Datta v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 2 Guj LH 735, affirmed

— S. 401(1) See Ss. 401(3) and (1)

[6067] — S. 401(2) — When applies

Apparently, sub-section (2) of S. 401 contemplates a situation where a person may not be an accused person before the court below but one who might have been discharged and therefore if the revisional court after exercising jurisdiction under S. 401 wants to pass an order to the prejudice of such a person, it is necessary that the person should be given an opportunity of hearing but it does not contemplate any contingency of hearing of any person who is neither party in the proceedings in the court below nor is expected at any stage even after the revision to be joined as party. A.K. Subbaiah v. State of Karnataka, (1987) 4 SCC 557: 1987 SCC (Cri) 768.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji and G.L. Oza, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-1987]

[6068] — S. 401(2) — Court adjourning cases of a particular advocate for a certain fixed period — Hearing ex parte of any matter posted by mistake during that period, held, not justified — Revision application to be restored and decided on merits. Chakreshwar Nath Jain v. State of U.P., 1981 Supp SCC 11: 1981 SCC (Cri) 609: AIR 1981 SC 2009(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-1-1981]

[6069] — S. 401(2) — Notice of enhancement of sentence — Trial Court awarding sentence of fine only — Sessions Court making reference to High Court for passing appropriate sentence — High Court issuing show-cause notice against enhancement of sentence and imposing sentence of imprisonment — Held, view that notice was only to show cause why the sentence should not be regularised by enhancement of fine and not to a term of imprisonment not borne out by the record — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 439(2) & 6. State of Orissa v. Ram Chander Agarwala, (1979) 2 SCC 305: 1979 SCC (Cri) 462: AIR 1979 SC 87: 1979 Cri LJ 33.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Jaswant Singh and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-10-1978]

[6070] — Ss. 401(2), 402, 204 and 482 — Revision petition — Opportunity of hearing to accused — Revision petition filed by complainant — Petition styled as a revision petition which was clear from its cause title and by impleadment of the appellants as parties — High Court however treating it as a petition under S. 482 and without hearing the accused/appellant proceeded to direct the issuance of process — Propriety of — Held, there can be no quarrel with the proposition that at the time of issuance of process and taking cognizance, the accused has no right to be heard — But in the facts of the instant case before the Revisional Court the appellants were heard — Further, their names were indicated in the cause-title, which at the request of Respondent 1 were deleted — Above being the position the High Court ought to have heard the appellants before deciding the matter (Paras 8 and 9). Subha Raj v. Sankar Sarkar, (2007) 11 SCC 85: 2007 Cri LJ 4293.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-7-2007]

[6071] — Ss. 401(2) and 357 — Revision filed by complainant claiming compensation under S. 357 — No notice issued to accused — High Court tagged the revision petition along with death sentence reference case as well as criminal appeal filed by accused against conviction and sentence — Parties were aware of this position as arguments were addressed on this question — Held, technical objection regarding non-issuance of notice cannot be entertained because no prejudice was caused to the accused on this count — Likewise contention of the complainant caveator that the accused having not preferred any separate appeal before Supreme Court against High Court's judgment in the revision petition, there was no challenge to that part of the judgment at all, was also too technical and as none of the parties were prejudiced thereby, held, the same cannot also be entertained — Hence accused's objection as regards grant of compensation has to be considered on merits (Para 11). Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 6 SCC 462: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362: AIR 2002 SC 2710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-2002]

[6072] — S. 401(2) r/w S. 482 — Criminal revision challenging confirmation of judgment of conviction and sentence dismissed ex parte by High Court — Sustainability — Appellant highlighting several difficulties which stood in the way of counsel for the appellant in appearing before High Court when matter was taken up — Held, it is true that lawyers are expected to be vigilant once they accept a brief — But taking into consideration peculiar circumstances of the case, matter remitted to the High Court for a fresh consideration on merits — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138. Jagdish Bagri v. Rajendra Kumar Luhariwala, (2009) 4 SCC 218.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-1-2009]

— S. 401(3) See also Ss. 154 & 173 and 401(3)

[6073] — S. 401(3) — Revision — Conversion of acquittal to conviction — Prohibition contained in S. 401(3) — Invocation of — Substance and effect of directions of High Court on finding of trial court — Relevance of — In present case, trial court acquitting the accused persons in respect of offence under S. 302 IPC, but convicting them for causing simple injuries to deceased — Trial court disbelieving eyewitnesses and arriving at the said conclusion having regard to evidence of autopsy surgeon and certain other factors — In revision filed by complainant, High Court criticising testimony of autopsy surgeon for deliberately suppressing injuries on deceased — Consequently, it remanding the matter to trial court for consideration afresh with direction that in the instant case the evidence of doctor would not prevail over the eyewitness account and that the present one was a case under S. 302 IPC — Held, the judgment of the High Court clearly demonstrated that in effect and substance the finding of the trial Judge had been reversed — Hence, contention of the State that Supreme Court should not interfere in present case as the same was not a case where the High Court converted a judgment of acquittal to a judgment of conviction but merely remitted the matter to the trial court for consideration afresh, not sustainable

The prohibition contained in Section 401(3) CrPC refers to a finding and not the conclusion. A bare perusal of the judgment of the High Court clearly demonstrates that in effect and substance the finding of the trial Judge (of acquittal) has been reversed. While hearing the matter afresh in terms of the direction of the High Court, the trial Judge would be bound by the observations made therein and thus, would have no option but to convict the appellants. (Paras 28, 29 and 8). Johar v. Mangal Prasad, (2008) 3 SCC 423: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 89: AIR 2008 SC 1165: 2008 Cri LJ 1627: (2008) 64 AIC 246 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-1-2008]

[6074] — S. 401(3) — Revision — Interference with acquittal — Power of revisional court — Held, it can set aside an order of acquittal and remit the case for retrial where material evidence is overlooked by the trial court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/34

The revisional court can set aside an order of acquittal and remit the case for retrial where the trial court overlooking material evidence has passed the order. In the instant murder case (based on circumstantial evidence), the material evidence seems to have been overlooked by the trial court in relation to four circumstances, namely: (1) the dragging of the deceased to the house of accused R which was joint house of the deceased; (2) the house having been found locked by the police on visit; (3) the breaking open of the door of the house; and (4) the recovery of the dead body in a mutilated condition in the courtyard of the house. The overlooking of evidence in relation to these circumstances warrants the remand of the case to the trial court for retrial which has been directed in terms of the impugned judgment. It cannot be said that the High Court has reappreciated the evidence. The High Court has only demonstrated as to how the material evidence has been overlooked leading to manifest illegality resulting in gross miscarriage of justice. The impugned judgment of the High Court does not call for any interference. (Paras 10 and 12). Ram Briksh Singh v. Ambika Yadav, (2004) 7 SCC 665: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2009.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-3-2004]

D. Stephens v. Nosibolla, AIR 1951 SC 196: 1951 SCR 284: 52 Cri LJ 510; K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1962 SC 1788: (1963) 3 SCR 412: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 8; Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar (now Jharkhand), (2002) 6 SCC 650: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1448, considered

Followed in Johar v. Mangal Prasad, (2008) 3 SCC 423*

[6075] — Ss. 401(3) and 374 — Revision against acquittal and appeal against acquittal — Comparative scope of High Court's jurisdiction — Dismissal of State's appeal against acquittal even on ground of limitation, gives finality to the judgment of trial court and in such a case exercise of revisional jurisdiction by High Court against the order of acquittal at the instance of a private party would not be proper

The High Court has noticed the fact that the State had preferred an appeal against the acquittal of the appellants. That appeal was dismissed by the High Court on the ground of limitation. In principle that makes no difference, because the dismissal of the appeal even on the ground of limitation is a dismissal for all purposes. The jurisdiction of the High Court in dealing with an appeal against acquittal preferred under Section 374 CrPC is much wider than the jurisdiction of the revisional court exercising jurisdiction under Section 401 CrPC against an order of acquittal at the instance of a private party. All grounds that may be urged in support of the revision petition may be urged in the appeal, but not vice versa. The dismissal of an appeal preferred by the State against the order of acquittal puts a seal of finality on the judgment of the trial court. In such a case it may not be a proper exercise of discretion to exercise revisional jurisdiction under Section 401 CrPC against the order of acquittal at the instance of a private party. Exercise of revisional jurisdiction in such a case may give rise to an incongruous situation where an accused tried and acquitted of an offence, and the order of acquittal upheld in appeal by its dismissal, may have to face a second trial for the same offence of which he was acquitted. (Para 15). Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 650: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1448: AIR 2002 SC 2907.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-2002]

[6076] — S. 401(3) — Revisional jurisdiction of the High Court invoked by a private complainant against an order of acquittal — Scope and extent of — High Court should not interfere with order of acquittal unless there is manifest illegality or grave miscarriage of justice — Trial Judge placing undue reliance on result of investigation to base his finding of acquittal — Held, the High Court was justified in setting aside the order of acquittal

The revisional power of the High Court while sitting in judgment over an order of acquittal should not be exercised unless there exists a manifest illegality in the judgment or order of acquittal or there is grave miscarriage of justice. In the instant case one of the grounds that largely weighed with the trial court for acquitting the appellants was that an Inspector of CID who had taken up the investigation of the case and was examined by the defence testified that during his investigation he found that the story as made out by the prosecution was not true and on the contrary the plea of the appellants that the dacoity with murder was committed by some unknown criminals and they were falsely implicated was true. The High Court was, therefore, fully justified in commenting upon the trial court's impermissible and undue reliance on the evidence of the defence witness i.e. the I.O. and, for that matter, the result of his investigation. Kaptan Singh v. State of M.P., (1997) 6 SCC 185: 1997 SCC (Cri) 870: AIR 1997 SC 2485: 1997 Cri LJ 2987.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-1997]

[Ed.: In this case ignoring the report of investigation submitted by the Inspector of CID (the I.O.) the Magistrate took cognizance of the offences against the appellants and committed the case to the Court of Session. Therefore, the appellant produced the Inspector in his defence.]

[6077] — S. 401(3) — Scope of High Court's revisional jurisdiction — Concurrent finding of acquittal — Reappreciation of evidence — In absence of any manifest illegality, perversity and miscarriage of justice, High Court would not be justified in interfering with the concurrent finding of acquittal of the accused merely because on reappreciation of evidence it found the testimony of the PWs to be reliable whereas trial court had taken an opposite view — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 302/114

According to the prosecution, there was an altercation between the informant and the appellants who were residing in the same building. When the altercation took an ugly turn and abuses were being exchanged the informant's son K came down and questioned the appellants, whereupon K was hit on the head with an iron rod as a result of which he died. The prosecution relied upon the testimony of the eyewitnesses viz. PWs 1, 3 and 4, being the mother, sister and father respectively of the deceased as also the medical evidence and after consideration of the evidence on record, acquitted the appellants of charges of offence under Sections 302 and 302/114 IPC. The State's appeal having been dismissed, a revision under Section 401 CrPC was filed before the High Court. In the revision it was sought to be urged on behalf of the informant that there was no reason to discard the testimony of PWs 1, 3 and 4 which was corroborated by the medical evidence. On the other hand it was highlighted on behalf of the appellants that in the FIR a clear allegation was made against Appellant 1 of having assaulted K whereas the other witnesses in the course of their deposition attributed the assault on K to Appellant 2. However, the High Court found that the evidence of the eyewitnesses was consistent and that though in the FIR the informant had attributed the fatal injury to Appellant 1 and later changed his version attributing the injury to Appellant 2, the FIR not being a substantive piece of evidence, at best the evidence of the informant was not corroborated by the first information report and set aside the order of acquittal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

When in view of sub-section (3) of Section 401 CrPC the High Court could not convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction directly, it could not do so indirectly by the method of ordering a retrial. The High Court will ordinarily not interfere in revision with an order of acquittal except in exceptional cases where the interest of public justice requires interference for the correction of a manifest illegality or the prevention of gross miscarriage of justice. The High Court will not be justified in interfering with an order of acquittal merely because the trial court has taken a wrong view of the law or has erred in appreciation of evidence. It is neither possible nor advisable to make an exhaustive list of circumstances in which exercise of revisional jurisdiction may be justified, but decisions of the Supreme Court have laid down the parameters of exercise of revisional jurisdiction by the High Court under Section 401 CrPC in an appeal against acquittal by a private party. (Para 12). Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 650: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1448: AIR 2002 SC 2907.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-2002]

D. Stephens v. Nosibolla, AIR 1951 SC 196: 1951 Cri LJ 510; K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1962 SC 1788: (1963) 1 Cri LJ 8; Akalu Ahir v. Ramdeo Ram, (1973) 2 SCC 583: 1973 SCC (Cri) 903; Pakalapati Narayana Gajapathi Raju v. Bonapalli Peda Appadu, (1975) 4 SCC 477: 1975 SCC (Cri) 543; Mahendra Pratap Singh v. Sarju Singh, AIR 1968 SC 707: 1968 Cri LJ 665, followed [6078] — S. 401(3) — Revision against acquittal — High Court's jurisdiction to interfere with order of acquittal — Non-application of mind, non-consideration or improper consideration of material evidence, inconsistencies, faulty reasoning and lack of judicial approach etc. on the part of the lower court (Sessions Judge in this case) resulting in grave miscarriage of justice, held, constitute valid grounds for High Court's interference with order of acquittal and to order retrial — Instances mentioned in Chinnaswamy v. State of A.P. justifying interference are illustrative and not exhaustive. Ayodhya Dube v. Ram Sumer Singh, 1981 Supp SCC 83: 1982 SCC (Cri) 471: AIR 1981 SC 1415: 1981 Cri LJ 1016.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1981]

K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1962 SC 1788, explained.

[6079] — S. 401(3) — Scope of revisional jurisdiction under against acquittal — Unless view of the trial court is illegal or perverse, High Court cannot interfere with that view merely because it prefers a different view — On facts held, High Court exceeded its revisional jurisdiction in re-examining the evidence and reversing order of acquittal passed by trial court — CrPC, 1898, S. 439 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 34

The trial court, finding that there were serious discrepancies and glaring inconsistencies between the versions of the eyewitnesses and that the medical evidence also did not support their version of the incident, considered it unsafe to rely upon the testimony of those eyewitnesses and accordingly held that the prosecution had failed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. From the record of the case it appears that the view of the trial court was a possible view and it cannot be characterised as illegal or perverse. It may be that the High Court was not inclined to agree with the said view on the basis of his independent scrutiny and appreciation of the evidence adduced in the case but that would not furnish any justification for interference in revision with the order of acquittal passed by the trial court. Even in an appeal the appellate court would not have been justified in interfering with an acquittal merely because it was inclined to differ from the findings of fact reached by the trial court on the appreciation of the evidence. The revisional power of the High Court is much more restricted in its scope. Thus the High Court transgressed the limits of its revisional jurisdiction to setting aside the order of acquittal passed by the trial court. Bansi Lal v. Laxman Singh, (1986) 3 SCC 444: 1986 SCC (Cri) 342: AIR 1986 SC 1721: 1986 Cri LJ 1603.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V. Balakrishna Eradi and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-1986]

[6080] — Ss. 401(3), 378 and 210 — Locus standi — Private party — Revision against order of acquittal passed in a case instituted on a police report is entertainable even at the instance of a private party in exceptional cases — High Court erred in dismissing the revision petition filed by the appellant private party on the ground that no formal permission of Public Prosecutor was obtained for filing such a petition — Permission of Public Prosecutor could not have vested the appellant with a right if he did not have it under the Criminal Procedure Code. Kishan Swaroop v. Govt. (NCT of Delhi), (1998) 8 SCC 451: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1587: AIR 1998 SC 990.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1997]

[6081] — Ss. 401(3), 397, 399 and 386 — Revisional jurisdiction against acquittal invoked at instance of complainant — Scope of — Ordering of retrial — Directions that may not be given on remand for retrial — Held, said revisional jurisdiction is to be exercised in very exceptional cases, where there is a defect of procedure or manifest error of law resulting in flagrant miscarriage of justice — Further held, High Court ought not to have directed trial court to "take a fresh decision from stage one" and on the basis of the "suggested formula" — Accused justified in his apprehension that said observations would bias the trial court — Approach and observations of High Court disapproved

The appellants were accused of the commission of the offence of cruel treatment meted out to the deceased punishable under Section 498-A of the Penal Code and abetting her suicidal death, punishable under Section 306 IPC. On the evidence produced by the prosecution the trial court acquitted them. But in revision, preferred by the mother of the deceased, the High Court by the impugned order set aside the acquittal and directed a de novo trial. The High Court did take note of the various infirmities in the prosecution case but even then it observed that the "trial court ought to have been more, without meaning any disrespect, dynamic and to have taken active truth instead of resigning to the fate as ordained by the prosecution". The High Court then went on to observe that where the prosecution is remiss in bringing necessary evidence, the trial court ought to invoke its powers under Section 311 CrPC and summon additional witnesses whom it considered necessary. The High Court directed remand of the case "for fresh decision from stage one". In the concluding part of its judgment, the High Court made certain other observations [set out in para 13 herein].

Disposing of the appeal in the terms below, Held:

The High Court ought not to have directed the trial court to hold a de novo trial and take a decision on the basis of the so-called "suggested formula". The High Court in its concluding part of the judgment does state that any observation in its judgment should not influence the mind of the trial court but, at the same time, the High Court directs the trial court to take "a fresh decision from stage one" and on the basis of the "suggested formula". The accused is justified in his grievance and apprehension that the aforesaid observations and directions are likely to be mistaken by the trial court as if there is a mandate to it to record the verdict of conviction against the accused, regardless of the worth and weight of the evidence before it. (Para 24). Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115: 2005 SCC (Cri) 276: 2005 Cri LJ 648: (2004) 3 KLT 1098.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-2004]

Followed in Johar v. Mangal Prasad, (2008) 3 SCC 423

[6082] — Ss. 401(3) and 378 — Revision against acquittal — Filed by a private party — Held, could not result in conviction of accused (Para 2). Shingara Singh v. State of Haryana, (2003) 12 SCC 758: AIR 2004 SC 124: 2004 Cri LJ 828.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-11-2003]

[6083] — Ss. 401(3) and (1) — Whether on facts, the High Court acting in exercise of its revisional powers was justified in interfering with the order of acquittal and in ordering a retrial — Murder case — Case not instituted upon a complaint — Revision application by private party — High Court upsetting the acquittal on ground of wrongful appreciation of evidence — CrPC, 1898, S. 439

Revisional power under S. 439(1) has to be exercised subject to S. 439(4). It is settled law that the revisional jurisdiction, when invoked by a private complainant against an order of acquittal, ought not to be exercised lightly and that it can be exercised only in exceptional cases where the interests of public justice require interference for the correction of a manifest illegality or the prevention of a gross miscarriage of justice. Pakalapati Narayana Gajapathi Raju v. Bonapalli Peda Appadu, (1975) 4 SCC 477: 1975 SCC (Cri) 543: AIR 1975 SC 1854: 1975 Cri LJ 1646.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, P.N. Bhagwati and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-1975]

[6084] — S. 401(3) — Complainant's application under, against Sessions Court's order of acquittal — Sessions trial vitiated being unfair and heavily loaded in favour of accused-appellant — Held, High Court erred in rejecting the application — Trial being vitiated from serious infirmity, acquittal as a result of such trial must be set aside — Suitable directions given for retrial after transferring the case to another court

It is imperative that in order that people may not lose faith in the administration of criminal justice, no one should be allowed to subvert the legal process. No citizen should go away with the feeling that he could not get justice from the court because the other side was socially, economically or politically powerful and could manipulate the legal process. That would be subversive of the rule of law. In this view of the matter and in the facts and circumstances of the case the judgment and order of the Additional Sessions Judge acquitting the respondents as also the order passed by the High Court rejecting the application of the appellant under S. 401 must be set aside and a retrial must be done on the selfsame charges. Sunil Kumar Pal v. Phota Sk., (1984) 4 SCC 533: 1985 SCC (Cri) 18: AIR 1984 SC 1591.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-1984]

[6085] — Ss. 401(3) and 397 — Revision — Reversal of acquittal — Suo motu exercise of power by High Court — Held, not justified when, on facts, two views are reasonably possible and the lower court has taken a view in favour of the accused — Accused prosecuted for selling adulterated "ghee" taking defence that he was selling vanaspati ghee only — Public Analyst's report establishing the ghee to be vanaspati ghee — In view of the fact that vanaspati oil is also referred to as "dalda" and "ghee" in different localities, Sessions Judge acquitting the accused — Setting aside High Court's order, held, it was not a situation where the case for the prosecution was so strong to say that the decision of Sessions Judge was thoroughly perverse and against the weight of evidence — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 16 & 7 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, Rr. 44, 44-B and A.11.02.21. M. Sainuddin v. Food Inspector, (2001) 9 SCC 216: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1567.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and Sujata V. Manohar, J. [Date of decision: 12-4-1996]

[6086] — Ss. 401(3) and 397 — Revisional jurisdiction of High Court — Scope of — Interference with judgment of acquittal which is not perverse — Impermissibility of — Remand of case for trial afresh with certain directions — When warranted — Held, the scope of revisional jurisdiction is severely restricted, particularly while dealing with revision arising from judgment of acquittal — In present case, trial court disbelieving evidence of eyewitnesses and having regard to evidence of autopsy surgeon and certain other factors, acquitting the appellant-accused under S. 302 IPC but convicting them under S. 323 IPC — No appeal filed thereagainst by State — In revision filed before High Court by complainant, High Court criticising testimony of autopsy surgeon for deliberately suppressing injuries on deceased — Consequently, it remanding matter to trial court for consideration afresh with direction that in the present case the evidence of doctor would not prevail over the eyewitness account and that the present one was a case under S. 302 IPC — It also directing initiation of proceedings against the autopsy surgeon — While passing said judgment, High Court not opining that order of trial court was passed by considering irrelevant evidence or by ignoring relevant evidence — That apart, High Court failing to meet reasonings of trial court — One possible view sought to be substituted by another — Held, trial court's judgment being not a perverse one, High Court exceeded its revisional jurisdiction in passing the impugned judgment — It also failed to take into consideration the effect of order passed by High Court in an appeal confirming conviction of one of the accused in relation to offence under S. 323 IPC and which order had also attained finality — In this view, High Court's judgment not sustainable — Hence, set aside

The appellants were charged for commission of offences under Sections 148 and 302 IPC and in the alternative under Sections 302/149 and Section 120-B IPC. They were, however, convicted for commission of an offence under Section 323 read with Section 34 IPC recording that they had only caused simple injuries to the deceased. The State did not prefer any appeal thereagainst. The respondent complainant, however, filed a revision application before the High Court. The High Court went into the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution. The High Court observed that the trial court committed a grave error in ignoring the relevant materials brought on record to pronounce a judgment of acquittal in favour of the appellant-accused. It held that the autopsy surgeon had wilfully suppressed the head injury in the post-mortem report and thus he was guilty of dereliction of duty. The High Court opined that the post-mortem report was an incomplete report prepared by the doctor to give an undue advantage to the accused. Thus the High Court allowed the revision application and remanded the matter to the trial court to pass the judgment on the basis of evidence on record keeping in mind the evidence of the eyewitnesses wherein it was stated that the deceased had suffered injuries on the whole body. The High Court also directed that the evidence of the doctor would not prevail over the eyewitness account in the present case. It observed that the present one was a case under Section 302 IPC as the intention of all the accused was to cause death of the deceased. The High Court further directed to pass necessary orders against the doctor concerned for preparing document in order to give an undue benefit to the accused. Hence, the present appeal.

The appellants submitted that the High Court committed a manifest illegality in passing the impugned judgment which was in the teeth of Section 401(3) CrPC, 1973. On the other hand, the State contended that it was not a case where the High Court converted a judgment of acquittal to a judgment of conviction in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction but merely remitted the matter to the trial court for consideration afresh. Thus, the State urged that the Supreme Court should not interfere in the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The approach of the High Court to the entire case cannot be appreciated. The High Court should have kept in mind that while exercising its revisional jurisdiction under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC it exercises a limited power. Its jurisdiction to entertain a revision application, although is not barred, but severely restricted, particularly when it arises from a judgment of acquittal. (Paras 19 and 10)

In the instant case the High Court not only entered into the merit of the matter but also analysed the depositions of all the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution. It, in particular, went to the extent of criticising the testimony of autopsy surgeon. It relied upon the evidence of the so-called eyewitnesses to hold that although the appellants had inflicted injuries on the head of the deceased, the autopsy surgeon deliberately suppressed the same. The surgeon was, for all intent and purport, found guilty of the offence under Sections 193 and 196 IPC. (Para 15)

Thus, the High Court sought to reappreciate the whole evidence. One possible view was sought to be substituted by another possible view. The High Court did not point out any error of law on the part of the trial Judge. It was not opined that any relevant evidence has been left out of its consideration by the court below or irrelevant material has been taken into consideration. The trial court might be wrong as regards analysing the prosecution evidence but then it had not relied upon the evidence of the eyewitnesses only having regard to the opinion of medical expert. The trial Judge considered the plea of alibi on the part of some of the accused and accepted the same. The High Court did not bestow any consideration in this behalf. It also failed to take into consideration that even bystanders have been implicated in the matter. Unfortunately, the High Court did not meet the reasonings of the trial Judge which was its bounden duty. (Paras 10, 32 and 33)

Hence, in view of the fact that the judgment of the trial Judge could not be termed to be a perverse one, it is unhesitatingly held that the High Court exceeded its jurisdiction while passing the impugned judgment. Further, it did not take into consideration the effect of the order dated 18-11-2003 passed by the High Court in the appeal preferred by one of the accused persons whereby his conviction under Section 323 IPC had been confirmed and that order had also attained finality. In this view, the impugned judgment cannot be sustained, which is set aside accordingly. (Paras 31, 34 to 36). Johar v. Mangal Prasad, (2008) 3 SCC 423: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 89: AIR 2008 SC 1165: 2008 Cri LJ 1627: (2008) 64 AIC 246 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-1-2008]

D. Stephens v. Nosibolla, AIR 1951 SC 196: 1951 SCR 284; Logendranath Jha v. Polai Lal Biswas, AIR 1951 SC 316: 1951 SCR 676; K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1962 SC 1788: (1963) 3 SCR 412; Mahendra Pratap Singh v. Sarju Singh, AIR 1968 SC 707: (1968) 2 SCR 287; Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305: 1993 SCC (Cri) 36; State of Maharashtra v. Jagmohan Singh Kuldip Singh Anand, (2004) 7 SCC 659: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2003; Ram Briksh Singh v. Ambika Yadav, (2004) 7 SCC 665: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2009; Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115: 2005 SCC (Cri) 276, followed

Mangal Prasad v. Johar, 2007 Cri LR 605 (MP), reversed

[6087] — Ss. 401(3) and (1) — High Court's power of revision — Interference with order of acquittal — Scope — Restated — Reappreciation of evidence — Legality — Held, High Court cannot substitute an order of acquittal by one of conviction — Albeit in exceptional cases it can set aside acquittal and direct retrial — On facts, held, High Court went palpably wrong in holding the appellant to be guilty of offence under S. 304 Part I IPC by reappreciating the evidence on an assumption that the evidence of the eyewitnesses was wrongfully discarded by the trial court — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304 Pt. I

On assessment of the evidence, the trial court found that the prosecution had failed to prove the charge under Section 302 IPC against the appellant and, therefore, acquitted him. One of the eyewitnesses, who was also brother of the deceased, sent a letter to the High Court against the acquittal of the appellant. The High Court treated the letter as a revision petition. The High Court, taking the view that the finding of the trial court discarding the prosecution evidence was totally perverse and had resulted in miscarriage of justice, entered into the domain of reappraisal of evidence. The High Court set aside the order of acquittal and convicted the appellant. The appellant contended before the Supreme Court that in view of Section 401(3) CrPC the High Court could not convict the appellant after setting aside his acquittal nor could it reappraise the evidence. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court in its revisional power does not ordinarily interfere with judgments of acquittal passed by the trial court unless there has been a manifest error of law or procedure. The interference with the order of acquittal passed by the trial court is limited only to exceptional cases when it is found that the order under revision suffers from glaring illegality or has caused miscarriage of justice or when it is found that the trial court has no jurisdiction to try the case or where the trial court has illegally shut out the evidence which otherwise ought to have been considered or where the material evidence which clinches the issue has been overlooked. In view of Section 401(3) CrPC, the High Court would not be justified in substituting an order of acquittal into one of conviction even if it is convinced that the accused deserves conviction. No doubt, the High Court in exercise of its revisional power can set aside an order of acquittal if it comes within the ambit of the said exceptional cases but it cannot convert an order of acquittal into an order of conviction. The only course left to the High Court in such exceptional cases is to order retrial. In the present case, the High Court committed manifest illegality in convicting the appellant under Section 304 Part I and sentencing him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment after setting aside the order of acquittal.

Taking the view that the trial court had discarded of all the five witnesses, the High Court reassessed the evidence and came to the conclusion that the appellant was guilty of offence under Section 304 Part I IPC. This view of the High Court is palpably wrong. The judgment of the trial court shows that the trial court did not shut out or discard the evidence led by the prosecution. On the contrary, the trial court assessed the entire evidence on record and came to the conclusion that the prosecution had failed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt and as such acquitted the accused-appellant. In fact, the High Court has entered into the domain of reappraisal of evidence which it was not authorized to do in exercise of its revisional power. Vimal Singh v. Khuman Singh, (1998) 7 SCC 223: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1574: AIR 1998 SC 3380.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and V.N. Khare, J. [Date of decision: 8-10-1998]

— S. 402 See Ss. 401(2), 402, 204 and 482
See also Ss. 482 and 402

[6088] — Ss. 403, 397 to 399 and 401 — Standing to question conduct of criminal proceedings — Fodder Scam cases — Fodder Scam cases — Locus standi/Standing — Criminal matters — Standing to question conduct of criminal proceedings — Held (per majority: per Balakrishnan, J.), it is for the prosecution to prove its case and for the accused (Respondents 4 and 5) to prove that they did not have disproportionate income as alleged by the prosecution — It is a criminal litigation exclusively between Respondents 4 and 5 and the State — Nobody else has got any right to interfere, especially by way of PIL or else such PIL would only hamper the course of justice and may cause prejudice to accused denying them a fair trial, and may even damage prosecution case — Moreover, on facts, though petitioners have alleged a series of irregularities, they are not supported by basic facts having a solid foundation — Held (per majority: per Lakshmanan, J.), PIL is totally foreign to pending criminal proceedings — Petitioners are waging a political battle against Respondents 4 and 5 through medium of PIL, which is impermissible — Per Kapadia, J. (dissenting), the question of sufficient interest of the petitioner cannot be considered in the abstract — It must be taken together with the legal and factual context — Constitution of India — Art. 32 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 27, 5 and 13(1)(e)

These writ petitions were filed as public interest litigation by the two petitioners who were Members of Parliament at the time of filing of the petitions. Respondents 4 and 5 were formerly Chief Ministers of the State of Bihar. It was alleged by the petitioners that they had filed writ petitions before the High Court alleging large-scale defalcation of public funds and falsification of accounts involving hundreds of crores of rupees in the Department of Animal Husbandry in the State of Bihar and pursuant to these allegations, several cases were registered by the police and investigation of these cases was later handed over to CBI. The petitioners alleged that consequent upon change of the Government at the Centre, attempts had been made to delay and interfere with the judicial process. It was alleged that the Public Prosecutors who were handling the cases were removed, and to protect the interests of Respondents 4 and 5, Rabri Devi and Lalu Prasad Yadav, respectively, a convenient prosecutor was appointed.

Respondent 5 was an accused in a case registered under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. The allegation in that case was that Respondent 5 as Chief Minister of Bihar between 1990 to 1996 had acquired assets disproportionate to his known sources of income. Charge-sheet was filed in the Court of the Special Judge, CBI, Patna on 4-4-2000 under Section 13(1)(e) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. Respondent 4 was also charge-sheeted in the same case for abetment under Section 109 IPC read with Section 13(2) and Section 13(1)(e) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. This case was renumbered as Special Case No. 5 of 1998 and was pending trial in the Court of the Special Judge, CBI, Patna. The petitioners alleged that certain income tax cases of Respondents 4 and 5 were also pending before the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal (ITAT) and one D.K. Tyagi who was a member of ITAT had been hearing those cases and that Respondents 4 and 5 found it difficult to pursue the hearings before the said ITAT member and hence under their influence Mr Tyagi was sent on deputation and he was replaced by one Mr Mohanarajan who was on the verge of retirement. It was further alleged that the new member along with another member heard these cases within two weeks and orders were pronounced in favour of Respondents 4 and 5. It was also alleged that Respondent 3, namely, the Central Board of Direct Taxes did not prefer an appeal in these cases though the decision went against the Revenue. This, according to the petitioners, was to help Respondents 4 and 5 in the cases filed against them.

The petitioners also alleged that Special Case No. 5 of 1998 pending before the Special Judge, CBI was at the final stage of hearing and that the Director, CBI, presumably under pressure from the accused changed the prosecutor and appointed one Oma Shankar Singh who was only a retired Deputy Superintendent of Delhi Police and had no experience of conducting the prosecution. According to the petitioners, this was done at the fag end of the prosecution case to help the accused. The petitioners also made allegations against Respondents 1 to 3 that they were acting arbitrarily and interfering in the judicial process to benefit Respondents 4 and 5. The petitioners alleged that Respondents 4 and 5 obtained stay of proceedings of the case pending before the Special Judge from the Supreme Court, suppressing some material facts. It was alleged that Respondents 4 and 5 still wielded influence and power and, therefore, the Supreme Court should monitor the trial of the case pending before the Special Judge, CBI, at Patna.

In these writ petitions, the petitioners prayed mainly for four reliefs. The first relief prayed for was to issue an appropriate writ, order or direction monitoring the conduct of the trials relating to Fodder Scam cases' proceedings against Respondents 4 and 5 in the State of Bihar and the State of Jharkhand. The second prayer was to appoint the very same prosecutor who had been conducting the prosecution earlier and to direct the High Court to see that no prosecutor or CBI officer attached with the investigation and trial of the case was removed, harassed or victimised for discharging their duties. The petitioners also prayed that at least one inspector be provided for each Fodder case. The petitioners also prayed for cancellation of bail granted to Respondents 4 and 5. The petitioners further prayed for a direction to Respondents 1 to 3 to file an appeal against the orders passed by ITAT.

During the pendency of these writ petitions, the petitioners further alleged that the Special Judge who was trying Special Case No. 5 of 1998 involving Respondents 4 and 5, had been replaced by another Special Judge. The allegation was that one Yogender Prasad was the CBI Special Judge and he had been replaced by one Munni Lal Paswan and this according to the petitioners was deliberately done to help Respondents 4 and 5. Therefore, it was prayed that the said Special Judge be replaced by another judicial officer.

Dismissing the writ petitions and vacating all interim orders,

Held :

Per majority:

Per Balakrishnan, J.

Special Case No. 5 of 1998 has been filed against Respondents 4 and 5 alleging that they had amassed wealth disproportionate to their known sources of income while holding the post of Chief Minister of the State of Bihar. Both the petitioners are not in any way connected with this case. They are not de facto complainants in this case. They are absolutely strangers as regards the criminal cases against Respondents 4 and 5 which were pending before the Special Judge. It is for the prosecution to prove its case and Respondents 4 and 5 to deny that the allegations are not true and they did not have the disproportionate income as alleged by the prosecution. It is a criminal litigation exclusively between Respondents 4 and 5 and the State. It is also important to note that in a case of this nature nobody else has got any right to interfere especially by way of public interest litigation or else such public interest litigation would only hamper the course of justice and may cause prejudice to the accused by denying them a fair trial. This unnecessary interference in the criminal case may cause, sometimes, damage to the prosecution case also. In any view of the matter, this sort of interference in the criminal prosecution would only deny a fair trial to the accused. In this case, as early as 2004, 132 witnesses were examined on the side of the prosecution and 93 witnesses were examined on the defence side. Arguments of the prosecution were over as early as on 14-7-2004 and the defence arguments continued up to 19-7-2004. Because of the present public interest litigation, the trial could not be conducted. It is equally important to note that though the petitioners have alleged a series of irregularities, they are not supported by basic facts having solid foundation. (Paras 21 and 25)

Per Lakshmanan, J.

Public interest litigation is meant for the benefit of the lost and lonely and it is meant for the benefit of those whose social backwardness is the reason for no access to the court. PILs are not meant to advance the political gain and also settle scores under the guise of a public interest litigation and to fight a legal battle. PIL is totally foreign to pending criminal proceedings. (Para 58)

The petitioners are waging a political battle against Respondents 4 and 5 through the medium of public interest litigation. The venue for political battle can never be the Supreme Court by filing a writ petition under Article 32 of the Constitution. (Para 60)

Per Kapadia, J. (dissenting)

The test which one has to apply to decide the maintainability of the PIL concerns sufficiency of the petitioner's interest. Under this test it is necessary to consider the subject-matter to which the PIL relates. It is wrong in law for the court to judge the applicant's interest without looking at the subject-matter of his complaint. If the petitioner shows failure of public duty, the court would be in error in dismissing his PIL. The question of sufficient interest of the petitioner cannot be considered in the abstract. It must be taken together with the legal and factual context. (Paras 77 and 78). Rajiv Ranjan Singh 'Lalan' (VIII) v. Union of India, (2006) 6 SCC 613: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 125.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan[1], Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan[2] and S.H. Kapadia[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-2006]

Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305: 1993 SCC (Cri) 36; Ashok Kumar Pandey v. State of W.B., (2004) 3 SCC 349; Union of India v. Sushil Kumar Modi, (1998) 8 SCC 661: 1999 SCC (Cri) 84; T.N. Godavarman Thirumulpad (98) v. Union of India, (2006) 5 SCC 28; Dattaraj Nathuji Thaware v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 590; S.P. Gupta v. Union of India, 1981 Supp SCC 87, relied on

— Ch. XXXI See Ss. 11, 13, 14, 18, 177 to 181, 190 and Ch. XXXI

Section 406 — Powers of transfer of Supreme Court

— S. 406 See also S. 527, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1285 et seq. in Vol. 2

Synopsis

(1) Nature and Scope of power under 316
(2) Section 406 and Article 139-A 319
(3) Maintainability — Standing/Delay/Laches 319
(4) Stage of proceedings, for exercise of power under 322
(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer 322
(6) Directions/orders that may be issued under S. 406 342
(7) Transfer of cases under Negotiable Instruments Act 345
(8) Review of transfer order/ Subsequent orders/directions 347
(9) Practice and Procedure re disposal of transfer petition 348

— S. 406 See Ss. 7, 14 and 406, 410
See also Ss. 24(8) and 406
See also Ss. 178(c) & 177 and 406
See also Ss. 204, 406 and 482
See also Ss. 407(1)(c) & (4), 406 and 408
See also Ss. 408, 407 and 406
See also Ss. 408(1), 406, 407, 228(1), 227 and 26(a)(ii)
See also Ss. 438 & 406

(1) Nature and Scope of power under

See also Section 406, '(5) Considerations/ Grounds for transfer', below

[6089] — S. 406 — Power of Supreme Court to transfer cases and appeals — Purpose of — Held, is to ensure fair trial to the accused — In the instant case transfer of the sessions case was ordered from the Sessions Court of Chinglepet in Tamil Nadu to the Principal District and Sessions Judge, Pondicherry, because the action of the prosecution agency had created a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the appellant-accused that he would not get justice if the trial was held in the State of Tamil Nadu (Para 15). Jayendra Saraswati Swamigal (3) v. State of T.N., (2008) 10 SCC 180: AIR 2008 SC 2997: (2008) 3 KLT 669: 2008 Cri LJ 3877.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2008]

Jayendra Saraswathy Swamigal (2) v. State of T.N., (2005) 8 SCC 771: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 1, followed

[6090] — Ss. 406 and 407 — Transfer petition — Matters that may be considered by court — Scope and extent of inquiry permissible

Criminal prosecution, if otherwise, justifiable and based upon adequate evidence does not become vitiated on account of mala fides or political mandate of the informant or the complainant. However, if justifiable and reasonable apprehension of miscarriage of justice and likelihood of bias is established, the proceeding has to be transferred elsewhere by exercise of power under Section 406 CrPC. For transfer of a criminal case, there must be a reasonable apprehension on the part of the party to a case that justice will not be done. Justice should not only be done but it should be seen to be done. Mere allegations that there is apprehension that justice will not be done in a given case does not suffice. The court has further to see whether the apprehension alleged is reasonable or not. The apprehension must not only be entertained but must appear to the court to be a reasonable apprehension. (Paras 17 and 18)

When it is shown that the public confidence in the fairness of a trial would be seriously undermined, aggrieved party can seek transfer of a case within the State under Section 407 and anywhere in the country under Section 406 CrPC. However, the apprehension of not getting a fair and impartial inquiry or trial is required to be reasonable and not imaginary. The apprehension must appear to the court to be a reasonable one. (Paras 19 and 20)

Mere allegation that there is an apprehension that justice will not be done in a given case alone does not suffice. Considering the totality of all the circumstances, a secular, democratic Government, governed by the rule of law, in the State of Punjab is responsible for ensuring free, fair and impartial trial to the accused, notwithstanding the nature of the accusations made against them. Apprehension entertained by the petitioners cannot be construed as reasonable and the case cannot be transferred on a mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done. (Para 51)

Though, in a transfer petition the court is not expected to go into the veracity of the statement of the witnesses and their evidential value, since both sides cited several instances, the same have been considered. Ultimately, it is upon the Presiding Officer/Special Judge and not the court hearing the transfer petition to evaluate the testimonies of the witnesses and arrive at a conclusion one way or other depending on the charges levelled against the accused. It would not be fair on the part of the court either to assess and arrive at an opinion about the same. On analysis of all the material, the transfer of the case as sought for, at this stage, is not only against the interest of prosecution but also against the interest of the other accused persons, the prosecution witnesses and the convenience of all concerned in the matter. (Paras 48, 46 and 24). Amarinder Singh v. Parkash Singh Badal, (2009) 6 SCC 260.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and P. Sathasivam and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-5-2009]

[6091] — Ss. 406 and 407 — Scope of Supreme Court's power to determine extent of its jurisdiction — Whether a Bench can recall and set aside order of another Bench of the Court on the ground of order being without jurisdiction — Constitution of India, Arts. 134, 136, 142 and 32 — Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1952, Ss. 6 and 7

Per Mukharji, Oza and Natarajan, JJ.

The want of jurisdiction can be established solely by a superior court and, in practice, no decision can be impeached collaterally by any inferior court. But the superior court can always correct its own error brought to its notice either by way of petition or ex debito justitiae. No rule of res judicata applies in such situation.

The distinction between an error which entails absence of jurisdiction and an error made within the jurisdiction is so fine that it is rapidly being eroded.

The impugned directions were void because the power was not there for the Supreme Court to transfer a proceeding under the Act of 1952 from one Special Judge to the High Court. This is not a case of collateral attack on judicial proceeding; it is a case where the Court having no court superior to it rectifies its own order.

Per Ranganath Misra, J.

Though the question of want of jurisdiction of the High Court to deal with the special cases transferred to it was reagitated by the appellant after an inordinate delay and during the intervening period a lot of evidence was collected by examining the prosecution witnesses and exhibiting documents, the fact remains that the Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court did not possess the power to transfer the proceedings to the High Court.

Per Oza & Ray, JJ.

Supreme Court cannot confer a jurisdiction on itself which is not provided in law.

Per Venkatachaliah, J. (dissenting)

Before a superior court there is no distinction in the quality of the decision-making process respecting jurisdictional questions on one the hand and adjudicatory issues or issues pertaining to merits, on the other.

The existence of jurisdiction does not depend on the correctness of its exercise. The authority to decide embodies a privilege to bind despite error, a privilege which is inherent in and indispensable to every judicial function. The characteristic attribute of a judicial act is that it binds whether it be right or it be wrong.

A finding of a superior court even on a question of its own jurisdiction, however grossly erroneous it may otherwise be, is not a nullity; nor one which could at all be said to have been reached without jurisdiction, susceptible to be ignored or to admit of any collateral attack. Otherwise, the adjudications of superior courts would be held up to ridicule and the remedies generally arising from and considered concomitants of such classification of judicial errors would be so seriously abused and expanded as to make a mockery of those foundational principles essential to the stability of administration of justice. The superior court has jurisdiction to determine its own jurisdiction and an error in that determination does not make an error of jurisdiction.

Per Ranganathan, J. (dissenting)

Superior courts of unlimited jurisdiction are always presumed to act with jurisdiction and unless it is clearly shown that any particular order is patently one which could not, on any conceivable view of its jurisdiction, have been passed by such court, such an order can neither be ignored nor even recalled, annulled, revoked or set aside in subsequent proceedings by the same court. In the present case, the order passed is not one of patent lack of jurisdiction. A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1988]

(1) Nature and Scope of power under (contd.)

[6092] — Ss. 406, 407, 401 and 386 — Nature and scope of Supreme Court's power under — Held, Supreme Court has no power to withdraw a case from Special Judge and transfer it to High Court in view of S. 7(1) of Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952 — Constitution of India, Arts. 139-A, 136, 134, 140 and 142

Per Mukharji, Oza and Natarajan, JJ. (Ranganath Misra and Ray JJ., concurring)

In the facts of the instant case, the criminal revision application which was pending before the High Court even if it was deemed to be transferred to the Supreme Court under Art. 139-A of the Constitution it would not have vested the Supreme Court with power larger than what is contained in S. 407 of CrPC. Under S. 407 r/w the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the High Court could not transfer to itself proceedings under Ss. 6 and 7 of the said Act. The Supreme Court, by transferring the proceedings to itself, could not have acquired larger jurisdiction. The fact that the objection was not raised before the Supreme Court giving directions on Feb. 16, 1984 [(1984) 2 SCC 183)] cannot amount to any waiver.

Parliament did not grant to the High Court the jurisdiction to transfer a case to itself. No presumption can be drawn that the superior court is deemed to have a general jurisdiction and it acted within it, because: firstly, the question of jurisdiction was not agitated before the Court, secondly, these directions were given per incuriam and thirdly, the superior Court alone can set aside an error in its directions when attention is drawn to that error. This view is warranted only because of peculiar facts and circumstances of the present case. Here the trial of a citizen in a Special Court under special jurisdiction is involved, hence, the liberty of the subject is involved.

Per Ranganathan, J. (concurring)

The appellant, in consequence of the impugned direction, is being tried by a court which has no jurisdiction — and which cannot be empowered by the Supreme Court — to try him.

Article 139-A envisages either inter-State transfers of cases i.e. from a court in one State to a court in another State or the withdrawal of a case by the Supreme Court itself. Inter-State transfer among courts subordinate to a High Court inter se or from a court subordinate to a High Court to the High Court is within the jurisdiction of the appropriate High Court.

The powers of the Supreme Court, in disposing of an appeal or revision, are circumscribed by the scope of the proceedings before it. In this case, it is common ground that the question of transfer was not put in issue before the Supreme Court.

In the circumstances of the case it cannot be said that the Supreme Court can issue the impugned direction in exercise of the powers under Art. 142 of the Constitution or under S. 407 of CrPC available to it as an appellate court. Article 140 is only a provision enabling Parliament to confer supplementary powers on the Supreme Court to enable it to deal more effectively to exercise the jurisdiction conferred on it by or under the Constitution. The Supreme Court was hearing an appeal from the order of discharge and connected matters. There was no issue or controversy or discussion before it as to the comparative merits of a trial before a Special Judge vis-à-vis one before the High Court. There was only an oral request said to have been made, admittedly, after the judgment was announced. Wide as the powers under Art. 141 are, they do not envisage an order of the type presently in question. Secondly, it is one of the contentions of the appellant that an order of this type, far from being necessary for doing complete justice in the cause or matter pending before the court, has actually resulted in injustice. Thirdly, however wide and plenary the language of the article, the directions given by the court should not be inconsistent with, repugnant to or in violation of the specific provisions of any statute. If the provisions of the 1952 Act r/w Art. 139-A and Ss. 406-407 of the CrPC do not permit the transfer of the case from a Special Judge to the High Court, that effect cannot be achieved indirectly.

No support can be sought from the order of transfer by reference to Ss. 386 and 401 of the 1973 CrPC. The direction that the trial should be shifted to the High Court can hardly be described as a consequential or incidental order. Such a direction did not flow as a necessary consequence of the conclusion of the court on the issues and points debated before it.

Hence the continued trial before the High Court or transfer infringes Art. 21.

Per Venkatachaliah, J. (dissenting)

The superior court has jurisdiction to determine its own jurisdiction and an error in that determination does not make it an error of jurisdiction. A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1988]

(2) Section 406 and Article 139-A

[6093] — S. 406 — Vacation Judge of Supreme Court is not empowered under, to entertain an application for transfer of writ petitions challenging validity of certain Acts to some other High Court — He can deal with transfer applications which are under S. 406, Criminal Procedure Code and not under Art. 139-A(1) or (2) — But the writ petitions in question not being purely criminal in nature, the application was one under Art. 139-A(2) and hence the Vacation Judge was not competent to entertain it — But pending disposal of the application, he can grant stay of proceedings before the High Court considering the facts of the particular case — Constitution of India, Arts. 139-A(2) & 226 — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. VII, R. 4

Under R. 4 of Or. 7 the Vacation Judge has only limited power to dispose of appeals. He has been specifically empowered under Rule 4(3) to entertain application for transfer of cases under S. 406, Criminal Procedure Code but no such power is conferred on him under Rule 4 to entertain application for transfer under Arts. 139-A(1) and 139-A(2). From this it is proper to construe that the Vacation Judge is not empowered to exercise powers relating to transfer applications under Arts. 139-A(1) and 139-A(2). There is no force in the contention that S. 406, Criminal Procedure Code is wide enough to include all criminal cases and therefore, it is unnecessary to provide separately for transfer of cases under Art. 139-A(1) and (2). Article 139-A(2) not only covers criminal cases but also other cases including writs pending in the High Courts. All the writs are not in the nature of criminal proceedings and could not be transferred under S. 406, Criminal Procedure Code. Even a writ of habeas corpus, after coming into force of the Constitution, is a much larger and wider remedy which is enshrined as a fundamental right and could be enforced in the High Courts and Supreme Court.

In the present case the Union of India seeks to transfer four writ petitions wherein the notification of the President, the validity of S. 3 and S. 4 of the Assam Disturbed Areas Act and S. 4*(a)* of the Armed Forces (Assam and Manipur) Special Powers Act, the notification issued therein, the validity of Assam Preventive Detention Ordinance, 1980 are sought to be challenged. The proceedings in these writ petitions before the High Court cannot be said to be criminal in nature, falling under S. 406, Criminal Procedure Code. Even proceedings for issue of a writ of habeas corpus may not be said to be purely criminal in nature. The application for transfer of these writ petitions pending before the High Court would more appropriately fall under Art. 139-A(2) of the Constitution and not under S. 406, Criminal Procedure Code. Thus the Vacation Court has no power to deal with the application.

However, though the Vacation Judge is not competent to dispose of finally a transfer application under Art. 139-A(2), he is empowered under sub-rules (2) and (4) of R. 4 to grant stay of proceedings before the High Court pending disposal of the transfer application. The question whether an order of stay of proceedings should be granted in a particular case would depend upon the facts of the case. The court must be satisfied that there is sufficient cause for granting stay of proceedings, and that taking into account the balance of convenience such an order is expedient.

In the present case, save in the case of one writ appeal, no sufficient grounds were made out for stay of the writ petitions filed before the High Court pending the transfer applications. Union of India v. Inderjit Barua, 1980 Supp SCC 696.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: P.S. Kailasam, J. [Date of decision: 30-5-1980]

(3) Maintainability — Standing/ Delay/Laches

[6094] — S. 406 — Transfer of appeals — Delay in raising grievance by the person seeking transfer — Effect — Former Minister in State Government prosecuted and convicted under Ss. 5(1)(d) & (2) of Prevention of Corruption Act — During pendency of appeal before High Court, he approaching Supreme Court for transfer of the appeal to another High Court contending inter alia, that he apprehended denial of a fair trial due to adverse publicity by the State Government and by the press in the State which might consciously or subconsciously influence the Judges — Objection raised four long years after the filing of the appeal and no objection taken when the appeal was heard by a Single Judge who later referred the matter to a larger Bench — In view of such delay the petitioner's contention rejected — Moreover, in view of complete separation of judiciary from executive, held, Judges are not influenced by propaganda or adverse publicity — Constitution of India, Arts. 139-A, 50 and 217 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(1)(d) & (2)

The petitioner was a former Minister in the Government of Kerala. He was convicted under Section 5(1)(d) read with Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 on the charge of abusing his office to supply large quantities of Kerala electricity to a private company of Karnataka through the Government of that State and thus enabling that company to make huge profits. Cross-appeals were filed before the Kerala High Court. A Single Judge heard the appeals and referred the matter to a Division Bench. The Chief Justice directed the appeals to be posted before the two Judges specified by him. The petitioner filed an application before the Chief Justice of the Kerala High Court for transfer of the appeals to a different Bench on the ground that one of the said two Judges was against the petitioner. As no orders were passed on that application, the petitioner filed a transfer petition before the Supreme Court seeking transfer of the appeals to the Karnataka High Court on the ground that a fair trial was not possible in the State of Kerala because:

(3) Maintainability — Standing/Delay/Laches (contd.)

(i) the Government and the press in the State of Kerala had by their vicious campaign created an impression among the public that the petitioner had committed irregularities, illegalities and crimes in the sale of electricity;

(ii) one of the Judges seized of the appeals had effectively worked against the petitioner as an advocate before an Inquiry Commission which was appointed to inquire into some of the malpractices in the execution of the rectification work in a hydroelectric project;

(iii) Chief Justice of the Kerala High Court had not passed any order on the representation made by the petitioner; and

(iv) when adjournment of hearing of the appeal was not granted and consequently the counsel for the petitioner refused to argue the appeal by stating that he was not appearing for the appellant-petitioner, the Court had issued a bailable warrant.

Dismissing the transfer petition,

Held :

The contention as to alleged adverse publicity in Kerala is apparently raised at a belated stage i.e. after a lapse of four years from the date of filing of the appeal in the High Court. The petitioner had not raised any objection with regard to hearing of the appeal by the Kerala High Court when the matter was heard by the Single Judge in 1998, who subsequently referred it to a larger Bench. Even in the representation before the Chief Justice, he did not raise the said contention. Therefore, elaborate submissions made in the transfer petition that a fair trial will not be possible in the State of Kerala and that any person can be influenced consciously or subconsciously by the adverse publicity against the petitioner, are required to be rejected. Moreover, in India there is complete separation of the judiciary from the executive and Judges are not influenced in any manner either by propaganda or adverse publicity. Cases are decided on the basis of the evidence available on record and the law applicable. Granting such application and transferring the appeal from the High Court of Kerala to the High Court of Karnataka would result in casting unjustified aspersion on the Court having jurisdiction to decide the appeal on the assumption that its judicial verdict is consciously or subconsciously affected by the popular frenzy, official wrath or adverse publicity, which is not the position qua the judicial administration in this country. (Para 9)

The instant transfer petition requires to be rejected firstly because the petitioner was not convicted on the basis of the inquiry report referred to by the petitioner. The charges against him are altogether for a different case not connected with the rectification work of the hydroelectric project. Secondly, a Judge while practising as an advocate might have appeared in a number of cases, but that would not mean that he would have any personal interest or connection with the said matters or with persons involved therein and would be biased towards them. (Para 11)

The third contention also deserves to be rejected because in a criminal appeal pending for trial, there is no question of passing of any order by the Chief Justice of the High Court. (Para 12)

The practice of filing an application by an advocate that he withdraws his appearance on the date of hearing, only for getting the matter adjourned, requires to be strongly discouraged. In such a situation, for seeking the appearance of the petitioner, who was released on bail, there was no alternative for the Court but to issue bailable warrant. Therefore, the course adopted by the Court was justified. Hence, there is not the remotest chance or justification for entertaining apprehension that the petitioner would not get justice if the appeal is decided by the Bench to whom it was assigned. (Para 13). R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293: AIR 2000 SC 2778: (2000) 3 KLT 425.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-2000]

Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934, followed [6095] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Maintainability — Grounds — Delay and laches — Sequence of events leading to filing of transfer petitions started on 7-11-2002 — Present petitions filed on 5-2-2003 — Held, there was no delay in filing the said petitions (Para 33). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882: AIR 2004 SC 524: 2004 Cri LJ 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293, distinguished

[6096] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Maintainability of — Challenge to, on the ground of suppression of fact — Transfer petitions filed without disclosing the fact that the writ petitions involving grievances and facts raised herein were already pending before the High Court which had reserved its judgment in those writ petitions — Held, reliefs sought before the High Court and the Supreme Court, were different — Transfer petitions are not parallel proceedings — Though the Supreme Court might otherwise have viewed the conduct of non-disclosure seriously, held, where the course of justice was being subverted, the said non-disclosure did not prove fatal — Practice and Procedure — Pleadings/New plea/Additional plea — Suppression of fact in transfer petition filed under S. 406 CrPC before the Supreme Court — Not fatal where the course of justice was being subverted

It would have been advisable for the petitioner to have informed the Supreme Court about the proceedings in the Madras High Court. However, on facts, it appears that justice is not being done. In fact it appears that the course of justice is being subverted. Thus, even though the Supreme Court might otherwise have viewed the conduct, in not disclosing, seriously, it is not felt that in this matter, on this ground, the course of justice can be allowed to be subverted. (Para 7)

Further, even though some statements of facts made before the High Court are in pari materia with the facts stated before the Supreme Court, these petitions are not parallel proceedings. The petitions pending before the High Court are under Article 226 of the Constitution and the transfer petitions have been filed under Section 406 CrPC. The jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution and the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Section 406 CrPC are quite distinct and different. It is also to be noticed that the prayers made before the High Court and before the Supreme Court are also different. (Paras 7 and 8)

Thus, it is true, that it was incumbent on the part of the petitioner, to have disclosed the fact that the writ petitions are also pending before the High Court, in which the judgment has been reserved. But non-disclosure of this fact would not, for reasons set out above, non-suit the petitioner to approach the Supreme Court with an application under Section 406 CrPC. (Para 11). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882: AIR 2004 SC 524: 2004 Cri LJ 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

S.B. Mathur v. Matti Ullah, 1995 Supp (2) SCC 650; G. Narayanaswamy Reddy v. Govt. of Karnataka, (1991) 3 SCC 261, distinguished

[6097] — S. 406(2) — Transfer petition — Locus standi to file — Petitioner not a party to the proceedings — Words "party interested" used in S. 406 — Meaning and scope — Held, are of wide import — Hence, to be given wider meaning — Purposive construction applied — Wording of Art. 139-A of the Constitution of India also taken note of — One of the accused being the Chief Minister of the State, on facts, there was reasonable apprehension of likelihood of bias in the conduct of prosecution — Hence, transfer of cases (pending against CM and others) sought by political opponent of CM to some other State — Held, petitioner was a vitally interested person — Hence, had locus standi to file the transfer petitions

It is contended that in view of the provision of sub-section (2) of Section 406 CrPC the transfer petition is maintainable only when motion is moved by the Attorney General or by the "party interested". According to the counsel, it is the "party interested" and not a "person interested" and, therefore, only the Attorney General or the "party interested" has locus standi to file application and the petitioner not being a party to the proceeding is not a "party interested", and has no locus standi to file the present petition. (Para 12)

The said submission is not acceptable. The words "party interested" are of a wide import and, therefore, they have to be given a wider meaning. If it was the intendment of the legislature to give restricted meaning then it would have used words to the effect "party to the proceedings". In this behalf the wording of Article 139-A of the Constitution of India may be looked at. Under Article 139-A the transfer can be if "the Supreme Court is satisfied on its own motion or on an application made by the Attorney General of India or by a party to any such case". Also if the provisions of Chapter XXIX of the Criminal Procedure Code are looked at, it is seen that when the legislature intended a "party to the proceedings" to have a right of appeal it specifically so stated. The legislature, therefore, keeping in view the larger public interest involved in a criminal justice system, purposely used words of a wider import in Section 406. (Para 12)

It is a well-settled principle of law that statutes must be interpreted to advance the cause of statute and not to defeat it. (Para 12)

The petitioner being a political opponent, is vitally interested in the administration of justice in the State and is a "party interested" within the meaning of sub-section (2) of Section 406 CrPC.

(3) Maintainability — Standing/Delay/Laches (contd.)

(Para 12). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882: AIR 2004 SC 524: 2004 Cri LJ 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

[6098] — Ss. 406(2), 156 and 157 — Application for transfer of case — Locus standi of CBI — "Person interested" — Held, once a notification has been issued by State Government under S. 6 of DSPE Act transferring investigation to CBI, CBI assumes role of investigating agency and is also prosecuting agency in relation to that particular case — Thus, it is entitled to move an application under S. 406(2) CrPC — Further held, given pivotal role accorded to prosecuting agency in a criminal trial, it cannot be held that CBI is not an interested party for purposes of S. 406(2) — Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946 (25 of 1946), S. 6 (Paras 16 to 20). Nahar Singh Yadav v. Union of India, (2011) 1 SCC 307.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, V.S. Sirpurkar and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-2010]

Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048; K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882; Amarinder Singh v. Parkash Singh Badal, (2009) 6 SCC 260: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 971; R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293, considered

A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372, referred to

(4) Stage of proceedings, for exercise of power under

[6099] — S. 406 — Applicability of — Held, S. 406 relates to a case where either the trial or the appeal is pending before a trial court or the High Court — In the instant case, as the entire matter was in the hands of the Supreme Court on appeal, unless relegated back to the very Court, for which there was no compulsion to send it automatically, the power of the Supreme Court to send the matter to the appropriate court to ensure complete justice, could not be questioned — Therefore, S. 406 being inapplicable, there was no question of a petition having been filed in terms thereof — Best Bakery case (Para 10). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 5 SCC 353: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1613: AIR 2004 SC 3467.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-2004]

[6100] — S. 406 — Prosecution case against petitioner at investigation stage — Prayer for transfer rejected at present — Liberty given to the petitioner to renew the prayer at the stage of filing charge-sheet. Major S.J. Dubey v. State of Punjab, 1986 Supp SCC 675: 1987 SCC (Cri) 221.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and G.L. Oza, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-12-1986]

[6101] — Ss. 406, 177, 178 and 156 — Scope of — No power in Supreme Court to transfer case during investigation stage — Redress should be sought from the Court seized with the matter. Ram Chander Singh Sagar (Dr.) v. State of T.N., (1978) 2 SCC 35: 1978 SCC (Cri) 171: AIR 1978 SC 475: 1978 Cri LJ 640: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 341: (1978) 2 MLJ 11 (1) (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-1-1978]

[6102] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Refusal to entertain considering the stage of proceeding — Case under Prevention of Corruption Act — Transfer of, sought on ground of absence of territorial jurisdiction of Special Judge concerned — Matter pending for a long time before the said court and charges already framed — Though many of the prosecution witnesses did not hail from the place where trial going on and accused was resident of another State, in view of the fact that the offence was committed in the year 2002 i.e. five years ago and charge-sheet had also been submitted in the said year, Supreme Court declining to entertain the transfer petition at this stage (Paras 25 and 26). V.K. Puri v. CBI, (2007) 6 SCC 91: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 57: 2007 Cri LJ 2929.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2007]

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer

See also S. 406, '(1) Nature and Scope of power under', above

[6103] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — When warranted — Expedient for the ends of justice — Ends of justice — Principle that justice should not only be done but should be seen to be done — When attracted — If the Supreme Court "deems it expedient so to do for the ends of justice" — On facts, on basis of the ample evidence on record, glaringly demonstrating a subversion of the justice-delivery system with no congenial atmosphere still prevailing in the State of Gujarat, retrial directed in adjoining State of Maharashtra — Maxims — Justice should not only be done but should seen to be done — Application of — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A(2)

It is one of the salutary principles of the administration of justice that justice should not only be done but it should be seen to be done. However, a mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done in a given case or that there are general allegations of a surcharged atmosphere against a particular community alone does not suffice. The court has to see whether the apprehension is reasonable or not. The state of mind of the person who entertains the apprehension no doubt is a relevant factor but not the only determinative or concluding factor. But the court must be fully satisfied about the existence of such conditions which would render inevitably impossible the holding of a fair and impartial trial, uninfluenced by extraneous considerations that may ultimately undermine the confidence of a reasonable and right-thinking citizen, in the justice-delivery system. The apprehension must appear to the court to be a reasonable one. (Para 74)

Keeping in view the peculiar circumstances of the case, and the ample evidence on record, glaringly demonstrating a subversion of the justice-delivery system with no congenial and conducive atmosphere still prevailing in the State of Gujarat, it is directed that the retrial shall be done by a court under the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court. The Chief Justice of the said High Court is requested to fix up a court of competent jurisdiction. (Para 75). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934; G.X. Francis v. Banke Bihari Singh, AIR 1958 SC 309: 1958 Cri LJ 569, relied on

Clarified in Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115

[6104] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — Relief of — Grounds — Held, there must be "reasonable apprehension" on the part of the party to a case that justice may not be done — Mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done, cannot be the basis of transfer — Accused Shankaracharya of a Mutt, involved in a murder case pending in State of T.N., seeking transfer of the said case to any other State — Attempt made by prosecution machinery to demoralise and scare the petitioner's Senior Counsel by scandalising his reputation and casting a slur on his character and conduct — False criminal cases lodged against other lawyers appearing for defence — Freezing of all bank accounts of Mutt — Detention orders passed against co-accused under various Acts so that even after grant of bail in the present case they may remain in custody — Launching of prosecution against prominent persons holding high political offices and prominent journalists merely because they expressed some dissent against the arrest of the petitioner — Considering entire facts and circumstances, held, actions of the prosecuting agency and the State machinery created a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner and other co-accused that they will not get justice in the State of T.N. — Hence, case transferred to Pondicherry

The petitioner, a famous Shankaracharya of a mutt, was involved in a murder case. He filed a petition under Section 406 CrPC seeking transfer of the said case from the State of T.N. to any other State. The said transfer was sought on the grounds: (i) that the State machinery in T.N. had shown great zeal and had made extraordinary efforts, much beyond what was required under the law to anyhow secure the conviction of the accused and to achieve that object had procured and fabricated false evidence, (ii) that the Chief Minister of the State of T.N. made statements on the floor of the House that the petitioner and the other co-accused were actually involved in the murder in question and had also given some press statements in this regard and thus the accused stood condemned even before the commencement of the trial, (iii) that a solatium of Rs 5 lakhs was paid by the Chief Minister to the widow of the deceased long before completion of investigation and submission of charge-sheet, and this was given wide publicity in the electronic media and newspapers, etc., which showed that the State Government was taking special interest in the case and was too keen to secure conviction of the accused in order to justify the stand taken by it, (iv) that before the bail applications of the co-accused in the present case could be heard, detention orders were passed against them under the various Acts so that even after grant of bail by the Court they may remain in custody, (v) that the advocates appearing for the petitioner and other co-accused had been put under great threat on account of lodging of false and fabricated criminal cases against them and a situation had been created wherein they may not be in a position to defend the accused properly, (vi) that the Mutt and other associated and connected trusts had 183 accounts in banks, which were all frozen by Special Investigation Team (SIT) resulting in paralysing the religious and other activities of the Mutt and other connected bodies, (vii) that criminal cases had been lodged against some leading journalists of the country and other prominent personalities who had criticised the arrest of the petitioner, which not only violated right of free speech but also created an atmosphere of threat against anyone daring to speak or write in favour of the accused and thus the accused seriously apprehended that they would not get a fair trial in the State of T.N., and (viii) that the head of SIT was not a fair and upright officer and the superior courts had passed strictures against him several times in the past for his uncalled-for actions in going out of the way to implicate innocent persons in criminal cases.

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

Held :

If there is reasonable apprehension on the part of a party to a case that justice may not be done, he may seek transfer of the case. The apprehension entertained by the party must be a reasonable one and the case cannot be transferred on a mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done. (Para 22)

The contention raised on the basis of the statements made by the Chief Minister on the floor of the House is not sustainable. The arrest of the petitioner had generated a lot of publicity and in such circumstances no exception can be taken to the statement made by the Chief Minister on the floor of the House. Therefore, the petitioner or other co-accused cannot raise any grievance on the basis of the aforesaid statement of the Chief Minister and it cannot be a ground for transferring the case to another State. (Para 8)

However, launching of prosecution against prominent persons who have held high political offices and prominent journalists merely because they expressed some dissent against the arrest of the petitioner shows the attitude of the State that it cannot tolerate any kind of dissent, which is the most cherished right in a democracy guaranteed by Article 19 of the Constitution. This shows that the State machinery in T.N. is not only taking an undue interest but is going to any extent in securing the conviction of the accused by any means and to stifle even publication of any article or expression of dissent in the media or press, interview by journalists or persons who have held high positions in public life and are wholly unconnected with the criminal case. (Para 23)

The affidavits and the documents placed on record conclusively establish that a serious attempt has been made by the State machinery to launch criminal prosecution against lawyers, who may be even remotely connected with the defence of the accused. The police submitted charge-sheet against two lady lawyers (juniors of the counsel for the accused) under various sections of IPC including Section 201 IPC when even accepting every word in the FIR lodged, no offence under the said provision is made out. The Superintendent of Police, SIT and the Police Inspector connected with the investigation even went to the extent of prompting the approver R to make insinuation against a very Senior Counsel KD who has been practising for over 43 years and is appearing as counsel for the petitioner. R during his cross-examination made a statement at the instance of the head of the Special Investigation Team (SIT) that KD met his wife at his house and had threatened her that R should not give any statement against the petitioner. (Paras 23 and 9)

Article 22(1) of the Constitution gives a guarantee to a person arrested and detained to be defended by a legal practitioner of his choice. Section 303 CrPC, 1973 says that any person accused of an offence before a criminal court or against whom proceedings are instituted under the Code, may of right be defended by a pleader of his choice. Even under the British rule when the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 was enacted, Section 340(1) thereof gave a similar right to an accused. It is elementary that if a lawyer whom the accused has engaged for his defence is put under a threat of criminal prosecution he can hardly discharge his professional duty of defending his client in a fearless manner. A senior and respected counsel is bound to get unnerved if an insinuation is made against him in court that he approached the wife of a witness for not giving evidence against the accused in the court. From the material placed the court is prima facie satisfied that a situation has arisen in the present case wherein the lawyers engaged by the petitioner and other co-accused cannot perform their professional duty in a proper and dignified manner on account of various hurdles created by the State machinery. No lawyer would like to get associated with a case where a slur is made on his character and conduct and the reputation, which he has earned by maintaining high professional standards for a long period, is sought to be damaged. Any dignified lawyer would not agree to conduct a case on behalf of the accused in such an atmosphere and even if he does so, he would not be able to discharge his duties properly on account of threat to his personal reputation. The lawyers would be more concerned with shielding their own reputation or their liberty rather than cross-examining the prosecution witnesses for eliciting the truth. The constant fear of not causing any annoyance to the prosecution witnesses specially those of the Police Department would loom large over their minds vitally affecting the defence of the accused. This is bound to result in miscarriage of justice for the accused. Institution of the criminal case against the junior lawyers, whose seniors are appearing as counsel for the accused, undoubtedly shows that in the prevailing conditions the accused will be seriously handicapped in defending themselves on account of threat and intimidation to their counsel. (Paras 23 and 12)

Further, passing of the detention order against 16 co-accused soon after grant of bail to the petitioner by the Supreme Court, which order could be of some support in seeking parity or otherwise for securing bail in the present murder case, is a clear pointer to the fact that the State wanted to deprive them of any chance to secure release from custody. (Para 23)

That apart, the order of the High Court allowing the writ petition and setting aside the direction issued regarding freezing of the accounts has attained finality as the same has not been challenged in any higher forum. The High Court rightly observed that an organisation (Mutt) cannot be paralysed or closed down by issuing a direction under Section 102 CrPC only for the reason that the head of the Mutt and a few office-bearers are alleged to be involved in some offence. The freezing of all the accounts of the Mutt and its associated trusts and endowments is a clear pointer to the fact that the State machinery anyhow wants to paralyse the entire working of the Mutt and the associated trusts and endowments in order to put pressure upon the petitioner and other co-accused who are in any manner connected with the Mutt so that they may not be able to defend themselves. It is indeed surprising that in spite of the clear language used in sub-section (1) of Section 102 CrPC to the effect — any police officer may seize any property which may be alleged or suspected to have been stolen, or which may be found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any office — all the 183 accounts were frozen merely on the ground that the head of the Mutt was involved in the murder case. The action of freezing the accounts demonstrates as to what extent the State machinery can go while prosecuting the petitioner in the present case. (Paras 23 and 15)

On facts, the petitioner and other co-accused of the case have a reasonable apprehension that they will not get justice in the State of T.N. It is clarified that the Court is casting no reflection on the district judiciary in the State of T.N. But it is the actions of the prosecuting agency and the State machinery, which are responsible for creating a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner and other co-accused that they will not get justice if the trial is held in any place inside the State of T.N. Therefore, the interest of justice requires that the trial may be transferred to a place outside the State of T.N. (Para 24)

Now the question which arises for consideration is as to where the sessions case should be transferred. While directing transfer of a criminal case the language spoken by the witnesses assumes great importance as translation of deposition of a witness apart from being a difficult job, often does not carry the same sense which the witness wants to convey. The convenience of the prosecuting agency, especially in a case where there are a large number of witnesses and documents has also an important bearing. Hence, the instant case is transferred from the State of T.N. to Pondicherry as the language spoken in Pondicherry is same i.e. Tamil and it is only at a short distance from the place where the trial is pending. (Para 25). Sri Jayendra Saraswathy Swamigal (II) v. State of T.N., (2005) 8 SCC 771.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 26-10-2005]

K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882; Gurcharan Das Chadha v. State of Rajasthan, (1966) 2 SCR 678: AIR 1966 SC 1418: 1966 Cri LJ 1071; Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048, considered

Followed in Jayendra Saraswati Swamigal (3) v. State of T.N., (2008) 10 SCC 180*

[6105] — S. 406 — Grounds for transfer — Fairness of trial doubtful — Held, when it is shown that public confidence in fairness of a particular trial is likely to be seriously undermined, for any reason whatsoever, S. 406 empowers Supreme Court to transfer any case or appeal to meet ends of justice

A criminal trial is a judicial examination of evidence with the object of punishing the offenders on a proper proof of relevant facts, the core question being the guilt or innocence of the accused. Hence, a criminal trial, which may result in depriving a person of not only his personal liberty but also his life has to be unbiased, and without any prejudice for or against the accused. An impartial and uninfluenced trial is the fundamental requirement of a fair trial, the first and the foremost imperative of the criminal justice delivery system. If a criminal trial is not free and fair, the criminal justice system would undoubtedly be at stake, eroding the confidence of a common man in the system, which would not augur well for the society at large. Therefore, as and when it is shown that the public confidence in the fairness of a particular trial is likely to be seriously undermined, for any reason whatsoever, Section 406 CrPC empowers the Supreme Court to transfer any case or appeal to meet the ends of justice. (Paras 19 and 21). Nahar Singh Yadav v. Union of India, (2011) 1 SCC 307.

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, V.S. Sirpurkar and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-2010]

Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999; Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934, relied on [6106] — S. 406 — Transfer of cases — Factors to be considered — Directions that may be passed — Large number of cases filed by parties against each other which were pending in different courts of Punjab and Haryana and Chandigarh — Petitioner seeking transfer of multiple cases by and against him to the Delhi High Court or any other High Court or courts subordinate to such High Court from Punjab and Haryana High Court and/or courts subordinate thereto, apprehending that justice would not be done; and since all cases arose out of the same transaction, contending that interest of justice would be subserved if all matters were clubbed together to avoid multiplicity of proceedings — Held, in exercising power under S. 406, indisputably convenience of parties, including witnesses to be produced at the trial is a relevant consideration therefor — On facts, apprehension expressed by petitioner did not appear to be well founded and it was undoubted that courts concerned would act impartially and petitioner Company, its Directors and officers facing trial would be dealt with very fairly — However, District Judges of Chandigarh and Ludhiana directed to consider desirability of transferring all criminal matters (as far as practicable and legally permissible) to one court so as to enable them to be disposed of one after the other — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 420, 468, 471, 504, 506, 382 and 120-B (Paras 1, 9, 10 and 14 to 16). Shree Baidyanath Ayurved Bhawan (P) Ltd. v. State of Punjab, (2009) 8 SCC 389: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 884: 2009 Cri LJ 4107: (2009) 81 AIC 40 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2009]

Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048, followed

[6107] — S. 406 — Transfer — Relevant considerations for allowing — Dispensation of justice — Case law discussed — Reiterated, there must be reasonable apprehension on part of a party that justice may not be done — Mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done, cannot be basis for transfer

It is true that there must be reasonable apprehension on the part of the party to a case that justice may not be done and mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done cannot be the basis for transfer. However, there is no manner of doubt that the reasonable apprehension that there would be failure of justice and acquittal of the accused only because the witnesses are threatened is made out by the petitioner. (Paras 23 and 24). Vikas Kumar Roorkewal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2011) 2 SCC 178.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-2011]

Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048; Gurcharan Dass Chadha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1966 SC 1418: 1966 Cri LJ 1071; Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934; K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882, relied on [6108] — S. 406 — Power of Supreme Court to transfer case — Scope — Circumstances in which such power may be exercised, restated — Provident Fund Scam involving Judges and judicial officers — Held, power under S. 406 is to be exercised sparingly and with great circumspection — Prayer for transfer should be allowed only when there is a well-substantiated apprehension that justice will not be dispensed impartially, objectively and without any bias or where it is necessary to provide credibility to trial — On facts held, apprehension entertained by CBI that trial of case at Ghaziabad may not be fair, resulting in miscarriage of justice, is misplaced and cannot be accepted — Apprehension based on a bald allegation that since trial Judge and some of the named accused had been close associates at some point of time and that some of witnesses were judicial officers, trial at Ghaziabad would be biased and not fair, cannot be accepted — If such bald allegations are accepted without something more substantial it would seriously undermine credibility and independence of entire judiciary of a State (Paras 22 and 25 to 30). Nahar Singh Yadav v. Union of India, (2011) 1 SCC 307.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, V.S. Sirpurkar and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-2010]

Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048; K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882; Amarinder Singh v. Parkash Singh Badal, (2009) 6 SCC 260: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 971; R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293, considered

A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372, referred to [6109] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — Parties submitting that they had no objection if the case pending in court of Special Judge, Ambala, is transferred to Special Court at Shimla (H.P.) — Accordingly transfer directed (Paras 1 and 2). CBI v. Brijinder Rai, (2008) 17 SCC 758: 2008 Cri LJ 4596: (2009) 1 ECrN 54 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-2008]

[6110] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal proceedings — On facts, validity of — Deceased allegedly committed suicide at her matrimonial house — Appellant 2, father-in-law of deceased, informed police of C about the unnatural death, pursuant whereto, case under S. 174 CrPC registered — However, father of deceased lodged a complaint with police of K, on the basis of which an FIR under S. 304-B r/w S. 34 IPC lodged, because of which, Appellant 1, husband of deceased, arrested — Appellants' application under S. 482 CrPC, inter alia, contending that police station of K had no jurisdiction to conduct an investigation in view of S. 177 CrPC and that FIR having already been lodged by Appellant 2, the second FIR not maintainable, dismissed by High Court — Sustainability — In view of the fact that police at C had already been informed, although stricto sensu, the same cannot be construed to be an FIR within the meaning of provisions of S. 154 CrPC, and thus, FIR lodged at police station of K was maintainable — Held, in the peculiarity of instant case, on specific defence of appellant-accused about mental illness of deceased, the interest of justice would be subserved if investigation and consequent trial is transferred to police officer-in-charge, police station of C — All materials collected by police station of K, shall be transferred to officer-in-charge, police station of C — Officer-in-charge, police station of K, to ensure that in the event a charge-sheet is filed and cognizance of offence under S. 304-B IPC is taken, witnesses available within his jurisdiction shall be produced — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B r/w S. 34 (Paras 1, 5 to 7, 20 and 21). Premkumar v. State of Kerala, (2008) 17 SCC 264: (2009) 75 AIC 12 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-12-2008]

Y. Abraham Ajith v. Inspector of Police, (2004) 8 SCC 100: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2134; Asit Bhattacharjee v. Hanuman Prasad Ojha, (2007) 5 SCC 786: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 31; Naresh Kavarchand Khatri v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 8 SCC 300: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 614, relied on

Vidhya Devi v. State of Haryana, (2004) 9 SCC 476: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1473, considered

[6111] — S. 406 — Transfer of divorce petition — Convenience of wife should be looked into — Transfer of suits pending in courts in Ghaziabad (U.P.) and Shahdara (Delhi) to court in Ludhiana (Punjab) sought on grounds of she being unable to bear litigation and travelling expenses, she having two minor school going children whom she cannot leave behind alone and she suffering from hyperthyroid and incisional hernia and advised surgery — Husband willing to pay the travelling expenses — Held, grounds set out by wife sufficient for transfer — Directed accordingly. Lalita v. Kulwinder Kumar, (2007) 15 SCC 667.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-1-2005]

[6112] — S. 406 — Transfer petitions — Validity of — Criteria for transferring cases, discussed — On facts, petitioner seeking transfer of criminal cases pending before trial court at Rampur to trial court at Delhi or Chandigarh — Sustainability — Held, petitioner making vague and unfounded allegations in transfer applications against Respondent 2 — Hence, prayer for transfer not accepted — Accordingly, transfer petitions dismissed

The first ground urged by the petitioner is that if the petitioner has to go to Rampur to attend the proceedings in the trial court, her safety would be in danger or she apprehends physical harm to herself from Respondent 2 or anti-social elements. This is too nebulous a ground for transferring the cases from the trial court, Rampur to the court of competent jurisdiction at Delhi or Chandigarh. The petitioner has not substantiated her apprehension of threat or bodily harm or intimidation from Respondent 2 or other anti-social elements as alleged by her. She has been going to Rampur in the past and attended the court proceedings before the Magistrate and the Collector but no untoward incident was ever brought to the notice of the police or the CJM by her against Respondent 2. If the petitioner fears any sort of threat to her life, she can report the matter to the police or the court which, in its turn, can after considering the needs of the situation, pass orders according to law including appropriate directions for police protection. (Para 18)

The next plea of illness of the petitioner is not supported by medical evidence. The petitioner has been travelling all the way from USA to India and going to Rampur to look after the landed property of her husband and daughter as their attorney. She has been going and attending the cases in the High Court, Allahabad and in the civil court at Delhi pending inter se the petitioner and Respondent 2. The petitioner and Respondent 2, both practically seem to be of the same age group. The petitioner has also filed criminal case against Respondent 2 at Chandigarh and he has been attending the proceedings of the said case going all the way from Rampur and covering a distance of about 500 km as averred by him in his counter-affidavit. (Para 19)

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

The petitioner is a person of means and it will not be difficult for her to attend the hearing of the criminal cases pending in the trial court, Rampur. The comparative inconvenience of the litigant parties are not the only criterion for transferring the cases from one State to another State, but the court has to visualise the comparative inconvenience and hardships likely to be caused to the witnesses besides the burden to be borne by the State exchequer in making payment of travelling and other expenses of the official and non-official witnesses who will have to travel by train from Rampur to Delhi or Chandigarh, as the case may be, for attending the court proceedings if the cases are ordered to be transferred to the transferee court. The distance between Rampur and Delhi is about 400-500 km. There is one more factor viz. that the criminal courts situated at Delhi or Chandigarh are already overburdened with the pendency of the cases and it would not be in the interest of the litigating parties as well as in the interest of justice to add more cases to the dockets of the transferee courts to keep the trial of those cases pending for decades. (Para 20)

In the circumstances, on the basis of vague and unfounded allegations made by the petitioner in the transfer applications against the respondent, the prayer of the petitioner for transferring the trial of cases pending in the trial court, Rampur, either to the trial court, Delhi, or to Chandigarh, is not accepted. (Para 20)

In the result, for the abovesaid reasons, these transfer petitions are dismissed accordingly. (Para 21). Parminder Kaur v. State of U.P., (2007) 15 SCC 307.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-2007]

[6113] — S. 406 — Transfer — Considerations — Impleadment of all parties — Right of accused to fair trial and opportunity to defend — Paramount consideration — Convenience of party — Irrelevant — Proceedings under S. 498-A IPC against husband and five others — Only husband impleaded as respondent in transfer petition while others not made parties thereto — Held, transfer petition liable to be dismissed on that ground alone — Further held, in matrimonial proceedings indulgence is shown to wife and ordinarily proceedings may be transferred to suit her convenience — But a criminal case stands on different footing — Accused may not be able to attend court proceedings at transferred court for various reasons and consequences of non-appearance of accused would be drastic — In criminal proceedings, right of accused to fair trial and proper opportunity to defend himself cannot be ignored for convenience of complainant simply because she happens to be the estranged wife — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A (Paras 4 to 7). Jyoti Mishra v. Dhananjaya Mishra, (2010) 8 SCC 803.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Aftab Alam and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2010]

[6114] — S. 406 — Criminal cases pending against CM of State of T.N. (Respondent 2) and her close relatives/associates — Likelihood of bias in the conduct of prosecution — Petitions filed by political opponent of Respondent 2 for transfer of said cases to other State making allegation of — During trial, defence recalling 76 PWs for cross-examination — Public Prosecutor (PP) appointed by Government of Respondent 2 neither objecting nor giving consent to it — 64 PWs resiling from their previous statement-in-chief — No attempt by PP to declare them hostile and/or to take any step under S. 154, Evidence Act — Facts indicating that PP acted hand in glove with the accused — Reasonable apprehension of likelihood of failure of justice in the minds of public at large — Strong indication that the process of justice was being subverted — Held, transfer petitions liable to be allowed — Cases transferred to State of Karnataka with necessary directions required in that regard

The present two petitions under Section 406 CrPC were filed before the Supreme Court for transfer of CC No. 7 of 1997 and CC No. 2 of 2001 pending on the file of the XIth Additional Sessions Judge (Special Court No. 1), Chennai in the State of Tamil Nadu to a court of equal and competent jurisdiction in any other State.

The said two cases were filed against the second respondent (Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu) and others (who were her close relatives or associates) in respect of the offences under Section 120 IPC and Section 13(2) read with Section 13(1)(e) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. The transfer of the said cases was sought on the ground that the second respondent being the Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu, there was prevalent apprehension in the mind of the public at large that the trial in those cases was neither free nor fair with the new Public Prosecutor appointed by the Government of the second respondent. The petitioner submitted that as many as 76

PWs had been recalled for cross-examination on the ground that counsel appearing for the respondents or some of them had earlier been busy in some other case filed against them. Thus, it was alleged (i) that the Public Prosecutor did not object and/or give consent to the witnesses being recalled, (ii) that out of total of 76 PWs, 64 PWs resiled from their previous statement-in-chief, (iii) that the Public Prosecutor had not made any attempt to declare them hostile and/or to cross-examine them by resorting to Section 154 of the Evidence Act, (iv) that no attempt had been made to see that court takes action against them for perjury, (v) that the presence of the second respondent had been dispensed with during her examination under Section 313 CrPC and instead a questionnaire was sent to her for reply, and (vi) that the procedure so adopted was unknown to law and the Public Prosecutor had not objected to the application of Respondent 2 for dispensing with her presence at the time of examination under Section 313 CrPC.

Allowing the transfer petitions,

Held :

It is undisputed that 76 witnesses have been recalled. Many of them had earlier been cross-examined. The witnesses were recalled as Senior Counsel for the second respondent had been busy attending to some other case filed against her when they were first examined. This could hardly have been a ground for recall of witnesses. The fact that it is done after the second respondent assumed power as the Chief Minister of the State and the Public Prosecutor appointed by her Government did not oppose and/or give consent to the application for recall of witnesses is indicative of how judicial process is being subverted. This gets reinforced by the fact that even when witness after witness have resiled from what they had stated in the evidence-in-chief, yet no steps have been taken by the Public Prosecutor to resort to Section 154 of the Evidence Act. That apart, no application had been made by the Public Prosecutor for taking action against the said witnesses for perjury. The said facts indicate that the trial is not proceeding fairly. It was the duty of the Public Prosecutor to have first strenuously opposed any application for recall and in any event to have confronted the witnesses with their statements recorded under Section 161 CrPC and their examination-in-chief. It does appear that the new Public Prosecutor is hand in glove with the accused thereby creating a reasonable apprehension of likelihood of failure of justice in the minds of the public at large. There is strong indication that the process of justice is being subverted. (Paras 20 and 29)

In the present case, the circumstances are such as to create reasonable apprehension in the minds of the public at large in general and the petitioner in particular that there is every likelihood of failure of justice. Hence, it is expedient in the ends of justice to allow these petitions. (Paras 30 and 34)

So far as the State to which these cases should be transferred is concerned, considering the convenience of the parties, the State of Karnataka would be most convenient due to its proximity to Tamil Nadu. (Para 34). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882: AIR 2004 SC 524: 2004 Cri LJ 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

Gurcharan Dass Chadha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1966 SC 1418: (1966) 2 SCR 678: 1966 Cri LJ 1071; Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934; Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048, relied on

[6115] — Ss. 406, 407 and 177 — Transfer of case from one place to another — Apprehension of miscarriage of justice or bias, due to which trial would not be conducted fairly at the existing place, and public confidence would be seriously undermined — Transfer on ground of — When available — Held, the apprehension should not be imaginary — It should be real and reasonable — Trial against incumbent Chief Minister, his son who was Deputy Chief Minister and other relatives/close associates of the Chief Minister, on the charge of corruption — Petition for transfer filed by a political rival, pointing out certain set-backs in the trial and perceived anomalies in conducting the trial after incumbent Chief Minister assumed office — On appreciation of relevant facts (without going into merits), Supreme Court finding that apprehension was not real — On the contrary, many of the prosecution witnesses, including the complainant, were disowning the statements already made by them during the period political rival was the Chief Minister — Shifting of trial from a State of Punjab court to a court in Delhi therefore not granted

Respondent 1 was the Chief Minister of Punjab from 1997 to sometime in February 2002, and thereafter the petitioner became the Chief Minister of the said State, and then again sometime in February 2007, Respondent 1 became the Chief Minister. Petitioner and Respondent 1 belonged to different political parties, namely, Indian National Congress and Shiromani Akali Dal respectively. When Respondent 1 was the Chief Minister during the period 1997-2002, petitioner wrote a letter to Respondent 1 alleging that Respondent 1 had indulged in corruption and possessed assets disproportionate to his known sources of income. Respondent 1's son, who was also a political leader, filed defamation case against petitioner.

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

When the petitioner became the Chief Minister in February 2002, an FIR dated 24-6-2003 was lodged against Respondent 1, his son (Respondent 2 herein), some close relatives and associates of Respondent 1. FIR was more or less a repetition of allegations which the petitioner had made earlier in his letter addressed to Respondent 1. On the basis of this FIR, charge-sheet was filed on 22-11-2003 citing 138 witnesses. A supplementary charge-sheet was filed on 4-1-2004.

However, when Respondent 1 again became the Chief Minister in February 2007, it was alleged that the trial against him and his relatives/associates started suffering set-back due to Respondent 1's influence. 35 out of 59 witnesses were declared hostile. It was also alleged that the Public Prosecutor was also not conducting the case properly. The petitioner and one more person therefore filed two petitions under Section 406 CrPC, seeking an order from the Supreme Court for transfer of the case from Punjab to Delhi. Earlier, similar petition for transfer had been dismissed by the High Court.

The Supreme Court considered all relevant facts and found that a number of witnesses had disowned their earlier statements. Even the complainant who was examined as PW 56, disowned his complaint and asserted that the complaint was not filed by him though he admitted his signature found therein. All important witnesses, particularly government officials, stated that they were forced to make false statements at the time of registering the case during petitioner's time as Chief Minister. Only the statements given by them before the court were true.

Dismissing the transfer petitions,

Held :

Criminal prosecution, if otherwise, justifiable and based upon adequate evidence does not become vitiated on account of mala fides or political mandate of the informant or the complainant. However, if justifiable and reasonable apprehension of miscarriage of justice and likelihood of bias is established, the proceeding has to be transferred elsewhere by exercise of power under Section 406 CrPC. For transfer of a criminal case, there must be a reasonable apprehension on the part of the party to a case that justice will not be done. Justice should not only be done but it should be seen to be done. Mere allegations that there is apprehension that justice will not be done in a given case does not suffice. The court has further to see whether the apprehension alleged is reasonable or not. The apprehension must not only be entertained but must appear to the court to be a reasonable apprehension. (Paras 17 and 18)

When it is shown that the public confidence in the fairness of a trial would be seriously undermined, aggrieved party can seek transfer of a case within the State under Section 407 and anywhere in the country under Section 406 CrPC. However, the apprehension of not getting a fair and impartial inquiry or trial is required to be reasonable and not imaginary. The apprehension must appear to the court to be a reasonable one. (Paras 19 and 20)

Mere allegation that there is an apprehension that justice will not be done in a given case alone does not suffice. Considering the totality of all the circumstances, a secular, democratic Government, governed by the rule of law, in the State of Punjab is responsible for ensuring free, fair and impartial trial to the accused, notwithstanding the nature of the accusations made against them. Apprehension entertained by the petitioners cannot be construed as reasonable and the case cannot be transferred on a mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done. (Para 51)

Though, in a transfer petition the court is not expected to go into the veracity of the statement of the witnesses and their evidential value, since both sides cited several instances, the same have been considered. Ultimately, it is upon the Presiding Officer/Special Judge and not the court hearing the transfer petition to evaluate the testimonies of the witnesses and arrive at a conclusion one way or other depending on the charges levelled against the accused. It would not be fair on the part of the court either to assess and arrive at an opinion about the same. On analysis of all the material, the transfer of the case as sought for, at this stage, is not only against the interest of prosecution but also against the interest of the other accused persons, the prosecution witnesses and the convenience of all concerned in the matter. (Paras 48, 46 and 24)

The Presiding Officer of the Special Court in the present case is conscious of his power and knows how to conduct a fair trial at the same place. (Para 50)

Taking into consideration the entire facts and circumstances of the case and the materials on record, the petitioners have not made out a case that they have reasonable apprehension of not availing justice in the State of Punjab. (Para 52). Amarinder Singh v. Parkash Singh Badal, (2009) 6 SCC 260. Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and P. Sathasivam and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-5-2009]

Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048; Jayendra Saraswathy Swamigal (II) v. State of T.N., (2005) 8 SCC 771: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 1, relied on

Prakash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 193, referred to

K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882; S.K. Shukla v. State of U.P., (2006) 1 SCC 314: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 366; Jayendra Saraswati Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2008) 10 SCC 180: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 27, distinguished [6116] — S. 406 — Transfer — Grounds for and factors to be considered — Corruption case — Situs of alleged acts of corruption — Inconvenience of parties — Power of accused to influence trial at place to which transfer sought — Main accused not seeking transfer to another alternative place, nor such latter transfer beneficial to anyone — Relevance — Petitioners contending that they hail from Rajasthan and most of the witnesses also from Rajasthan, thus, for convenience, case pending before Special Judge, CBI, Greater Mumbai be transferred to Jaipur, Rajasthan — Respondents submitting that main accused a very influential person in Rajasthan — Strong apprehension of no fair trial in Rajasthan — Various movable properties found in Mumbai — Main accused posted in Mumbai from 2001 to end of check period i.e. 4-10-2005, period during which most of the properties were allegedly acquired — Witnesses to be examined also from Mumbai — Held, inconvenience is insufficient as a ground for transfer — There must be "reasonable apprehension" on part of a party to a case that justice may not be done — Mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done, cannot be the basis of transfer — It must be shown that trial in forum concerned will result in failure of justice — Penal Code, 1860, S. 109 r/w S. 193 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(e) — CPC, 1908, S. 25

Dismissing the transfer petition,

Held:

In the case on hand, except convenience, the petitioners have not pressed into service any other ground for transfer. (Para 10)

Respondents 1 and 2 (CBI), submit, that the main accused Shri B.R. Meena is a very influential person in the State of Rajasthan and there is strong apprehension that due to influence of Shri B.R. Meena, there would be no fair trial at Jaipur or any other place in the State of Rajasthan. Various movable properties have been found in Mumbai and the main accused, Shri B.R. Meena, was posted in Mumbai from 2001 to the end of the check period i.e. 4-10-2005 and this is the period during which most of the properties were allegedly acquired by him and his family members. Witnesses to be examined are not only from Jaipur, Rajasthan, but also from various other places including Mumbai. Though the petitioners may have a little inconvenience, the mere inconvenience may not be sufficient ground for the exercise of power of transfer but it must be shown that the trial in the chosen forum will result in failure of justice. (Paras 11 and 14)

Except the plea of inconvenience on the ground that they have to come all the way from Rajasthan no other reason was pressed into service. Even, the request for transfer to Delhi cannot be accepted since it would not be beneficial either to the petitioners or to the prosecution. In fact, the main accused, Respondents 3 and 4 have not filed any petition seeking transfer. In such circumstances, the plea of the petitioners for transfer of the case from the Court of Special Judge, CBI, Greater Mumbai to Special Judge, CBI, Jaipur on the ground of inconvenience cannot be accepted. Transfer petition is dismissed. (Para 15). Bhiaru Ram v. CBI, (2010) 7 SCC 799.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-2010]

D.A.V. Boys Sr. Sec. School v. D.A.V. College Managing Committee, (2010) 8 SCC 401, relied on [6117] — Ss. 406 and 407 — Transfer of criminal case — When can be allowed — Relevant considerations — Public confidence in fair trial should be shown to be seriously undermined in case of non-transfer — Convenience of the parties, witnesses and larger interest of the society are also relevant considerations — Wild allegation of existence of communally surcharged atmosphere by itself not enough — It has to be considered in the light of accusations made and nature of crime committed by the person seeking the transfer — Allegation of the accused in Coimbatore serial bomb blast case that atmosphere in the State of T.N. in general and in Coimbatore in particular being so communally surcharged that his fair and impartial trial there would be seriously impaired, held on facts, not acceptable, more so having regard to the huge amount spent by the State Government for conducting a smooth, speedy, fair and impartial trial at Coimbatore — Submission that accused would not get any assistance of lawyers of his choice due to rivalry of fundamentalists also not acceptable — Hence accused's prayer for transfer of the criminal case from Coimbatore Court to any Sessions Court in State of Kerala or at least to some other place in the State of T.N. cannot be allowed

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

The purpose of the criminal trial is to dispense fair and impartial justice uninfluenced by extraneous considerations. When it is shown that public confidence in the fairness of a trial would be seriously undermined, any party can seek the transfer of a case within the State under Section 407 and anywhere in the country under Section 406 CrPC. The apprehension of not getting a fair and impartial inquiry or trial is required to be reasonable and not imaginary based upon conjectures and surmises. If it appears that the dispensation of criminal justice is not possible impartially and objectively and without any bias, before any court or even at any place, the appropriate court may transfer the case to another court where it feels that holding of fair and proper trial is conducive. No universal or hard and fast rules can be prescribed for deciding a transfer petition which has always to be decided on the basis of the facts of each case. (Para 7)

Convenience of the parties including the witnesses to be produced at the trial is also a relevant consideration for deciding the transfer petition. The convenience of the parties does not necessarily mean the convenience of the petitioners alone who approached the court on misconceived notions of apprehension. Convenience for the purposes of transfer means the convenience of the prosecution, other accused, the witnesses and the larger interest of the society. (Para 7)

The mere existence of a surcharged atmosphere without there being proof of inability for holding fair and impartial trial cannot be made a ground for transfer of a case. The alleged communally surcharged atmosphere has to be considered in the light of the accusations made and the nature of the crime committed by the accused seeking transfer of his case. It will be unsafe to hold that as and when accusations are made regarding the existence of a surcharged communal atmosphere, the case should be transferred from the area where existence of such surcharged atmosphere is alleged. The Supreme Court had not concluded so generally in Francis case. (Para 8)

The petitioners in the instant case have made wild and general allegations of the surcharged atmosphere against a particular community of the society in the whole of the State of Tamil Nadu. In a secular, democratic country governed by the rule of law, the appropriate State Government is responsible for ensuring free, fair and impartial trial to the accused notwithstanding the nature of accusations made against them. Nothing has been placed on record nor was it possible to allege that the whole of the State of Tamil Nadu has become a communal State which cannot ensure a free, fair and impartial trial against the petitioners. If such a situation is shown to be existing, the State Government has no constitutional and moral right to rule the State as it would amount to perpetuating the continuance of a Government against the provisions of the Constitution which ensures and guarantees a secular, democratic system of governance. The respondents have very emphatically submitted and there is no reason to doubt that the atmosphere in the State is not communally surcharged to the extent that holding of a criminal trial against the petitioners and others is not possible in any part of the State. Even if some communal tension is shown to be in existence as perhaps is likely to be in view of the nature of the offence committed and the accusations made against the petitioner and other accused persons, it is the obligation of the State Government to ensure the safety and security of the accused persons to stand a free and impartial trial. It is true that in the detention order dated 7-7-1998 against the petitioner, the Commissioner of Police had mentioned that on account of the communal riots Coimbatore city had become communally hypersensitive but those averments cannot be stretched to hold firstly that the whole State of Tamil Nadu has become communally surcharged and secondly that Coimbatore city itself continues to be so communally hypersensitive till date that the trial against the petitioners and other accused persons is not likely to be free, fair and impartial. (Para 9)

There is no substance in the submission that there existed feelings in Tamil Nadu in general or in Chennai and Coimbatore in particular, that no patriotic lawyer would appear and plead for any of the accused persons in the bomb blast cases, in view of the names of advocates who are stated to have already appeared for the accused in the courts at Coimbatore and also before the High Court of Judicature at Chennai, annexed by the respondents. The petitioners and other accused are adequately represented in the Court and even if not, they can get the legal services from Palghat in Kerala where they want the case to be transferred. It may be noticed that Palghat is approximately 40 kilometres from Coimbatore and it is not difficult for any number of advocates to travel or stay at Coimbatore during the conduct of the trial. If any advocate from outside the State of Tamil Nadu appears for any of the accused, the State Government shall provide him appropriate security to ensure him the discharge of his professional obligation towards the accused persons facing the trial in the case filed against them. (Paras 3 and 10)

It is also not possible to accept the submission that at least the trial of the case be ordered to be conducted at some other place in the State of Tamil Nadu preferably at Chennai, Thirunalveli or Salem. At present there exists conducive atmosphere at Coimbatore where a free, fair and impartial trial is possible to be conducted against the accused persons. The Court cannot lose sight of the fact that despite the petitioners there are 152 other accused persons out of which more than 150 are from Coimbatore and the State Government have made elaborate arrangements for their stay in Central Prison, Coimbatore by making provision of having specified cells for the accused persons. The State Government has incurred expenses of Rs. 22.40 lakhs for remodelling the building adjacent to Central Prison to accommodate the Special Court for which even a judicial officer has been appointed who is stated to have taken charge on 7-4-2000. Lakhs of rupees are shown to have been spent for the conduct of a smooth, speedy, fair and impartial trial. The statement made on behalf of the respondents that in Coimbatore Central Prison separate cells have been renovated for accommodation of 168 accused persons in the instant case and such a facility is not available elsewhere in any other prison in that State cannot also be lost sight of. The transfer of the case, at this stage, is not only against the interests of the prosecution but also against the interests of the other accused persons, the prosecution witnesses and the convenience of all concerned in the matter. A fair and speedy trial of the case is possible at Coimbatore and the accused persons including the petitioners need not have any cause for apprehension. (Paras 11 and 12). Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048: AIR 2000 SC 2293: 2000 Cri LJ 3480.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2000]

G.X. Francis v. Banke Bihari Singh, AIR 1958 SC 309: 1958 Cri LJ 569, explained and distinguished

[6118] — S. 406 — Transfer of CBI case from Manipur to Delhi — Considerations for — Killings on abduction by militants — Ethnic tension — Ease of participation by victims' near relatives in trial — Relevance — Held, in order to ensure that fair trial takes place, interests of all stakeholders, namely, the accused, witnesses, prosecutors, near relatives of victim, as well as society at large need to be accounted for — In instant case, certain degree of divergence in interests of respective stakeholders discernible — However, considering the fact that there existed a real possibility of physical attack on respondent-accused as long as he was in Manipur, and killings had taken place allegedly based on ethnicity and where opinions were sharply divided on justness of causes espoused by NSCN(IM) to which respondent-accused belonged which created risk of intimidation of witnesses and undue prejudice seeping into minds of those involved in legal proceedings in different capacities, trial directed to be conducted in Delhi — As far as near relatives of deceased were concerned, CBI as well as Government of Manipur directed to render full assistance to victims' legal heirs for legal representation by engaging advocates of their choice — Further, to-and-fro journey, stay, etc. for the cited witnesses and one member of deceased's family directed to be arranged on dates of hearing — Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill, 2008, Ss. 2 and 3 (Paras 15 to 23)

On 13-2-2009, one Dr. T (SDO, Kasom Khullen, District Ukhrul) along with five staff members were abducted by militants. The next day, three of the abducted persons were released, while dead bodies of T and two others were recovered on 17-2-2009. Having regard to seriousness of the crime, investigation was transferred to CBI. The respondent, who was an activist of NSCN(IM), a militant organisation, was arrested.

Among the government employees abducted, three persons released belonged to Naga ethnicity, while the deceased were of Metei ethnicity. In addition to social unrest created in wake of killings, there was also an apprehension of conflict between these communities since alleged killers were of Naga ethnicity. Hence, CBI urged for transfer of trial to Delhi in view of specific threat to the life of the respondent-accused which could frustrate conduction of fair trial. However, near relatives of the deceased objected to transfer on the ground that it would be difficult for them to participate in trial proceedings, either by way of legal representation or any other conceivable method.

Allowing the transfer petition, the Supreme Court held as above. CBI v. Hopeson Ningshen, (2010) 5 SCC 115.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and Deepak Verma and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2010]

Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934; Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999, relied on [6119] — S. 406 — Appellant's application for transfer of criminal case, pending in the Court of District Judge, on ground of apprehension of unfair trial by that Judge — Held, the apprehension not unfounded where the same Judge granted

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

huge costs as lawyer's fee in a civil suit involving the appellant as a party — Hence, the transfer application allowed. Govind Sharan Aggarwal v. Hardeo Sharma Trivedi, (1983) 2 SCC 268: 1983 SCC (Cri) 395.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, A. Varadarajan and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-1981]

[6120] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Considerations involved — Complaint filed by respondent against petitioner under Ss. 499 and 500 IPC in Mumbai — Petitioner staying in Delhi, contending that she would suffer both financial and personal hardship being made to travel to Mumbai for appearance in the case — Prayer for transfer of case to Delhi — On facts and circumstances, held, the case deserves to be transferred to Delhi — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A(2)

The respondent filed a civil suit against the petitioner, her brothers and other relatives; and as alleged by the petitioner he also forged a letter dated 19-12-2006 purporting to have been authored by the petitioner addressed to his friends at Mumbai, making defamatory imputations against him, and on that basis filed a complaint before the Metropolitan Magistrate, Mumbai, praying that the petitioner be summoned, tried and penalised for the offence of defamation. The Magistrate has issued summons to the petitioner in the said case. The petitioner has filed this petition for transfer of the said criminal proceedings to any court in Delhi. The petitioner contends that though the respondent resides in Delhi, he has filed the complaint in Mumbai to put her to hardship, both financially and otherwise as she will be required to travel all the way to Mumbai and appear in the case on several hearings; that the respondent may resort to third-degree methods in Mumbai; and that he may harass her by seeking unnecessary adjournments.

Allowing the petition,

Held :

The case is not being examined on merits. (Para 4)

The petitioner will be put to considerable hardship if she is required to contest the matter in Mumbai. On the facts and circumstances, the case deserves to be transferred to Delhi, as requested by the petitioner. (Paras 5 and 6). Gurpreet Kaur v. Vipin Kumar Gupta, (2008) 1 SCC 231: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 186: (2007) 60 AIC 39 (SC): (2008) 2 Mah LJ 484: (2008) 2 MPLJ 210.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-11-2007]

[6121] — Ss. 406 and 479 — Prosecution launched in Sessions Court against close relations of a High Court Judge — Without accepting the contention regarding possibility of the concerned Judges being biased and without meaning to cause any aspersions on the conduct of the Judges, case transferred to a court outside the State in the interest of all the parties. Hanwant Das v. Vinay Kumar, (1982) 1 SCC 475: 1982 SCC (Cri) 257.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and N.L. Untwalia, J. [Date of decision: 17-3-1980]

[6122] — Ss. 406 and 127 — Transfer of case — Application under S. 127 CrPC directed to be transferred from Faridkot to District Judge, Delhi, since at the instance of the respondent, a related case involving the same parties had already been transferred to District Judge, Delhi by the Supreme Court (Para 2). Neeraj Kumar v. Sonu (Minor), (2005) 12 SCC 345.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-1-2005]

[6123] — S. 406 — Transfer of cases of politically influential persons, to area outside their political influence, to ensure fair trial — In background stated by the petitioner, case transferred from State of U.P. to State of M.P. — Rule of Law — Preservation of — Transfer of criminal cases of politically influential persons, to area outside their political influence, to ensure fair trial

The petitioner has stated that there will be no chance of fair trial in the State of U.P. as most of the witnesses are afraid to speak against the respondents and one witness was even killed as he deposed against these persons. It was also mentioned that the State Government is not serious. The State Government has already withdrawn the POTA cases against the accused persons and directed the Public Prosecutor to withdraw these cases.

Held :

There is likelihood of miscarriage of justice in the above background. Therefore, in the interest of justice both these cases be transferred to any other court where, in a proper atmosphere, the matter can be dealt with fairly. Hence the cases are transferred to a Special Judge in the State of M.P. (Para 35). S.K. Shukla v. State of U.P., (2006) 1 SCC 314: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 366: AIR 2006 SC 413: (2006) 37 AIC 523 (SC): 2006 Cri LJ 148.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-11-2005]

[6124] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Political clout of accused — Apprehension that free and fair trial would be impeded due to political clout of accused, R-2, MLA of party in power in the State — Hence, petitioner complainant (brother of murdered deceased) seeking transfer of murder trial to another State — Petitioner's submission that investigating agencies, in connivance with State Government, wanted to shield R-2 from prosecution — Held, circumstances present justify apprehension of petitioner that perspective of prosecution may become polluted — There is no getting away from fact that R-2 is an MLA and that too belonging to present dispensation — Since justice must not only be done but must also be seen to be done, hence, in order to do fair justice to all parties, trial should be held outside present State — Accordingly, directions for transferring matter to High Court of different State issued, which shall decide place and court before which trial may be conducted — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 307 — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A (Paras 7, 15 and 16). Surendra Pratap Singh v. State of U.P., (2010) 9 SCC 475.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-9-2010]

[6125] — S. 406 — Transfer of case to place of residence of petitioner from another State — Petitioner aged with serious health problems/diseases — Certificates issued by competent authorities produced by petitioner in support of his assertions — Hence, transfer petition allowed and directions given for expeditious disposal (Paras 2, 4 and 5). Harbans Lal & Sons v. Ramson Cycles (P) Ltd., (2009) 4 SCC 16.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-2009]

[6126] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Disposed of in terms of settlement arrived at in between parties — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 498-A r/w S. 34 — Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, S. 13. Rajesh v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 4 SCC 199.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-1-2009]

[6127] — Ss. 406, 257 and 320 — Petition filed for transfer of complaint cases — Compromise of disputes — During course of litigation, parties compromised their disputes by agreeing that pending proceedings shall be withdrawn or quashed — In view of the undertaking of the parties, held, all the cases be deemed to be withdrawn and quashed in the interest of justice under Art. 142 — Constitution of India, Art. 142. Afroz Jahan v. State of Bihar, (2008) 14 SCC 443.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2008]

[6128] — S. 406 — Transfer of cases pending against Chief Minister and others sought by "political opponent" of CM — Objection raised against, on the ground of "political vendetta" — Transfer petition raising reasonable apprehension of likelihood of bias in the dispensation of criminal justice system — Held, could not be rejected on such objection

It has been urged that the petitioner being a political opponent of Respondent 2, these transfer petitions have been launched against Respondent 2 on ground of political vendetta. This submission has no force. In a democracy, the political opponents play an important role both inside and outside the House. They are the watchdogs of the Government in power. It will be their effective weapon to counter the misdeeds and mischiefs of the Government in power. They are the mouthpiece to ventilate the grievances of the public at large, if genuinely and unbiasedly projected. In that view of the matter, being a political opponent, the petitioner is a vitally interested party in the running of the Government or in the administration of criminal justice in the State. The petition lodged by such persons cannot be brushed aside on the allegation of a political vendetta, if otherwise, it is genuine and raises a reasonable apprehension of likelihood of bias in the dispensation of criminal justice system. The petitioner has raised many justifiable and reasonable apprehensions of miscarriage of justice and likelihood of bias, which would require the interference of the Supreme Court under Section 406 CrPC. (Paras 13 and 14). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882: AIR 2004 SC 524: 2004 Cri LJ 583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82; State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426, followed

[6129] — S. 406 — Transfer of complaint case under S. 500 IPC — Petitioner, expressing the inconvenience caused to her in defending the case, seeking transfer of the case from Chandigarh to Mumbai — First respondent, though having a permanent residence at Mumbai, opposing the petition — In view of the petitioner being a lady, transfer petition allowed in favour of the petitioner irrespective of the place of residence of first respondent. Neelam Kanwar v. Devinder Singh Kanwar, (2000) 10 SCC 589: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1507.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2000]

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

[6130] — S. 406 — Transfer of appeals — Grounds — Appeal pending before High Court — Accused-appellant filing an application before CJ for transferring the appeal to another Bench — Omission on the part of CJ to pass an order on such application, held, could not lead to an inference that the accused-appellant would not get justice from the Bench before which the appeal was pending — Hence, could not constitute a ground for transfer of the appeal to another High Court — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A. R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293: AIR 2000 SC 2778: (2000) 3 KLT 425.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-2000]

[6131] — S. 406 — Transfer of appeals — Grounds — Consequent to rejection of accused-appellant's application for adjournment by the High Court, his counsel withdrawing his appearance — In such circumstances, issuance of bailable warrant to the accused-appellant, who was then on bail, to remain present on the date of hearing, held, could not justify an apprehension of denial of justice to the accused-appellant from the Bench concerned — Hence, the issuance of warrant could not be a ground for seeking transfer of the appeal to another High Court — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A

The practice of filing an application by an advocate that he withdraws his appearance on the date of hearing, only for getting the matter adjourned, requires to be strongly discouraged. In such a situation, for seeking the appearance of the petitioner, who was released on bail, there was no alternative for the Court but to issue bailable warrant. Therefore, the course adopted by the Court was justified. Hence, there is not the remotest chance or justification for entertaining apprehension that the petitioner would not get justice if the appeal is decided by the Bench to whom it was assigned. (Para 13). R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293: AIR 2000 SC 2778: (2000) 3 KLT 425.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-2000]

[6132] — S. 406 — Transfer of appeals — Grounds — High Court Judge, before elevation to Bench, having acted as a prosecutor against the accused-appellant in a different matter — Such circumstances, held, did not warrant the inference of such a Judge being biased against the accused-appellant — Hence, did not constitute a good ground for transfer of the appeal to another High Court — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A — CPC, 1908, S. 25

A Judge while practising as an advocate might have appeared in a number of cases, but that would not mean that he would have any personal interest or connection with the said matters or with persons involved therein and would be biased towards them. (Para 11). R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293: AIR 2000 SC 2778: (2000) 3 KLT 425.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-2000]

[6133] — S. 406 — Transfer of appeals — Grounds — Mere allegation by the accused, of apprehension of denial of justice, held, not sufficient — The apprehension must appear to the court to be reasonable, genuine and justifiable — The power of transfer cannot be exercised on hypersensitive grounds or mini-grievances — Else the entire judicial system would be wrecked — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A — CPC, 1908, S. 25

It is true that one of the principles of the administration of justice is that justice should not only be done but it should be seen to have been done. However, a mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done in a given case is not sufficient. Before transferring the case, the court has to find out whether the apprehension appears to be reasonable. To judge the reasonableness of the apprehension, the state of mind of the person who entertains the apprehension is no doubt relevant but that is not all. The apprehension must appear to the court to be reasonable, genuine and justifiable. In the present-day scenario, if these types of applications are entertained, the entire judicial atmosphere would be polluted with such frivolous petitions for various reasons. (Para 10). R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293: AIR 2000 SC 2778: (2000) 3 KLT 425.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-2000]

[6134] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Consideration involved — Complaint filed by respondent alleging offence under S. 498-A IPC and allied offences against petitioners — Petitioners staying at different places (Chennai, Saharanpur and Delhi) praying for transfer of the complaint case from Patna to Bhopal where respondent's daughter, wife of Petitioner 1 working — Respondent contending that his daughter's contract of service in a company at Bhopal would expire after nine months and she would face difficulty in case of transfer of the matter to Bhopal — Having regard to facts and circumstances of the case, held, it would be convenient for all the petitioners to have trial in one of the competent courts at Bhopal — Order passed accordingly. Sachin Dubey v. Shirish Kumar Bharadwaj, (2005) 11 SCC 178.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-4-2005]

[6135] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Criteria — Extraordinary situations or compelling reasons and not mere trivial causes prerequisites for transfer — Trial Court asked to take adequate steps to ensure fair trial and on its failure the accused could re-invoke S. 406

The Editor of a monthly journal, filed a petition for the transfer of the criminal case of defamation against her from Bombay to Delhi on three grounds; namely, (i) that the parties (complainant and petitioners) reside in Delhi and some formal witnesses also belong to Delhi; (ii) that the petitioner is not able to procure competent legal service in Bombay; and (iii) that the atmosphere in Bombay is not congenial to a fair and impartial trial of the case against her.

Held:

The assurance of a fair trial is the first imperative of the dispensation of justice and the central criterion for the court to consider when a motion for transfer is made is not the hypersensitivity or relative convenience of the parties or easy availability of legal service or like trivial grievances. Something more substantial, more compelling, more imperilling from the point of view of public justice and its attendant environment is necessitous if the Court is to exercise its power of transfer.

(i) The main witnesses in the instant case are those who speak to having read the offending matter in the petitioner's journal and other relevant circumstances flowing therefrom. They all belong to Bombay and the Delhi readers cannot be their substitute witnesses. Hence, the first ground alleged by the petitioner is of no substance.

(ii) If an accused person, for any particular reason is virtually deprived of the facility of competent legal service, an essential aid to fair trial fails. If in a certain court the whole Bar, for reasons of hostility or otherwise, refuses to defend an accused person — an extraordinary situation difficult to imagine, having regard to the ethics of the profession — it may well be put forward as a ground which merits the Court's attention. But in the present case, there is no evidence that the petitioner is unable to engage a competent lawyer to defend her.

(iii) Turbulent conditions putting the accused's life in danger or creating chaos inside the court hall may jettison public justice. If this vice is peculiar to a particular place and is persistent, the transfer of the case from that place may become necessary. Likewise, if there is general consternation or atmosphere of tension or raging masses of people in the entire region taking sides and polluting the climate vitiating the necessary neutrality to hold a detached judicial trial, the situation may be said to have deteriorated to such an extent as to warrant transfer.

The petitioner's case of great insecurity or molestation to the point of threat to life is not borne out by the record. The mere word of an interested party is insufficient to convince the court that she is in jeopardy or the court may not be able to conduct the case under conditions of detachment, neutrality or uninterrupted progress.

It is, however, possible that there may be a flare-up and a challenge to a fair trial, in the sense of a satisfactory participation by the accused in the proceedings against her. To avoid this the trial Court should readily consider the liberal exercise of its powers to grant to the accused exemption from personal appearance save on crucial occasions. The Magistrate will also take measures to enforce conditions where the court functions free and fair, and agitational or mob tactics do not prevail. The Magistrate is a master of orderly conduct of proceedings and all the officials whose duty it is to keep the public peace shall, on requisition, be at his command to help him run the process of the court smoothly. If that fails, the parties shall have freedom to renew their application for transfer under S. 406, Criminal Procedure Code. Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934: AIR 1979 SC 468: 1979 Cri LJ 458: 1979 MLJ (Cri) 541.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, P.S. Kailasam and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-1978]

[6136] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Grounds — Apprehension of danger to lives of petitioners — Transfer of case pending before Magistrate, Phillour, Distt. Jalandhar (Punjab) to the Court of CJM, Barpeta (Assam), prayed for by the petitioners — Petitioner 2, resident of Phillour, and alleged to be a major, out of love for Petitioner 1, leaving the house of her parents without informing them, and reaching Barpeta (native place of Petitioner 1) and marrying him of her own free will and consent in presence of elders — Certificate of marriage issued by the Kazi — However, Respondent 2 (mother of Petitioner 2) filing FIR against Petitioner 1 and his two brothers under Ss. 363-A, 366 and 120-B IPC before Goraya

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

police station, Mouza Phillour, Distt. Jalandhar — Petitioners apprehending danger to their lives from relatives and family members of Petitioner 2 even to the extent of killing them in the event of their arrest by police of PS Goraya and taking them outside Assam — Hence, in the interest of justice and fair play, transfer petition allowed (Paras 4, 5, 8 and 10). Fajlor Rahman v. State of Punjab, (2006) 9 SCC 714: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 374: 2006 Cri LJ 3281.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2006]

[6137] — S. 406 — Transfer — Grounds — Coercion of and threat to witnesses and doubtful sincerity of investigating and prosecuting agencies — Murder trial relating to brutal murder of Superintending Engineer in Irrigation Department of U.P. at his Camp Office at Roorkee (Uttarakhand) — Son of deceased seeking transfer of proceedings from Haridwar to Delhi — Accused belonging to a powerful gang operating in the State — Driver of deceased, an eyewitness due to threats, turned hostile — Despite several summons neither petitioner, his family members nor other witnesses able to go to Haridwar to depose before court because of threats by accomplices of accused — No action taken by SSP, Haridwar or Government of Uttarakhand to provide protection to petitioner and his family or to thwart such threats — Four accused already on bail but neither police nor State agency had taken steps for getting their bail order cancelled — Held, circumstances present justify reasonable apprehension of petitioner that there would be failure of justice and acquittal of accused only because witnesses are threatened — It has become difficult for witnesses to safely depose because of fear of being haunted by those against whom they have to depose — To remove incapacitation of eyewitnesses and in interests of justice it is necessary to grant relief claimed — Hence, case transferred from Haridwar to Delhi — Directions issued to investigating and prosecuting agencies, State of Delhi, State of Uttarakhand and Judge to whom trial of the case may be transferred, to take appropriate steps for protecting witnesses and to ensure trial concludes without any delay — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 r/w S. 120-B — Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, S. 3(2)(v)

Allowing the petition,

Held :

This is a case of murder of a Superintending Engineer. There is no manner of doubt that brutal assault was mounted on him which resulted in his death. The son of the deceased is seeking transfer of proceedings on ground of coercion and threat to the witnesses as well as doubtful sincerity of the investigating agency and prosecuting agency. In effective cross-examination by Public Prosecutor of the driver who resiled from the statement made during the investigation speaks volumes about the sincerity/effectiveness of the prosecuting agency. (Para 21)

From the record of the case it is evident that several letters have been written and/or applications have been made by the petitioner making grievances about the threats administered to him and his family by the accomplices of the accused. However, no action, worth the name, is taken either by the SSP, Haridwar or by the Government of Uttarakhand either to afford protection to the petitioner and his family or to thwart such threats made by the accused and/or their accomplices. It was claimed by the prosecution that the driver of the deceased was an eyewitness and it is the case of the petitioner that due to threats, he turned hostile which is not in dispute. The fact that in spite of the receipt of several summons neither the petitioner nor his wife nor his family members nor other witnesses have been able to go to Haridwar to depose before the court is not denied by the State Government. Therefore, the Court is inclined to accept the case of the petitioner that he and the other witnesses have not been able to respond to the summons only because of fear to their lives due to the threats administered by the accomplices of the accused. There is no manner of doubt that because of chasing of the petitioner and his relatives by the accomplices of the accused, they have not been able to attend the court and tender evidence. If this situation continues then the prosecution would not be able to lead any evidence in such a brutal murder case and the accused will have to be acquitted. The record indicates that the four accused have been already enlarged on bail but neither the police nor the State agency has taken any steps for the purpose of getting their bail order cancelled. (Paras 17 to 19)

It is true that there must be reasonable apprehension on the part of the party to a case that justice may not be done and mere allegation that there is apprehension that justice will not be done cannot be the basis for transfer. However, there is no manner of doubt that the reasonable apprehension that there would be failure of justice and acquittal of the accused only because the witnesses are threatened is made out by the petitioner. (Paras 23 and 24)

From the averments made in the petition it is evident that the accused belong to a powerful gang operating in U.P. from which the State of Uttarakhand is carved out. The petitioner has been able to show the circumstances from which it can be reasonably inferred that it has become difficult for the witnesses to safely depose truth because of fear of being haunted by those against whom they have to depose. The reluctance of the witnesses to go to the court at Haridwar in spite of receipt of repeated summons is bound to hamper the course of justice. If such a situation is permitted to continue, it will pave way for anarchy, oppression, etc., resulting in breakdown of criminal justice system. In order to see that the incapacitation of the eyewitnesses is removed and justice triumphs, it has become necessary to grant the relief claimed in the instant petition. On the facts and in the circumstances of the case the interest of justice would be served if transfer of the case from Haridwar to Delhi is ordered. (Para 29)

The case titled as State v. Akash Tyagi pending in the First Fast Track Court/ADJ, Haridwar, Uttarakhand is hereby transferred to the court of competent jurisdiction at Delhi. The investigating agency, the prosecution agency, the State of Delhi as well as the State of Uttarakhand and the Judge to whom the trial of the case may be made over, are directed to take appropriate steps for protecting the witnesses and to ensure that the trial concludes as early as possible and without any avoidable delay. (Para 30). Vikas Kumar Roorkewal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2011) 2 SCC 178.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.M. Panchal and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-2011]

Himanshu Singh Sabharwal v. State of M.P., (2008) 3 SCC 602: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 106, relied on

Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158, cited

Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048; Gurcharan Dass Chadha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1966 SC 1418: 1966 Cri LJ 1071; Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934; K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 767: 2004 SCC (Cri) 882, relied on [6138] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Grounds for — Complaint case against Respondent 2, a police officer, pending in Court of CJM, Bulandshahar (U.P.), where Respondent 2 at relevant time was posted — Although order summoning the accused was passed by the Magistrate in 2002, he having not yet appeared before the Court — Without going into veracity of assertion of petitioner that accused having utmost influence over the local police in Bulandshahar, the case directed to be transferred from Bulandshahar to District and Sessions Judge, Delhi who shall assign the case to an appropriate court. Neeraj Pathak v. State of U.P., (2005) 11 SCC 595.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-4-2005]

[6139] — S. 406 — Petition by complainant for transfer of case from Pune to Indore on ground of personal safety apprehending danger from the nine accused charged under Ss. 395, 341, 504 and 506, IPC — Petitioner a lawyer himself — Directions passed to police to take security measures for his safety — Transfer petition rejected. Ranjit Singh v. Popat Rambhaji Sonavane, (1983) 1 SCC 298: 1983 SCC (Cri) 196: AIR 1983 SC 292: 1983 Cri LJ 437.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-1983]

[6140] — S. 406 — Transfer of case outside the State concerned — Prayer made for, by accused — Grounds for — Accused facing danger to his life as rival gang attacking and causing him serious injuries thrice in State where trial going on — Gunman deputed for security of accused failed to do anything — In these facts and circumstances, held, case pending at Bhopal be transferred to Nasik (Paras 3 and 4). Ravir Godbole v. State of M.P., (2006) 9 SCC 786: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 400.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-2006]

[6141] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case outside the State concerned — Question as to where the case may be transferred — Relevant considerations — Language spoken by witnesses and convenience of prosecuting agency in going to the place where the case may be transferred, held, assumes great importance in deciding the aforesaid question

Now the question which arises for consideration is as to where the sessions case should be transferred. While directing transfer of a criminal case the language spoken by the witnesses assumes great importance as translation of deposition of a witness apart from being a difficult job, often does not carry the same sense which the witness wants to convey. The convenience of the prosecuting agency, especially in a case where there are a large number of witnesses and documents has also an important bearing. Hence, the instant case is transferred from the State of T.N. to Pondicherry as the language spoken in Pondicherry is same i.e. Tamil and it is only at a short distance from the place where the trial is pending. (Para 25). Sri Jayendra Saraswathy Swamigal (II) v. State of T.N., (2005) 8 SCC 771.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 26-10-2005]

[6142] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — In order to alleviate the hardships of all the parties, the case pending in the Court of CJM, Muzaffarnagar transferred to the Court of CJM, Sirsa (Haryana), where the other case was pending — Having regard to the difficulty of complainant in attending the court proceedings, permission granted to her for being present in the court through her counsel — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 323, 506, 427, 354 and 452. Kanta Rani v. Savitri Devi, (2001) 10 SCC 32.

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-8-2000]

[6143] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Grounds for — Clubbing of similar cases — Trial pending at Dharwar, Karnataka — Similar case against same accused pending at Hyderabad in which the petitioners are also co-accused — Having regard to the said fact, held, it would be in the interest of justice if the case presently being tried at Dharwar be transferred to Court of Special Judge (CBI), Hyderabad — Hence, transfer petition allowed accordingly (Paras 2 and 3). A. Naveen v. CBI, (2006) 9 SCC 761: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 416.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-2005]

[6144] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Grounds for — Overburdened court — Held, cannot be ground for transfer of trial — On facts held, if Court of Special Judge at Ghaziabad is overburdened, it will be open to High Court to request State Government to create another court of a Special Judge at Ghaziabad (Para 31). Nahar Singh Yadav v. Union of India, (2011) 1 SCC 307.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: D.K. Jain, V.S. Sirpurkar and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-2010]

[6145] — S. 406 — Transfer of case under Ss. 420/34 IPC pending in Court of Addl. Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Bangalore to Court of Principal District and Sessions Judge at Bombay for assigning the case to a court of competent jurisdiction — Directed by Supreme Court considering the fact that accused-petitioner is a widow aged 80 years suffering from cancer. Urvashi Govind Advani v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 12 SCC 110.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2004]

[6146] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — Trial judge since retired and another judge taking over his place — Question of transfer of case to another bench does not arise — Trial court directed to take up the case expeditiously and proceed day to day. Mir Mohd. Omar v. State of W.B., (1989) 4 SCC 436: 1989 SCC (Cri) 750: AIR 1989 SC 1785: 1989 Cri LJ 2070: (1989) 2 Crimes 698.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-1989]

[6147] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — Case pending in court in Rajasthan — Prayer to transfer it to court at Delhi — Complainant and accused were permanent residents of Delhi — A civil suit between the parties pending at Delhi — State had no objection to transfer of the case — Transfer allowed (Para 3). Suman Gambhir v. State of Rajasthan, (2004) 13 SCC 365.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-8-2004]

[6148] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — Cesser of ground for — Charge-sheet under Ss. 302, 201 and 34 IPC filed in Sessions Court in Faridabad (Haryana) — Complainant seeking transfer of the trial pending to a court in Delhi on the grounds that the nine-year-old girl child of the deceased, who was one of the eyewitnesses, was terribly afraid of deposing against her father and his relations at Faridabad and that there were threats to the complainant party from the accused party and thus there was no proper atmosphere at Faridabad for a free and fair trial — State assuring to provide, if required, necessary security and protection to the eyewitness to depose at Faridabad — On such assurance, held, there remained no ground to transfer the trial of the criminal case — Hence, transfer petition dismissed — Necessary directions for requisite protection directed to be obtained from the trial court — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 201 and 34 — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A (Para 3). Leelawati v. Ramesh Chand, (2004) 9 SCC 63: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1327: AIR 2004 SC 1488: 2004 Cri LJ 900: (2004) 109 DLT 348.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Shivaraj V. Patil and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-2004]

[6149] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — Grounds for — Petitioner filed criminal cases against her husband and in-laws — Father-in-law jumped bail and an application for attachment of property he owned jointly with Respondents 1 and 2 at place J was filed — Trial court passed a direction — Respondent filed FIR against petitioner and her mother for forging stay order passed by trial court in criminal case instituted by petitioner against her husband and in-laws and pending at place D — Respondent 1 had nothing to do with criminal case pending at place D — Hence, held, as forgery was said to have taken place at J it is not a fit case where order of transfer should be passed as most of the witnesses are from place J only

Transfer petition had been filed by the petitioner seeking transfer of criminal revision petition filed by Respondent 1 from the Court of Additional District Judge, Jaipur to the Court of Additional

District and Sessions Judge, Patiala House Courts, New Delhi and for transfer of execution proceedings under Section 83 CrPC in respect of property at Jaipur to the Deputy Commissioner of Police, South Zone, New Delhi. Transfer petitions have been filed by petitioner and her mother for transfer of criminal miscellaneous petition filed by them under Section 482 CrPC for quashing of FIR pending before the High Court of Rajasthan, Jaipur Bench, to the High Court of Delhi.

Dismissing the petition,

Held :

If the respondents concerned are in physical possession of the property, the question of dispossessing them by way of attachment for jumping of bail by the father-in-law of the petitioner did not arise. The petitioner need not attend the proceedings pending before the Additional Sessions Judge, or the High Court in person. It furthermore appears that the investigation is not yet complete. The respondents in their counter-affidavit have stated that the petitioners have not yet been examined by the investigating officer. As Respondent 1 and the other witnesses have nothing to do with the criminal case pending in the Court of Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, New Delhi and as the act of commission of forgery is said to have taken place at Jaipur, it is not a fit case where the order of the transfer should be passed as most of the witnesses are from Jaipur only. The transfer petitions are dismissed accordingly. (Paras 8, 12, 13 and 15). Monica v. Satish Sharma, (2009) 17 SCC 458: AIR 2010 SC 103: 2009 Cri LJ 4458: (2010) 87 AIC 243.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-2009]

Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048, relied on [6150] — S. 406 — Matrimonial disputes — Ending of all litigation — Petition filed by husband for transfer of criminal cases from courts in Delhi to Mumbai — Meanwhile in terms of compromise arrived at between the parties all litigations pending in various courts inter se the parties agreed to be disposed of — Held, in view of the compromise all the litigations (except the matrimonial petition) directed to be withdrawn before the Supreme Court — Orders passed in terms of the compromise to end all litigations inter se — Parties directed to move an application under S. 13-B of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 before the appropriate court and further directing it to dispose of the same in terms of the compromise — Further directing, no further claims remaining to be settled inter se the parties — Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, S. 13-B — Constitution of India, Art. 142 (Para 3). Commodore Vimal Kumar v. Ruchi Rastogi, (2008) 12 SCC 62.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2008]

[6151] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Conduct of undertrial in prison entailing serious violations of Jail Manual — Proceedings in respect of — Unauthorised entry of certain persons/serious violations of Jail Manual and misconduct of first respondent during visit of IG (Prisons) to jail (Berur Jail) where first respondent lodged — Supreme Court seized of proceedings in respect of — High Court entertaining some proceedings in regard thereto — In light of appropriateness of fact that monitoring be done by one court, and since the Supreme Court had already initiated proceedings, held, it would be appropriate that proceedings initiated in High Court be transferred to Supreme Court — Directions issued accordingly — Moreover, notices issued by High Court in said proceedings were to be treated as notices issued by Supreme Court — Prisons Act, 1894, Ss. 45 and 40 — Constitution of India — Arts. 136 and 139-A(1). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 1 SCC 801: 2005 SCC (Cri) 449.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-12-2004]

[6152] — S. 406 — Petitioners alleging that complaint was frivolous and meant to intimidate them — Transfer of case from Orissa to Punjab justified where the accused belong to Punjab and the complainant himself is the only witness against them. Inder Singh v. Kartar Singh, (1979) 4 SCC 192: 1979 SCC (Cri) 953: AIR 1979 SC 1720.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-10-1978]

[6153] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — When warranted — From New Delhi to appropriate court at Trivandrum on ground of petitioner being unemployed, staying at Trivandrum and it being impossible for him to visit Delhi to defend the case — Respondent having various agencies throughout India — In view of facts and circumstances, criminal complaint transferred to CJM, Trivandrum. Venu Menon v. Hathway Investment (P) Ltd., (2005) 13 SCC 701: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 295.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2005]

[6154] — S. 406 — Case transferred from Assam to Delhi at the instance of accused — Part of the expenses of the prosecution must be borne by the Government of Assam. K.P.S. Gill v. Parthajoy Das, (1982) 3 SCC 480: 1983 SCC (Cri) 106.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and E.S. Venkataramiah, J. [Date of decision: 27-7-1981]

(5) Considerations/Grounds for transfer (contd.)

[6155] — S. 406 — Petitions directly before Supreme Court for transfer of criminal cases against police-officers on charge of murder of alleged extremists pending before Judicial Magistrate in State of Punjab to some other State except State of Haryana to avoid appeals before High Court of Punjab and Haryana at Chandigarh — Having regard to volatile situation prevailing in Punjab and on facts and circumstances, the criminal cases directed to be transferred to Sessions Judge in State of H.P. — Transferee Magistrate and Sessions Judge directed to consider exemption from personal appearance to petitioners as well as Government servants opposing the petitions and also to pay travelling and daily allowances to the opposing Government servants on the days of their appearance before the court — Transferee court to issue appropriate orders for bail of the petitioners — Constitution of India, Arts. 139-A and 136. D.R. Bhatti v. State of Punjab, 1986 Supp SCC 646: 1987 SCC (Cri) 175: AIR 1987 SC 660.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Pathak, V. Khalid and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[6156] — S. 406 — Trial conducted by General Court Martial — Offence taking place at Poona — Witnesses belonging to Poona — Records being at Poona — Held, there was no justification for shifting the trial to Delhi — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A. Union of India v. Maj. Gen. Madan Lal Yadav, (1996) 4 SCC 127: 1996 SCC (Cri) 592: AIR 1996 SC 1340.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K. Ramaswamy, S. Saghir Ahmad and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-1996]

[6157] — Ss. 406 and 177 — Transfer of case — FIR registered, charge-sheet filed and cognizance of alleged offences under Ss. 498-A and 406 IPC and S. 4, Dowry Prohibition Act taken by Magistrate at Trichy — Acts, which were alleged to have constituted said offences, committed mostly in Mumbai and partly in Chennai but no acts constituting the alleged offences committed at Trichy — Informant also moved application for transfer of petition for dissolution of marriage filed by husband from Family Court, Mumbai, to Chennai — Having regard to relevant aspects, background facts and history of litigation, all cases, criminal and matrimonial, directed to be transferred from Trichy and Mumbai respectively to Chennai — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 498-A and 406 — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, S. 4 (Paras 10 to 14). Ramesh v. State of T.N., (2005) 3 SCC 507: 2005 SCC (Cri) 735: AIR 2005 SC 1989: 2005 Cri LJ 1732.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2005]

[6158] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — When not warranted — Availability of defence counsel — Applicant claiming that he would not be able to engage a counsel in the court concerned — District Bar Association submitting affidavit before court assuring to the contrary — Transfer applications declined — CPC, 1908, S. 25. Vishwanath Gupta v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 11 SCC 640.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2006]

[6159] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — Case registered under S. 420 IPC in Bulandshahar (U.P.) sought to be transferred to Delhi — But dispute between the parties settled out of court and they have already filed a joint petition for compromise — Hence, transfer petition disposed of on compromise subject to directions of the Court. Bimla Agarwala v. State of U.P., (2008) 17 SCC 566: AIR 2009 SC 1657: 2009 Cri LJ 1533: (2009) 75 AIC 81 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2008]

(6) Directions/orders that may be issued under S. 406

[6160] — Ss. 406, 24, 2(u) and 7, 8 & 9 — Transfer of case — State that has power to appoint Public Prosecutor — Directions that may be given by Supreme Court in respect of appointment of Public Prosecutor — Scope of — Right of transferee State to appoint Public Prosecutor to whom criminal proceedings transferred — Sessions case pending before Sessions Judge, Chinglepet, in State of T.N. transferred to Principal District and Sessions Judge, Pondicherry — Home Department of State of T.N. appointing one Special Public Prosecutor and four Additional Special Public Prosecutors for conducting trial in Pondicherry — Appellant challenging the said appointments — Held, power of the State Government to appoint a Public Prosecutor and Additional Public Prosecutor would extend only for conducting any prosecution, appeal or other proceedings in the courts within its own State — Such powers cannot be exercised by the State Government to conduct cases in any other State — Once the case is transferred as per S. 406 CrPC to another State, the transferor State no longer has control over the prosecution to be conducted in a court situated in a different State to which the case has been transferred — However, Supreme Court while passing order of transfer can give an appropriate direction as to which State should appoint the Public Prosecutor to conduct that particular case having regard to the circumstances of the case and the grounds on which the transfer has been effected — Supreme Court can give such directions irrespective of the provisions contained in S. 24 CrPC — In the instant case nothing had been stated in the order of the transfer — Hence, provisions contained in S. 24 CrPC shall prevail and it is for the State of Pondicherry to appoint any counsel as Public Prosecutor having requisite qualifications as prescribed under S. 24(8) CrPC — State of T.N. directed to bear expenses (Paras 4, 11, 12, 13, 18 and 19). Jayendra Saraswati Swamigal (3) v. State of T.N., (2008) 10 SCC 180: AIR 2008 SC 2997: (2008) 3 KLT 669: 2008 Cri LJ 3877.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2008]

Jayendra Saraswathy Swamigal (2) v. State of T.N., (2005) 8 SCC 771: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 1, followed

[6161] — Ss. 406 and 386(1), 24 and 225 — Retrial of case on transfer — Public Prosecutor — Appointment of — Say of affected parties/complainants in — Assistance of Public Prosecutor by one lawyer to be paid for by State — Fees and expenses of Public Prosecutor and trial initially to be borne by State to which case transferred, subject to reimbursement by State from which case transferred — That State to provide all necessary assistance for conduct of re-trial — Witnesses to be given protection not only by that State, but in case any witness asks for protection transfer State also to provide such protection as deemed necessary — Retrial ordered on transfer of case — Directions issued for conduct of retrial — Affected parties/complainants given liberty to have a say in appointment of the Public Prosecutor — Public Prosecutor permitted assistance of one lawyer — Fees and expenses of Public Prosecutor and trial initially to be borne by State to which case transferred subject to reimbursement by State from which case transferred — That State to provide all necessary assistance for conduct of retrial — Witnesses to be given protection not only by that State, but in case any witness asks for protection transfer State also to provide such protection as deemed necessary — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A(2)

The State Government is directed to appoint another Public Prosecutor and it shall be open to the affected persons to suggest any name which may also be taken into account in the decision to so appoint. Though the witnesses or the victims do not have any choice in the normal course to have a say in the matter of appointment of a Public Prosecutor, in view of the unusual factors noticed in this case, to accord such liberties to the complainant parties, would be appropriate. (Para 76)

The fees and all other expenses of the Public Prosecutor who shall be entitled to assistance of one lawyer of his choice shall initially be paid by the State of Maharashtra, which will thereafter be entitled to get the same reimbursed from the State of Gujarat. The State of Gujarat shall ensure that all the documents and records are forthwith transferred to the court nominated by the Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court. The State of Gujarat shall also ensure that the witnesses are produced before the court concerned whenever they are required to attend that court. Necessary protection shall be afforded to them so that they can depose freely without any apprehension of threat or coercion from any person. In case, if any witness asks for protection, the State of Maharashtra shall also provide such protection as deemed necessary, in addition to the protection to be provided for by the State of Gujarat. All expenses necessary for the trial shall be initially borne by the State of Maharashtra, to be reimbursed by the State of Gujarat. (Para 77). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Clarified in Satyajit Banerjee v. State of W.B., (2005) 1 SCC 115

[6162] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — In terms of compromise arrived at between parties, petitioners agreeing to pay Rs 40 lakhs in full and final settlement of all claims of respondent — Consequently, cases pending between parties quashed — Decree of divorce by mutual consent also granted — Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, Ss. 13 and 13-B (Paras 1 to 3). S.G. Rajgopalan Prabhu v. Veena, (2010) 12 SCC 537.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-7-2010]

[6163] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Petitioner permitted to go abroad subject to her having appropriate travel documents — Interim stay granted in respect of criminal proceedings pending against her in different courts — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 294 and 34. Shilpa Shetty v. Rikhab Raj Bhandari, (2009) 17 SCC 388.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and B.P. Singh and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

[6164] — Ss. 406, 432(7), 385(1), 225, 2(u), 24 and 378 — Offence committed in one State but case transferred to a court in another State — Appeal against that court's order filed in its respective High Court — Held, the High Court required to give a notice to the Public Prosecutor (i.e. Advocate-General) of its own State only — Impleading the State where the cause of action arose or giving notice to the counsel of that State not required. Hanumant Dass v. Vinay Kumar, (1982) 2 SCC 177: 1982 SCC (Cri) 379(2): AIR 1982 SC 1052: 1982 Cri LJ 977.

(6) Directions/orders that may be issued under S. 406 (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-4-1982]

[6165] — Ss. 406 and 311 — Transfer of case — When warranted — Recall of witnesses who had allegedly resiled due to coercion — Allegations casting aspersions on role of investigating officer/police, Public Prosecutor and trial court, and transfer of case to another State sought on that basis — In light of concessions made by State concerned and accused, case transferred from Sessions Court in Madhya Pradesh to Sessions Court in Maharashtra and liberty granted to recall such witnesses

Late Prof. H.S. Sabharwal was a professor in Government College, Ujjain, M.P. He was brutally beaten up by certain persons for taking a rigid stand in the college union elections. Though the assaults were made in the presence of several police officials, media persons and members of the public, it was alleged that an attempt had been made to create the impression that his death was as a result of an accident. Initially, first information report was lodged and after investigation charge-sheet was filed and charges had been framed against several persons who were Respondents 2 to 7 in the transfer petition. The trial commenced in the Court of Sessions Judge, Ujjain. During examination of several witnesses who were stated to be eyewitnesses, such witnesses resiled from the statements made during investigation. There were even three police witnesses who also resiled from their earlier statements.

Grievance of the petitioner was that the witnesses had been coerced, threatened and ultimately justice was a casualty. That the role of the investigating officer gave ample scope to doubt impartiality and the sincerity of the investigating agency. Similar was the position of the Public Prosecutor. It was also highlighted that the trial court also did not make a serious effort to see that justice was done. In this connection it was pointed out that Public Prosecutor did not cross-examine the persons who had resiled from their statements made during investigation. This according to the petitioner also showed that the trial court did not act as was required under law.

The State of M.P. and the respondent-accused persons conceded before the Supreme Court that in the larger interest of justice and transparency they had no objection to the case being transferred to some other State.

Disposing of the transfer petition in the terms below,

Held :

In light of the concessions of the State of M.P. and the accused, without examining the correctness of the allegations made, it is directed that the case concerned pending in the Court of Sessions Judge, Ujjain be transferred to the Court of Sessions Judge, Nagpur, Maharashtra. It shall be open to the Sessions Judge to either deal with the case himself or to allot it to an appropriate court. The trial will commence from the stage at which it was when the order of stay was passed by the Supreme Court. The petitioner who is the son of the deceased in the peculiar facts of the case is permitted to suggest two names to function as Public Prosecutor. Similarly, two names shall be given by the respondent State. It shall be for the Sessions Judge, Nagpur to appoint a Public Prosecutor from the names to be suggested. The fees and other expenses of the Public Prosecutor shall be borne by the State of M.P. It shall be open to the Public Prosecutor to be appointed to seek recall of any witness already examined in terms of Section 311 CrPC. This shall be in addition to the three police witnesses who had resiled from their statements. (Para 6). Himanshu Singh Sabharwal v. State of M.P., (2008) 3 SCC 602: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 106: AIR 2008 SC 1943.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2008]

Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999, relied on [6166] — S. 406 — Scope of power under — Relief that may be granted — Orders to ensure that all possible proceedings relating to the same subject-matter are disposed of jointly — Various proceedings (writ petitions, writ appeals and suits) involving the same or substantially the same subject-matter instituted before High Court and District Court — Transfer of all the proceedings to one Division Bench of High Court for disposal — When warranted — Allegation of all the proceedings concerned being an attempt to reagitate matters settled by earlier decision of Supreme Court — Effect — CPC, 1908, S. 25 — Constitution of India, Arts. 139-A, 136 and 142. Maruti Clean Coal & Power Ltd. v. B.L. Wadhera, (2008) 2 SCC 585: (2008) 1 SCC (L&S) 515: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 514: (2008) 105 Cut LT 482.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

[6167] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Granting divorce by mutual consent in terms of Ss. 13-B(1) and 13-B(2) Hindu Marriage Act — SLPs and transfer petitions disposed of in terms of settlement arrived at between parties — Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, Ss. 13-B(1) and 13-B(2) (Paras 2 to 4). Aparna Goyal v. Rakesh Goyal, (2009) 12 SCC 648: AIR 2009 SC 1836: (2009) 1 APLJ 71 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, Dr. M.K. Sharma and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-2009]

[6168] — S. 406 — Transfer of case — No objection to transfer — Effect — Case pending at Delhi — Transfer of, to District Court at Mainpuri (U.P.), where another case was pending — Prayer made in respect of — No objection by respondent State of Delhi — Transfer allowed (Paras 2 and 3). Amrit Singh v. State of Delhi, (2005) 10 SCC 386: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1543.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-2005]

[6169] — S. 406 — While rejecting transfer application, prosecution directed to afford opportunity to the defence to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and provide facility of a doctor for examining accused daily before beginning of the court proceedings. S. Kamaljit Singh Sandhu v. UT, Chandigarh, 1987 Supp SCC 195: 1988 SCC (Cri) 51(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and V. Khalid, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-1987]

[6170] — S. 406 [Per majority: Venkatachaliah, J. (contra)] — Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to suo motu direct withdrawal of case from Court of Special Judge and transfer thereof to High Court for speedier trial — Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1952, S. 7(1). A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1988]

(7) Transfer of cases under Negotiable Instruments Act

[6171] — S. 406 — Power of Supreme Court to transfer cases — Cases pending under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — One petition for transfer of case from Chennai to Delhi — The other petition for transfer of case from Ghaziabad to Delhi — The case was that in respect of the same transaction several cheques had been issued, but they were presented for encashment at different places, resulting in prosecutions at different places — In the facts and circumstances of the case, the first petition partly allowed but the other one dismissed — Thus, case pending in Chennai transferred to Ghaziabad where the complaint which was the subject-matter of the other petition was pending — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138. Vikram Tractors v. Escorts Ltd., (2005) 10 SCC 80: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2005]

[6172] — Ss. 406 and 313 — Transfer of cases — Grounds for — A number of cases (10 in this case) under S. 138 Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 pending before courts at Guwahati and posted on different dates — Petitioner seeking transfer of such cases on the grounds of hardship in attending and alleged danger posed to his life from the situation in Guwahati — Such grounds, held, not sufficient for transferring the cases — However, liberty granted to the petitioner to apply for exemption from personal appearance in cases where he had made first appearance — Conditions specified subject to which the Magistrate should grant exemption

The Supreme Court specified the following conditions for grant of exemption from personal appearance in this case:

1. The petitioner's counsel would be present in the trial court on all days when the cases are taken up.

2. The petitioner will not dispute his identity.

3. The petitioner would be present in the Court when needed, such as examination under Section 313 CrPC. (Para 3). Abhiram Veer v. North Eastern Regional Agricultural Marketing Corpn. Ltd., (2000) 10 SCC 433: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-1999]

[6173] — S. 406 — Several complaint cases filed under S. 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act pending in various courts at Mumbai, Pune and Sholapur — Counsel for the parties agreeing that all the cases may be heard and decided by appropriate courts at Pune — Order of transfer made accordingly — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Paras 3, 4 and 5). Global Infrastructure & Technologies Ltd. v. G.K. Builders, (2005) 12 SCC 427.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-2005]

[6174] — S. 406 — Transfer of cases — Three cases filed under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, at 3 different places — Complaint arising out of one single transaction — Held, it would be appropriate and in the interest of justice that all cases be tried in one court — Hence, cases pending in Haryana and U.P. transferred to the Court of Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, Patiala House, Delhi where one of the said three cases was already pending — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Transfer of three cases filed in different locations in respect of same transaction (Paras 5 and 6). A.E. Premanand v. Escorts Finance Ltd., (2004) 13 SCC 527.

(7) Transfer of cases under Negotiable Instruments Act (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-10-2004]

[6175] — S. 406 — Transfer of cases filed at numerous places to one common place — Consolidation of cases if envisaged thereby — Complaint cases under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1882 transferred to one place — High Court directing consolidation of all complaints — Sustainability — Held, High Court seems to have misinterpreted the transferring order — All complaints are to be heard in the common place, but not together — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Transfer of cases filed at numerous places to one common place — Consolidation of cases if envisaged. Videocon International Ltd. v. Sujana Corpn. Ltd., (2005) 13 SCC 125: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 129.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2005]

[6176] — S. 406 — Transfer of compliant case — Proceedings involving same parties and same offence — 5 complaints against petitioners pending before Metropolitan Magistrate, Chennai — Another complaint against same petitioners filed for the same offence same Act before Metropolitan Magistrate, Hyderabad — In view of the convenience in conducting the trial and disposal of all the cases, proceedings pending at Hyderabad Court transferred to Chennai court — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Transfer of proceedings. Ayyannar Agencies v. Sri Vishnu Cement Ltd., (2000) 10 SCC 596: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1511: AIR 2000 SC 1639.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

[6177] — S. 406 — Transfer petition — Grant of relief — Convenience of parties and nature of respondent Company which filed the present cases — Consideration of — Certain cheques were issued at place H in State of A.P. by petitioners in favour of respondent Company — Due to stop payment of the said cheques, five cases were filed against petitioners at place V in State of A.P. where the firm of the petitioners was located — Certain other cases were also filed against petitioners by respondent in different parts of country including State of J&K — Petitioners herein seeking transfer of these other cases to place V for joint trial with cases pending at V — Looking to the convenience of the parties and the fact that the respondent Company was a multinational company, Supreme Court transferring the cases pending at V and all the other cases except the one pending in State of J&K to District Court at H — Since the question as to whether the cases pending in J&K can be transferred to any other part of the country had been referred to a Constitution Bench, held, interim order dated 6-5-2005 will remain in force till the disposal of the said issue — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Paras 5 to 8). Sri Lakshmi Agencies v. Rallis India Ltd., (2006) 13 SCC 312: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 182.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2006]

[6178] — S. 406 — Transfer of criminal case — Consideration for — On facts, cheque issued by respondent in favour of petitioner in connection with products sold to respondent by petitioner's company, having its registered office at Delhi, dishonoured — Criminal complaint under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, filed therefor, pending before court at Delhi — Respondent subsequently filing a private complaint under Ss. 420/465/467/471/468 and 120-B IPC before court at Bhatinda against MD and GM (Marketing) of petitioner's company, because of which they were summoned by that court — Present transfer petition, therefore, filed by petitioner under S. 406 CrPC for transfer of case pending in court at Bhatinda to court at Delhi — In the facts and circumstances of the case, held, both the cases should be heard together at one place which would be the court at Delhi — Accordingly, case pending in court at Bhatinda transferred to court at Delhi for its disposal by itself or assigning it to any other competent court for disposal, as it may deem fit (Paras 2 to 5). B.R. Gupta v. Rohit Jain, (2007) 7 SCC 454: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 425: 2007 Cri LJ 3724: (2007) 56 AIC 19 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-7-2007]

[6179] — S. 406 — Transfer of cases — Grounds for — Transfer of cases under S. 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act pending before courts at one place (Guwahati in this case), held, could not be allowed merely because of the allegation that cause of action arose at another place (Lucknow) and that only a court at that other place could exercise juris- diction — Question of jurisdiction, held, would have to be raised before the court seized of the case — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Transfer of case under, to another place on request — Grounds. Abhiram Veer v. North Eastern Regional Agricultural Marketing Corpn. Ltd., (2000) 10 SCC 433: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-1999]

(8) Review of transfer order/Subsequent orders/directions

[6180] — S. 406 — Review of transfer order made under in (2004) 3 SCC 767 — Petitioner requesting modification of transfer order made by Supreme Court transferring trial from State of T.N. to State of Karnataka — On the basis of allegation that relations between the two States were fraught with tension, inter alia due to the Cauvery water dispute, petitioner claiming that he feared for his security and that it would not be possible to afford him a free and fair trial — Given that UT of Pondicherry was closer to Chennai and moreover Tamil-speaking, obviating the need for translation of Tamil documents and depositions, petitioner requesting transfer of trial thereto — Held, Supreme Court not persuaded to reappreciate circumstances leading to filing of the transfer petition and the order sought to be modified — Security of petitioner and the freeness and fairness of trial in State of Karnataka was adequately taken care of by directions given in earlier transfer order of Supreme Court and undertakings by the State of Karnataka in this regard filed in its counter in the present proceedings — Other apprehensions enumerated by petitioner relating to the Cauvery dispute etc. had nothing to do with the judicial function of the court — In any case, S. 406 CrPC envisaged transfer of cases from one High Court to another, and since UT of Pondicherry did not have a High Court separate from the Madras High Court, that contention is not well founded — Sanguine remarks made and confidence reposed in independence and efficiency of judiciary manning the lower courts of the country — Art. 50 — Independence and efficiency of lower judiciary — Sanguine remarks made and confidence reposed in independence and efficiency of judiciary manning the lower courts of the country — Constitution of India, Arts. 137 & 139-A

By these applications the applicant sought to modify the judgment dated 18-11-2003, (2004) 3 SCC 767, passed by the Supreme Court in Transfer Petitions (Criminal) Nos. 77-78 of 2003.

The applicant contended that in view of the surcharged and tense situation between the States of Tamil Nadu and Karnataka, the personal security of the applicant was prejudiced and free and fair trial in such an atmosphere would not be possible in the State of Karnataka as directed in the judgment sought to be modified, depriving the applicant of the right to have free and fair trial as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution. It was further argued that the Union Territory of Pondicherry, being closest to Chennai, was a more convenient place for the parties due to its proximity to Chennai and also the people in Pondicherry are Tamil-speaking people and the judges there are expected to know Tamil and in that view no translation of the Tamil documents and depositions would be necessary.

Dismissing the applications,

Held :

The Supreme Court has exercised its powers under Section 406 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 in the transfer order sought to be modified. Admittedly, the Union Territory of Pondicherry does not have a separate High Court, it is within the jurisdiction of the Madras High Court. If this submission is accepted, it would amount to transfer of case from the Madras High Court to the jurisdiction of the same High Court. This situation is not contemplated under Section 406 CrPC. This contention is not well founded. (Para 3)

The directions given in the order of the Supreme Court dated 18-11-2003 (especially at cl. (h) therein) have adequately taken care of the security of the witnesses and others. The Supreme Court is not persuaded to reappreciate the circumstances leading to the filing of the transfer petitions and order of the Supreme Court transferring the same to the State of Karnataka. In that order the Supreme Court was of the view that it is expedient for the ends of justice that the cases be transferred from Tamil Nadu to Karnataka for trial in accordance with law. Similarly, the lurking apprehension raised by the applicant is well-safeguarded by the undertaking of the Karnataka Government with regard to the personal security of the applicant and witnesses and others in its counter-affidavit. To say the least, the apprehensions with regard to the Cauvery water dispute and forest brigand Veerappan, have got nothing to do with the judicial function of the court. (Paras 4 and 5)

In a democratic country like ours, governed by the rule of law, an efficient and independent judiciary mans the subordinate courts, where justice is administered impartially, fearless of public glamour, regardless of public responses and indifferent to private, political or partisan influences. There is no doubt that the Judge who has been assigned the job will do well in discharging his divine duty in accordance with law. (Para 7). K. Anbazhagan v. Supdt. of Police, (2004) 3 SCC 788: 2004 SCC (Cri) 859.

(8) Review of transfer order/Subsequent orders/ directions (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-2004]

[6181] — S. 406 — Transfer of cases under — Order made in Ranchi Zila Samta Party case [(1996) 3 SCC 682] modified in respect of the cases transferred under the said section by substituting the words "High Court of Jharkhand" in place of the words "the High Court of Patna" — Availability of Justice S.J. Mukhopadhyay in the High Court of Jharkhand, who was one of the Judges in Division Bench constituted by the CJ, Patna High Court, to be taken into account by the CJ, Jharkhand High Court while constituting a new Bench — Bihar Reorganisation Act, 2000, S. 89(1) (Paras 6 and 7). State of Bihar v. Ranchi Zila Samta Party, (2003) 12 SCC 235.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, S.S.M. Quadri and U. C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-12-2000]

(9) Practice and Procedure re disposal of transfer petition

[6182] — Ss. 406 and 407 — Transfer of case — Supreme Court issues notice and hear the parties before passing any order except where suo motu order is issued — CPC, 1908, Ss. 24 and 25 — Constitution of India, Art. 139-A

Per majority

The new S. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code substituted by an Amendment Act, 104 of 1976 provides for the transfer to the Supreme Court the existing power hitherto vested with the State Government and to confer on the Supreme Court such wide powers of transfer as it has in criminal cases under S. 406 of the Code. Section 25, in fact, is wider in scope than S. 406 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. Though, there is no express provision in Art. 139-A of the Constitution and in S. 406 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the effect that the Supreme Court before passing any order on the application made or moved for transfer of cases should issue notice and hear the parties as required under Ss. 24 and 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the principle of 'audi alteram partem', notice is given to the party/parties who are likely to be affected by any final order. But the question of issuing a notice and hearing the parties may not arise if the order is passed by the Supreme Court suo motu. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899: 1994 Cri LJ 3139.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian[1], M.M. Punchhi[1], K. Ramaswamy[2], S.C. Agrawal[1] and R.M. Sahai[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-3-1994]

— S. 407 See also S. 526, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1283 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 407 See Ss. 227, 228, 67 and 407
See also Ss. 406 & 407
See also Ss. 406, 407 and 177
See also Ss. 406, 407, 401 and 386
See also Ss. 408, 407 and 406
See also Ss. 408(1), 406, 407, 228(1), 227 and 26(a)(ii)
See also Ss. 409(2) & 194, 407 and 462 & 465
See also Ss. 482 and 407
See also Ss. 482, 407 and 220
See also Ss. 482, 407 and 386(d)
See also Ss. 482, 439, 438 and 407

[6183] — S. 407 — Constitutionality — Held does not violate Art. 14

Per Ranganathan, J.

Section 407 cannot be challenged under Art. 14 as it is based on a reasonable classification having relation to the objects sought to be achieved. Though, in general, the trial of cases will be by courts having the normal jurisdiction over them, the exigencies of the situation may require that they be dealt with by some other court for various reasons. Likewise, the nature of a case, the nature of issues involved and other circumstances may render it more expedient, effective, expeditious or desirable that the case should be tried by a superior court or the High Court itself. The power of transfer and withdrawal contained in S. 407 of CrPC is one dictated by the requirements of justice and is, indeed, but an aspect of supervisory powers of a superior court over courts subordinate to it: (See also Ss. 408 to 411 of the CrPC). A judicial discretion to transfer or withdraw is vested in the highest court of the State and is made exercisable only in the circumstances set out in the section. Such a power is not only necessary and desirable but indispensable in the cause of the administration of justice. The accused will continue to be tried by a court of equal or superior jurisdiction. Section 407(8) r/w S. 474 of the CrPC and S. 8(3) of the 1952 Criminal Law Amendment Act makes it clear that he will be tried in accordance with the procedure followed by the original court or ordinarily by a Court of Session. The accused will, therefore, suffer no prejudice by reason of the application of S. 407. Even if there is a differential treatment which causes prejudice, it is based on logical and acceptable considerations with a view to promote the interests of justice. The transfer or withdrawal of a case to another court or the High Court, in such circumstances, can hardly be said to result in hostile discrimination against the accused in such a case. A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1988]

[6184] — Ss. 407 and 9(6) — Transfer of case — What is — Power of High Court to transfer cases/appeals vis-à-vis shifting of venue of trial — Transfer, held (per Sharma, J.), involves removing a case from a court of one jurisdiction and putting it under a court of another jurisdiction — Every transfer involves two different courts — Shifting of venue of trial from the usual place of Sessions Court to premises inside jail does not involve transfer of a case — Civil Procedure Code, 1908, Ss. 24 and 25

The key word in Section 407 is "transfer", which essentially consists of two steps: (a) removing a case or class of cases from the jurisdiction of the court where it/they is/are pending trial, and (b) putting it/them under the jurisdiction of another court (whether of equal or superior jurisdiction) for adjudication. Every transfer involves two different courts. By issuing said notification under Section 9(6) CrPC, the High Court cannot be said to have transferred cases pending against the appellant, for the notification simply notified premises of District Jail, Siwan, to be the place of sitting for holding trial of cases pending against the appellant. The notifications did not in any manner affect or abridge jurisdiction of Court of Session, Siwan, to try those cases. Thus, there was a shift simpliciter in the venue of trial, without there being anything more. In such circumstances, the present case cannot be said to be a case of "transfer" to which provisions of Section 407 are attracted. (Para 172). Mohd. Shahabuddin v. State of Bihar, (2010) 4 SCC 653.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari[1] and Dr. M.K. Sharma[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 25-3-2010]

[6185] — S. 407 — High Court cannot transfer to itself proceedings under Ss. 6 and 7 of Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952. A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1988]

[6186] — S. 407 — Scope — It is subject to overriding provisions of S. 7(1) of Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952 (Per majority). A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1988]

[6187] — S. 407 — High Court cannot transfer a case from one Judge to another Judge of a Special Court — S. 407 CrPC not applicable — Special Court is not subordinate to High Court — High Court has no administrative control over Special Court — Constitution of India, Arts. 235 and 226, 227 — Special Court (Trial of Offences Relating to Transactions in Securities) Act, 1992, Ss. 5, 5-A, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 11-A

The Special Courts Act was amended in 1997 to enable appointment of two or more Judges as the workload was found to be very heavy. Canbank Financial Services Ltd. filed Civil Petition No. 74 before the Special Court claiming criminal conspiracy to cause unlawful loss to them by sale and purchase of the same securities within a period of two days at differing rates. CANFINA claimed damages arising out of the tort of conspiracy. Subsequently, CBI filed Criminal Case No. 2 of 1998 before the Special Court alleging criminal conspiracy amongst the respondents to cause unlawful loss to CANFINA by sale and purchase of the same securities within a period of two days at differing rates. One of the two Judges of the Special Court viz. Justice Kapadia disposed of Petition No. 74 of 1995. Special Case No. 2 of 1998 was earlier before the other Judge presiding over the Special Court viz. Justice Trivedi but later it was administratively transferred by Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court to Justice Kapadia. The appellant then filed a criminal application before the High Court praying for an order transferring the case to Justice Trivedi. The parties made an oral request to Justice Kapadia to withdraw from the case but the same was rejected. A Division Bench of the High Court disposed of the criminal application by directing that a written application for transfer be moved before Justice Kapadia himself. The appellant then filed an application praying that Justice Kapadia may recuse himself from the matter. The application was rejected. The parties also moved the Division Bench of the High Court for some clarification but the Bench refused to issue any clarification. Disposing of the appeals,

Held:

The Special Court is not subordinate to the High Court. The High Court would have no power under Section 407 of the Criminal Procedure Code to transfer a case from one Judge of the Special Court to another. The High Court does not have administrative control over the Special Court under Article 235 of the Constitution. The Special Court is manned by a sitting Judge of the High Court. On occasions, the same Judge also takes up matters of the High Court. Also Section 5 provides that if the Judge manning the Special Court is absent or on leave the duties could be performed by another Judge of the High Court nominated by the Chief Justice of the High Court in consultation with the Chief Justice of India. It would therefore not be in the fitness of things that for purposes of Section 407 CrPC, a sitting Judge of the High Court performing simultaneous duties be deemed subordinate to the High Court merely because he is trying cases of the Special Court. (Paras 43, 41 and 42). Dhyan Investments & Trading Co. Ltd. v. CBI, (2001) 6 SCC 607: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1193: AIR 2001 SC 2456: (2001) 107 Comp Cas 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2001]

Special Courts Bill, 1978, In re, (1979) 1 SCC 380: (1979) 2 SCR 476, explained

T. Sudhakar Prasad v. Govt. of A.P., (2001) 1 SCC 516: 2001 SCC (L&S) 263, relied on [6188] — S. 407 — Trials before various Special Courts — Transfer of all cases to one court — Prayer made by accused-appellant in respect of — All the Special Courts were housed in one building — These Courts were functioning smoothly and fairly — Transfer to one court might prejudicially affect the other accused persons — Hence the transfer application, held, liable to be dismissed (Para 12). Lalu Prasad v. State, (2003) 11 SCC 786: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1244: AIR 2003 SC 3838.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.N. Variava, P. Venkatarama Reddi and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-2003]

[6189] — S. 407 — Jurisdiction of High Court to make inter-State transfer of case — Phrase "criminal court subordinate thereto" — Significance of — High Court of State (Uttaranchal) transferring case from Sessions Court in district not in that State (Ghaziabad) to Sessions Court in district in that State (Dehradun) — Impermissibility. Pal Singh v. CBI, (2005) 12 SCC 329.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-2005]

[6190] — S. 407 — Power of High Court to transfer cases suo motu — Notice to the parties necessary — Suo motu transfer of a case from Sessions Judge of one district to another district without affording an opportunity of hearing to the accused — Held, order not sustainable particularly in view of the difficulties expressed by some of the accused that they may have to engage other counsel, etc. — Case directed to be tried by the seniormost Additional District Judge of the district and not by the Sessions Judge from whose court it was ordered to be transferred by the High Court. Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1996) 6 SCC 126: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1122: AIR 1996 SC 2759.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1996]

[6191] — S. 407 — Transfer applications — Power of "Inspecting Judge" of High Court to pass order on — High Court's power of superintendence and control over subordinate courts — Scope of — Whether it authorises the "Inspecting Judges" of High Court to transact any judicial work which is in the domain of subordinate courts — Administrative Judge of High Court during the course of inspection passing order to Sessions Judge to consider the bail application of appellant and enlarge him on bail — Propriety of — Held, power under Art. 227 is to be exercised most sparingly and only in appropriate cases in order to keep the subordinate courts within the bounds of their authority — Powers under Arts. 227 and 235 not to be exercised to interfere with judicial functions of subordinate courts — Protection of independence of subordinate courts in the discharge of their judicial functions, emphasised — Held, under the aforesaid articles the High Court cannot direct the subordinate court to pass a judicial order in a particular manner as that would amount to interfering with the independence of subordinate judiciary — In this view, stating the powers and functions of Inspecting Judge, held, a High Court Judge during the course of inspection has no power to pass any judicial order in individual cases pending in subordinate courts — During inspection he cannot pass any order on interim applications, such as bail petitions or transfer applications or applications for interim injunction, howsoever justified they may be — If any bail application is received by Inspecting Judge, the proper course would be to send the said applica- tion without commenting on merits of case to the court concerned to pass appropriate orders — Constitution of India, Arts. 227, 235 & 50

The appellant was arrested and remanded to judicial custody in a case under the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act and IPC. The appellant moved an application for bail, but the same was rejected. The appellant moved another bail application on 24-4-2003 before the Sessions Judge, which was fixed for hearing on 5-5-2003. Meanwhile, on 29-4-2003 the Administrative Judge of the High Court concerned came for annual inspection to the District and Sessions Court concerned. The said Judge also visited jail as part of the inspection programme. The appellant moved an application for bail during the course of inspection. The Inspecting Judge noticed the police officers as representative of the prosecution, and since they had no objection to the granting of bail to the appellant, the said Judge, considering that the co-accused had been enlarged on bail and the appellant was in jail for the last seven months, passed an order directing the Sessions Judge to look into the application of the appellant and enlarge him on bail as his trial was likely to take some time before it was concluded. Pursuant to the said order, the appellant was released on bail by the Sessions Judge. Thereafter, on a complaint being made to the Chief Justice of the High Court alleging mala fides on the part of the Sessions Judge in granting bail to the appellant, the Chief Justice called for the proceedings and directed that the entire matter be placed before the very same Administrative Judge on the judicial side. The de facto complainant reiterated her allegation and sought for cancellation of bail granted to the appellant. The Administrative Judge held that while passing the order of bail, the Sessions Judge had not discussed the matter on merit and, therefore, the said order was set aside. Hence, the present appeal.

Before the Supreme Court it was submitted that the Judges of the High Court are vested with the power of superintendence and control over all courts and tribunals subordinate to the High Court under Article 227, and as part of such constitutional power, the Inspecting Judges have the right and duty to consider the bail applications during inspection. It was also contended that the power of superintendence and control over the subordinate courts is conferred on the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution and therefore the Inspecting Judge was fully justified under certain circumstances to entertain the bail petitions or transfer applications and direct the District Judges or other courts to pass appropriate orders.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

The power of superintendence over all the subordinate courts and tribunals is given to the High Court under Article 227 of the Constitution. The said power is both of administrative and judicial nature and it could be exercised suo motu also. However, such power of superintendence does not imply that the High Courts can influence the subordinate judiciary to pass any order or judgment in a particular manner. While invoking the provisions of Article 227 the High Court would exercise such powers most sparingly and only in appropriate cases in order to keep the subordinate courts within the bounds of their authority. It cannot intervene in the judicial functions of the lower judiciary. The independence of the subordinate courts in the discharge of their judicial functions is of paramount importance, just as the independence of the superior courts in the discharge of their judicial functions is. It is the members of the subordinate judiciary who directly interact with the parties in the course of proceedings of the case and, therefore, it is no less important that their independence should be protected effectively to the satisfaction of the litigants. The independence of the judiciary has been considered as a part of the basic structure of the Constitution and such independence is postulated not only from the executive, but also from all other sources of pressure. (Paras 10 and 14)

In respect of Article 235 also, the powers of control to be exercised thereunder do not extend to interfering with the judicial functions of the subordinate courts. By virtue of the power under Article 235 the High Court cannot direct the presiding officer of the subordinate court to pass a judicial order in a particular manner as that would certainly amount to interfering with the independence of the subordinate judiciary. (Para 15)

In the course of inspection, the High Court Judge is required to examine whether the courts are functioning within the norms laid down by the High Court. Mostly the inspection is to be confined to the administrative functioning of the courts and its officers. If any member of the administrative staff is not doing the work assigned to him or is causing any delay in the process of administration of justice, the Inspecting Judge can give proper direction and see that the courts function smoothly. But under no circumstances, the Inspecting Judge, as part of his administrative duty enjoys the power to interfere with the judicial functions of the subordinate courts in individual cases. In the course of inspection, a High Court Judge cannot pass any order on interim applications, such as bail petitions or transfer applications or applications for interim injunction, howsoever justified they may be. Orders on bail applications are passed under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure or under various other enactments, which provide for grant of bail and such orders are passed as part of the judicial work. The Inspecting Judge is not supposed to pass any judicial order in individual cases in the course of inspection. While on inspection, he is not supposed to perform any judicial work. Of course, he can give administrative directions to the presiding officer or to any of the subordinate staff, if such directions are pertinent in the context of administration of justice. Except giving general directions regarding any matter concerning administration of justice, any interference in the judicial functions of the presiding officer would amount to interference with the independence of the subordinate judiciary. (Paras 16 and 17)

Therefore, even if any application for bail is received by the Inspecting Judge, the proper course is to send the application to the court concerned to pass appropriate orders. When the Inspecting Judge visits the jail, it is quite likely that so many inmates of the jail may file petitions before the Judge concerned. It is the duty of the Judge to see whether there is any merit in any of these petitions. If any application for bail is received, he can very well send it to the court concerned without making any comments on the merits of the case. On the contrary, if the learned Inspecting Judge passes any order in such matter, he would only be usurping the powers of the courts authorised to pass such orders. (Para 19). Jasbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 8 SCC 294: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 470.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-10-2006]

Waryam Singh v. Amarnath, AIR 1954 SC 215; Trimbak Gangadhar Telang v. Ramchandra Ganesh Bhide, (1977) 2 SCC 437; Mohd. Yunus v. Mohd. Mustaqim, (1983) 4 SCC 566; State v. Navjot Sandhu, (2003) 6 SCC 641: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1545; S.P. Gupta v. Union of India, 1981 Supp SCC 87; Alok Kumar Roy v. Dr. S.N. Sarma, AIR 1968 SC 453, relied on

[6192] — Ss. 407 and 194 — Administrative power of High Court exercised to transfer cases — Availability of judicial power not a bar to exercise of administrative power — In a peculiar situation exercise of administrative power may be more efficacious — Transfer of case after commencement of trial on ground of administrative exigency without prejudicially affecting the rights of the parties, held, was not without jurisdiction — Case was transferred since all the accused and their lawyers could not be accommodated in the courtroom — So exception cannot be taken by those at whose behest the power was exercised — Constitution of India, Art. 227

Under Article 227 of the Constitution of India every High Court has superintendence over all courts and tribunals throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction and it is trite that this power of superintendence entitles the High Court to pass orders for administrative exigency and expediency. In the instant case the High Court had exercised the power of transfer in the context of the petition filed by some of the accused from jail complaining that they could not be accommodated in the courtroom as a result of which some of them had to remain outside. The other grievance raised was that the court was so crowded that even clerks of the lawyers were not being allowed to enter the courtroom to carry the briefs. Such a situation was obviously created by the trial of a large number of persons. If in the context of the above facts, the High Court exercised its plenary administrative power to transfer the case to another court which had a bigger and better arrangement to accommodate the accused, lawyers and others connected with the trial no exception can be taken to the same, particularly by those at whose instance and for whose benefit the power was exercised. (Para 12)

So long as power can be and is exercised purely for administrative exigency without impinging upon and prejudicially affecting the rights or interests of the parties to any judicial proceeding it cannot be held that administrative powers must yield place to judicial powers simply because in a given circumstance they coexist. On the contrary, the present case illustrates how exercise of administrative powers were more expedient, effective and efficacious. If the High Court had intended to exercise its judicial powers of transfer invoking Section 407 of the Code it would have necessitated compliance with all the procedural formalities thereof, besides providing adequate opportunities to the parties of a proper hearing which, resultantly, would have not only delayed the trial but further incarceration of some of the accused. It is obvious, therefore, that by invoking its power of superintendence, instead of judicial powers, the High Court not only redressed the grievances of the accused and others connected with the trial but did it with utmost dispatch. (Para 13). Ranbir Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1995) 4 SCC 392: 1995 SCC (Cri) 728: AIR 1995 SC 1219: 1995 Cri LJ 2665.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-3-1995]

A.R. Antulay v. R. S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372, distinguished

[6193] — S. 407 — Transfer of case — Case pending before Sessions Judge, Sonepat — Application for transfer made before a Judge of the High Court when he was on an annual inspection tour at Gohana — Application not filed in prescribed manner nor supported by an affidavit — Order of transfer passed while camping at Sonepat without affording sufficient opportunity of hearing to the opposite party — Application disposed of without considering the merits of the application — Held, in the circumstances, it was not proper and legal exercise of power under S. 407 in transferring the sessions case

The learned Judge should have either directed the applicants to file their application in the Registry of the High Court at Chandigarh or if the learned Judge was of the opinion that it was required to be dealt with by the High Court in exercise of its suo motu revisional power, he should have himself forwarded it to the Registry of the High Court with a direction to place it before a Bench competent to deal with it. There was no valid reason for the learned Judge to entertain that application at Gohana and pass the final order at Sonepat, even if he was otherwise entitled to entertain such an application under the rules framed by the High Court and allocation of work by the Chief Justice of the High Court. The learned Judge should not have entertained it as an application made under Section 407 CrPC when it was not presented in the prescribed manner and was not supported by an affidavit. (Para 6)

The learned Judge disposed of that application without considering the merits of the application. It was not a consent order. No finding was recorded to the effect that the prosecution witnesses were terrorised or were likely to be terrorised or influenced in any other manner. The learned Judge failed to appreciate that in the absence of any justifiable reason, it was not proper and legal to exercise the power under Section 407 CrPC to transfer the sessions case. (Para 11). Vijay Pal v. State of Haryana, (1999) 9 SCC 67: 1999 SCC (Cri) 348.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-11-1998]

[6194] — S. 407 — Transfer of case — When permissible — Case in final stages of trial — 40 witnesses already having been examined, 15 witnesses remaining — Propriety of transfer — In such a situation, transfer of case held, not proper. Pal Singh v. CBI, (2005) 12 SCC 329.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-2005]

[6195] — S. 407 — Transfer of cases on the ground that they should be heard at the place from where a large number of witnesses are to be examined, held, not proper — Moreover, High Court not justified in allowing a transfer application on such ground when it had already rejected another application on the same ground

The normal course of things should not be lightly interfered with and the case should be allowed to be tried by the court which had territorial jurisdiction. Therefore, the High Court was not justified in passing the impugned order transferring the case from Jammu to Srinagar on the sole ground that most of the witnesses belonging to Jammu had already been examined by the trial court and that only witnesses from Kashmir Division or Delhi remained to be examined. Baljit Singh v. State of J & K, (1982) 1 SCC 501: 1982 SCC (Cri) 268: AIR 1982 SC 1558: 1982 Cri LJ 1944.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.D. Koshal and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1981]

[6196] — S. 407 — Transfer of criminal case — Allegations in complaints filed at different places almost the same — Case should be tried by same court — Case remitted to High Court for directions accordingly — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 500 and 501 read with S. 34. P.R. Behere v. Ganpatrao Shrinivasrao Chavan, 1990 Supp SCC 139: 1990 SCC (Cri) 540(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-1988]

[6197] — S. 407 — Transfer of criminal proceedings to different court — Petition for — Apprehension as to bias in favour of accused because brother of Sessions Judge concerned i.e. B and father of accused i.e. F were very close to each other — B and F belonged to same political party — B was a sitting MLA and F was a former Chief Minister — Held, though the present Judge showed no disinclination to hear the matter and would have acted in true sense of a judicial officer, still in order to ensure that justice is not only done but also seen to be done, and considering the peculiar facts of the case, it would be appropriate if the High Court transfers the case to some other Sessions Court — However, clarified that the said transfer must not be construed as casting any aspersion on the Sessions Judge concerned

Challenge in this appeal was to the order passed by the High Court dismissing the transfer petition filed under Section 407 CrPC for transfer of Sessions Trial No. 329 of 2005 pending in the Court of Sessions Judge, Raipur, Chhattisgarh to some other court. The transfer was sought for primarily on the ground that the Sessions Judge before whom the trial was pending was the elder brother of a sitting MLA who was very close to the father of Respondent 3, one of the main accused persons. It was alleged that the father of Respondent 3 was the previous Chief Minister of the State and that he and the brother of the learned Sessions Judge belonged to the same political party. Therefore, according to the appellant, he was under a bona fide and genuine apprehension that he would not get justice if the trial was conducted and concluded by the present Sessions Judge. The High Court felt that the grounds set forth by the appellant seeking transfer could not be considered to be sufficient to direct transfer. Merely because the brother of the trial Judge was a sitting MLA, that could not be a ground to prima facie come to a conclusion that there would be pressure on the trial Judge either through his brother or through the father of the accused who was supposed to be close to his brother. It was further noted that the trial was at a final stage and about 150 prosecution witnesses and all the defence witnesses had been examined and what remained to be done was to hear the arguments and pass the judgment. Therefore, the prayer for transfer of the case was rejected.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

In this case, one thing which has to be kept in view is that the Sessions Judge himself has not indicated his disinclination to hear the matter. That is probably because he believes that the mere fact that his brother is known to some political heavyweight cannot stand in his way of discharging judicial function impartially without fear and favour. These are the hallmarks of judicial system. (Para 10)

A judicial officer in whatever capacity he may be functioning has to act with the belief that he is not to be guided by any factor other than to ensure that he shall render a free and fair decision which according to his conscience is the right one on the basis of materials placed before him. There can be no exceptions to this imperative, but at the same time there should not be any scope given to any person to go away with the feeling that the Judge was biased, however unfounded the impression may be. (Para 10)

It is sure that the present Sessions Judge would have acted in the true sense of a judicial officer. But nevertheless to ensure that justice is not only done, but also seen to be done and in view of the peculiar facts of the case, it will be appropriate if the High Court transfers the case to some other Sessions Court in Raipur itself. It is made clear that the transfer shall not be construed as casting any aspersion on the learned Sessions Judge. (Para 11). Satish Jaggi v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2007) 3 SCC 62: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 33: (2007) 53 AIC 249 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1786.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-2007]

Gurcharan Das Chadha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1966 SC 1418; Maneka Sanjay Gandhi v. Rani Jethmalani, (1979) 4 SCC 167: 1979 SCC (Cri) 934; Abdul Nazar Madani v. State of T.N., (2000) 6 SCC 204: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1048, relied on [6198] — Ss. 407 and 177 — Transfer petition in matrimonial matter — Allowed by High Court — Sustainability — Plea that said order was not sustainable in view of the earlier decision of the Supreme Court made in proceedings between the same parties which adjudicated upon territorial jurisdiction of the court to try the matter — Sustainability thereof — Held, though the said decision of Supreme Court in Y. Abraham Ajith, (2004) 8 SCC 100 was rendered in the background of Criminal Procedure Code, it was relevant for the present dispute — Hence, in view of what was stated in the said decision, matter remitted to High Court for reconsideration — CPC, 1908, Ss. 24 & 20(c) (Paras 5 and 6). Y.A. Ajit v. Sofana Ajit, (2007) 10 SCC 429: AIR 2007 SC 3151: (2007) 58 AIC 86 (SC): (2007) 4 CHN 62 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-9-2007]

Black's Law Dictionary; Words and Phrases (4th Edn.); Halsbury's Laws of England (4th Edn.), cited

[6199] — Ss. 407 and 482 — Grounds for transfer — Prayer for transfer of case from Aizawl (Mizoram) to Gauhati (Assam) in view of hostile attitude of the people of Aizawl against the accused allowed in the interest of fair trial and because the parties agreed for the transfer. Akhilesh Prasad v. Union Territory of Mizoram, (1981) 2 SCC 150: 1981 SCC (Cri) 337: AIR 1981 SC 806: (1981) 2 SCR 789: 1981 Cri LJ 407.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.D. Koshal and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1981]

[6200] — S. 407(1)(c) — Relief — Consolidation of cases — Finance companies accepting deposits from a large number of persons but not repaying the same — Consequently, criminal cases initiated against Directors of such companies in courts in different States — Prayer of accused persons for consolidation of such cases, rejected by Supreme Court — However, liberty granted to approach the High Court, or as the case may be, the Appellate Consumer Forum in that regard — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 406, 409, 407, 120-B, 467, 468 and 471 — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Constitution of India — Art. 32

In regard to the prayer for consolidation the petitioner would be at liberty to approach the High Court in accordance with law. Similar is the situation as regards the orders of the Consumer Forum and the petitioner in the normal course of events would be at liberty to ventilate the grievance if any, before the Appellate Forum in accordance with law. (Para 63). Narinderjit Singh Sahni v. Union of India, (2002) 2 SCC 210: AIR 2001 SC 3810.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, U.C. Banerjee and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2001]

[6201] — Ss. 407(1)(c) & (4), 406 and 408 — Transfer of case — Words "will tend to the general convenience of the parties or witnesses, or is expedient for the ends of justice" in S. 407(1)(c) — Scope — Embarrassment likely to be caused to judge(s), counsel, witnesses or parties due to subject-matter of proceedings — If a ground on which case may be transferred — Proceedings concerning commission of offences relating to pornographic material/acts — Trial being assigned to Fast Track Court presided over by a lady Judge, and also being a designated "Mahila Court" — High Court presuming that the Judge, being a woman, and for that reason alone, would be caused embarrassment and transferring case to Court presided over by a male Judge — Appellant being one of the female witnesses/accused, applying for case to be retransferred to original court, claiming that avoidance of embarrassment to her should have been given primacy — Held, embarrassment is a state of mind which is more individual-related than related to the sex of a person — High Court was not justified in presuming embarrassment to the lady judicial officer solely on the ground that she was a woman even when the officer concerned had not expressed any reservation, nor sought for or directed transfer of the case — Moreover, even when given such a choice at an earlier stage by the High Court, the said lady officer had not sought or directed transfer of the case — In any case, counsel for either party cannot claim embarrassment as a ground for transfer of a case — Lawyers accept briefs knowing very well the facts of the case and it is up to them to continue in a case or not — However, following Gurmit Singh case, (1996) 2 SCC 384, if at all there was a question of avoiding embarrassment caused to any of the people concerned, held, the Court ought to have considered the embarrassment that would be caused to witnesses — High Court had erred in not considering the embarrassment that might be caused to female witnesses, like the appellant, more so when their own acts were part of the prosecution evidence — Moreover, the fact that the appellant herself was in the position of an accused in the trial was of no relevance — Hence matter retransferred to original court presided over by lady officer with liberty to make arrangements for viewing of evidence likely to cause the least embarrassment to herself — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Information Technology Act, 2000, S. 67 — Indecent Representation of Women (Prohibition) Act, 1986, S. 6 — Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956, Ss. 5 and 6 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 366 and 376 (Paras 11 to 15). Fatima Riswana v. State, (2005) 1 SCC 582: 2005 SCC (Cri) 427: AIR 2005 SC 712: 2005 Cri LJ 900: (2005) 116 DLT 382: (2005) 26 AIC 73 (SC): (2005) 1 KLT 502.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-2005]

— S. 407(4) See Ss. 407(1)(c) & (4), 406 and 408

— S. 408 See also S. 528, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1288 in Vol. 2

— S. 408 See Ss. 178 and 408

See also Ss. 407(1)(c) & (4), 406 and 408

[6202] — Ss. 408, 407 and 406 — Manner of disposal of cross-cases — Held, should be disposed of by the same court and judgments should be pronounced on the same day — Supreme Court exhorting the legislature for not incorporating such a provision in CrPC

An encounter took place on the night of 18-2-1996 at a particular place in the State of M.P., in which firearms and other weapons were used and persons were injured. FIRs were lodged by both the parties. After investigation by the police challans were laid in both the cases alleging offences under Section 307 read with Section 149 and certain other sections of IPC. The Magistrate committed both the cases to the Sessions Court for trial. In the first case, the Sessions Court framed charges under Section 307 read with Sections 149, 147 and 427 IPC. However, after the preliminary hearing under Section 227 CrPC in the second case, the Sessions Judge found that no offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session needed to be included in the charges and hence he framed a charge as envisaged in Section 228(1)(a) of the Code for the offence under Section 324 read with Section 149 and certain other provisions of IPC and transferred that case to the CJM as provided in Section 228(1) CrPC. Separate revision petitions filed by the accused in the first case and the State were dismissed by the High Court. Hence, they filed separate appeals by special leave before the Supreme Court.

Allowing the State's appeal but not the other appeal,

Held :

It is a salutary practice, when two criminal cases relate to the same incident, they are tried and disposed of by the same court by pronouncing judgments on the same day. Such two different versions of the same incident resulting in two criminal cases are compendiously called "case and counter-case" by some High Courts and "cross-cases" by some other High Courts. (Para 8)

It is not clear why the legislature is still parrying to incorporate such a salubrious practice as a statutory requirement in CrPC. (Para 10)

Where one of the two cases (relating to the same incident) is charge-sheeted or complained of, involves offences or offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session, but none of the offences involved in the other case is exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, the Magistrate has no escape from committing the former case to the Sessions Court as provided in Section 209 CrPC. Though, the next case cannot be committed in accordance with Section 209 of the Code, the Magistrate has, nevertheless, power to commit the case to the Court of Session. Section 323 is incorporated in CrPC to meet similar cases also. (Para 12)

Section 323 CrPC does not make an inroad into Section 209 because the former is intended to cover cases to which Section 209 does not apply. When a Magistrate has committed a case on account of the legislative compulsion by Section 209, its cross-case, having no offence exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, must appear to the Magistrate as one which ought to be tried by the same Court of Session. Commitment under Sections 209 and 323 might be through two different channels, but once they are committed their subsequent flow could only be through the stream channelised by the provisions contained in Chapter XVIII. (Para 13). Sudhir v. State of M.P., (2001) 2 SCC 688: 2001 SCC (Cri) 387: AIR 2001 SC 826.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-2001]

Goriparthi Krishtamma, In re, 1929 MWN 881; Krishna Pannadi v. Emperor, AIR 1930 Mad 190: 31 Cri LJ 461, impliedly approved on this point

Nathi Lal v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 145: 1990 SCC (Cri) 638, followed

[6203] — Ss. 408(1), 406, 407, 228(1), 227 and 26(a)(ii) — Transfer of one of the cross-cases, by Sessions Court to CJM — Legality — Case and counter-case both committed to Sessions Court — Sessions Court finding that in one case no charge for an offence triable exclusively by Sessions Court could be framed while such a charge could be framed in the other case — In such circumstances, transfer of the former case by Sessions Court to CJM for trial under S. 228(1), held, improper — Sessions Court should have rather itself tried it in the manner indicated in Naithani Lal case 1990 Supp SCC 145 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 307, 149, 147, 427 and 324

A Sessions Judge has the power to try any offence under IPC. It is not necessary for the Sessions Court that the offence should be one exclusively triable by a Court of Session. This power of the Sessions Court can be discerned from a reading of Section 26 CrPC. Therefore, when a case involving offence not exclusively triable by such court is committed to the Court of Session, the Sessions Judge has to exercise a discretion regarding the case which he has to continue for trial in his court and the case which he has to transfer to the CJM. In Section 228(1) CrPC, the employment of the word "may" at one place and the word "shall" at another place in the same sub-section unmistakably indicates that when the offence is not triable exclusively by the Sessions Court it is not mandatory that he should order transfer of the case to the CJM after framing a charge. In situations where it is advisable for him to try such offence in his court there is no legal obligation to transfer the case to the CJM. (Para 16)

In the present case, the Sessions Judge ought not to have transferred the second case to the CJM as he did, but he himself should have tried it in the manner indicated in Nathi Lal. (Para 17). Sudhir v. State of M.P., (2001) 2 SCC 688: 2001 SCC (Cri) 387: AIR 2001 SC 826.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-2001]

— S. 409 See also S. 528, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1288 in Vol. 2

[6204] — Ss. 409(2) & 194, 407 and 462 & 465 — Case listed before one additional Sessions Judge tried by co-additional Sessions Judge after the recording of plea and framing of charges by the former — Where no order for transfer was passed by High Court under S. 407 whether a mistrial occurred — That any prejudice was caused neither pleaded nor proved — Held, such a situation covered by S. 462 read with S. 465 — Scope of Ss. 462 and 465 indicated

The case of the respondent-accused was committed to the Sessions Court, Metropolitan Area, Bangalore City and made over for trial to the Second Additional Sessions Judge who framed charges on August 21, 1980 and recorded the plea of the accused persons. On November 17, 1980 the Bangalore City Civil Courts Act came into force. In the monthly statement for November, 1980 the case was shown pending before the IV Additional City Civil and Sessions Judge. It so transpired that the III Additional City Civil and Sessions Judge recorded the evidence in the case and convicted the respondent-accused under Ss. 302 and 332, IPC. In appeal and reference the High Court looked into the monthly statements and observing that there was no order under S. 407, CrPC transferring the case, that such transfer could not take place under S. 409(2), that there was no order of the Sessions Judge presiding over the Principal City Civil Court for allotting this case to the III Additional City Civil and Sessions Judge and that the defect could not be remedied under S. 465, CrPC, quashed the convictions and directed remand for retrial.

Allowing the appeal by the State,

Held :

So far as the trial is concerned it was not without jurisdiction.

As regards the case being withdrawn and made over to another Sessions Judge after the plea of the accused was recorded and charge framed, the irregularity is covered by Ss. 465 and 462, CrPC. Reading both these sections shows that the scheme of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that where there is no inherent lack of jurisdiction then merely either on the ground of lack of territorial jurisdiction or on the ground of any irregularity of procedure an order or sentence awarded by a competent court could not be set aside unless a prejudice is pleaded and proved which will mean failure of justice. But in absence of such a plea merely on such technical ground the order or sentence passed by a competent court cannot be quashed.

In the present case the plea of prejudice or failure of justice is neither pleaded nor proved. Not only that, even the judgment of the High Court does not indicate any possibility of prejudice or failure of justice. The respondent here also did not suggest any possibility of prejudice or failure of justice. The order of remand by the High Court therefore cannot be sustained. Appeals are therefore remitted back to be heard and disposed of on merits.

[The Supreme Court observed that had the High Court called for the orders passed by the Principal Sessions Judge under S. 194, CrPC it would have found the authorisation for the transfer. Apparently the Sessions judge who tried the case tried it since it must have been allotted to him.]

Whether a case could be withdrawn under S. 409(2), CrPC once the plea of the accused has been taken and charge framed, and transferred under S. 194, CrPC not decided. State of Karnataka v. Kuppuswamy Gownder, (1987) 2 SCC 74: 1987 SCC (Cri) 280: AIR 1987 SC 1354: 1987 Cri LJ 1075.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-1987]

Kuppuswamy Gownder v. State of Karnataka, 1982 Cri LJ 90 (Kant), reversed

— S. 410 See Ss. 7, 14 and 406, 410

— S. 412 See Ss. 354, 355, 361, 264, 412 and 384(3)

— Ch. XXXII (Ss. 413 to 435) See Ss. 413, 414, 418 and 433 & 433-A and Ch. XXXII (Ss. 413 to 435)

— S. 413 See Ss. 354(5), 413 and 414

See also Ss. 368 and 413, 414 and 415

See also Ss. 433, 433-A & 434 and 413, 414 & 418

See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368, 371

[6205] — Ss. 413, 414, 418 and 433 & 433-A and Ch. XXXII (Ss. 413 to 435) — Court whether has control over execution of sentence (of life imprisonment) — Court if can bar remission of sentence imposed — Held, it is not correct to contend that execution of punishment is a matter in the hands of the executive alone and the court has no control over the same — Criminal Trial — Sentence — Execution of sentence — Court whether has control over execution of sentence (of life imprisonment) — Court if can bar remission of sentence imposed — Held, it is not correct to contend that execution of punishment was a matter in the hands of the executive alone and the court had no control over the same

It was submitted that just as the court could not direct the appropriate Government for granting remission to a convicted prisoner, it was not open to the court to direct the appropriate Government not to consider the case of a convict for grant of remission in sentence. It was contended that giving punishment for an offence was indeed a judicial function but once the judgment was pronounced and punishment awarded, the matter no longer remained in the hands of the court. The execution of the punishment passed into the hands of the executive and under the scheme of the statute the court had no control over the execution. The submission is wholly misconceived and untenable. (Paras 72 and 73). Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767: AIR 2008 SC 3040: 2008 Cri LJ 3911.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Agrawal, G.S. Singhvi and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2008]

Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of W.B., (2007) 12 SCC 230: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264; Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 3 SCC 745: 1979 SCC (Cri) 848; Jayawant Dattatraya Suryarao v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 10 SCC 109: 2002 SCC (Cri) 897, followed

Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., (1973) 1 SCC 20: 1973 SCC (Cri) 169; Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458: 2001 SCC (Cri) 735; State of M.P. v. Ratan Singh, (1976) 3 SCC 470: 1976 SCC (Cri) 428; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Bhagirath v. Delhi Admn., (1985) 2 SCC 580: 1985 SCC (Cri) 280; Zahid Hussein v. State of W.B., (2001) 3 SCC 750: 2001 SCC (Cri) 631; Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 6 SCC 296: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095; Prakash Dhawal Khairnar (Patil) v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 2 SCC 35: 2002 SCC (Cri) 281; Ram Anup Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 686: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1466; Mohd. Munna v. Union of India, (2005) 7 SCC 417: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1688; Nazir Khan v. State of Delhi, (2003) 8 SCC 461: 2003 SCC (Cri) 2033; Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 3 SCR 440; Pandit Kishori Lal v. King Emperor, (1944-45) 72 IA 1: AIR 1945 PC 64, relied on

State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586, distinguished

Delhi Admn. v. Manohar Lal, (2002) 7 SCC 222: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1670; State of Punjab v. Kesar Singh, (1996) 5 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1034, impliedly distinguished [6206] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Death sentence hanging since 2 years and nine months over the head of the accused — Time consumed in confirmation of the sentence by High Court and appeal and review petition filed before Supreme Court and clemency petition presented before President of India by accused — Accused-petitioner aged 22 sincerely repenting and promising to strive to serve humanity if given a chance to survive — Jail authorities making no adverse report against him — On an overall view of all the circumstances, held, petitioner entitled to protection of Art. 21 — Death sentence commuted to life imprisonment — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 32. Javed Ahmed Abdul Hamid Pawala v. State of Maharashtra, (1985) 1 SCC 275: 1984 SCC (Cri) 653: AIR 1985 SC 231.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-11-1984]

Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461, doubted

Impliedly overruled in Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 4 SCC 574 and (1989) 1 SCC 678*

[6207] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Delay beyond two years in executing death sentence, held, violative of Art. 21 — Death sentence liable to be commuted to life imprisonment in appropriate cases — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 32, 136, 226, 72 and 161 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The accused appellant was sentenced to death for committing dastardly murders in a planned way. He was first a 'prisoner under remand' for two years and thereafter he was kept in solitary confinement for eight years. In the present SLP and writ petition, the accused has claimed that the prolonged delay of about 10 years in executing the sentence of death has violated his right under Art. 21.

Held :

Procedure established by law does not end with the pronouncement of sentence but includes the carrying out of the sentence. Prolonged delay in execution of a sentence of death has dehumanising effect, whatever may be the cause of delay be it the time necessary for appeal and consideration of reprieve or some other cause for which the accused himself may be responsible. This dehumanising factor of prolonged delay has the constitutional implication of depriving a person of his life in an unjust, unfair and unreasonable way so as to offend Art. 21. It is open to the court of appeal or a court exercising writ jurisdiction, in an appropriate proceeding to take note of the circumstance when it is brought to its notice and give relief where necessary.

Having regard to the periods, considered by the Supreme Court in various cases, to be sufficient to justify interference with the sentence of death and making all reasonable allowances for the time necessary for appeal and consideration of reprieve, it must be held that delay exceeding two years in the execution of a sentence of death is sufficient to entitle the person under sentence of death to invoke Art. 21 and demand quashing of the sentence of death.

In the present case in place of the sentence of death, the sentence of imprisonment for life must be substituted. T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of T.N., (1983) 2 SCC 68: 1983 SCC (Cri) 342: AIR 1983 SC 361 (2): 1983 Cri LJ 481: (1983) 2 MLJ 39: 1983 MLJ (Cri) 466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-1983]

Overruled in Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678 [See its order at (1988) 4 SCC 574]; Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461*

See also (1991) 1 SCC 752

[6208] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Delay in execution of death sentence — Inordinate delay of more than 8 years in disposal of mercy petitions under Arts. 161 and 72, in absence of sufficient reasons therefor and in view of consequent mental agony suffered by the convict, the nature of crime, trend against death sentence and other circumstances, held, violated Art. 21 — Hence death sentence altered to sentence of life imprisonment — Constitution of India — Art. 21 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The properties of 'G' and 'M' were attached and sold in auction sale by the deceased Amin for the purpose of realising arrears of land revenue. When the Amin was returning after delivery of the sale certificate, he was waylaid by 'G' and 'M's son 'D'. 'D' fired from his pistol at the Amin, who fell down from his cycle and while 'D' held down the Amin, 'G' cut his throat with his sword and inflicted other injuries also, as a result of which the Amin died. 'D' absconded but 'G' was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to death under S. 302 IPC by the trial court on October 19, 1978. The High Court confirmed the sentence on February 28, 1979 and the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal of 'G' on March 17, 1981. Thereafter 'G' filed mercy petitions to the Governor in October and November, 1981 which were rejected on November 26, 1981. The wife of 'G' then moved mercy petition to the President of India in December 1981. While the Ministry of Home Affairs was processing the case of 'G' it was intimated that 'D' was also later convicted and sentenced to death and his appeal before the Supreme Court was dismissed on February 18, 1985. Subsequently, two mercy petitions were filed on behalf of 'D' which were forwarded for consideration of the Governor in the first instance by the Ministry of Home Affairs of the State dated April 9, 1984 and August 9, 1985 respectively. These still remain undisposed of even though they figured in the half-yearly reports of pending petitions. Since 'D' and 'G' were involved in the same crime, the Governor's decision on the mercy petition of 'D' was awaited for final disposal of the mercy petition of 'G' by the President. Ultimately in March 1989 the State Government intimated that the Governor had rejected the petition of 'D'. Meanwhile the District and Sessions Judge had visited 'G' in jail in May 1988 and had sent a report to the Inspector General of Prisons stating 'G's mental state was such that he might commit suicide by banging his head on the iron grill of his cell if a decision on his petition was not taken soon. The Inspector General's office further sent an official to Delhi to expedite the case. Thereafter, the present petition was filed for the condemned prisoner by the National Convener of Hindustani Andolan seeking a writ of habeas corpus or an appropriate direction in favour of 'G' who had been waiting the decision on his mercy petition pending before the President for 8 or 9 years.

Held :

It is well settled now that undue long delay in execution of the sentence of death would entitle the condemned person to approach the Supreme Court or to be approached under Art. 32 of the Constitution, but the Court would only examine the nature of delay caused and circumstances which ensued after sentence was finally confirmed by the judicial process and will have no jurisdiction to reopen the conclusions reached by the Court while finally maintaining the sentence of death. But the Court is entitled and indeed obliged to consider the question of inordinate delay in the light of all circumstances of the case to decide whether the execution of sentence should be carried out or should be altered into imprisonment for life. No fixed period of delay can be considered to be decisive. Article 21 is relevant in all stages. Speedy trial in criminal cases though may not be a fundamental right, is implicit in the broad sweep and content of Art. 21. Speedy trial is part of one's fundamental right to life and liberty. This principle is no less important for disposal of mercy petition. A condemned person has to suffer a degree of mental torture even though there is no physical mistreatment and no primitive torture.

There is no reason sufficiently commensurate to justify the long delay of over eight years in disposal of the mercy petition in the present case. The time and the manner in which the mercy petition has been dealt with in this case in respect of 'G' make sad reading and speak of the deplorable lack of speed and promptitude which in these matters should be there. Whether death sentence is the appropriate punishment for the crime of murder, cold-blooded in certain cases, is another debate. The convict has suffered mental agony of living under the shadow of death for long, far too long. He should not suffer that agony any longer. In the facts and circumstances, therefore, it is directed that the death sentence should not be carried out and the sentence imposed upon him be altered to imprisonment for life. Madhu Mehta v. Union of India, (1989) 4 SCC 62: 1989 SCC (Cri) 705: AIR 1989 SC 2299: 1989 Cri LJ 2321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-8-1989]

Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248, followed

[6209] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Delay in execution of death sentence — Held, inordinate delay in disposal of mercy petition under Art. 72 or 161 entitles a convict to approach Supreme Court for commutation of death sentence to sentence of life imprisonment on ground of violation of Arts. 14 and 21 — But time taken in judicial proceedings up to the final judicial verdict to be excluded in considering the delay in execution — No time limit can be prescribed for execution of the sentence — Court would consider the delay factor along with other factors but without re-examining the final judicial decision and may, in appropriate case, commute the death sentence — Constitution of India — Arts. 32, 14, 21 — When can Court under Art. 32 commute death sentence to sentence of life imprisonment

The accused persons were convicted under S. 302, IPC and sentenced to death by the trial court. The High Court confirmed their conviction and sentence. Supreme Court dismissed their special leave petitions or appeals and subsequent review petitions. Their mercy petitions to the President and/or the Governor were also rejected. They thereupon moved writ petitions under Art. 32 for setting aside the death sentence and substitution of sentence of life imprisonment on ground of prolonged delay in execution of death sentence. The ground of delay in execution was based on the inhuman suffering which a condemned prisoner suffers waiting to be executed and the mental torture it amounts to. These matters came up before the present Constitution Bench because of the conflict of decisions of a two-Judge Bench in T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of T.N., (1983) 2 SCC 68 and a three-Judge Bench in Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344 and also the observations of the Court in Javed Ahmed Abdul Hamid Pawala v. State of Maharashtra, (1985) 1 SCC 275. The Constitution Bench delivered its conclusion on October 11, 1988, (1988) 4 SCC 574, reserving the reasons to be given later. Giving the reasons the Supreme Court

Held :

Per majority

The delay which could be considered while considering the question of commutation of sentence of death into one of life imprisonment could only be from the date the judgment by the Apex Court is pronounced i.e. when the judicial process has come to an end. The time that has elapsed from the date of the offence till the final decision is taken into account by the courts and often lesser sentence awarded only on this account by Supreme Court.

So long as the matter is pending in any court before final adjudication even the person who has been condemned or who has been sentenced to death has a ray of hope and he does not suffer that mental torture which a person suffers when he knows that he is to be hanged but waits for the Doomsday. However, normally it is expected that the case where offence alleged is one which is punishable with death should be given top priority and trial should continue day to day unless it is concluded.

Besides, a judgment of court can never be challenged under Art. 14 or 21 and therefore the judgment awarding the sentence of death is not open to such challenge.

The only delay which would be material for consideration will be, subsequent to the final decision of the Court, the delay in disposal of the mercy petitions or delays occurring at the instance of the executive. Therefore, when such petitions under Art. 72 or 161 are received by the authorities concerned it is expected that the petitions shall be disposed of expeditiously. However, while considering the question of such delay, the time spent on petitions for review and repeated mercy petitions at the instance of the convicted person himself shall not be considered.

But it will not be open to the Supreme Court in exercise of jurisdiction under Art. 32 to go behind or to examine the final verdict reached by a competent court convicting and sentencing the condemned prisoner and even while considering the circumstances in order to reach a conclusion as to whether the inordinate delay coupled with subsequent circumstances could be held to be sufficient for coming to a conclusion that execution of the sentence of death will not be just and proper. The nature of the offence, circumstances in which the offence was committed will have to be taken as found by the competent court while finally passing the verdict. It may, however, be open to the court to examine or consider any circumstances after the final verdict was pronounced if it is considered relevant. But the question of improvement in the conduct of the prisoner after the final verdict cannot be considered for coming to the conclusion whether the sentence could be altered on that ground also.

Per Jagannatha Shetty, J. (concurring)

Article 21 received a creative connotation. It demands that any procedure which takes away the life and liberty of persons must be reasonable, just and fair. This procedural fairness is required to be observed at every stage and till the last breath of life. A condemned person has to suffer a degree of mental torture even though there is no physical mistreatment and no primitive torture. He may be provided with amenities of ordinary inmates in the prison, but nobody could succeed in giving him peace of mind.

The delay which is sought to be relied upon by the accused consists of two parts. The first part covers the time taken in the judicial proceedings. It is the time that the parties have spent for trial, appeal, further appeal and review. The second part takes into its fold the time utilized by the executive in the exercise of its prerogative clemency.

The judicial verdict pronounced by court in relation to a matter cannot be challenged on the ground that it violates one's fundamental right. The judgment of a court cannot be said to affect the fundamental rights of citizens.

The time taken in the judicial proceedings by way of trial and appeal up to the final judicial verdict cannot be taken into account by Court dealing with the accused's challenge to delay in execution of death sentence. The court also cannot take into consideration the time taken for disposal of any petition filed by or on behalf of the accused either under Art. 226 or under Art. 32 after the final judgment affirming the conviction and sentence. The time taken in judicial proceedings is intended to ensure a fair trial to the accused and to avoid hurry-up justice. The time is spent in the public interest for proper administration of justice. If there is inordinate delay in disposal of the case, the trial court while sentencing or the appellate court while disposing of the appeal may consider the delay and the cause thereof along with other circumstances. The court before sentencing is bound to hear the parties and take into account every circumstance for and against the accused. If the court awards death sentence, notwithstanding the delay in disposal of the case, there cannot be a second look at the sentence save by way of review. There cannot be a second trial on the validity of sentence based on Art. 21. The execution which is impugned is execution of a judgment and not apart from judgment. If the judgment with the sentence awarded is valid and binding, it falls to be executed in accordance with law since it is a part of the procedure established by law. If the delay in passing the sentence cannot render the execution unconstitutional, the delay subsequent thereof cannot also render it unconstitutional. Much less any fixed period of delay could be held to make the sentence inexecutable. It would be arbitrary to fix any period of limitation for execution on the ground that it would be a denial of fairness in procedure under Art. 21.

The court may only consider whether there was undue long delay in disposing of mercy petition, whether the State was guilty of dilatory conduct and whether the delay was for no reason at all. The mental torment faced by a condemned prisoner may become acute when the judicial verdict is finally set against the accused. Earlier to it, there was every reason for him to hope for acquittal. That hope is extinguished after the final verdict. If, therefore, there is inordinate delay in execution, the condemned prisoner is entitled to come to the court requesting to examine whether it is just and fair to allow the sentence of death to be executed. However, the inordinate delay may be a significant factor, but that by itself cannot render the execution unconstitutional. Nor can it be divorced from the dastardly and diabolical circumstances of the crime itself. The time taken by the executive for disposal of mercy petitions may depend upon the nature of the case and the scope of enquiry to be made. It may also depend upon the number of mercy petitions submitted by or on behalf of the accused. The court, therefore, cannot prescribe a time limit for disposal even of mercy petitions.

However, there should not be any delay either in listing or in disposal of the matter. The person who complains about the delay in execution should not be put to further delay. The matter, therefore, must be expeditiously and on top priority basis, disposed of. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248: AIR 1989 SC 1335.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: G.L. Oza[1], M.M. Dutt[1], K.N. Singh[1], K. Jagannatha Shetty[2] and L.M. Sharma[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-1989]

*T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of T.N., (1983) 2 SCC 68: 1983 SCC (Cri) 342 and Javed Ahmed Abdul Hamid Pawala v. State of Maharashtra, (1985) 1 SCC 275: 1984 SCC (Cri) 653, overruled

Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461, impliedly affirmed

[6210] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Delay in execution of death sentence — In case of inordinate delay, the convict is entitled to approach Supreme Court under Art. 32 — No fixed period of delay can be specified for this purpose — Supreme Court considering facts and circumstances may alter the sentence of death to sentence of life imprisonment — But it cannot disturb the conclusion of court reached in finally maintaining the sentence of death. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 4 SCC 574: 1989 SCC (Cri) 25: AIR 1989 SC 142.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: G.L. Oza, M.M. Dutt, K.N. Singh, K. Jagannatha Shetty and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-10-1988]

*T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of T.N., (1983) 2 SCC 68: 1983 SCC (Cri) 342, overruled

*Javed Ahmed Abdul Hamid Pawala v. State of Maharashtra, (1985) 1 SCC 275: 1984 SCC (Cri) 653, impliedly overruled

Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461, impliedly affirmed

[6211] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Delay in execution of death sentence as ground for acquittal — Five years elapsed since award of death sentence by trial court — For the lapse of about three years subsequent to Supreme Court's decision affirming death sentence accused persons themselves partly responsible having pursued further review and writ petitions in Supreme Court against the sentence — Writing or translating religious or other books by accused persons in jail, instead of showing hovering of death penalty in their mind, indicate their composed mind and concentrated attention — Having regard to the magnitude of murders committed, gruesome nature of offences and manner of perpetrating them, held, on facts and circumstances, their cases falls under "rarest of rare" category and hence no leniency in matter of sentence called for — Prompt execution of the death sentence urged. Munawar Harun Shah v. State of Maharashtra, (1983) 3 SCC 354: 1983 SCC (Cri) 625: AIR 1983 SC 585: 1983 Cri LJ 971.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and Ranganath Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-4-1983]

[6212] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Delay in execution of sentence of death — When amounts to violation of Art. 21 and liable to be quashed by Supreme Court — No absolute time limit can be fixed by Court — Rule laid down in T.V. Vatheeswaran case that a delay beyond two years in the execution would violate Art. 21, held, impractical and improper — Decision to be taken by court on facts and circumstances of each case — Court to find reason of the delay and who is responsible for it and decide accordingly — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 32 & 136

Article 21 stands like a sentinel over human misery, degradation and oppression. All procedure, at all stages — the trial, the sentence, the incarceration and finally, the execution of the sentence — must be just, fair and reasonable. So even if the question of sentence is finally settled by the Supreme Court, Art. 21 will not cease to operate at subsequent stages. Even though a sentence of death was justified when passed, its execution in the circumstances of the case, may not be justified by reason of unduly long lapse of time since the confirmation of that sentence by the court.

The inordinate delay in the execution of the sentence is one circumstance which has to be taken into account while deciding whether the death sentence ought to be allowed to be executed in a given case. The prolonged anguish of alternating hope and despair, the agony of uncertainty, the consequences of such suffering on the mental, emotional, and physical integrity and health of the individual can render the decision to execute the sentence of death an inhuman and degrading punishment in the circumstances of a given case. In appropriate cases therefore, the Supreme Court either while disposing of special leave petitions and appeals or while dealing with writ petitions filed after the unsuccessful termination of the normal processes of litigation has jurisdiction to exercise its power to direct ex debito justitiae that the death sentence shall not be executed by reason of supervening circumstances.

But no absolute or unqualified rule can be laid down that in every case in which there is a long delay in the execution of a death sentence, the sentence must be substituted by the sentence of life imprisonment. Moreover time limit of two years for execution of death sentence, as fixed by the Court in T.V. Vatheeswaran case runs in the teeth of common experience as regards the time generally occupied by proceedings in the High Court, the Supreme Court and before the executive, authorities. This is apart from the time which the President or the Governor, as the case may be, takes to consider petitions filed under Art. 72 or Art. 161 of the Constitution or the time which the Government takes to dispose of applications filed under Ss. 432 & 433 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Therefore, the Court called upon to vacate a death sentence on the ground of delay caused in executing that sentences must find why the delay was caused and who is responsible for it. It is relevant to consider whether the delay in the execution of the death sentence is attributable to the fact that he has resorted to a series of untenable proceedings which have the effect of defeating the ends of justice. Moreover, the nature of the offence, the diverse circumstances attendant upon it, its impact upon the contemporary society and the question whether the motivation and pattern of the crime are such as are likely to lead to its repetition, if the death sentence is vacated, are matters which must enter into the verdict as to whether the sentence should be vacated for the reason that its execution is delayed. The substitution of the death sentence by a sentence of life imprisonment cannot follow by the application of the two years' formula, as a matter of quod erat demonstrandum.

In the present case the sentence of death was imposed upon the petitioners by the Sessions Court on November 26, 1977, it was upheld by the High Court on July 18, 1978 and the SLP filed by the petitioners was dismissed by the Supreme Court on March 5, 1979. The matter was kept on pending in the Supreme Court since then in one form or another, by reason of some proceeding or the other. The last of the writ petitions filed by the petitioners was dismissed by the Supreme Court on August 24, 1981. The State Government must explain why the sentence imposed upon the petitioners had not been executed for more than a year and half. However, the sentence of death imposed upon the petitioners by the Sessions Court and which was uphold by the High Court and the Supreme Court, cannot be vacated merely for the reason that there has been a long delay in the execution of that sentence. Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461: AIR 1983 SC 465: 1983 Cri LJ 803: 1983 MLJ (Cri) 545: (1983) 2 MLJ 46.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and V.D. Tulzapurkar and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-3-1983]

T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of T.N., (1983) 2 SCC 68: 1983 SCC (Cri) 342, overruled on this point

[6213] — Ss. 413 and 414 — Execution of death sentence — In case of undue long delay in the execution, Court in the circumstances of the case, may alter the sentence of death to that of life imprisonment — Having regard to the mercy petitions pursued by the convict before the Governor and the President and filing of special leave petition, review petition and the present writ petition before Supreme Court, held, on facts there was no undue long delay in execution — Hence sentence of death does not call for interference on ground of delay in its execution. Jumman Khan v. State of U.P., (1991) 1 SCC 752: 1991 SCC (Cri) 283: AIR 1991 SC 345: 1991 Cri LJ 439.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

Triveniben (Smt) v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248; Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461, followed

T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of T.N., (1983) 2 SCC 68: 1983 SCC (Cri) 342, held overruled on this point

[6214] — Ss. 413 to 415 — Execution of death sentence — Delay in — Commutation of sentence — Mercy petition filed before Governor after dismissal of the earlier petition and consequently stay of execution of sentence ordered — Pendency of the mercy petition for two years, in absence of reasonable explanation, held, amounted to considerable delay in execution — Accordingly, petitioner would be governed and dealt with as a life convict for all purposes

Only relief a convict awaiting execution of death sentence can get from this Court on the ground of delay is conversion of the sentence into that of life imprisonment. However, on conversion of the death sentence to life imprisonment, the petitioner would now be governed and dealt with as a life convict for all purposes. (Para 10). Daya Singh v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 61: 1991 SCC (Cri) 523: AIR 1991 SC 1548: 1991 Cri LJ 1903.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: L.M. Sharma and J.S. Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-1991]

Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248, relied on [6215] — Ss. 413 to 415 — Execution of death sentence — Delay in — Effect — Writ petition filed before High Court for stay of execution dismissed on wrong findings of fact that after dismissal of first mercy petition under Art. 72 a second mercy petition had also been filed and that therefore delay caused in disposal of the second one had no significance, but in fact only one mercy petition had been filed which had been dismissed — SLP filed before Supreme Court dismissed solely on the basis of the incorrect statements made by the High Court in its judgment in the writ petition — Factual mistakes never brought to the notice of the Supreme Court and could be found by it only on examination of the entire file — In the special facts and circumstances, without expressing any precise and decisive opinion as to the fixed period within which a mercy petition should be disposed of, held, justice demands modification of sentence of death into that of life imprisonment. Shivaji Jaising Babar v. State of Maharashtra, (1991) 4 SCC 375: 1991 SCC (Cri) 972: AIR 1991 SC 2147.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian, K. Ramaswamy and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-9-1991]

— S. 414 See Ss. 354(5), 413, 414

See also Ss. 368 and 413, 414 and 415

See also Ss. 413 & 414

See also Ss. 413 to 415

See also Ss. 413, 414, 418 and 433 & 433-A and Ch. XXXII (Ss. 413 to 435)

See also Ss. 433, 433-A & 434 and 413, 414 & 418

See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368 and 371

[6216] — S. 414 — Mercy petitions before President should normally be disposed of within three months — Writ petition for setting aside death sentence filed before Supreme Court during pendency of mercy petition pending before President for four years — Despite adjournments of the petition and notices issued to the Government of India, no affidavit filed on behalf of the Government — On facts and circumstances, sentence of life imprisonment substituted for sentence of death — Constitution of India, Arts. 72(1)(c), 32 and 21

There are at least some sensitive areas like those concerning life and death where the need for speedy justice is self-evident. Even an election petition is required under S. 86(7) of the R.P. Act, 1951 to be tried within six months. The expectation of persons condemned to death that they still have a chance to live is surely not of lesser social significance than the expectation of contestants to an election petition. Therefore, a self-imposed rule of discipline that mercy petitions shall be disposed of within, say, three months should be accepted.

In the present case considering all the circumstances of the case, including those concerning the background and motivation of the crime, the death sentence imposed upon the petitioner should be set aside and in its place the sentence of life imprisonment should be passed. However, this decision is not based on ground of non-execution of death sentence for a certain number of years because a sentence of death does not become inexecutable merely after the lapse of any particular number of years. K.P. Mohd. v. State of Kerala, 1984 Supp SCC 684: 1985 SCC (Cri) 142.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.N. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 11-3-1983]

See also Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461

[6217] — Ss. 414 and 415 — Inconsistent decisions between Benches of the Supreme Court on award of death sentence while disposing of separate appeals of co-accused equally guilty in the same case — Benefit of commutation to life imprisonment given to one must be extended to remaining co-accused — Jail authorities directed to verify consistency in award of death sentence between co-accused before carrying out any death sentence — Penal Code, 1860, S. 53 — Constitution of India, Arts. 134 and 136

M, J, K and the petitioner H were convicted under S. 302, IPC and their sentence of death was affirmed by the High Court. All the four accused were equally guilty in causing the murders. M died in a police encounter. The separate appeals to the Supreme Court by the remaining three co-accused met different fates at the hands of different Benches of the Supreme Court before whom the matters came up for disposal. The special leave petition of J was dismissed on April 15, 1976 and he was hanged on October 6, 1981. But the special leave petition of K was admitted and appeal allowed on April 10, 1977 by a Bench consisting of Bhagwati and Fazal Ali, JJ. who commuted his sentence of death to imprisonment of life. However, the special leave petition of H, the petitioner herein, was dismissed on October 16, 1978 by another Bench consisting of Sarkaria and Shinghal, JJ. and his review petition was also dismissed on May 9, 1980 by Sarkaria and A.P. Sen, JJ. In the case of H, though the Registry of the Supreme Court mentioned in its Office Report the fact that co-accused K's death sentence had been already commuted, this fact was not specifically brought to the notice of the Court when the petitioner's special leave petition and review petition were dismissed

On dismissal of petitioner's petition to the President under Art. 72, his execution was fixed for October 6, 1981, when he filed the present writ petition under Art. 32 pointing out that his co-accused K, no less guilty than him, had escaped death sentence which he was due to suffer. Staying the execution of death sentence, the Supreme Court.

Held :

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Desai, J.

In the present circumstances of the case no distinction at all can be made between the part played by K on the one hand and H (the petitioner) on the other. Since death sentence of K was commuted by the Supreme Court, it would be unjust to confirm the death sentence imposed upon the petitioner. That will involve the Court as well as the authorities concerned in the violation of rudimentary norms governing the administration of justice.

In view of the background of the case it would not be wrong if the Court itself commutes the sentence of death imposed on the petitioner. But in the interest of comity between the powers of the Supreme Court and the powers of the President of India, it will be more in the fitness of things if the Court recommends to the President for commutation of death sentence to life imprisonment in exercise of power under Art. 72. This is so because the President of India has already considered the mercy petition of the petitioner once and has rejected it.

It is however directed that prior to the actual execution of any death sentence, the Jail Superintendent should ascertain personally whether the sentence of death imposed upon any of the co-accused of the prisoner who is due to be hanged, has been commuted. If it has been commuted the Superintendent should apprise the superior authorities of the matter, who, in turn, must take prompt steps for bringing the matter to the notice of the Court concerned.

Per A.N. Sen, J. (concurring)

It will be a sheer travesty of justice and the course of justice will be perverted, if for the very same offence, the petitioner has to pay the extreme penalty of death whereas the death sentence imposed on his co-accused for the very same offence is commuted and his life is spared. Therefore, it will be manifestly unjust to allow the death sentence imposed on the petitioner to be executed.

Apart from the jurisdiction and powers conferred on the Court under Arts. 32 and 136, the Court retains and must retain an inherent power and jurisdiction for dealing with any extraordinary situation in the larger interests of administration of justice and for preventing manifest injustice being done. This power must necessarily be sparingly used only in exceptional circumstances for furthering the ends of justice. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of this case, this is a fit case where the Court should entertain the present petition of H and the Court should interfere by commuting the death sentence imposed on the petitioner to one of life imprisonment.

As, however, the case of the petitioner had earlier been considered by the President of India to whom the petitioner had presented the petition for mercy, propriety and decorum require that the matter should be referred back to the President instead of the Supreme Court itself deciding to commute the death sentence. Harbans Singh v. State of U.P., (1982) 2 SCC 101: 1982 SCC (Cri) 361: AIR 1982 SC 849: 1982 Cri LJ 795: 1982 MLJ (Cri) 409.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and D.A. Desai[1] and A.N. Sen[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-1982]

— S. 415 See Ss. 366, 415, 433, 434 & 435
See also Ss. 368 and 413, 414 and 415
See also Ss. 413 to 415
See also Ss. 414 and 415

— S. 418 See also S. 383, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1178 in Vol. 2

— S. 418 See Ss. 413, 414, 418 and 433 & 433-A and Ch. XXXII (Ss. 413 to 435)
See also Ss. 433, 433-A & 434 and 413, 414 & 418
See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368, 371

[6218] — Ss. 418 and 428 — Period during which the prisoner was under preventive detention cannot be set off — However if during the course of preventive detention the prisoner was subject to criminal process either on filing of an FIR or on criminal conviction, but under an erroneous assumption was not subjected to remand process or served with a warrant then he is entitled to set-off for such period

The first writ petitioner before the High Court was under preventive detention when on December 18, 1969 an FIR was filed naming him and others for offences under the Indian Penal Code, Ss. 121-A, 120-B, read with 395 and 120-B, read with 447. Only when his preventive detention was revoked in April 1970, was he produced before the Magistrate. On conviction, he filed a writ petition claiming set-off for the period between December 18, 1969 to April 13, 1970.

The second writ petitioner was convicted on April 10, 1972 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four years. He appealed. The High Court granted bail on April 29, 1972. He was arrested under MISA on June 26, 1975. His appeal was dismissed on November 28, 1975. But the warrant of arrest was served on him on December 30, 1975 on which date the detention order was revoked. He claimed set-off of the entire period of preventive detention or at least the period of one month from December 1 to December 30, 1975 since the warrant could have been served on him on December 1.

Held :

It is true that S. 428 speaks of the "period of detention" undergone by an accused person, but it expressly says that the detention mentioned refers to the detention during the investigation, enquiry or trial of the case in which the accused person has been convicted. Hence the period during which the writ petitioners were in preventive detention cannot be set off under S. 428 against the term of imprisonment imposed on them.

However on the peculiar facts of both the appeals there are periods of the preventive detention when they should have been subject to criminal process. Even while the first petitioner was in custody under preventive detention, he could have been produced before the Magistrate when the FIR was lodged. Neither the Criminal Procedure Code nor the preventive detention law bars such a course. Hence the entire period from December 19, 1969, when many of the co-accused were produced before the Magistrate, to April 18, 1970 should be treated as part of the period during which the first petitioner was under detention as an undertrial prisoner.

In the case of the second petitioner the warrant could have been served immediately on the dismissal of the appeal on November 28, 1975 and the accused was not responsible if the authority concerned chose to serve the warrant on him on December 30, 1975. Section 418, Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 includes the case where the warrant concerns an accused who is already under preventive detention. There is no provision in Criminal Procedure Code or MISA which requires the service of the warrant to be delayed until after the period of preventive detention is over. Nor is there an anomaly in a man having to suffer two kinds of detention at the same time, one preventive and the other punitive. Govt. of A.P. v. Anne Venkatesware, (1977) 3 SCC 298: 1977 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 1977 SC 1096: (1977) 3 SCR 7: 1977 Cri LJ 935.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and A.C. Gupta, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-1977]

[6219] — S. 418 — Held, imprisonment for life is executable in jail and not necessarily by banishment or exile — State Government to appoint the jail for executing the sentence — Prisoners Act, 1900, S. 32 — 'Place' — Meaning of — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 53 Secondly, 53-A, 55 and 58 (prior to repeal) — CrPC, 1898 — S. 383

Under S. 32 of the Prisoners Act a sentence of transportation either for a term or for life could be and a sentence of life imprisonment can be made executable in local jails by constituting such jails as the 'places' within the meaning of S. 32 under orders of the State Governments. Apart from S. 32 of the Prisoners Act, S. 383 of Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 and S. 418 of Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 also contain the necessary legal authority and power under which a criminal court can by issuing a warrant direct the execution or carrying out of a sentence of life imprisonment in local jails. Ever since the sentence of transportation either for a term or for life became executable in jails within the country and the same position must obtain in regard to persons sentenced to imprisonment for life on and after January 1, 1956 in view of S. 53-A, IPC inserted by the Amending Act 26 of 1955. Naib Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 454: 1983 SCC (Cri) 536: AIR 1983 SC 855: 1983 Cri LJ 1345.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-1983]

[6220] — S. 418 — Execution of sentence of imprisonment — In view of the death of the accused, held, custodial sentence became unexecutable (Para 10). N. Somashekar v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 11 SCC 334.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2004]

— S. 420 See Ss. 197 and 420, 467, 468, 471

— S. 421 See also S. 386, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1178 in Vol. 2

— S. 421 See Ss. 357 and 421
See also Ss. 357, 421 and 431
See also Ss. 357 and 421 & 431 and 374 and 389 & 387
See also Ss. 357(3) & (1) and 421
See also Ss. 357(3), 421 and 431
See also Ss. 389 and 421
See also Ss. 428 & 421

[6221] — Ss. 421 and 424 — Applicability — Held, when a fine is imposed simpliciter S. 421 r/w S. 424 would be applicable, but where fine forms part of the sentence, it would not have any application (Para 10). Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 1: (2007) 2 KLT 488: 2007 Cri LJ 2417: (2007) 55 AIC 244 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

[6222] — Ss. 421 and 424 — Fine — Liability to pay certain amount imposed under FERA — Default in payment thereof — Sentence of imprisonment awarded by criminal court under old Act — Serving out the sentence, held, would not wipe out the civil liability to pay the penal amount — Hence procedure for recovery of the amount as arrears of land revenue can be prescribed under the new Act — Thereby no new liability created — Both penalty and criminal prosecution can be deemed to be under the new Act — CrPC, 1898 — Ss. 386 and 388. Kirpal Singh v. Collector, 1992 Supp (3) SCC 183: 1993 SCC (Cri) 209.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-1991]

[6223] — S. 421 — Sentence for default in payment of fine — Modification of — Offences under S. 21 and S. 23 r/w S. 8(c) NDPS Act — Appellant sentenced to 10 years' RI along with fine of Rs 1 lakh for each of the said two offences separately — Further sentenced to 3 years' RI along with fine of Rs 10,000 under S. 135-A Customs Act — He was to suffer 2 1/2 years' RI and 6 months' RI in default of payment of fine of Rs 1 lakh and Rs 10,000 respectively — All the substantive sentences were to run concurrently — Appellant already undergone sentence for more than 11 years and not in a position to pay fine — He was a Nigerian resident and intended to leave India as early as possible — On facts, RI for 2 1/2 years in default of payment of fine of Rs 1 lakh, modified to RI for one year — Customs Act, 1962, S. 135-A — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 21 and S. 23 r/w S. 8(c) (Paras 4 and 5). Obie Kwe Emeanu v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 11 SCC 317: 2004 SCC (Cri) 176.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2001]

[6224] — Ss. 421(1) proviso and 357 — Realisation of fine even in case of default imprisonment undergone — When warranted — Appellant M exhorting his fellows by saying 'maro sale ko' — Thereupon, R stabbing the deceased which resulted in his death — Held, even if the words 'maro sale ko' were used by M in an abusive way, it could not be said that he exhorted his fellows to kill the deceased — Conviction of M altered from Ss. 302/34 to Ss. 324/110 and sentence reduced to the period already undergone by him — However, considering the young age of the victim and the status of the accused M further sentenced to a fine of Rs 50,000 to be paid to the heirs of the victim under the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 — Fine is to be realised even if the convict had undergone imprisonment in default of payment thereof — Penology — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 324/110 and 302/34. Matadin v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 7 SCC 216: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1569: AIR 1999 SC 138.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-1998]

— S. 421 r/w S. 431 See Ss. 357(3) and 421 r/w S. 431

— S. 424 See Ss. 421 and 424

[6225] — S. 427 — Concurrent running of sentences — Plea for — Conviction under S. 395 IPC — One accused-appellant convicted in 4 different cases while other accused-appellant convicted in 5 different cases — RI for 7 years ordered by Assistant Sessions Judge against the appellants in each case to run one after the other — Supreme Court not desiring to give benefit of all sentences to run concurrently — Adopting via media consistent with the administration of criminal justice, total period of 14 years' imprisonment to each appellant in respect of all the convictions passed against the appellants, held, was sufficient to meet the ends of justice — Penal Code, 1860, S. 395. Ammavasai v. Inspector of Police, Valliyanur, (2000) 9 SCC 749: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1477: AIR 2000 SC 3544.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2000]

[6226] — Ss. 427 and 482 — Sentence — Concurrent or consecutive — Appellant convicted and sentenced in two separate cases — Appeals thereagainst before High Court and SLPs before Supreme Court dismissed — Application before High Court under Ss. 482/427 CrPC praying, inter alia, that the sentences imposed in both the cases be directed to run concurrently, rejected — Held, as provision of S. 427 CrPC was not invoked in the original cases or appeals, a separate application filed before the High Court after the dismissal of the SLPs was not maintainable — High Court could not have exercised its inherent jurisdiction in a case of this nature which it has previously not exercised while deciding the appeals — S. 482 CrPC, held, not an appropriate remedy as neither trial Judge nor High Court while convicting and sentencing the appellant indicated that sentences passed against him in both the cases shall run concurrently or that S. 427 CrPC would be attracted — Hence S. 427 CrPC rightly not applied in a separate and independent proceeding by the High Court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B/420, 468 and 471 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(1)

Application of the provision of Section 427 CrPC falls for consideration in this appeal. The appellant was a bank employee. He worked as a Manager. His job was to advance loans. Allegedly, in one case he sanctioned a loan to a customer for black & white television, while the scheme was for something else. In another case he sanctioned a loan for obtaining plots from the housing society. The Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) had also filed charge-sheets against the appellant in both the cases. Two cases, thus, came to be registered against him; one being Criminal Case No. 9 of 1992 and another being Criminal Case No. 5 of 1993. In the first case he was convicted for commission of offences punishable under Sections 120-B/420, 468 and 471 IPC read with Section 5(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and was sentenced to undergo 18 months' rigorous imprisonment with different amounts of fines for offences punishable under the said sections. In the second case he was found guilty for commission of offences punishable under Sections 120-B/420, 468 and 471 IPC read with Section 5(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and convicted and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years with different amounts of fines for offences punishable under the said sections. Appeals preferred thereagainst before the High Court were dismissed by the judgments and orders dated 30-12-2004 and 20-1-2005 respectively. Special leave petitions filed thereagainst were also dismissed by the Supreme Court.

The appellant thereafter filed an application before the High Court purported to be under Sections 482/427 CrPC praying, inter alia, therein that the sentences imposed upon him in both the cases be directed to run concurrently. The said application has been rejected by the High Court by reason of the impugned judgment. Hence this appeal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The provision of Section 427 CrPC was not invoked in the original cases or in the appeals. A separate application was filed before the High Court after the special leave petitions were dismissed. Such an application was not maintainable. The High Court could not have exercised its inherent jurisdiction in a case of this nature as it had not exercised such jurisdiction while passing the judgments in appeal. Section 482 CrPC was, therefore, not an appropriate remedy having regard to the fact that neither the trial Judge, nor the High Court while passing the judgments of conviction and sentence indicated that the sentences passed against the appellant in both the cases shall run concurrently or Section 427 CrPC would be attracted. The said provision, therefore, could not have been applied in a separate and independent proceeding by the High Court. The appeal being devoid of any merit is dismissed. (Para 12). M.R. Kudva v. State of A.P., (2007) 2 SCC 772: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 648: AIR 2007 SC 568: 2007 Cri LJ 763.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-2006]

[6227] — Ss. 427, 31 and 482 — Concurrent running of sentences — Grounds for directing — In the present case, transactions relating to family of respondent who issuing different cheques to same complainant — Separate complaints filed in respect of those cheques and convictions recorded by separate courts in terms of S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act — Discussing case law on the point held, High Court rightly directed the sentences to run concurrently — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138

All the transactions related to the family of the respondent and the matter related to different cheques issued by the respondent to the complainant party. For this purpose separate complaints were filed. The convictions were in terms of Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. An application was filed in terms of Section 482 read with Section 427 CrPC. The prayer was to the effect that the quantum of punishment awarded may be permitted to run concurrently in respect of the three convictions and sentences imposed. The High Court directed that the sentences imposed by the Sessions Judge, and the Judicial Magistrate, were to run concurrently. Dismissing the appeal thereagainst, the Supreme Court held as above. (Paras 2, 3 and 7). State of Punjab v. Madan Lal, (2009) 5 SCC 238.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, L.S. Panta and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2009]

Mohd. Akhtar Hussain v. Collector of Customs (Prevention), (1988) 4 SCC 183: 1988 SCC (Cri) 921; State of Maharashtra v. Najakat, (2001) 6 SCC 311: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1106, relied on [6228] — S. 427 — Sentence of imprisonment for three years on two counts directed by High Court to run consecutively — Offence committed of serious nature — Hence, prayer to direct the sentence to run concurrently, rejected — However, sentence reduced from three years to two years on two counts and directed to run consecutively — Thus, sentence reduced from six to four years — Penal Code, 1860, S. 326 r/w S. 34 (Para 4). Ram Lal v. State of Haryana, (2003) 9 SCC 242.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-2003]

[6229] — S. 427 — Concurrent or consecutive sentence — On 5-5-2001 A-1 threatened dire consequences on being slapped by K (deceased) on account of a quarrel regarding borrowed money — On 6-5-2001 A-1 stopped K and PW 1 who were on a motorcycle at the bus-stand and a quarrel ensued — Noticing A-1 and A-2 armed with knives, PW 1 rushed towards K — A-1 poked a knife on the right abdomen of PW 1 and A-3 kicked him on his stomach as a result of which PW 1 fell down on the ground — A-1 stabbed K on his left side chest and ribs and A-2 stabbed K on the top of right side hip — K and PW 1 (informant) succumbed to their injuries — Case not covered under S. 302 — Conviction of appellant (A-1) altered to S. 304 Pt. I IPC — Conviction of A-1 under S. 307, upheld — Custodial sentence of 10 years, held, proper, to run concurrently with sentence under S. 307 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 or S. 304 Pt. I

On 5-5-2001 A-1 had threatened dire consequences being slapped by K (deceased) on account of a quarrel regarding borrowed money. On 6-5-2001 A-1 stopped K and PW 1 who were on a motorcycle in the bus stand and a quarrel ensued. Noticing A-1 and A-2 armed with knives, PW 1 rushed towards K. A-3 was also with the other accused persons. A-1 poked a knife on the right abdomen of PW 1 and A-3 kicked him on his stomach as a result of which PW 1 fell down on the ground. A-1 stabbed K on his left side chest and ribs and A-2 stabbed K on the top of right side hip. The dying declaration of the complainant PW 1 was recorded by Magistrate. The High Court upheld, the conviction of A-1 for offences under Section 302 and Section 307 IPC. The appellant was sentenced to undergo RI for life and to pay a fine of Rs 500 for the first offence and RI for five years and fine of Rs 2000 with default stipulation for the second offence.

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

When the factual position is considered in the background of the legal principles, the inevitable conclusion is that the appropriate conviction would be in terms of Section 304 Part I IPC and not Section 302 IPC. The conviction under Section 307 IPC does not suffer from any infirmity. Custodial sentence of 10 years in respect of the offence punishable under Section 304 Part I IPC would suffice. Both the sentences would run concurrently. (Para 14). Kotikalapudi Subba Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 5 SCC 390: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 621.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2008]

Sridhar Bhuyan v. State of Orissa, (2004) 11 SCC 395: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 98; Parkash Chand v. State of H.P., (2004) 11 SCC 381: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 87; Sachchey Lal Tiwari v. State of U.P., (2004) 11 SCC 410: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 105; Sandhya Jadhav v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 4 SCC 653: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 394; Lachman Singh v. State of Haryana, (2006) 10 SCC 524: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 123, relied on

[6230] — S. 427(1) — Sentence — Concurrent or consecutive — Where second offence is distinct and different from the first one or the facts constituting the two offences are quite different, the subsequent sentence should normally run consecutive to the first one — Gold (Control) Act, 1968, S. 85(1)(ii) — Customs Act, 1962, S. 135 — Penology

If a given transaction constitutes two offences under the enactments generally, it is wrong to have consecutive sentences. It is proper and legitimate to have concurrent sentences. But this rule has no application if the transaction relating to offences is not the same or the facts constituting the two offences are quite different. In the present case the two offences for which the appellant was prosecuted were quite distinct and different. Therefore, the courts were not unjustified in directing that the sentences should be consecutive and not concurrent. Mohd. Akhtar Hussain v. Asstt. Collector of Customs, (1988) 4 SCC 183: 1988 SCC (Cri) 921: AIR 1988 SC 2143: (1988) 3 Crimes 291.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-1988]

[6231] — S. 427(1) — Conviction under S. 353 IPC and that under S. 14 of Foreigners Act — Sentences under the two counts, held, cannot be directed to run concurrently in view of the nature of offence against the appellant that he rendered assistance to foreign nationals who were engaged in terrorist activities and also transported a member of a terrorist organisation — Prayer therefore disallowed (Para 4). Saeed Ahmed v. State of U.P., (2000) 9 SCC 152: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1185.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2000]

[6232] — S. 427(2) — Award of life imprisonment where accused already undergoing such sentence in previous case, held, would be a meaningless exercise — In the teeth of S. 427(2) CrPC it is doubtful whether a person already undergoing sentence of imprisonment for life can be visited with another term of imprisonment for life to run consecutively with the previous one. Saibanna v. State of Karnataka, (2005) 4 SCC 165: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1094.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-2005]

[6233] — S. 427(2) — Sub-section (2) is in the nature of an exception to sub-section (1) — Person already serving sentence of life imprisonment again sentenced to life imprisonment on a subsequent conviction — In such a situation, the subsequent sentence will run concurrently even in absence of any specific direction of court to that effect unlike sub-section (1) — Court's direction that in case of grant of any remission or commutation in respect of the earlier sentence of the imprisonment the subsequent sentence of life imprisonment, shall commence thereafter — Held, not inconsistent with S. 427(2) — It only means that the convict will not get any benefit of remission or commutation in respect of the earlier sentence

The Supreme Court by its judgment and order dated September 30, 1983 awarded a subsequent sentence of life imprisonment on the present petitioner for a second offence of murder committed by him when he was released on parole while undergoing the first sentence of life imprisonment and directed "the instant sentence of imprisonment for life awarded to him should not run concurrently with his earlier sentence of life imprisonment. We therefore, direct that in case any remission or commutation in respect of his earlier sentence is granted to him the present sentence should commence thereafter." The petitioner filed the present writ petition under Art. 32 for issuance of a suitable writ or direction to correct the above direction given in the order dated September 30, 1983 to bring it in consonance with S. 427(2) CrPC and consequently for his release on the ground that both life sentences had to run concurrently in accordance with S. 427(2) CrPC and he is entitled to relief because he has undergone fourteen years sentence of imprisonment with remissions at the time of filing the writ petition. Treating the writ petition as a petition for clarification of the judgment dated September 30, 1983 and disposing of the petition

Held :

Sub-section (1) of S. 427 CrPC deals with an offender who while undergoing sentence for a fixed term is subsequently convicted to imprisonment for a fixed term or for life. In such a situation, the first sentence, being for a fixed term, expires on a definite date which is known when the subsequent conviction is made. Sub-section (1) says that in such a situation, the date of expiry of the first sentence which the offender is undergoing being known, ordinarily the subsequent sentence would commence at the expiration of the first term of imprisonment unless the court directs the subsequent sentence to run concurrently with the previous sentence. Obviously, in cases covered by sub-section (1) where the sentence is for a fixed term, the subsequent sentence can be consecutive unless directed to run concurrently. Sub-section (2), on the other hand, provides for an offender "already undergoing sentence of imprisonment for life" who is sentenced on a subsequent conviction to imprisonment for a term or for life. It is well settled that imprisonment for life is a sentence for the remainder of the life of the offender unless the remaining sentence is commuted or remitted by the appropriate authority. This being so at the stage of sentencing by the court on a subsequent conviction, the earlier sentence of imprisonment for life must be understood in this manner and, therefore, there can be no question of a subsequent sentence of imprisonment for a term or for life running consecutively which is the general rule laid down in sub-section (1) of S. 427. The earlier sentence of imprisonment for life being understood to mean as a sentence to serve the remainder of life in prison unless commuted or remitted by the appropriate authority and a person having only one life span, the sentence on a subsequent conviction of imprisonment for a term or imprisonment for life can only be superimposed to the earlier life sentence and certainly not added to it since extending the life span of the offender or for that matter anyone is beyond human might. It is this obvious situation which is stated in sub-section (2) of S. 427. The only situation in which no direction of the court is needed to make the subsequent sentence run concurrently with the previous sentence is provided for in sub-section (2) which has been enacted to avoid any possible controversy based on sub-section (1) if there be no express direction of the court to that effect. Sub-section (2) is thus in the nature of an exception to the general rule enacted in sub-section (1) of S. 427 that a sentence on subsequent conviction commences on expiry of the first sentence unless the court directs it to run concurrently. (Para 8)

The direction of the Supreme Court must be construed to harmonies with S. 427(2) CrPC which is the statutory mandate apart from being the obvious truth. The subsequent sentence of imprisonment for life has, therefore, to run concurrently with the earlier sentence of imprisonment for life awarded to the petitioner. (Para 9)

The last sentence in the direction means that in case, any remission or commutation is granted in respect of the earlier sentence of life imprisonment alone then the benefit of that remission or commutation will not ipso facto be available in respect of the subsequent sentence of life imprisonment which would continue to be unaffected by the remission or commutation in respect of the earlier sentence alone. In other words, the operation of the superimposed subsequent sentence of life imprisonment shall not be wiped out merely because in respect of the corresponding earlier sentence of life imprisonment any remission or commutation has been granted by the appropriate authority. The consequence is that the petitioner would not get any practical benefit of any remission or commutation in respect of his earlier sentence because of the superimposed subsequent life sentence unless the same corresponding benefit in respect of the subsequent sentence is also granted to the petitioner. It is in this manner that the direction is given for the two sentences of life imprisonment not to run concurrently. The ultimate direction contained in the last sentence is obviously for this purpose. So construed the direction of the Court in the judgment dated September 30, 1983 fully harmonises with S. 427(2) CrPC. (Paras 9 and 10). Ranjit Singh v. UT, Chandigarh, (1991) 4 SCC 304: 1991 SCC (Cri) 965: AIR 1991 SC 2296.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.N. Venkatachaliah, J.S. Verma and N.D. Ojha, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-1991]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: (1981) 1 SCR 1196: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, relied on

Ranjit Singh v. UT of Chandigarh, (1984) 1 SCC 31: 1984 SCC (Cri) 27, clarified

[6234] — Ss. 427(2) and 433-A — Second sentence of life imprisonment imposed by Supreme Court on petitioner already undergoing a previous sentence of life imprisonment — Writ petition under Art. 32 challenging the second sentence as being inconsistent with S. 427(2) CrPC, held, not maintainable — Petitioner's incarceration being result of a valid judicial order, there can be no claim to infringement of any fundamental right — Moreover, petitioner having not yet served out the mandatory minimum of 14 years' actual imprisonment for the first sentence as required by S. 433-A CrPC, he cannot claim any relief, much less a writ under Art. 32, in absence of remaining sentence being remitted by government. Ranjit Singh v. UT, Chandigarh, (1991) 4 SCC 304: 1991 SCC (Cri) 965: AIR 1991 SC 2296.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.N. Venkatachaliah, J.S. Verma and N.D. Ojha, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-1991]

[6235] — S. 427(3) — Maximum sentence in subsequent case — When unwarranted — Factors to be considered — Totality of sentence — Maximum sentence already imposed in the first case and accused pleaded guilty to the charge are factors calling for lesser sentence in the subsequent case irrespective of enormity of crime committed by the accused — But accused's plea of guilty should not be inevitable in the circumstances of the case — Court however can consider the totality of both sentences in deciding quantum of the latter — In any case courts must take into consideration the usual factors — Gold (Control) Act, 1968, S. 85(1)(ii) — Customs Act, 1962, S. 135 — Penology

The appellant, a foreign national, was charged under S. 85(1)(ii) of the Gold (Control) Act pursuant to seizure of 7000 tolas of gold of foreign mark of the value of Rs 1.4 crores from his possession in April 1982. He pleaded guilty to the charge. Accordingly he was convicted and sentenced to the maximum punishment of imprisonment for 7 years and fine of Rs 10 lakhs prescribed under S. 85(1)(ii) of the said Act. On appeal, the High Court confirmed that sentence but reduced the fine to Rs 5 lakhs. The special leave petition filed by the appellant was dismissed by Supreme Court. That conviction and sentence became final. While the appellant was in judicial custody, a further investigation was conducted and on that basis a complaint was filed alleging that the appellant along with 18 others had imported gold worth Rs 12.5 crores and smuggled out of India silver worth Rs 11.5 crores during December 1981 to February 1982. He along with others was prosecuted under S. 135 of the Customs Act. He again pleaded guilty to the charge though others did not do so. The trial court convicted him under S. 135 and sentenced him to 4 years' RI and a fine of Rs 2 lakhs and on failure to pay the fine to further RI for 6 months. The sentences were ordered to run consecutively. The trial court considered it not reasonable to again impose the maximum penalty under S. 135 and showed slight mercy as the accused had pleaded guilty. The High Court on appeal enhanced the sentence from 4 years to the maximum prescribed punishment of 7 years having regard to the enormity of the crime committed by the appellant. Accordingly, he has to serve in all 14 years' imprisonment which he has challenged in this appeal. Allowing the appeal of the accused and restoring the judgment of the trial court

Held :

Though, the enormity of the crime committed by the accused is relevant for measuring the sentence, but the maximum sentence awarded in one case against the same accused should also be kept in mind while giving the consecutive sentence in the second case although it is grave. The court has to consider the totality of the sentences which the accused has to undergo if the sentences are to be consecutive. The broad expanse of discretion left by legislation to sentencing courts should not be narrowed only to the seriousness of the offence. No single consideration can definitively determine the proper sentence. Generally, it is both proper and customary for courts to give credit to an accused for pleading guilty to the charge. But no credit need be given if the plea of guilty in the circumstance is inevitable or the accused has no alternative but to plead guilty. The accused being caught red-handed is one such instance.

In the first case under the Gold (Control) Act the plea of guilty was inevitable as the gold in question was seized from his possession. The court was, therefore, justified in awarding the maximum sentence. But the second case under the Customs Act was not of that type. There the prosecution had to prove many things. Though there were other accused facing the trial in the same case the accused had pleaded guilty. The trial Magistrate in this case had properly considered all aspects including the plea of guilty and had given good reasons for awarding 4 years' RI. That by itself is quite long enough in a man's life. The High Court was not justified in taking a narrow view of the whole matter with the enormity of the crime on the forefront. Mohd. Akhtar Hussain v. Asstt. Collector of Customs, (1988) 4 SCC 183: 1988 SCC (Cri) 921: AIR 1988 SC 2143: (1988) 3 Crimes 291.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-1988]

State of Gujarat v. Ibrahim, 1988 Cri LJ 631(Guj), reversed

— S. 428 See Ss. 357, 320, 431 and 428
See also Ss. 374, 386 & 428
See also Ss. 418 and 428
See also Ss. 432 and 428

[6236] — S. 428 — Set-off — Purpose and conditions for applicability of — Held, per majority (Sethi, J. contra) period of imprisonment undergone by an accused as an undertrial during investigation, inquiry or trial of a particular case, irrespective of whether it was in connection with that very case or any other case, held, can be set-off against the sentence of imprisonment imposed on conviction in that particular case — Words "same case" do not suggest that set-off would be available only if the period undergone as an undertrial prisoner is in connection with the same case in which he was later convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment — Those words merely denote pre-sentence period of detention undergone by an accused and nothing more

The respondent-accused was tried in two cases. One was numbered SC No. 230 of 1995 and the other as SC No. 313 of 1996. He was arrested on 21-9-1995 in connection with both cases. The Sessions Judge who convicted him in SC No. 230 of 1995 on 3-4-1998, while sentencing him, directed that the accused would be entitled to the set-off under Section 428 of the Code. Subsequently, a Sessions Court convicted him in SC No. 323 of 1998 on 23-7-1998 and sentenced him to certain terms of imprisonment. The Sessions Judge concerned observed therein that the accused is entitled to the set-off under Section 428 of the Code. The respondent-accused sent an intimation to the jail authorities that he is entitled to be released from jail since he has already served the sentences imposed on him in both cases. But the jail authorities refused to release him on the premise that he could not claim the benefit of set-off in the second case "as he had been given set-off in the first case". The jail authorities did so on the strength of a resolution dated 7-9-1974 adopted by the Government of Maharashtra. That resolution reads thus: "If a prisoner is convicted in different cases and different set-off period is granted by different courts, then in that case maximum period of set-off in one case should be granted to prisoners, as other set-off period will be merged in the set-off which is the maximum." The accused filed a petition in the High Court which was allowed by the impugned order, holding that the convict was entitled to benefit of Section 428 of the Code in both the cases for the period of detention undergone by him during investigation, enquiry and trial. Dismissing the appeal of the State by a 2:1 majority,

Held :

Per Thomas, J.

The section preceding Section 428, i.e. Section 427 indicates that the sentence of life imprisonment imposed on the same person in two different convictions would converge into one and thereafter it would flow through one stream alone. Even if the sentence in one of those two cases is not imprisonment for life but only a lesser term the convergence will take place and the post-convergence flow would be through the same channel. In all other cases, it is left to the court to decide whether the sentences in two different convictions should merge into one period or not. If no order is passed by the court the two sentences would run one after the other. Section 427 is intended to provide amelioration to the prisoner. A penumbra of the succeeding section can be glimpsed through the former provision. (Para 13)

The purpose of Section 428 of the Code is also for advancing amelioration to the prisoner. The section does not contain any indication that if the prisoner was in jail as an undertrial prisoner in a second case the benefit envisaged in the section would be denied to him in respect of the second case. The ideology enshrined in Section 428 was introduced for the first time only in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. From the Statement of Objects and Reasons for bringing the provision it is clear that the convicted person is given the right to reckon the period of his sentence of imprisonment from the date he was in jail as an undertrial prisoner. In other words, the period of his being in jail as an undertrial prisoner would be added as a part of the period of imprisonment to which he is sentenced. (Paras 14 and 15)

There are two requisites postulated in Section 428 of the Code:

(1) During the stage of investigation, enquiry or trial of a particular case the prisoner should have been in jail at least for a certain period.

(2) He should have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment in that case. (Paras 14 and 15)

If the above two conditions are satisfied then the operative part of the provision comes into play i.e. if the sentence of imprisonment awarded is longer than the period of detention undergone by him during the stages of investigation, enquiry or trial, the convicted person need undergo only the balance period of imprisonment after deducting the earlier period from the total period of imprisonment awarded. The words "if any" in the section amplify that if there is no balance period left after such deduction the convict will be entitled to be set free from jail, unless he is required in any other case. In other words, if the convict was in prison, for whatever reason, during the stages of investigation, enquiry or trial of a particular case and was later convicted and sentenced to any term of imprisonment in that case the earlier period of detention undergone by him should be counted as part of the sentence imposed on him. (Para 16)

Reading Section 428 of the Code in the above perspective, the words "of the same case" are not to be understood as suggesting that the set-off is allowable only if the earlier jail life was undergone by him exclusively for the case in which the sentence is imposed. The period during which the accused was in prison subsequent to the inception of a particular case, should be credited towards the period of imprisonment awarded as sentence in that particular case. It is immaterial that the prisoner was undergoing sentence of imprisonment in another case also during the said period. The words "of the same case" were used to refer to the pre-sentence period of detention undergone by him. Nothing more can be made out of the collocation of those words. It must therefore, be held that Section 428 of the Code permits the accused to have the period undergone by him in jail as an undertrial prisoner set off against the period of sentence imposed on him irrespective of whether he was in jail in connection with the same case during that period. (Paras 18 and 21)

Per Phukan, J. (concurring)

The only question which needs consideration is the true effect of the expression "same case" as appearing in Section 428. The provision is couched in clear and unambiguous language and states that the period of detention which it allows to be set off against the term of imprisonment imposed on the accused on conviction must be one undergone by him during investigation, enquiry or trial in connection with the "same case" in which he has been convicted. Any other period which is not connected with the said case cannot be said to be reckonable for set-off. The view of learned Brother Mr Justice Thomas according to me accords the legislative intent. Acceptance of any other view would necessitate either adding or subtracting words to the existing provision, which would not be a proper procedure to be adopted while interpreting the provision in question. (Para 44)

Per Sethi, J. (dissenting)

Section 427 authorises a court of law to direct the sentence awarded by it to run concurrently, obviously keeping in view the facts and circumstances pertaining to the case of the accused. His detention pending investigation, enquiry and trial in that case or some other cases is relevant consideration while directing the sentences to run consecutively or concurrently. (Para 26)

Section 428 has imposed some restrictions for a convicted person claiming the benefit of set-off which are as under:

(i) The imprisonment should be for a term.

(ii) The imprisonment should not be one awarded in default of payment of fine.

(iii) The period of detention undergone by the accused person during the investigation, enquiry or trial should relate to the same case in which he is convicted and sentenced to undergo imprisonment for a term. (Para 30)

A plain reading of Section 428 makes it clear that the period of detention which the section permits to be set off against the term of imprisonment imposed on the accused upon conviction, must be during the investigation, enquiry or trial in connection with the same case in which he has been convicted. Generally speaking the words "same case" mean "same transaction" for which the accused has been tried. Two different criminal cases, therefore cannot be treated to be the "the same case" in relation to an accused for the purposes of determining the applicability of Section 428. It does not contemplate the benefit of set-off of the period of detention during investigation, enquiry or trial in any other case. The section does not intend to give any benefit or bonus to an accused guilty of commission of more than one crime by treating the period of detention during investigation, enquiry and trial in one case as that period in the other cases also for the purposes of set-off in the sentence. Such an entitlement requires judicial determination which can be adjudicated by a court awarding the sentence in exercise of its powers under Section 427. (Paras 27, 31 and 29)

The purpose and object of Section 428 is aimed at providing amelioration to a prisoner in a case where he has been in detention for no fault of his. By introducing the provision of set-off, the legislature intended to mitigate, to a great extent, the hardship caused to the accused persons by reason of their being unable to come out on bail during the trial period. While interpreting Section 428, the underlying object of the section cannot be lost sight of. Any set-off claimed under Section 428 has necessarily to be within the terms of the section and not beyond it. No accused person can claim that irrespective of the terms of Section 428, he is entitled to the benefit of set-off in each and every case. (Paras 29 and 30)

The accused tried for various offences in one trial can be held to be entitled to the benefit of Section 428 being tried for the "same case". The words "same case" appearing in the section are ejusdem generis to the preceding words "investigation, enquiry or trial". If the period of detention relating to investigation, enquiry or trial is in a different case, that would not ipso facto entitle the accused to claim the benefit of Section 428 but that may permit him to persuade the court to pass appropriate orders in terms of Section 427, keeping in view the period of his undertrial detention in other cases as well. It is the need of the time that the court convicting the accused should develop a healthy practice of specifying in the order the total period of pre-conviction detention that he has undergone in that case or in some other case for the purposes of awarding the sentence upon conviction. (Para 32)

Therefore, the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Raghbir Singh case does not require any review or a new interpretation. Taking any other view would amount to legislating and amending the plain meaning of the section. Giving a contrary interpretation may, in some cases, be against public policy. Any person accused of a heinous crime, in that event would be at liberty to commit minor offences and being an undertrial prisoner in the main case, eventually may not get any imprisonment in law for the minor offences committed by him. It cannot be the object of civilised criminal jurisprudence to encourage the repetition of crime by adoption of an approach of liberality. The commercial approach of sale of commodities providing for purchasing of one expensive item and getting three free with it, cannot be imported into criminal justice system. (Para 36)

The object of criminal justice system is to reform the criminal but not to encourage him for the repetition of crime. Penology has twin objects i.e. (i) punishing the criminal to avoid repetition of crime, and (ii) to endeavour for his reform wherever possible. The increasing crime in the country has seriously to be taken note of. Crime is an act of warfare against community touching new depths of lawlessness. The object of imposing deterrent sentences is to protect the community against callous criminals; to administer as clearly as possible to others tempted to follow into lawlessness on a war scale that if they are brought to and convicted, deterrent punishment will follow and to deter criminals from repeating their criminal acts in future. (Para 38)

Discretion of treating undertrial detention period may be a relevant consideration for the court while passing orders in terms of Section 427 but the accused cannot be permitted to claim set-off of the undertrial period undergone by him in connection with other cases. Powers of the court to impose sentences should not be allowed to be regulated at the instance or discretion of the accused. (Para 39)

The fallout of the interpretation giving the benefit of detention during investigation, enquiry and trial in one case, in the other case, may also tempt the investigating agencies not to arrest the accused for the commission of the second offence pending conclusion of the trial and passing of sentence in the first case. After conviction and sentence in a criminal case, if arrested in the second case, the accused shall not be entitled to claim the benefit of Section 428 because the sentence, upon conviction, can obviously be not equated with the period of detention contemplated under Section 428. As such, by adopting such a recourse, the courts would not, in any case, advance the interests of justice but actually and factually frustrate its purpose defeating the concept of speedy trial in criminal cases. (Para 40)

In the light of the above view the impugned judgment of the High Court cannot be sustained and is liable to be set aside. (Para 42). State of Maharashtra v. Najakat Alia Mubarak Ali, (2001) 6 SCC 311: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1106: AIR 2001 SC 2255.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[1], R.P. Sethi[2] and S.N. Phukan[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-2001]

Raghbir Singh v. State of Haryana, (1984) 4 SCC 348: 1984 SCC (Cri) 616, overruled

K.C. Das v. State, 1979 Cri LJ 362: ILR (1978) 2 Del 341 (Del); Lalrinfela v. State of Mizoram, 1982 Cri LJ 1793 (Gau); Gedala Ramulu Naidu v. State of A.P., 1982 Cri LJ 2186 (AP); Chinnasamy v. State of T.N., 1984 Cri LJ 447: 1983 MLJ (Cri) 531 (Mad), approved

Najakat Alia Mubarak Ali v. Supdt., Thane Central Prison, (1999) 1 Mah LJ 334, affirmed

[6237] — S. 428 — Applicability — Benefit of set-off under — Is only available in relation to period of detention already undergone in respect of the same case — Hence, a convict in a given case cannot be granted set-off against periods of detention/imprisonment undergone by him in connection with other cases

The short point involved was whether a person, who has been convicted in several cases and has suffered detention or imprisonment in connection therewith, would be entitled to the benefit of set-off in a separate case for the period of detention or imprisonment undergone by him in the other cases.

Answering the said question in the negative, Held :

The wording of Section 428 CrPC is clear and unambiguous. The heading of the section itself indicates that the period of detention undergone by the accused is to be set off against the sentence of imprisonment. The section makes it clear that the period of sentence on conviction is to be reduced by the extent of detention already undergone by the convict during investigation, enquiry or trial of the same case. It is quite clear that the period to be set off relates only to pre-conviction detention and not to imprisonment on conviction. (Paras 12 and 14). Atul Manubhai Parekh v. CBI, (2010) 1 SCC 603.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-2009]

Maliyakkal Abdul Azeez v. Collector, (2003) 2 SCC 439: 2003 SCC (Cri) 551; Govt. of A.P. v. Anne Venkatesware, (1977) 3 SCC 298: 1977 SCC (Cri) 508; Raghbir Singh v. State of Haryana, (1984) 4 SCC 348: 1984 SCC (Cri) 616; Champalal Punjaji Shah v. State of Maharashtra, (1982) 1 SCC 507: 1982 SCC (Cri) 265, followed

State of Maharashtra v. Najakat Alia Mubarak Ali, (2001) 6 SCC 311: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1106, explained and limited

[6238] — S. 428 — Benefit of set-off — Entitlement to — Appellant-accused convicted under Ss. 302, 307 and 333 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment — While sentencing him, trial court, on basis of Kartar Singh case, (1982) 3 SCC 1, did not grant him benefit of set-off under S. 428 — Sustainability — Held, Kartar Singh specifically overruled by Bhagirath case, (1985) 2 SCC 580 — Hence, appellant entitled to benefit of set-off under S. 428 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 307 and 333 (Paras 3 and 4). Ranjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2010) 12 SCC 506.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-2010]

Bhagirath v. Delhi Admn., (1985) 2 SCC 580: 1985 SCC (Cri) 280, relied on

Kartar Singh v. State of Haryana, (1982) 3 SCC 1: 1982 SCC (Cri) 522, held, overruled

[6239] — Ss. 428 and 427 — Situations dealt with by said two provisions — Distinguished (Para 16). Atul Manubhai Parekh v. CBI, (2010) 1 SCC 603.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-2009]

[6240] — Ss. 428 and 421 — No distinction between a substantive sentence of imprisonment and a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine

The distinction sought to be made between a substantive sentence of imprisonment and an imprisonment in default of payment of fine is unfounded. When an accused person is sentenced to imprisonment for a term in default of payment of fine, it is as much a sentence of imprisonment imposed upon him as a substantive sentence of imprisonment.

Having regard to the object of S. 428 no distinction can be made in principle between a substantive sentence of imprisonment and a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine and both must be held to be within the scope of intendment of S. 428. Boucher Pierre Andre v. Supdt., Central Jail, (1975) 1 SCC 192: 1975 SCC (Cri) 70: AIR 1975 SC 164: 1975 Cri LJ 182.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and P.N. Bhagwati, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-1974]

[6241] — S. 428 — In applying the set-off it is immaterial that the trial court or the appellate court has awarded a lesser sentence in consideration of the period of imprisonment undergone as undertrial

Section 428 is absolute in its terms. It provides for set-off of the pre-conviction detention of an accused person against the term of imprisonment imposed on him on conviction, whatever be the term of imprisonment imposed and whatever be the factors taken into account by the Court while imposing the term of imprisonment. It does not say that where the pre-conviction detention of an accused person has already been taken into account by the Court while imposing the term of imprisonment on conviction, no set-off of such pre-conviction detention shall be permitted, and if the Legislature has not introduced any such exception, it cannot be read into the section by a process of judicial construction. To read such an exception into the section would be to do violence to the language of the section and to read words which are not there. That is clearly impermissible according to well-recognized canons of construction. Boucher Pierre Andre v. Supdt., Central Jail, (1975) 1 SCC 192: 1975 SCC (Cri) 70: AIR 1975 SC 164: 1975 Cri LJ 182.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and P.N. Bhagwati, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-1974]

[6242] — S. 428 — Life convicts, held, not entitled to the benefit of set-off under — Remission of their sentence under S. 432, CrPC or relevant remission jail rules will not make S. 428 applicable — 'Imprisonment for a term' does not include 'imprisonment for life' — Penal Code, 1860, S. 57 — Punjab Jail Manual, Para 516-B — Haryana Government Order No. 1953/59/G1/G.3/T-19(11), dated February 2, 1981 — Constitution of India — Arts. 14 and 21

Section 428, CrPC does not apply to those convicted for "imprisonment for life". It is applicable only in cases of accused person who have, on conviction, been sentenced to imprisonment for a term and the Penal Code as well as the Criminal Procedure Code make and maintain a clear distinction between 'imprisonment for a term' and 'imprisonment for life' in that the former means imprisonment for a definite or fixed period while the latter means imprisonment for the remainder of the natural life of the convict. The periods of life term mentioned in S. 57, IPC or the remission rules contained in Jail Manuals (e.g. Para 516-B of Punjab/Haryana Jail Manual) are irrelevant in this context.

The grant of remission under S. 432, CrPC or under the relevant remission rules in Jail Manuals, do not convert sentences for life imprisonment to 'sentences of imprisonment for a term'. An order of remission passed by the State Government or by the jail authorities does not interfere with either the conviction or the sentence recorded by the Court which remains intact.

Section 428 will come into play where 'imprisonment for a term' is awarded on conviction by a court and not where the convict's sentence becomes a sentence for a term on remission being granted by the Executive. Kartar Singh v. State of Haryana, (1982) 3 SCC 1: 1982 SCC (Cri) 522: AIR 1982 SC 1439: 1982 Cri LJ 1772.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar, Baharul Islam and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-1982]

Overruled in Bhagirath v. Delhi Admn., (1985) 2 SCC 580

[6243] — S. 428 — Period elapsed in inquiry or trial in one case while undergoing sentence of imprisonment in an earlier case cannot be set off against the term of imprisonment imposed in the latter case — Punjab and Haryana High Court's Instruction No. 29442 Rr. VI.V. 38, dated November 29, 1975, held, valid

In order to secure the benefit of S. 428 of the Code, the prisoner should show that he had been detained in prison for the purpose of investigation, inquiry or trial of the case in which he is later on convicted and sentenced. But he cannot claim a double benefit under S. 428 i.e. the same period being counted as part of the period of imprisonment imposed for committing the former offence and also being set off against the period of imprisonment imposed for committing the latter offence as well. If a person is undergoing the sentence of imprisonment imposed by a court of law on being convicted of an offence in one case during the period of investigation, inquiry or trial of some other case, he cannot claim that the period occupied by such investigation, inquiry or trial should be set off against the sentence of imprisonment to be imposed in the latter case even though he was under detention during such period. In such a case the period of detention is really a part of the period of imprisonment which he is undergoing having been sentenced earlier for another offence. Raghbir Singh v. State of Haryana, (1984) 4 SCC 348: 1984 SCC (Cri) 616: AIR 1984 SC 1796.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-9-1984]

Overruled in (2001) 6 SCC 311, 321

[6244] — S. 428 — 'Period of detention' — Preventive detention after conviction under criminal law on identical facts set aside by appellate court — Held, detention cannot be considered as one pursuant to conviction or that of an under-trial and hence period of detention cannot be set off against the sentence of imprisonment imposed on the detenu in the criminal case

Expression 'period of detention' in S. 428 does not include the detention under preventive detention laws such as the Preventive Detention Act or MISA. It is only in circumstances where the prisoner would have unquestionably been in detention in connection with a criminal case if he had not been preventively detained, his preventive detention might be reckoned as detention as an under-trial prisoner or detention pursuant to conviction, for the purposes of S. 428. The present case is, however, altogether different where the petitioner had been acquitted by the High Court before any of the orders of detention were made against him. Thus there can be no question of the detention being considered as detention pursuant to conviction; nor can the detention be treated as that of an undertrial. Champalal Punjaji Shah v. State of Maharashtra, (1982) 1 SCC 507: 1982 SCC (Cri) 265: AIR 1982 SC 791: 1982 Cri LJ 612: 1982 MLJ (Cri) 334.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-1982]

[6245] — S. 428 — Set off — Persons undergoing sentence of life imprisonment entitled to set off under S. 428 if an order under S. 432 or 433 is made — Expression 'imprisonment for a term' includes life imprisonment

A person who is sentenced to life imprisonment is sentenced to imprisonment for a 'term'. The word 'term' does not necessarily imply concept of ascertainability or conveys a sense of certainty. Ss. 53, 53-A(4)(a) and (b), 57 or 65, IPC do not militate against this conclusion, nor the words "for a term which may extend to one-half of the imprisonment for life" in S. 511, IPC support this conclusion. The expressions 'imprisonment for life' and 'imprisonment for a term' are not used either in the Penal Code or in the CrPC in contradistinction with each other.

Usually, those who are liable to be sentenced to imprisonment for life are not enlarged on bail. The benefit of S. 428 must be available to them otherwise it would amount to withdrawal of application of a benevolent provision from a large majority of cases in which such benefit would be needed and justified on equitable considerations.

The modalities for working out the provisions of S. 428 would be that by virtue of S. 433-A, where a sentence of imprisonment for life is imposed on a person for an offence for which death is one of the punishments provided by law, or where a sentence of death imposed on a person has been commuted under S. 433 to one of imprisonment for life, such person cannot be released from prison unless he has served at least fourteen years of imprisonment. But S. 433-A being prospective in operation, it cannot apply to cases which were decided by the trial court before December 18, 1978, being the date on which the section came into force. The question of setting off the period of detention undergone by an accused as an undertrial prisoner against the sentence of life imprisonment can arise only if an order is passed by the appropriate authority under S. 432 or S. 433. In the absence of such order, passed generally or specially, and apart from the provisions, if any, of the relevant Jail Manual, imprisonment for life would mean, according to the rule in Gopal Vinayak Godse, imprisonment for the remainder of life. Bhagirath v. Delhi Admn., (1985) 2 SCC 580: 1985 SCC (Cri) 280: AIR 1985 SC 1050: 1985 Cri LJ 1179.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and D.A. Desai, O. Chinnappa Reddy, E.S. Venkataramiah and Ranganath Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-4-1985]

[6246] — S. 428 — Set-off — Accused sentenced to 10 years' RI in TADA — In view of the fact that sentence imposed on accused in another case would be completing almost with the sentence imposed in instant case, plea for reduction of sentence held to be of no use — However, set-off benefit denied by the trial court permitted provided the accused was entitled to it as per the law declared by the Supreme Court. Mohd. Aslam v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 9 SCC 362.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.C. Lahoti, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2000]

[6247] — S. 428 — Set-off — Period of detention under the preventive detention laws (COFEPOSA Act in this case) — Held, cannot be set off in terms of S. 428 against imprisonment imposed under any statute — Object behind incorporation of S. 428 in CrPC, conditions required for entitlement to the benefit of set-off as well as nature of detention under the preventive detention laws, considered — Customs Act, 1962, S. 135

In the instant petition the petitioner contended that he was entitled to the benefit of set-off as provided under Section 428 CrPC for the period of detention under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974.

Dismissing the petition,

Held :

Section 428 of the Code was brought on the statute-book for the first time in 1973. It was incorporated in the light of the proposal put forward by the Joint Select Committee. It was noticed by the Committee that in many cases the accused persons are kept in prison for a very long period as undertrial prisoners and in some cases the period spent in jail by undertrial prisoners far exceeded the sentence of imprisonment ultimately awarded. It was also noticed by the Committee with concern that a large number of prisoners in the overcrowded jails of the country were undertrial prisoners. The provision was introduced to remedy the unsatisfactory state of affairs, by providing for setting off the period of detention as undertrial prisoners against the sentence of imprisonment imposed on the accused. (Para 9)

The two requisites postulated in Section 428 of the Code are that (i) during the stage of investigation, enquiry or trial of a particular case the prisoner should have been in jail at least for a certain period, and (ii) he should have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment in that case. If these two conditions are satisfied then the operative part of the provision comes into play. (Para 8)

It is well settled that detention under the preventive detention laws is not punitive but is essentially a precautionary measure intended to prevent and intercept a person before he commits an infra-active act which he had done earlier. (Para 14)

Thus, the petition is without any merit and is dismissed. (Para 15). Maliyakkal Abdul Azeez v. Asstt. Collector, (2003) 2 SCC 439: 2003 SCC (Cri) 551: AIR 2003 SC 928: (2003) 113 Comp Cas 632: 2003 Cri LJ 1215: (2003) 1 KLT 557.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Shivaraj V. Patil and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-1-2003]

Govt. of A.P. v. Anne Venkatesware, (1977) 3 SCC 298: 1977 SCC (Cri) 508; Champalal Punjaji Shah v. State of Maharashtra, (1982) 1 SCC 507: 1982 SCC (Cri) 265; R. v. Halliday, 1917 AC 260: 116 LT 417: 86 LJKB 1119 (HL); Kubic Darusz v. Union of India, (1990) 1 SCC 568: 1990 SCC (Cri) 227, relied on [6248] — S. 428 — Set-off of period of detention undergone during investigation, inquiry or trial against sentence of imprisonment — Benefit of, under S. 428 — Held, not available to person tried and convicted by Security Force Court under BSF Act — Nor such person entitled to any compensation for denial of set-off of period of pre-trial detention in absence of any provision like R. 27 of Army Rules requiring obtaining of approval of higher authorities if an undertrial is to be detained during court-martial proceedings for more than three months — R. 39(2) of BSF Rules only requires sending of delay report — Where the member of BSF was convicted for offence under S. 307 IPC but having regard to mitigating circumstance he was sentenced to only one year's RI though sentence of imprisonment up to 10 years could be awarded for such offence, Supreme Court would not give any direction on ground of doing complete justice under Art. 142 for monetary compensation for long detention (about one year) as undertrial accused — However, it is desirable that a provision regarding set-off similar to S. 169-A of Army Act and a provision similar to R. 27 of Army Rules should be incorporated in BSF Act and Rules — Border Security Force Act, 1968 — Benefit of set-off of period of detention undergone during investigation, inquiry or trial against sentence of imprisonment not available to person tried and convicted by Security Court Force under the Act — Border Security Force Rules, 1969, R. 39(2) — Army Act, 1950, S. 169-A — Army Rules, 1954, R. 27(3)(ii) — Constitution of India, Arts. 142, 134, 136. Union of India v. Anand Singh Bisht, (1996) 10 SCC 153: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1198: AIR 1997 SC 361.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-1996]

[6249] — S. 428 — Set-off of pre-conviction period — Retrospective operation of section — Person convicted before the coming into force of the new CrPC is entitled to get the benefit of S. 428 of the new CrPC. Hardev Singh v. State of Punjab, (1975) 3 SCC 731: 1975 SCC (Cri) 186: AIR 1975 SC 179: 1975 MLJ (Cri) 369: (1975) Cri LJ 243.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-12-1974]

[6250] — S. 428 — Term of imprisonment completed — Petition becomes infructuous — Question of set-off of period during which petitioner was in detention prior to conviction not considered. Major Dharam Paul Sood v. Union of India, 1990 Supp SCC 652: 1991 SCC (Cri) 157(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and M.H. Kania, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-1987]

[6251] — S. 428 — Undertrial detention cannot be equated with imprisonment on conviction

Section 428 provides that the period of detention of an accused as an undertrial prisoner shall be set off against the term of imprisonment imposed on him on conviction. The section only provides for a "set-off", it does not equate an "undertrial detention or remand detention with imprisonment on conviction". The provision as to set-off expresses a legislative policy; this does not mean that it does away with the difference in the two kinds of detention and puts them on the same footing for all purposes. Govt. of A.P. v. Anne Venkatesware, (1977) 3 SCC 298: 1977 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 1977 SC 1096: (1977) 3 SCR 7: 1977 Cri LJ 935.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and A.C. Gupta, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-1977]

[6252] — Ss. 428, 2(g) and (h) — Set off of detention as under trial — Conviction and sentence by General Court-martial under Army Act — Nothing on record to show any investigation or enquiry under the Code — S. 428, held, not applicable to such convicts even if lodged in civil jail — Army Act, 1950. Ajit Kumar v. Union of India, 1987 Supp SCC 493: 1988 SCC (Cri) 101: AIR 1988 SC 283.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-11-1987]

[6253] — Ss. 428, 5 and 475, 2(h), (g) — Persons sentenced to imprisonment by Court-martial not entitled to set off under S. 428 — Provisions of the Code inapplicable to proceedings before Court-martial — Army Act, 1950, S. 167 — Air Force Act, 1950, S. 164 — Navy Act, 1957, S. 151

The effect of S. 5, CrPC is to render the provisions of the Code inapplicable in respect of all matters covered by any special law. The relevant Chapters of the Army Act, the Navy Act and the Air Force Act embody a completely self-contained comprehensive Code. These Acts contain elaborate and comprehensive provisions dealing with all the stages commencing from the investigation of offences and the apprehension and detention of offenders and terminating with the execution of sentences and the grant of remissions, suspensions etc. They, therefore, constitute a special law in force conferring special jurisdiction and powers on Court-martial and prescribing a special form of procedure for the trial of the offences under those Acts. Section 475, CrPC furnishes a conclusive indication that the provisions of the Code are not intended to apply in respect of proceeding before the Court-martial. Inasmuch as S. 167 of the Act specifically deals with the topic of the date of commencement of the sentence of imprisonment, there is absolutely no scope for invoking the aid of S. 428, CrPC in respect of prisoners convicted by Court-martial under the Act. Section 428 provides for set off of the period of detention undergone by an accused person during "the investigation, inquiry or trial" of the same case before the date of conviction. In the case of persons tried by Court-martial, there is neither any investigation, nor inquiry, nor trial under the Code. As such the provision for set off contained in S. 428 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can never be attracted in the case of persons convicted and sentenced by Court-martial to undergo imprisonment. Ajmer Singh v. Union of India, (1987) 3 SCC 340: 1987 SCC (Cri) 499: AIR 1987 SC 1646: 1987 Cri LJ 1877.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1987]

Criminal Writ No. 40 of 1975, decided on December 12, 1975; P.P. Chandrasekaran v. Government of India, 1977 Cri LJ 677 (Mad); T.S. Ramani v. Superintendent of Prisons, 1984 Cri LJ 492 (Mad) and F.R. Jesuratnam v. Chief of Air Staff, 1976 Cri LJ 65 (Del), approved

*Subramonian v. Officer Commanding, Armoured Static Workshop, 1979 Cri LJ 617 (Ker) and Anand Singh Bishit v. Union of India, 1986 Cri LJ 563 (Cal), overruled

[6254] — S. 428 — Applicability — Set off of period of pre-trial detention against period of sentence — Held, not available where appellant convicted and sentenced by court-martial long before introduction of S. 169-A, Army Act — There being no investigation and trial under CrPC, S. 428 thereof not attracted — Army Act, 1950, S. 169-A (introduced in 1992). Bhuwneshwar Singh v. Union of India, (1993) 4 SCC 327: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.S. Verma and Dr. A.S. Anand, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-1993]

[6255] — Ss. 428 and 5 — Applicability to Army personnel — Army Act being a special enactment S. 428 not applicable to persons convicted and sentenced under the Act even if lodged in civil prison — Army Act, 1950, Ss. 2, 167, 169. Ajit Kumar v. Union of India, 1987 Supp SCC 493: 1988 SCC (Cri) 101: AIR 1988 SC 283.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-11-1987]

Bhawan Singh v. Assistant Superintendent, (1977) 79 Punj LR 19 ; F.R. Jesuratnam v. Chief of Air Staff, 1976 Cri LJ 65 and P.P. Chandrasekaran v. Government of India, 1977 Cri LJ 677, approved

*Subramonian v. O.C. Armoured Static Workshop, 1979 Cri LJ 617, overruled

[6256] — Ss. 428 and 433 — Comparison between

Section 428 contemplates a conviction by the court and it operates at the time of the pronouncement of the sentence by the court, whereas Section 433 deals with commutation by the State authority. Consequences that follow from the provisions of Section 433 do not affect Section 428. (Para 11). State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2003]

[6257] — Ss. 428 and 484(2)(b) — Set-off of period of imprisonment undergone as undertrial — Applicability to convictions held prior to the coming into force of the new Code of 1973 for which the sentence still continuing — Does not amount to giving retrospective effect — Effect of fiction created under — Consequence to follow in respect of past conviction

Section 428, on a plain natural construction of its language, posits for its applicability a fact situation which is described by the clause "where an accused person has, on conviction, been sentenced to imprisonment for a term". There is nothing in this clause which suggests, either expressly or by necessary implication, that the conviction and sentence must be after the coming into force of the new Code of Criminal Procedure. The language of the clause is neutral.

Therefore, where an accused person has been convicted and he is still serving his sentence at the date when the new Code of Criminal Procedure came into force, S. 428 would apply and he would be entitled to claim that the period of detention undergone by him during the investigation, inquiry of trial of the case should be set off against the term of imprisonment imposed on him and he should be required to undergo only the remainder of the term.

On this interpretation, the section is not given any retrospective effect. The section operates prospectively on the sentence which yet remains to be served.

Also by S. 484(2)(b) sentence of imprisonment and fine passed against the petitioner under the provisions of the old Code of Criminal Procedure must, therefore, be deemed to have been passed under the corresponding provisions of the new Code of Criminal Procedure. The legal fiction created by that section must be given full effect. Boucher Pierre Andre v. Supdt., Central Jail, (1975) 1 SCC 192: 1975 SCC (Cri) 70: AIR 1975 SC 164: 1975 Cri LJ 182.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and P.N. Bhagwati, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-1974]

[6258] — Ss. 428 and 432 — Where accused sentenced to life imprisonment, period of imprisonment undergone as undertrial prisoner not liable to be set off — But such period can be taken into account while considering premature release on completion of 14 years under R. 591(1) of W.B. Jail Code and on completion of 20 years under Pt. IV, R. 20 thereof — Remission earned by the prisoner must also be taken into account for determining whether case falls within R. 591(1) or Pt. IV, R. 29 — State Government directed to consider for remission of sentences and grant relief accordingly in appropriate cases and meanwhile to release on parole prisoners who on the basis of remission earned and the period undergone as undertrial prisoners, suffered imprisonment for a period of over 20 years — Prisons, Prisoners and Probation of Offenders — W.B. Jail Code, R. 591(1) and Pt. IV, R. 29. Suklal Hansda v. State of W.B., (1986) 4 SCC 433: 1986 SCC (Cri) 497.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, R.S. Pathak and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-1983]

[6259] — S. 428 — Accused convicted by Sessions Court and filing appeal before High Court prior to coming into force of the new Code of 1973 — Held, High Court erred in disallowing benefit of S. 428 to the accused after introduction of the new Code. Mer Dhana Sida v. State of Gujarat, (1985) 1 SCC 200: 1985 SCC (Cri) 54: AIR 1985 SC 386: 1985 Cri LJ 660.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and Ranganath Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-11-1984]

Boucher Pierre Andre v. Superintendent, Central Jail, Tihar, New Delhi, (1975) 1 SCC 192: 1975 SCC (Cri) 70, followed [6260] — S. 428 — Accused detained in jail in pursuance of non-bailable warrant during pendency of the appeal — Held, entitled to set-off. State of U.P. v. Ram Kishun, (1976) 3 SCC 449: 1976 SCC (Cri) 443: AIR 1976 SC 2016: (1976) 3 SCR 379: 1976 Cri LJ 1559.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and P.K. Goswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-1976]

— S. 431 See Ss. 357, 320, 431 and 428
See also Ss. 357, 421 and 431
See also Ss. 357 and 421 & 431 and 374 and 389 & 387
See also Ss. 357(3) and 431
— S. 431 r/w S. 64 See Ss. 357(3), 421 and 431 r/w S. 64

— S. 432 See also Ss. 401 and 402, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1179 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 432 See Ss. 389, 432 & 433
See also Ss. 428 and 432
See also Ss. 433 and 432
See also Ss. 433, 432 and 433-A
See also Ss. 433-A, 432 and 433

[6261] — S. 432 — Accused-appellant aged 18 years inflicting fatal knife blows on the deceased in a sudden quarrel — Although his conviction under S. 302, IPC upheld but in the circumstances he deserves consideration by State Government for action under S. 432. Vinod Mohan Avasthi v. State of U.P., (1982) 2 SCC 146: 1982 SCC (Cri) 372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Pathak and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-3-1980]

[6262] — S. 432 — Governor's power to grant pardon or remission of punishment — Factors to be considered while exercising power — Scope of judicial review — Grounds for Court's interference — Where accused is convicted under S. 302 for murder and is sentenced to life imprisonment, period of sentence actually undergone by him and his conduct in prison along with other relevant facts should be brought to the notice of the Governor — In absence of such materials and having regard to the undue haste with which his case had been processed, held, order granting pardon was vitiated by non-application of mind and Governor had not been properly advised with all the relevant material — Hence the order liable to be quashed — Constitution of India, Arts. 161 and 32

The respondent S along with four other accused persons belonging to a political party were tried for having committed offence under Section 302 read with Sections 149 and 120-B as well as under Sections 392, 148, 452 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code. The trial court convicted all the five accused but on appeal the High Court acquitted S and two other accused. The State of Haryana preferred appeal against acquittal of the said three accused. The Supreme Court by its judgment dated 10-12-1998 set aside acquittal of S and another accused and directed them to surrender to the custody in order to serve out the remaining part of their sentence. But S instead of surrendering to serve the sentence, immediately filed an application on 15-1-1999 before the Governor invoking his jurisdiction under Article 161. The Secretary to the Governor addressed a letter to the Secretary to the Government of Haryana, Department of Jails requesting for a report in the matter to be placed before the Governor of Haryana. The appropriate authority, namely, Joint Secretary to the Government in the Home Department indicated in his note that the opinion of the Legal Remembrancer should be obtained as to whether this is a fit case for exercising the power under Article 161 of the Constitution or not. The opinion of the Legal Remembrancer was then placed before the Minister concerned and finally the Chief Minister agreed with the views of the Legal Remembrancer and came to the conclusion that this was a fit case where discretion given under Article 161 be exercised and relief prayed for be granted. On the basis of the aforesaid advice of the Chief Minister the Governor finally granted pardon by his order dated 25-1-1999 stating that the Governor was pleased to grant pardon remitting the unexpired portion of sentence passed on S confined in Central Jail, Hissar. But as a matter of fact S was not confined in the Central Jail, Hissar on that date and on the other hand after obtaining the order of pardon and remission of sentence to give an appearance of compliance with the order of the Supreme Court S surrendered before the Court of Sessions Judge, Hissar on 2-2-1999 and also was released on the very same day in view of the order of the Governor dated 25-1-1999. The brother and the widow of the man who was murdered filed a writ petition before the Supreme Court assailing the Governor's order dated 25-1-1999 inter alia on the ground that the power had been exercised without application of mind, and on extraneous consideration and even without the aid and advice of the Government, namely, the Minister concerned. Allowing the writ petition and quashing the order dated 25-1-1999,

Held :

The power of granting pardon under Article 161 is very wide and does not contain any limitation as to the time on which and the occasion on which and the circumstances in which the said powers could be exercised. But the said power being a constitutional power conferred upon the Governor by the Constitution is amenable to judicial review on certain limited grounds. The Court, therefore, would be justified in interfering with an order passed by the Governor in exercise of power under Article 161 of the Constitution if the Governor is found to have exercised the power himself without being advised by the Government or if the Governor transgresses the jurisdiction in exercising the same or it is established that the Governor has passed the order without application of mind or the order in question is a mala fide one or the Governor has passed the order on some extraneous consideration. (Para 4)

When an accused is convicted of the heinous offence of murder and is sentenced to imprisonment for life the authority who has been conferred with power to grant pardon and remission of sentence under Article 161 of the Constitution must be made aware of the period of sentence in fact undergone by the said convict as well as his conduct and behaviour while he has been undergoing the sentence which would all be germane considerations for exercise of the power. Not being aware of such material facts would tend to make an order of granting pardon arbitrary and irrational. (Para 5)

In the present case the Governor had not been made aware of as to what was the total period of sentence the accused had really undergone, and if at all had undergone any sentence. The file concerned produced before the Supreme Court shows the uncanny haste with which the file had been processed and the unusual interest and zeal shown by the authorities in the matter of exercise of power to grant pardon. Moreover, how the order in question could show that the prisoner was in jail while in fact he was free at large and had not surrendered to serve the sentence notwithstanding the positive direction of the Supreme Court dated 10-12-1998, disposing of the appeal filed by the State. If by order dated 25-1-1999, the accused has already been granted pardon and there has been a remission of the sentence then there was no reason for him to go and surrender before the District Judge on 2-2-1999. However, there is no substance in the contention that the Governor passed the order on his own without being advised by the Council of Ministers. (Paras 6 and 7)

Therefore, the order in question has been vitiated and the Governor has not been advised properly with all the relevant materials and, the same is, therefore, liable to be quashed. (Para 8). Satpal v. State of Haryana, (2000) 5 SCC 170: 2000 SCC (Cri) 920: AIR 2000 SC 1702: 2000 Cri LJ 2297.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-2000]

Kehar Singh v. Union of India, (1989) 1 SCC 204: 1989 SCC (Cri) 86; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Swaran Singh v. State of U.P., (1998) 4 SCC 75: 1998 SCC (Cri) 804, relied on

[6263] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Applicable remission policy — Policy existing on date of conviction of accused or policy existing on date of consideration of his case by appropriate authority — Legitimate expectation of convict — Relevance — Of the possibly applicable policies, the one which is more liberal or beneficial to the convict should be applied — State while exercising power of remission should construe any available benefit liberally in favour of convict — On the one hand there is an expectation perceived by convict at the time of his conviction that his case for premature release would be considered after serving the sentence prescribed in short-sentencing policy applicable on date of conviction — On the other hand, in case a more liberal policy prevails on date of consideration of case of "lifer" for premature release, he should be given benefit thereof — Mahender Singh, (2007) 13 SCC 606 and Bhup Singh, (2009) 2 SCC 268 harmonised with Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355 — Respondent prisoner already serving 15 years of imprisonment and falling in Category 3 of prisoners under applicable rules as he had not indulged in any organised crime — Hence, appellant State directed to calculate sentence for purposes of remission as per the more liberal remission policy, which in this case was the one in existence on date of conviction i.e. policy dt. 4-2-1993

The respondent was convicted vide judgment and order dated 20-5-1999 under Sections 302, 148 and 149 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment. The policy which was in existence at that point of time was dated 4-2-1993. The respondent, having served more than 10 years' imprisonment, approached the High Court that in spite of having undergone the sentence as per the policy dated 4-2-1993, his case for premature release was not being considered in view of the new policy of short-sentencing, introduced on 13-8-2008. The High Court placing reliance on the judgments of the Supreme Court in Mahender Singh case, (2007) 13 SCC 606 and Bhup Singh case, (2009) 2 SCC 268 came to the conclusion that the case of the respondent for premature release was to be considered in the light of the short-sentencing policy existing on the date of his conviction and thus, a direction was issued to the State authorities to consider his case for premature release in view of the policy dated 4-2-1993.

A different view had been taken in State of Haryana v. Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355. So in view of conflicting views on the question, the matter came to be referred to this Bench.

Affirming the High Court's decision and dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution provide for a residuary sovereign power, thus, there can be nothing to debar the authority concerned to exercise such power, even after rejection of one clemency petition, if the changed circumstances so warrant and in exceptional circumstances, variation from the policy is permissible. Thus, it is evident that the clemency power of the executive is absolute and remains unfettered for the reason that the provisions contained under Article 72 or 161 of the Constitution cannot be restricted by the provisions of Sections 432, 433 and 433-A CrPC though the authority has to meet the requirements of rule of law while exercising the clemency power. To say that clemency power under Articles 72/161 of the Constitution cannot be exercised by the President or the Governor, as the case may be, before a convict completes the incarceration period provided in the short-sentencing policy, even in an exceptional case, would be mutually inconsistent with the theory that clemency power is unfettered. The expectancy of period of incarceration is determined soon after the conviction on the basis of the applicable laws and the established practices of the State. When a short-sentencing scheme is referable to Article 161 of the Constitution, it cannot be held that the said scheme cannot be pressed in service. Even if a life convict does not satisfy the requirement of remission rules/short-sentencing schemes, there can be no prohibition for the President or the Governor of the State, as the case may be, to exercise the power of clemency under the provisions of Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution. Right of the convict is limited to the extent that his case be considered in accordance with the relevant rules, etc. He cannot claim premature release as a matter of right. (Paras 34 to 39)

The earlier policies including the policy dated 4-2-1993 refer to the exercise of powers under Article 161 of the Constitution whereas the policy dated 13-8-2008 is in exercise of the powers under Section 432 read with Sections 433 and 433-A CrPC. The restriction under Section 433-A is only to the extent of the powers to be exercised in respect of offences as referred to under Section 432 CrPC. The Notification dated 13-8-2008 is, therefore, under a rule of procedure, which is subordinate to the Constitution. The power exercised under Article 161 of the Constitution is obviously a mandate of the Constitution and, therefore, the policy dated 13-8-2008 cannot override the policy dated 4-2-1993. The right of the respondent prisoner, therefore, to get his case considered on a par with such of his inmates, who were entitled to the benefit of the said policy dated 4-2-1993, cannot be taken away by the policy dated 13-8-2008. The High Court was absolutely justified in arriving at the conclusion that the case of the respondent was to be considered on the strength of the policy that was existing on the date of his conviction. (Paras 52 and 53)

Section 433-A CrPC and the short-sentencing policy would apply prospectively. The life convicts who had been sentenced prior to 18-12-1978 i.e. date of enforcement of amendment would not come within the purview of the provisions of Section 433-A CrPC. Remission rules/short-sentencing policies could be taken as guidelines for exercise of power under Article 72 or 161 of the Constitution and in such an eventuality, remission rules will override Section 433-A CrPC. (Paras 22 and 39)

The State authority is under an obligation to at least exercise its discretion in relation to an honest expectation perceived by the convict, at the time of his conviction that his case for premature release would be considered after serving the sentence, prescribed in the short-sentencing policy existing on that date. The State has to exercise its power of remission also keeping in view any such benefit to be construed liberally in favour of a convict which may depend upon case to case and for that purpose, it should relate to a policy which, in the instant case, was in favour of the respondent. In case a liberal policy prevails on the date of consideration of the case of a "lifer" for premature release, he should be given benefit thereof. The respondent has served more than 15 years. The respondent falls in Category 3 of the prisoners as per the applicable rules [See under Shortnote M, below] as he did not indulge in any organised crime. The State Government is directed to calculate sentence of remission of the respondent as per the policy dated 4-2-1993. (Paras 54 and 55). State of Haryana v. Jagdish, (2010) 4 SCC 216.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and J.M. Panchal and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2010]

K.M. Nanavati v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 112: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 173; G. Krishta Goud v. State of A.P., (1976) 1 SCC 157: 1975 SCC (Cri) 788; R. v. Secy. of State for the Home Deptt., 1996 EWCA Civ 555; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, relied on

Ramraj v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2010) 1 SCC 573: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 842, referred to

State of Haryana v. Mahender Singh, (2007) 13 SCC 606: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 221; State of Haryana v. Bhup Singh, (2009) 2 SCC 268: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 710; State of Haryana v. Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1193, harmonised

[6264] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Interpretation of — Case law discussed — Imposition of minimum term under sentence of life imprisonment — Held, in no case, with possible exception in case of exercise of powers vested in President and Governor under Arts. 72 and 161 of the Constitution, respectively, even with remissions earned, can a sentence of imprisonment for life be reduced to below 14 years — Herein, petitioner is fortunate to have escaped death penalty — This is not a fit case where petitioner should be released on completion of 14 years' imprisonment — Minimum sentence of 20 years' RI directed — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 45 & 57 and 302 & 201 — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161

In the various decisions rendered after the decision in Godse case, AIR 1961 SC 600, "imprisonment for life" has been repeatedly held to mean imprisonment for the natural life term of a convict, though the actual period of imprisonment may stand reduced on account of remissions earned. But in no case, with the possible exception in case of exercise of the powers vested in the President under Article 72 of the Constitution and the powers vested in the Governor under Article 161 of the Constitution, even with remissions earned, can a sentence of imprisonment for life be reduced to below 14 years. It is thereafter left to the discretion of the authorities concerned to determine the actual length of imprisonment having regard to the gravity and intensity of the offence. (Paras 22 and 23)

In the present case, the facts are such that the petitioner is fortunate to have escaped the death penalty. This is not a fit case where the petitioner should be released on completion of 14 years' imprisonment. The petitioner's case for premature release may be taken up by the authorities concerned after he completes 20 years' imprisonment, including remissions earned. (Para 25). Ramraj v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2010) 1 SCC 573.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-12-2009]

Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 736: (1961) 3 SCR 440; Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 3 SCC 745: 1979 SCC (Cri) 848; Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P., (1979) 3 SCC 646: 1979 SCC (Cri) 749; State of Punjab v. Joginder Singh, (1990) 2 SCC 661: 1990 SCC (Cri) 419; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Ashok Kumar v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 498: 1991 SCC (Cri) 845; Laxman Naskar v. Union of India, (2000) 2 SCC 595: 2000 SCC (Cri) 509; Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458: 2001 SCC (Cri) 735; Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 6 SCC 296: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095; Mohd. Munna v. Union of India, (2005) 7 SCC 417: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1688, relied on

Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 113, applied

[6265] — S. 432 — Question of premature release, when to be considered — Contention raised by State that after a few years the case of respondent was likely to be considered for his premature release, as he had been in jail for a period of 8 years, and in the event of the respondent coming out, it would endanger the life of the daughter of the deceased — Rejecting the said plea, held, respondent could not be deprived of his right of being considered for premature release — Question of premature release is considered on the basis of the report of the officers concerned as well as the material facts and circumstances prevailing at the relevant time of release — There cannot be any presumption about release or non-release of a prisoner — Further, held, it would not be a valid consideration to inflict the extreme penalty on the accused

It is submitted by the State that after a few years the case of the respondent is likely to be considered for his premature release, as he has been in jail for a period of eight years and in the event of the respondent coming out, it will endanger the life of G, the daughter of deceased J. The said contention has no force as premature release is considered on the material facts and circumstances prevailing at the relevant time of release. Report of the officers concerned is also called for and it is after consideration of all the material that necessary decision is taken in the matter. The respondent would not lose his right of being considered for premature release, which matter indeed may have to be considered at the appropriate time in the light of the facts and circumstances then found prevailing. There cannot be any presumption about release or non-release of a prisoner. It would not be a valid consideration to inflict the extreme penalty. (Para 8). State of Punjab v. Gurmej Singh, (2002) 6 SCC 663: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1460: AIR 2002 SC 2811.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-2002]

[6266] — S. 432 — Remission of sentence — Power to grant, held, vests in the Government and not in any court (Para 7). K. Pandurangan v. S.S.R. Velusamy, (2003) 8 SCC 625: AIR 2003 SC 3318.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2003]

[6267] — Ss. 432 and 433 — Power of sentencing court to bar remission or amnesty — Trial court's order that no order of remission or amnesty will apply to the accused upheld by Supreme Court — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161 — Power of court to bar remission or amnesty

The order of the trial court that any remission of sentence or amnesty on any special occasions announced or to be announced either by the Central or the State Government shall not apply to the sentence and imprisonment imposed on all the accused, is also maintained. (Para 78). Kamalanantha v. State of T.N., (2005) 5 SCC 194: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1121: AIR 2005 SC 2132.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-4-2005]

Followed in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767*

[6268] — Ss. 432 and 433 — Nature of the provisions

Sections 432 and 433 confer powers of suspension, remission and commutation of sentences on the appropriate government, an expression defined in sub-section (7) of S. 432 of the Code. State of Punjab v. Joginder Singh, (1990) 2 SCC 661: 1990 SCC (Cri) 419: AIR 1990 SC 1396: 1990 Cri LJ 1464.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-1990]

[6269] — S. 432 — Remission of sentence — Power to grant remission is a matter of policy and no prisoner has absolute right to remission — Andhra Pradesh Government issuing a GO granting remission to a category of prisoners and subject to certain conditions — GO excluding those prisoners who were convicted for life and for crimes against women — Held, GO valid — Further held, in such class or category of orders, there is no justification for any addition or subtraction to facilitate enlargement of the scope and applicability of the order beyond what was specifically intended in the order itself — Appellant, who was convicted under S. 498-A IPC not entitled to the benefit under the scheme — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A — Constitution of India, Art. 15(3)

The Government of Andhra Pradesh in the 50th year of Independence issued a GO which inter alia granted remission to prisoners of certain categories and subject to certain conditions. The GO excluded inter alia those prisoners from the scheme of remission who had been convicted for "crimes against women such as Sections 376 and 354 IPC while being sentenced for life". The appellant had previously been convicted of offences under Sections 302, 201 and 498-A IPC and sentenced for life, 4 years and 3 years respectively and for which he was undergoing imprisonment. The appellant's brother filed a writ before the High Court challenging the said GO. Before the High Court the petitioner contended that since the present appellant has not committed a crime against women under Sections 376 or 354 IPC he should be given the benefit of the GO and granted remission. It was further contended that the condition stipulating the exclusion of prisoners having committed crimes against women was discriminatory and violated Article 14. The High Court rejected the contentions of the petitioner and before the Supreme Court the appellant advanced the same arguments.

Dismissing the appeals,

Held :

The rejection of the plea on behalf of the appellant by the High Court was well merited and supported by sound reasons. The remission to be granted was in respect of only a specified class of convicts and that too "subject to the conditions" specified in the very government order. (Para 7)

The claim for remission cannot be made or countenanced dehors the specific conditions subject to which only it has been accorded and inasmuch as the grant as well as the conditions formed a compendious single common pattern or scheme of concession by way of remission, impregnated with a policy designed in public interest and the safety and interests of the society, either the remission could be availed of only subject to the conditions stipulated or the entirety of the scheme fails as a whole, and there is no scope for judicial modification or modulating the same so as to extend the concession in excess of the very objective of the maker of the order who seems to have been guided by considerations of State policy. In such class or category of orders, there is no justification for any addition or subtraction to facilitate enlargement of the scope and applicability of the order beyond what was specifically intended in the order itself. (Para 7)

The Constitution of India itself has chosen to countenance the claims of women for favourable treatment and acknowledge the fact that sex is a sound classification. The issue in question being one pertaining purely to the area policy and political philosophy of the State, the courts except in the rarest of rare cases, cannot be called upon to adjudicate on the desirability or wisdom of such decisions. (Para 9)

The classification in this regard to keep away convicts of crimes against women from the benefits of remission under the order dated 25-1-2000 cannot be said to violate any reasonable principle or concept of law so as to call for its condemnation in exercise of the powers of judicial review. The classification therefore sounds just, reasonable, proper and necessitated in the larger interests of society and greater public interest and consequently, cannot by any stretch of imagination be branded to be invidious to attract the vice of Article 14 of the Constitution of India. A careful scrutiny of the various excepted class of convicts only shows that the real object is to ensure that those who prey on the community and violate fundamental values of mankind, society and national interest should not get undeserved benefit. (Para 9). Sanaboina Satyanarayana v. Govt. of A.P., (2003) 10 SCC 78: AIR 2003 SC 3074: 2003 Cri LJ 3854.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2003]

[6270] — S. 432 — "Remission" and "remit" — Meaning of — Remission does not affect conviction — Government can only remit the sentence and it cannot revise the judgment of the court — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161

The word "remit" as used in Section 432 is not a term of Art. Some of the meanings of the word "remit" are "to pardon, to refrain from inflicting, to give up". Remission is reduction of the amount of a sentence without changing its character. In the case of a remission, the guilt of the offender is not affected, nor is the sentence of the court, except in the sense that the person concerned does not suffer incarceration for the entire period of the sentence, but is relieved from serving out a part of it. (Para 10)

Section 432 confines the power of the Government to the suspension of the execution of the sentence or the remission of the whole or any part of the punishment. The conviction under which the sentence is imposed remains unaffected. The section gives no power to the Government to revise the judgment of the court. It only provides with the power to remit the sentence. Remission of punishment assumes the correctness of the conviction and only reduces the punishment in part or in whole. (Para 10)

A remission of sentence does not mean acquittal and an aggrieved party has every right to vindicate himself or herself. (Para 10). State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2003]

Distinguished in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767

[6271] — S. 432 — Premature release of life convict — Considerations for — Guidelines for, laid down by Supreme Court in Laxman Naskar v. Union of India (2000) 2 SCC 595 — Facts of particular case considered in the light of the guidelines — Constitution of India — Art. 161

In the present case, the report of the jail authorities was in favour of the petitioner. However, the Review Committee constituted by the Government recommended to reject the claim of premature release of the petitioner for the following reasons:

(1) that the police report had revealed that the two witnesses who had deposed before the trial court and the people of the locality were all apprehensive of acute breach of peace in the locality in case of premature release of the petitioner;

(2) that the petitioner was a person of about 43 years and hence he had the potential of committing crime; and

(3) that the incident in relation to which the crime had occurred was the sequel of the political feud affecting the society at large.

Held :

The reasons given by the Government are palpably irrelevant or devoid of substance. Firstly, the views of the witnesses who had been examined in the case or the persons in the locality cannot determine whether the petitioner would be a danger if prematurely released because the persons in the locality and the witnesses may still live in the past and their memories are being relied upon without reference to the present and the report of the jail authorities to the effect that the petitioner has reformed himself to a large extent. Secondly, by reason of one's age one cannot say whether the convict has still the potentiality of committing the crime or not, but it depends on his attitude to matters, which is not being taken note of by the Government. Lastly, as regards the suggestion that the incident is not an individual act of crime but a sequel of the political feud affecting the society at large, whether his political views have changed or he still carries the same so as to commit crime has not been examined by the Government. On the basis of the grounds of detention the Government could not have rejected the claim made by the petitioner. In the circumstances, the order made by the Government is quashed and the matter is remitted to it again to examine the case of the petitioner in the light of what has been stated by the Supreme Court earlier and the comments made in this order as to the grounds upon which the Government refused to act on the report of the jail authorities and also to take note of the change in the law by enacting the West Bengal Correctional Services Act 32 of 1992 and to decide the matter afresh within a period of three months from the date of the present judgment. (Para 9). Laxman Naskar v. State of W.B., (2000) 7 SCC 626: AIR 2000 SC 2762.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-2000]

Laxman Naskar v. Union of India, (2000) 2 SCC 595: 2000 SCC (Cri) 509, applied

[6272] — S. 432 — Remission of prison sentence — Classification of convicts for grant of — Based on nature of offence committed and effect of such offence on society as also integrity of State — Notification under S. 432 excluding from remission those convicted for offences of rape, dowry death, abduction and murder of child below 14 years, unnatural offences, robbery, offences under Ss. 121 to 130 IPC, offences under NDPS Act, TADA Act, Foreigners Act, Passport Act, offences under Ss. 2 and 3 of Criminal Law Amendment Act, those detained under detention laws and those violating jail manual — Classification for exclusion from benefit of remission, held, not violative of Art. 14

The Government of Haryana, on the eve of the independence day, issued a notification dated 14-8-1995 in exercise of its power vested under Section 432 of the Code, granting remission of prison sentence to all convicts except those excluded in the said notification. The said notification excluded such convicts who had been convicted for the offences of rape, dowry death, abduction and murder of a child below 14 years, unnatural offences, robbery, persons sentenced under the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act (NDPS), TADA, the Foreigners Act, the Passport Act, the persons detained under the detention laws, the persons sentenced under Sections 2 and 3 of the Criminal Laws Amendment Act, the persons convicted under Sections 121 to 130 IPC, and the convicts found guilty of violation of jail manual. Because of the above exclusion of certain offences from the benefit of remission under the notification, the respondent who was serving a sentence of 7 years' RI for commission of rape punishable under Section 376 IPC, became ineligible for such remission. He therefore, filed a petition before the High Court challenging the classification for the purpose of denying remission on ground of the classification being discriminatory, violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. The High Court following an earlier judgment of the same court made in Suresh Kumar v. State of Haryana came to the conclusion that it is not open to the State Government while granting general remission to carve out special exceptions in cases which, according to it, could be termed as heinous offences and deny the benefit of remission to such class of convicts and therefore, while allowing the petition, it directed the State Government to grant the benefit of remission to the respondent also. In Suresh Kumar case the High Court, following a Division Bench judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in the case of Jagaram v. State of A.P. had come to the conclusion that the State had no power to place a restriction on the grant of remission because such power of restriction has already been exercised by Parliament while amending Section 433-A of the Code. Though the notification in question did not give any specific reason for exclusion of such convicts, from the pleadings of the State Government, it appeared that this exclusion was based on the nature of offence committed by the said convicts and taking into consideration the effect of such offence on the society as also the integrity of the State. The question before the Supreme Court was whether such classification of convicts based on the nature of offence committed by them, would be an arbitrary classification having no nexus with the object of the Code.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

While considering the challenge based on Article 14 as to the arbitrariness in the impugned classification, the court has to examine whether the impugned classification satisfies certain constitutional mandates or not. They are (i) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group; (ii) that the differentia must have a rational relationship with the objects sought to be achieved by the Act. (Para 6)

The gravity of an offence and the quantum of sentence prescribed in the Code could be a reasonable basis for a valid classification if the object of such classification is to grant or not to grant remission. The offences of rape, dowry death, abduction and murder of a child below 14 years, offences coming under Sections 121 to 130 IPC, dacoity, robbery etc. are the offences for which the Code has prescribed the sentence of rigorous imprisonment extending up to life, therefore, from the very nature of the sentence which the offence entails, the said offences can be categorised as grave offences. Therefore, they can be aptly classified as grave offences, which classification will be a valid classification for the purpose of deciding whether the persons who have committed such offences should be granted remission or not. On this basis, the State Government having decided not to grant remission to these offenders/offences which carry life imprisonment, should not be granted remission, is justified in doing so. Similarly, the offences under the NDPS and the TADA Acts, apart from carrying heavy penal sentences are offences which could be termed as offences having serious adverse effect on the society, cognizance of which is required to be taken by the State while granting remission; therefore, they can also be classified as offences which should be kept out of the purview of remission. The offences enumerated in Sections 121 to 130 IPC are the offences against the State, though some of them may not be punishable with life imprisonment, still taking into consideration the nature of offence which undermines the security of the State, can be classified for exclusion from the benefit of remission. Again the offences under the Foreigners Act, the Passport Act, the Official Secrets Act also being offences against the State, they can be classified as offences which will not be entitled to the benefit of remission. The persons who have indulged in the breach of mandate of the jail manual can also be classified as the offenders who should not be granted the incentive of remission because of their conduct during the period of their conviction. Therefore, the offences excluded from the benefit of remission under the impugned notification have been properly classified which classification, is a valid classification for the purpose of making them ineligible for the grant of remission. (Paras 8, 11 to 15). State of Haryana v. Jai Singh, (2003) 9 SCC 114: AIR 2003 SC 1696.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-2003]

Kathi Raning Rawat v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1952 SC 123: 1952 SCR 435: 1952 Cri LJ 805; State of Haryana v. Mohinder Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 394: 2000 SCC (Cri) 645; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Sunil Batra v. Delhi Admn., (1978) 4 SCC 494: 1979 SCC (Cri) 155, relied on [6273] — S. 432 — Punjab Government G.O. dated 14-8-2002 — Interpretation of — Dowry death — Sentence — Remission — Permissibility — Accused convicted under S. 304-B and sentenced to 7 years' RI and to pay fine of Rs 5000 each with default stipulation — High Court, while confirming conviction of Accused 1 and 2, observing that Accused 1 (Respondent 2) was stated to have already undergone imprisonment and directing his release — Government Order dated 14-8-2002 under S. 432 CrPC r/w Art. 161 of the Constitution expressly stipulating that remission would not apply to offences under S. 304-B IPC, among some other offences — Held, High Court erred in doing so — Incident occurred on 14-3-2000 and the High Court decided the matter on 31-10-2006 — Hence seven years were not over — Seven years from the date of incident would be over only on 13-3-2007 — Accused also not entitled to benefit of Government Order — Respondent 2 therefore directed to surrender to custody and remain in jail for a period of seven years — If such benefit was granted to Accused 2, she also directed to surrender to custody till the period of seven years was over — Punjab Government G.O. dated 14-8-2002 — Interpretation of — Constitution of India, Art. 161 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B (Paras 1 and 17 to 23). Dharam Chand v. State of Punjab, (2008) 15 SCC 513: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1107: AIR 2009 SC 1304.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-2008]

[6274] — S. 432 — Remission of sentence — While power to grant remission cannot be exercised by State Government arbitrarily, no prisoner has absolute right to remission — Government can prescribe conditions for eligibility for granting remission and it can also except from such grant prisoners convicted for a particular offence — Circular issued by State of Haryana under S. 432 providing special remission to all convicts who were in jail undergoing sentences including even those on parole or furlough from the jail on 6-7-1987 — But the circular not permitting remission to the prisoners convicted of rape or dowry deaths — Held, circular valid — In view of specific provisions for applicability of the circular, held, remission under the circular not available to the prisoners on bail as also prisoners convicted for rape — Merely because when bail was granted to the convict by appellate court during pendency of his appeal his conviction was not suspended, the convict would not become entitled to remission under the circular for the period he was on bail — Haryana Good Conduct Prisoners (Temporary Release) Act, 1988 (28 of 1988), Ss. 3, 4 — Punjab Jail Manual (as applicable in Haryana), Paras 633, 633-A, 634, 635, 637, 644, 645

The State of Haryana issued the circular in question in exercise of powers under Section 432 CrPC. It inter alia granted special remission to the prisoners who were confined in jails in the State of Haryana on 6-7-1987. It also granted remission to all the convicts who were even on parole/furlough from the jail on 6-7-1987. But remission of sentence was not granted by it to prisoners convicted of rape or dowry deaths. In five of the appeals [arising from SLPs (Crl.) Nos. 1810, 1812, 2033-34, 2151 of 1999 and 145 of 2000] out of the batch of six the question involved was whether the respondent, a convict, is entitled to remission of his sentence for the period during which he is on bail. In the sixth appeal [arising from SLP (Crl.) No. 643 of 1999] the question was whether the prisoner, who is convicted of an offence under Section 376 IPC, though confined in jail, is entitled to remission of his sentence when the government circular does not grant such remission to an inmate who has been convicted under Section 376 IPC. The High Court in the batch of five appeals observed that conviction and sentence are two separate terms and that the moment a person is convicted he becomes stigmatic. The High Court said that at that point of time he is a convict and if he has been granted bail by the appellate court it is by virtue of the provision of Section 389 of the Code and his sentence stands suspended and not that his conviction is suspended and that with the dismissal of appeal of such convict the stigma of conviction is not wiped off. The High Court was, therefore, of the opinion that such a convict would be entitled to remission for the period he was on bail when the circular gave the benefit of remission to a prisoner on parole/furlough. As regards the respondent who was convicted for an offence under Section 376 IPC the High Court considered various provisions of the Punjab Jail Manual as applicable in the State of Haryana (paras 634, 635 and 637 of the Jail Manual) and held that the prisoner in this case was also entitled to remission as was granted to those prisoners who were on parole/furlough or were in jail on the date of the circular granting remission. Allowing the appeals, Held :

The respondents were not entitled to remission of their sentences under the circulars in question issued under Section 432 CrPC. (Para 25)

In respect of the respondent, who was convicted of rape, the circular specifically is not applicable to the prisoner convicted of an offence of rape or other dowry offences. (Para 21)

When a circular specifically applies to the prisoners who are undergoing sentence and are confined in jail and even to those who are on parole or furlough, the Court cannot extend this circular to convicts who are on bail and thus carve out another category to which the Court is not entitled under Section 432 of the Code. The validity of the circular has not been challenged on any other ground. (Para 20)

The circular granting remission is authorised under the law. It prescribes limitations both as regards the prisoners who are eligible and those who have been excluded. Conditions for remission of sentence to the prisoners who are eligible are also prescribed by the circular. Prisoners have no absolute right for remission of their sentence unless except what is prescribed by law and the circular issued thereunder. That special remission shall not apply to a prisoner convicted of a particular offence can certainly be a relevant consideration for the State Government not to exercise power of remission in that case. Power of remission, however, cannot be exercised arbitrarily. Decision to grant remission has to be well informed, reasonable and fair to all concerned. (Para 9)

The terms bail, furlough and parole have different connotations. Bail is well understood in criminal jurisprudence. Provisions of bail are contained in Chapter XXXIII of the Code. It is granted by the officer in charge of a police station or by the court when a person is arrested and is accused of an offence other than a non-bailable offence. The court grants bail when a person apprehends arrest in case of a non-bailable offence or is arrested for a non-bailable offence. When a person is convicted of an offence he can be released on bail by the appellate court till his appeal is decided. If he is acquitted his bail bonds are discharged and if appeal dismissed he is taken into custody. Bail can be granted subject to conditions. It does not appear to be quite material that during the pendency of appeal though his sentence is suspended he nevertheless remains a convict. For the exercise of powers under Section 432 it may perhaps be relevant that the State Government may remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which a person has been sentenced even though his appeal against conviction and sentence was pending at that time. Appeal in that case might have to abate inasmuch as the person convicted has to accept the conditions on which the State Government remits the whole or part of his punishment. (Para 10)

"Furlough" and "parole" are two distinct terms now being used in the Jail Manuals or laws relating to temporary release of prisoners. These two terms have acquired different meanings in the statute with varied results. Dictionary meanings, therefore, are not quite helpful. When a prisoner is on parole his period of release does not count towards the total period of sentence while when he is on furlough he is eligible to have the period of release counted towards the total period of his sentence undergone by him. (Paras 17 and 18). State of Haryana v. Mohinder Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 394: 2000 SCC (Cri) 645: AIR 2000 SC 890: 2000 Cri LJ 1408.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Saghir Ahmad and D.P. Wadhwa, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-2000]

Jai Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1987) 4 SCC 296: 1987 SCC (Cri) 715; Poonam Lata v. M.L. Wadhawan, (1987) 3 SCC 347: 1987 SCC (Cri) 506, relied on

Nalamolu Appala Swamy v. State of A.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 192: 1990 SCC (Cri) 44, distinguished

(1999) 1 Chand LR 319 (P&H), reversed

[6275] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Applicable remission policy — Jagdish case, (2010) 4 SCC 216, holding that of the possibly applicable remission policies, the one which is more liberal or beneficial to convict should be applied — Supreme Court in Jagdish case upholding High Court's direction for applying more beneficial policy and dismissing appeal of State thereagainst — Following Jagdish case, all the SLPs (of the State) herein dismissed as well. State of Haryana v. Harpal, (2010) 11 SCC 748.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and J.M. Panchal and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2010]

State of Haryana v. Jagdish, (2010) 4 SCC 216: (2010) 2 SCC (Cri) 806, applied

[Ed.: See especially Shortnote B.]

[6276] — Ss. 432, 433, 433-A and 306 — "Pardon" — Grant of — Held, is a sovereign power — Powers of the President and the Governor under Arts. 72 and 161 respectively — Held, are absolute and cannot be fettered by any statutory provision — But the President or the Governor, as the case may be, must act on the advice of the Council of Ministers — Meaning and effect of "pardon", explained — Difference between "pardon" and "amnesty", also explained — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161

"Pardon is one of the many prerogatives which have been recognized since time immemorial as being vested in the Sovereign, wherever the sovereignty might lie." This sovereign power to grant a pardon has been recognized in our Constitution in Articles 72 and 161, and also in Sections 432 and 433 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Grant of pardon to an accomplice under certain conditions as contemplated by Section 306 of the Code is a variation of this very power. The grant of pardon, whether it is under Article 161 or 72 of the Constitution or under Sections 306, 432 and 433 of the Code is the exercise of sovereign power. (Para 12)

A pardon is an act of grace, proceeding from the power entrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. It affects both the punishment prescribed for the offence and the guilt of the offender; in other words, a full pardon may blot out the guilt itself. It does not amount to an acquittal unless the court otherwise directs. Pardon is to be distinguished from "amnesty" which is defined as "general pardon of political prisoners; an act of oblivion". As understood in common parlance, the word "amnesty" is appropriate only where political prisoners are released and not in cases where those who have committed felonies and murders are pardoned. (Para 9)

Article 72 of the Constitution confers upon the President power to grant pardons, reprieves, respites or remissions of punishment or to suspend, remit or commute the sentence of any person convicted of any offence. The power so conferred is without prejudice to the similar power conferred on the Court Martial or the Governor of a State. Article 161 of the Constitution confers upon the Governor of a State similar powers in respect of any offence against any law relating to a matter to which the executive power of the State extends. The power under Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution is absolute and cannot be fettered by any statutory provision such as, Sections 432, 433 or 433-A of the Code or by any prison rules. But the President or the Governor, as the case may be, must act on the advice of the Council of Ministers. (Para 8). State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2003]

[6277] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Primacy of remission policy framed with reference to Art. 161 — Policy dt. 4-2-1993 framed with reference to Art. 161, while policy dt. 13-8-2008 framed under S. 432 r/w Ss. 433 & 433-A — Primacy between — Held, policy dt. 13-8-2008 cannot override policy dt. 4-2-1993 — Hence, direction of High Court that case of respondent prisoner be considered under policy dt. 4-2-1993, affirmed Primacy of remission policy framed with reference to Art. 161 — Constitution of India, Arts. 161 & 72

The respondent was convicted vide judgment and order dated 20-5-1999 under Sections 302, 148 and 149 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment. The policy which was in existence at that point of time was dated 4-2-1993. The respondent, having served more than 10 years' imprisonment, approached the High Court that in spite of having undergone the sentence as per the policy dated 4-2-1993, his case for premature release was not being considered in view of the new policy of short-sentencing, introduced on 13-8-2008. The High Court placing reliance on the judgments of the Supreme Court in Mahender Singh case, (2007) 13 SCC 606 and Bhup Singh case, (2009) 2 SCC 268 came to the conclusion that the case of the respondent for premature release was to be considered in the light of the short-sentencing policy existing on the date of his conviction and thus, a direction was issued to the State authorities to consider his case for premature release in view of the policy dated 4-2-1993.

A different view had been taken in State of Haryana v. Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355. So in view of conflicting views on the question, the matter came to be referred to this Bench.

Affirming the High Court's decision and dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution provide for a residuary sovereign power, thus, there can be nothing to debar the authority concerned to exercise such power, even after rejection of one clemency petition, if the changed circumstances so warrant and in exceptional circumstances, variation from the policy is permissible. Thus, it is evident that the clemency power of the executive is absolute and remains unfettered for the reason that the provisions contained under Article 72 or 161 of the Constitution cannot be restricted by the provisions of Sections 432, 433 and 433-A CrPC though the authority has to meet the requirements of rule of law while exercising the clemency power. To say that clemency power under Articles 72/161 of the Constitution cannot be exercised by the President or the Governor, as the case may be, before a convict completes the incarceration period provided in the short-sentencing policy, even in an exceptional case, would be mutually inconsistent with the theory that clemency power is unfettered. The expectancy of period of incarceration is determined soon after the conviction on the basis of the applicable laws and the established practices of the State. When a short-sentencing scheme is referable to Article 161 of the Constitution, it cannot be held that the said scheme cannot be pressed in service. Even if a life convict does not satisfy the requirement of remission rules/short-sentencing schemes, there can be no prohibition for the President or the Governor of the State, as the case may be, to exercise the power of clemency under the provisions of Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution. Right of the convict is limited to the extent that his case be considered in accordance with the relevant rules, etc. He cannot claim premature release as a matter of right. (Paras 34 to 39)

The earlier policies including the policy dated 4-2-1993 refer to the exercise of powers under Article 161 of the Constitution whereas the policy dated 13-8-2008 is in exercise of the powers under Section 432 read with Sections 433 and 433-A CrPC. The restriction under Section 433-A is only to the extent of the powers to be exercised in respect of offences as referred to under Section 432 CrPC. The Notification dated 13-8-2008 is, therefore, under a rule of procedure, which is subordinate to the Constitution. The power exercised under Article 161 of the Constitution is obviously a mandate of the Constitution and, therefore, the policy dated 13-8-2008 cannot override the policy dated 4-2-1993. The right of the respondent prisoner, therefore, to get his case considered on a par with such of his inmates, who were entitled to the benefit of the said policy dated 4-2-1993, cannot be taken away by the policy dated 13-8-2008. The High Court was absolutely justified in arriving at the conclusion that the case of the respondent was to be considered on the strength of the policy that was existing on the date of his conviction. (Paras 52 and 53)

Section 433-A CrPC and the short-sentencing policy would apply prospectively. The life convicts who had been sentenced prior to 18-12-1978 i.e. date of enforcement of amendment would not come within the purview of the provisions of Section 433-A CrPC. Remission rules/short-sentencing policies could be taken as guidelines for exercise of power under Article 72 or 161 of the Constitution and in such an eventuality, remission rules will override Section 433-A CrPC. (Paras 22 and 39)

The State authority is under an obligation to at least exercise its discretion in relation to an honest expectation perceived by the convict, at the time of his conviction that his case for premature release would be considered after serving the sentence, prescribed in the short-sentencing policy existing on that date. The State has to exercise its power of remission also keeping in view any such benefit to be construed liberally in favour of a convict which may depend upon case to case and for that purpose, it should relate to a policy which, in the instant case, was in favour of the respondent. In case a liberal policy prevails on the date of consideration of the case of a "lifer" for premature release, he should be given benefit thereof. The respondent has served more than 15 years. The respondent falls in Category 3 of the prisoners as per the applicable rules

[See under Shortnote M, below] as he did not indulge in any organised crime. The State Government is directed to calculate sentence of remission of the respondent as per the policy dated 4-2-1993. (Paras 54 and 55). State of Haryana v. Jagdish, (2010) 4 SCC 216.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and J.M. Panchal and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2010]

K.M. Nanavati v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 112: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 173; G. Krishta Goud v. State of A.P., (1976) 1 SCC 157: 1975 SCC (Cri) 788; R. v. Secy. of State for the Home Deptt., 1996 EWCA Civ 555; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, relied on

Ramraj v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2010) 1 SCC 573: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 842, referred to

State of Haryana v. Mahender Singh, (2007) 13 SCC 606: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 221; State of Haryana v. Bhup Singh, (2009) 2 SCC 268: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 710; State of Haryana v. Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1193, harmonised

[6278] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Remission of sentence — Proper mode for seeking — On conviction being confirmed by Supreme Court, appellant seeking remission directly from Supreme Court — Impropriety — Held, remission can only be granted by executive authorities — Appellant may file a petition for remission before High Court if any rule or G.O. of State Government provides for remission of sentence — Constitution of India, Art. 72 or 161, Art. 136. Samjuben Gordhanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 13 SCC 466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and T.S. Thakur, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2010]

[6279] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Criminal appeal — Death sentence reference — Relief — Death sentence awarded to appellant by Designated Court (constituted under TADA Act) — Upheld by Supreme Court by 2:1 majority — As per minority view, appellant entitled to acquittal — In such situation, appellant would not be remediless — If any motion is made in terms of Ss. 432, 433, 433-A CrPC and/or Art. 72 or 161 of the Constitution, as the case may be, the same may be appropriately dealt with — Constitution of India, Arts. 134 and 136

Per Arijit Pasayat, J. (B.N. Agrawal, J. concurring)

The trial Judge has rightly held the appellant to be guilty. (Para 56)

However, a question arises as to the effect of Brother Shah, J. holding the accused innocent, while deciding the question of sentence. Observations made by the Supreme Court in Ramdeo Chauhan case are relevant and the same have application to the present case. The Court in Ramdeo Chauhan case inter alia had observed:

"If any motion is made in terms of Sections 432, 433 and 433-A of the Code and/or Article 72 or Article 161 of the Constitution as the case may be, the same may be appropriately dealt with. It goes without saying that at the relevant stage, the factors which have weighed with my learned Brother Mr Justice Thomas can be duly taken note of in the context of Section 432(2) of the Code." (Paras 60 and 62)

Thus there is no reason to interfere with the order of the trial Judge. The appeal deserves to be dismissed. Reference as made for confirmation of death sentence imposed under Section 3(2)(i) is accepted. (Para 62). Devender Pal Singh v. State of NCT of Delhi, (2002) 5 SCC 234: 2002 SCC (Cri) 978: AIR 2002 SC 1661: 2002 Cri LJ 2034: (2002) 97 DLT 57.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah[1], B.N. Agrawal[3] and Arijit Pasayat[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2002]

Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714: 2001 SCC (Cri) 915, applied

[6280] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Premature release — Remission of period of imprisonment — State's power to formulate policy decision — Subsequent change in policy — Effect on convict's right — Convict has a right to be considered for remission, if his case falls within the purview of State's policy prevailing at the time of his conviction and imposition of sentence — Subsequent change in prison policy would operate prospectively without affecting convict's right to be considered for remission under the pre-amended policy — State has power to formulate prison policy, as distinguished from sentencing policy and while doing so it has power to make classification of convicts on the basis of gravity of offence but the classification must be non-discriminatory and the policy must treat all the convicts falling within its ambit equally so as not to be violative of Art. 14 — Further, executive instructions conveying the policy decision cannot supersede the statutory rules laying down parameters within which convicts would be entitled to be considered for remission — Prisons Act, 1894, S. 59(5) — Punjab Prisons Rules, Rr. 2(a) to (d), (f), 20, 21, Note appended on 12-7-1910 — Punjab Jail Manual, Paras 516-B, 635 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 54 and 55 — Constitution of India — Arts. 14, 72, 161 and 20 & 21

The respondents were found guilty of commission of murder of three persons and by a judgment of conviction and sentence dated 25-1-1988 passed by trial court they were awarded life imprisonment. Their appeals before High Court as well as before the Supreme Court against conviction and sentence were dismissed. State of Punjab had been issuing instructions in relation to premature release of the convicts from time to time. In the year 1988, when the respondents were convicted, the rules which were applicable were of 27-2-1984. Thereunder, for consideration of their cases for remission, they should have (a) undergone at least 8 1/2 years of substantive or actual sentence, and (b) should also have undergone 14 years of sentence including the period of remission earned. However, the same was subject to Section 433-A CrPC. In 1984 and 1988 instructions there did not exist any category of life convict involved in a heinous crime. But on or about 28-9-1988, when the earlier instructions dated 27-2-1984 were amended, inter alia, the life convicts were classified into two categories viz. those not convicted for heinous crimes and those convicted for heinous crimes and for them different provisions for remission were made. Yet again on 19-11-1991, the policy was modified making further provisions in regard to life convicts "who have committed crimes which are not considered heinous". Similar provisions were again made by reason of a policy statement made on 4-2-1993. Paras 516-B and 635 of the Punjab Jail Manual made further provisions regarding the adult life convicts and scaling of award of remission.

The State of Haryana formulated a policy on or about 12-4-2002 in regard to premature release of "convicts whose death sentence has been commuted to life imprisonment and convicts who have been imprisoned for life having committed a heinous crime" specified therein. In terms of the said policy, the cases for remission were required to be considered after completion of 10 years of actual imprisonment and 14 years including remission. A writ petition was preferred by the respondents questioning constitutionality of the said policy decision which the High Court allowed on the premise that no discrimination could be made inter se amongst the life convicts; all of them being similarly situated and, thus, the purported classification on the ground of number of murders was arbitrary and discriminatory.

In the present appeal preferred by the State before the Supreme Court, it was submitted that the State having an unfettered right to formulate a policy decision in regard to remission of sentence, the High Court committed a manifest error in arriving at the aforementioned conclusion; particularly, having regard to the provisions contained in Sections 54 and 55 of the Penal Code and Section 433-A CrPC. It was contended that the executive Government of the State in exercise of its constitutional power under Article 161 can formulate such a policy decision and the same has been approved by the Supreme Court and in that view of the matter it can also reformulate the policy from time to time. According to the appellant, Article 14 does not forbid reasonable classification. Such a policy decision having been formulated for the benefit of the convicts themselves, as in terms of Section 433-A CrPC, a convict does not have any constitutional or statutory right of remission of sentence, hence the same cannot be held to be unconstitutional.

Dismissing the appeals,

Held :

It is true that no convict has a fundamental right of remission or shortening of sentences. However, a right to be considered for remission, keeping in view the constitutional safeguards of a convict under Articles 20 and 21 of the Constitution, must be held to be a legal one. Such a legal right emanates not only from the Prisons Act but also from the Rules framed thereunder and the State's own executive instructions. In view of the policy decision itself a convict must be held to have a right to be considered therefor. (Paras 27, 38 and 41)

The State indisputably is entitled to take a prison policy as contradistinguished from a sentencing policy. The State in exercise of its executive power of remission must consider each individual case keeping in view the relevant factors. The power of the State to issue general instructions, so that no discrimination is made, is also permissible in law. (Paras 23 and 27)

The High Court might not be correct in holding that the State has no power to make any classification at all. A classification validly made would not offend Article 14 of the Constitution. (Para 46)

The question, however, which would inter alia arise for consideration is as to whether new policy decision adopted by the State of Haryana will have a prospective operation. Herein we are concerned with the right of the respondents to be considered for remission and not what should be the criteria when the matter is taken up for grant thereof. (Paras 28 and 45)

Whether by reason of a statutory rule or otherwise if a policy decision has been laid down, the persons who come within the purview thereof are entitled to be treated equally. A' fortiori the policy decision applicable in such cases would be which was prevailing at the time of his conviction. (Paras 38 and 40)

Any guidelines which do not have any statutory flavour are merely advisory in nature. They cannot have the force of a statute. They are subservient to the legislative Act and the statutory rules. (Para 39)

Furthermore, if the Punjab Rules are applicable in the State of Haryana in view of the State Reorganisation Act, no executive instruction would prevail over the statutory rules. The Rules having defined "convicts" in terms whereof a "life convict" was entitled to have his case considered within the parameters laid down therein, the same cannot be taken away by reason of an executive instruction by redefining the term "life convict". It is one thing to say that the "life convict" has no right to obtain remission but it is another thing to say that they do not have any right to be considered at all. Right to be considered emanates from the State's own executive instructions as also the statutory rules. (Para 41). State of Haryana v. Mahender Singh, (2007) 13 SCC 606: (2007) 60 AIC 73 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 444.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-11-2007]

State of Mysore v. H. Srinivasmurthy, (1976) 1 SCC 817: 1976 SCC (L&S) 126; Commr. of Municipal Corpn. v. Prem Lata Sood, (2007) 11 SCC 40; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Sadhu Singh v. State of Punjab, (1984) 2 SCC 310: 1984 SCC (Cri) 241; State of Punjab v. Joginder Singh, (1990) 2 SCC 661: 1990 SCC (Cri) 419; State of Haryana v. Ram Diya, (1990) 2 SCC 701: 1990 SCC (Cri) 426; State of Mysore v. H. Srinivasmurthy, (1976) 1 SCC 817: 1976 SCC (L&S) 126; Maharao Sahib Shri Bhim Singhji v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 166; J.R. Raghupathy v. State of A.P., (1988) 4 SCC 364; Narendra Kumar Maheshwari v. Union of India, 1990 (Supp) SCC 440, relied on

Mohd. Munna v. Union of India, (2005) 7 SCC 417: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1688; Epuru Sudhakar v. Govt. of A.P., (2006) 8 SCC 161: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 438, distinguished Applied in State of Haryana v. Bhup Singh, (2009) 2 SCC 268*

[6281] — Ss. 432 and 434 — Order of remission passed under — Held, affects only the execution of the sentence and not the conviction or sentence itself — Remission rules under Jail Manuals also have the same effect — Punjab Jail Manual, Para 516-B

An order of remission passed by the State Government or by the jail authorities does not interfere with either the conviction or sentence recorded by the Court which remains intact, it merely affects the execution of the sentence passed by the Court and frees the convicted person from his liability to undergo the full term of imprisonment and it is for this reason that an accused person has every right to press his appeal against the conviction and sentence imposed upon him, full remission notwithstanding. Section 428 will come into play in cases where 'imprisonment for a term is awarded on conviction by a court and not where the convict's sentence becomes a sentence for a term on remission being granted by the Executive. Kartar Singh v. State of Haryana, (1982) 3 SCC 1: 1982 SCC (Cri) 522: AIR 1982 SC 1439: 1982 Cri LJ 1772.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar, Baharul Islam and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-8-1982]

[6282] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Remission of sentence

Remission schemes are introduced to ensure prison discipline and good behaviour and not to upset sentences; if the sentence is of imprisonment for life, ordinarily the convict has to pass the remainder of his life in prison but remissions and commutations are granted in exercise of power under Ss. 432 and 433 carving out an exception in the category of those convicts who have already enjoyed the generosity of executive power on the commutation of death sentence to one of life imprisonment. Even in such cases S. 433-A of the Code or the executive instruction of 1976 does not insist that the convict pass the remainder of his life in prison but merely insists that he shall have served time for at least 14 years. State of Punjab v. Joginder Singh, (1990) 2 SCC 661: 1990 SCC (Cri) 419: AIR 1990 SC 1396: 1990 Cri LJ 1464.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-1990]

[6283] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Scope and applicability — Remission — Even if sentence of death imposed on accused is confirmed by Supreme Court, accused is not remediless as he still can seek benefit under Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Word "remit" in S. 432 — Meaning — Categories of persons to whom S. 433-A applies

Per Phukan, J.

The release of the prisoners condemned to death in exercise of the powers conferred under Section 432 CrPC and Article 161 of the Constitution does not amount to interference with due and proper course of justice, as the power of the court to pronounce upon the validity, propriety and correctness of the conviction and sentence remains unaffected. Similar power as that contained in Section 432 of the Code or Article 161 of the Constitution can be exercised before, during or after trial. The power exercised under Section 432 of the Code is largely an executive power vested in the appropriate Government and by reducing the sentence, the authority concerned thereby modifies the judicial sentence. The section confines the power of the Government to the suspension of the execution of the sentence or remission of the whole or any part of the punishment. Section 432 of the Code gives no power to the Government to revise the judgment of the court. It only provides power of remitting the sentence. Remission of punishment assumes the correctness of the conviction and only reduces punishment in part or whole. The word "remit" as used in Section 432 is not a term of Art. Some of the meanings of the word "remit" are "to pardon, to refrain from inflicting, to give up". It is therefore no obstacle in the way of the President or Governor, as the case may be in remitting the sentence of death. A remission of sentence does not mean acquittal. (Para 57)

The power to commute a sentence of death is independent of Section 433-A. The restriction under Section 433-A of the Code comes into operation only after power under Section 433 is exercised. Section 433-A is applicable to two categories of convicts: (a) those who could have been punished with sentence of death, and (b) those whose sentence has been converted into imprisonment for life under Section 433. (Para 58)

In the circumstances, if any motion is made in terms of Sections 432, 433 and 433-A of the Code and/or Article 72 or Article 161 of the Constitution as the case may be, the same may be appropriately dealt with. The factors which have weighed with my learned Brother Mr Justice Thomas can be duly taken note of in the context of Section 432(2) of the Code. (Para 59). Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714: 2001 SCC (Cri) 915: AIR 2001 SC 2231: 2001 Cri LJ 2902.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[2], R.P. Sethi[1] and S.N. Phukan[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2001]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, relied on

[6284] — Ss. 432, 433-A, 389 and 482 — Remission of sentence — Remission in respect of period of enlargement on bail anterior to the existence of an operative conviction — Impermissibility of — Accused acquitted by trial court, of offence under Ss. 302/34 IPC — Granted bail during pendency of appeals before High Court and Supreme Court — High Court convicting him and Supreme Court upholding the conviction — In such circumstances, although the conviction by Supreme Court related back to the date of judgment of the trial court which was anterior to the date of enactment of S. 433-A CrPC, grant of remission in respect of the period of enlargement of bail, held, impermissible — State Government's instructions enabling the grant of remission of the period of "parole or furlough" held, not applicable to the period of enlargement on bail

The respondent was acquitted on 5-1-1978 by the trial court, of the offence under Sections 302/34 IPC. The High Court, although allowed the respondent to remain on bail during the pendency of appeal, ultimately convicted him on 23-4-1980 under the said provisions. Consequently, the respondent surrendered on 7-6-1980. During the pendency of his appeal before Supreme Court he was again released on bail on 2-8-1980. The Supreme Court, ultimately, upheld the conviction and, consequently, he was again taken to jail on 22-8-1994. In such circumstances, the Punjab and Haryana High Court, upholding the respondent's contention that his conviction related back to the date of the trial court's decision, i.e. 5-1-1978, allowed his claim that the period during which he was on bail (from 5-1-1978 to 7-6-1980 and from 2-8-1980 to 21-8-1994) should be included within the period of his entitlement for remission. The respondent's claim was based on the instructions issued by the State of Haryana postulating that remission would "be also granted to all the convicts who were on parole/furlough from the jail on 25-1-1988". Allowing the State's appeal,

Held :

The High Court rightly held that Section 433-A CrPC, as inserted on 8-12-1978, would not stand in the way in the instant case as the order of conviction has to be treated as passed on 5-1-1978 when the trial court pronounced its judgment. (Para 6)

The instructions issued by the Government of Haryana under which the respondent claimed remission cannot be interpreted as to enable him to count the period during which he was on bail towards remission. The expression "parole or furlough" occurring therein cannot be stretched to the period during which the person was enlarged on bail, during the pendency of the trial or appeal or revision. No sentence would be passed on the accused during the time he remains under trial and hence there is no question of any remission to be granted to him during that stage, except the period during which he was under detention as provided in Section 428 CrPC. If he was released on bail during the pendency of appeal or revision it is on account of the fact that the court suspended the sentence passed on him. When the sentence stands suspended he would be released on bail on his own entitlement. But the case of parole or furlough is different from it. (Para 11)

Suspension of a sentence is obviously different from remission of any part of the punishment to which a person is sentenced. While Section 432 CrPC deals with power of the Government to suspend the sentence, Section 389 CrPC deals with power of the court to suspend execution of sentence pending appeal or revision. Whenever the sentence is suspended by the court the convict is entitled to be released on bail. The expression used in Section 432(1) CrPC for remission is "remit ... the punishment to which he has been sentenced". It is, therefore, clear that remission can be granted only with reference to an operative punishment. In other words, when there is no operative punishment there is no need to remit any part of such punishment. (Para 13)

Parole relates to executive action taken after the door has been closed on a convict. During parole period there is no suspension of sentence but the sentence is actually continuing to run during that period also. (Para 14)

Therefore, the part of the impugned judgment by which the High Court directed remission to be granted in respect of the period during which the respondent was released on bail, is hereby set aside. (Para 20). State of Haryana v. Nauratta Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 514: 2000 SCC (Cri) 711: AIR 2000 SC 1179: 2000 Cri LJ 1710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-2000]

Man Mohan Sahani v. State of Haryana, (1987) 2 R Cri R 292 (P&H), impliedly approved on the first point

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, followed

Sunil Fulchand Shah v. Union of India, (2000) 3 SCC 409; State of Haryana v. Mohinder Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 394, relied on

Man Mohan Sahani v. State of Haryana, (1987) 2 R Cri R 292 (P&H); Amrik Singh v. State of Haryana, (1992) 2 R Cri R 138 (P&H), overruled on the second point

[6285] — Ss. 432 and 433 — Words "reprieve" and "respite" — Meaning of, explained — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161

Reprieve means a stay of execution of sentence, a postponement of capital sentence. Respite means awarding a lesser sentence instead of the penalty prescribed in view of the fact that the accused has had no previous conviction. It is something like a release on probation for good conduct under Section 360 CrPC. (Para 10). State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2003]

[6286] — Ss. 432 and 433 — Commutation/remission of sentence — Relevant factors to be considered — Appellants killing two persons in a marriage ceremony in the course of a frivolous quarrel triggered off by sarcastic remark of one of the deceased — Apart from the unexpected turn of events that had taken place, the incident occurred about three decades back — One of the appellants was aged about 80 years and was ailing — Held, the State Government/Governor concerned should consider the appellants' applications, if filed, for commutation/remission of sentence with expedition, taking into account the relevant circumstances (Para 12). Suresh Chandra v. State of U.P., (2005) 6 SCC 130: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1364: AIR 2005 SC 3120: 2005 Cri LJ 3449.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-7-2005]

[6287] — Ss. 432 and 433-A — Remission of sentence of life imprisonment and release of prisoner — Even if a person undergoing life sentence earns remission under prison rules or any law, he will be entitled to be released only when the appropriate Government passes an order remitting the balance period of the sentence — In absence of such an order, the life convict cannot claim any right to be automatically released on the ground that by virtue of Expln. to S. 61(1) of W.B. Correctional Services Act period of imprisonment for life has to be treated as equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years — W.B. Correctional Services Act, 1992 (32 of 1992), S. 61(1) Expln. — Penal Code, 1860, S. 53 — Constitution of India — Art. 161

Solely on the basis of completion of a term in jail serving imprisonment and remissions earned under the relevant rules or law will not entitle an automatic release, but the appropriate Government must pass a separate order remitting the unexpired portion of the sentence. Therefore, it may not help a person undergoing sentence of life imprisonment even on the construction placed on Section 61(1) of the West Bengal Correctional Services Act 32 of 1992 with reference to explanation thereto that for the purpose of calculation of the total period of imprisonment under this section the period of imprisonment for life shall be taken to be equivalent to the period of imprisonment for 20 years. (Para 4). Laxman Naskar v. State of W.B., (2000) 7 SCC 626: AIR 2000 SC 2762.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-2000]

State of M.P. v. Ratan Singh, (1976) 3 SCC 470: 1976 SCC (Cri) 428; Naib Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 454: 1983 SCC (Cri) 536; Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 3 SCR 440: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 736, relied on

Followed in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767*

[6288] — Ss. 432 and 433-A — Government's power under S. 432 to exclude a class of prisoners from benefit of remission — Scope — Held, is not affected by S. 433-A

The legislature by enacting Section 432 in the Code has given wide powers of suspension, remission and commutation to appropriate Government which can utilise the said power at any time with or without condition. Such power can be exercised by the appropriate Government either with reference to a single convict or with reference to a class of convicts so long as such classification is a valid classification. However, by enacting Section 433-A in the Code, Parliament has only restricted the power of the appropriate Government to grant remission to the convicts mentioned in that section. It does not do anything more. To grant or not to grant is the power vested in the appropriate Government under Section 432 which the said Government can exercise either by granting remission to all convicts except those mentioned in Section 433-A or by restricting the remission to a class of convicts provided such classification is valid. The High Court in the case of Suresh Kumar erred in holding that the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Jagaram case has held that the power of the appropriate Government to restrict the remission to any class of convicts stands excluded by virtue of the introduction of Section 433-A of the Code. By introduction of Section 433-A of the Code, Parliament has not excluded or denuded the power of the appropriate Government to restrict the grant of remission to a class of prisoners only or exclude a class of prisoners from such benefit of remission. (Para 16). State of Haryana v. Jai Singh, (2003) 9 SCC 114: AIR 2003 SC 1696.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-2003]

(2001) 2 Chand Cri C 367 (P&H); Suresh Kumar v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 RCR 757 (P&H), overruled

[6289] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Power under — Scope — Effect of Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A CrPC — Maintainability of multiple clemency petitions — Held, clemency power of executive is absolute and remains unfettered subject to rule of law — Further held, said power cannot be restricted by Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A CrPC — Also, there is nothing to deter authority concerned from exercising such power even after rejection of one clemency petition, if changed circumstances so warrant — Thus, to say that clemency powers cannot be exercised before a convict completes incarceration period as provided in short-sentencing policy even in an exceptional case would be mutually inconsistent with the theory that clemency power is unfettered — Even if life convict does not satisfy requirements of remission rules/short-sentencing schemes, there is no prohibition under Arts. 72/161 for exercising power of clemency — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161. (Paras 22 and 39). State of Haryana v. Jagdish, (2010) 4 SCC 216.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and J.M. Panchal and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2010]

K.M. Nanavati v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 112: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 173; G. Krishta Goud v. State of A.P., (1976) 1 SCC 157: 1975 SCC (Cri) 788; R. v. Secy. of State for the Home Deptt., 1996 EWCA Civ 555; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, relied on

Ramraj v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2010) 1 SCC 573: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 842, referred to [6290] — S. 432 — Sentence — Appellant technically guilty of the offence — Minimum sentence of 7 years' RI impossible — Because of the several mitigating circumstances court recommending executive clemency under S. 432 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 397. Ram Shankar v. State of M.P., 1980 Supp SCC 470: 1981 SCC (Cri) 378: AIR 1981 SC 644: 1981 Cri LJ 162.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-1980]

[6291] — S. 432 — Reckoning of study leave — Held, cannot be reckoned under Kerala Prison Rules while computing period of sentence undergone — Kerala Prison Rules, 1958 — Rules for Suspension of Sentence of Prisoners for the Purpose of Study — Constitution of India, Arts. 161 and 72

The Government of Kerala had constituted a High-Level Committee on the basis of the order passed in suo motu proceedings which were initiated as in several instances several convicts sentenced for serious offences were released after undergoing short term of imprisonment. Guidelines were framed by the Committee which were promulgated by GO (P) 228/03/Home dated 18-10-2003. In Para 3 of the guidelines of the State Government order, it was provided that the "Committee will recommend premature release of life convicts who have completed 8 years of actual imprisonment including set-off if any ordered by a competent court and excluding remission of any kind" considering the various factors set out therein. The appellant was suffering life imprisonment in view of his conviction under Section 302 IPC. He made a claim before the State Government that the Kerala Prison Rules provide for release on probation on completion of 8 years of custody. According to him the period of study leave amounting to 6 years 10 months and 13 days has to be reckoned while computing the period of sentence undergone. The prayer was rejected on the ground that the appellant had not suffered 8 years of custodial sentence.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Stand of the appellant is clearly unsustainable. In view of the clear position emitting from Rule 225, the High Court's judgment does not suffer from any infirmity that, to be entitled to benefit the convict has to suffer at least 8 years of custody. (Para 8)

Rule 280-A provides for suspension of sentence as empowered under Section 432(6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 for the period of leave for the purpose of study. During the period of study leave, the sentence stands suspended. The result of suspension of sentence as per Rule 225(2) is that the same is excluded from the period of sentence undergone. Thus Rule 225(2) makes the position very much explicit. Rule 461 i.e. the provision for treatment of the period of leave as the sentence undergone cannot be made applicable to the study leave period. The same is abundantly clear from the fact that at the time of commencement of study leave, the sentence stands suspended whereas for the emergency leave or ordinary leave, the above suspension is not contemplated under Chapter 26 of the Rules. It is also seen from Rule 453 that the period of emergency and ordinary leave are confined to a short period and the same is not granted continuously and also that a gap of six months is contemplated as per Rule 452-B for further release of a prisoner granting ordinary leave. Emergency leave vide Rule 455 is limited to extreme situations like death or serious illness of a near relative. But so far as study leave is concerned, the same is granted somewhat liberally. The appellant himself was outside the prison for more than six years. He was outside the prison more than the period he spent inside. (Paras 5 and 6)

[As and when the appellant suffers actual custody of more than 8 years, let his case be considered in accordance with law by the authorities concerned.] (Para 10). C.A. Pious v. State of Kerala, (2007) 8 SCC 312: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 544: AIR 2007 SC 3221: (2007) 58 AIC 31 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-2007]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, relied on

Followed in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767*

[6292] — S. 432 — Because of several mitigating circumstances court recommending executive clemency under. Ram Shankar v. State of M.P., 1980 Supp SCC 470: 1981 SCC (Cri) 378: AIR 1981 SC 644: 1981 Cri LJ 162.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-1980]

[6293] — S. 432 — Sentence — Reduction — Mitigating circumstances — Accused government servants losing their jobs and all retiral benefits — Prolonged litigation causing considerable loss and suffering to them — They crossing 60 years of age — Hence, sentence of one year's RI reduced to six months — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 161 and 120-B — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(1)(d) r/w S. 5(2)

It is argued that the incident in question having taken place nearly 23 years ago, the appellants have already suffered sufficiently and, therefore, the Supreme Court should take a lenient view of the matter and award a lesser sentence. It is noticed that the two appellants who were government servants have since lost their jobs and all retiral benefits and the prolonged litigation has caused considerable loss and suffering. Bearing in mind the fact that both the appellants have crossed 60 years of age, it would be appropriate that the sentence of 1 year's RI imposed by the High Court should be further reduced to a period of six months. (Para 10). Shiv Nandan Dixit v. State of U.P., (2003) 12 SCC 636.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-12-2003]

[6294] — S. 432 — Government recommended to remit sentence under — Factors considered — Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, R. 29(f) — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 16(1)(A)(i) and 19

The appellant, a petty trader was found guilty of commission of offence of selling 'kesari coloured sweet supari sali' adulterated with 'yellow basic coal tar dye' in violation of R. 29(f) of Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules (as it stood prior to amendment of the rule on November 15, 1984) and was sentenced to one year's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs 2000, both being the statutorily compulsory minimum sentences under S. 16(1)(A)(i) of the Act. The appellant could not invoke S. 19(2) of the Act. On behalf of the appellant it was contended that while the bigger offenders who manufactured the supari and who distributed them to the retailers go scot free, small-time tradesmen like him, who purchase the goods from these manufacturers and/or wholesalers and sell them in retail, had to face great hardships.

Held :

The contention is not without force. Moreover, the offence was committed ten years ago and the appellate court had acquitted the appellant. The expression "fruit products" in the context of what the delegated legislative authority really meant and wanted to convey, was not a model of precision. The degree of precision should be such that not only those who read it in good faith understand but also that those who read it in bad faith do not misunderstand. For these reasons this is a fit case in which the appropriate government should exercise its executive powers of remission of the substantive sentence of imprisonment — though not of the fine — under S. 432, CrPC or under other law appropriate to the case. Dineshchandra Jamnadas Gandhi v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 420: 1989 SCC (Cri) 194: AIR 1989 SC 1011: (1989) 1 SCR 138: 1989 Cri LJ 889.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-1-1989]

[6295] — S. 432 — Infanticide — Sentence — Remission — Murder of two children by throwing them into a well — Remission of sentence — Reference — Procedure under Criminal Rules of Practice, Kerala, 1982, R. 131 — Said Rule not noticed by the Sessions Judge or by the High Court — Hence, Supreme Court disposing of the appeal with the recommendation to Government to consider the matter — (Kerala) Criminal Rules of Practice, R. 131. K.E. Thankamani v. State of Kerala, 1998 SCC (Cri) 1357: AIR 1999 SC 1513.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.C. Agrawal, S. Saghir Ahmad and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-4-1998]

[6296] — S. 432 — Petitioner, a life convict, undergoing more than 21 years' imprisonment including remission and actually remaining in jail custody for more than 15 years — Petitioner of tender age (17 years) at the time of commission of offence — Petitioner, though not a juvenile at the time of commission of the offence, directed to be released from detention — Juvenile Justice Act, 1986, S. 2(h). Babu Ram v. State of U.P., 1994 SCC (Cri) 1401.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1993]

[6297] — S. 432 — Power to suspend or remit sentence — Rape — Long time lag between date of offence and conviction, fact that prosecutrix may have married and settled down, and may have children, held, may be factors for consideration by executive or constitutional authorities when deciding whether remission of sentence can be allowed to accused — Constitution of India, Arts. 72, 161 — Pardon/commutation/remission of sentence/punishment by President/Governor — Penal Code, 1860, S. 376

The long time lag which elapsed subsequent to the date of offence and the fact that the prosecutrix got married and is well settled in life and that she is now mother of children — all these things which happened during the intervening period, may be factors for consideration by the executive or constitutional authorities if they have to decide whether remission of the sentence can be allowed to the accused. It is made clear that the enhanced sentenced has been imposed on the accused without prejudice to any motion he may make for such remission of the sentence before the authorities concerned. (Para 25). Kamal Kishore v. State of H.P., (2000) 4 SCC 502: 2000 SCC (Cri) 833: AIR 2000 SC 1920: 2000 Cri LJ 2292.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, Doraiswamy Raju and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2000]

[6298] — S. 432 — Remission of sentence — Exclusion of bail period — Period during which a person remained enlarged on bail, held, must be excluded from the period of remission granted under any remission notification

Respondents 3 to 5 were convicted under Sections 326, 325, 324 read with Section 34 IPC and were sentence to RI for 1½ years. During the period of trial ending with confirmation of conviction in the revision petition by the High Court, Respondents 3 to 5 were almost all the time on bail except for a period of about 2 months and 25 days when they were in jail, serving part of their sentence. On dismissal of the revision petition by the High Court, the said respondents surrendered before the Jail Superintendent and on the very same day they were released by the jail authorities. The High Court held that taking into consideration the periods of remission granted by Punjab Government under various notifications cumulatively, the said period would cover the period of sentence awarded to the said respondents and even though they had not in fact served the sentence by virtue of the fact that they were enlarged on bail, they would be deemed to have served the sentence. Before the Supreme Court it was urged on behalf of the appellant (who was the complainant in the original criminal case) that the High Court erred in interpreting the various notifications of remission issued by the State Government to mean that the remission so granted under the notifications would be applicable to persons who were on bail and who had not served the sentence and that it also erred in construing the various applications as giving the benefit cumulatively. On behalf of the said respondents, on the other hand, it was submitted that the High Court was correct in interpreting the notifications issued by the State Government remitting the sentences by giving benefit also to the persons who were on bail. Rejecting the contentions of the respondent State and allowing the appeals,

Held :

Acceptance of the arguments of the said respondents would reduce the criminal justice system to a mockery. In several cases the Supreme Court has held that persons who are enlarged on bail cannot claim the benefit of the period during which they were on bail for the purpose of counting the period of sentence already undergone to apply the remission given by the Government. While applying the period of remission granted by the Government under any remission notification the period during which an accused person was on bail cannot be taken into account. In view of this enunciation of law, even by the inclusion of the word "bail" in the notification of the Punjab Government, an accused who has always remained on bail or has not served a substantial part of his sentence cannot take advantage of the remission notification. (Paras 10 and 14)

In this case, the High Court fell in error in accepting the argument of the said respondents that they were entitled to the benefit of the period of remission given by the various notifications cumulatively to be counted against the period during which they were on bail. (Para 14). Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2001) 8 SCC 306: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1541: AIR 2001 SC 3703.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-9-2001]

State of Haryana v. Mohinder Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 394: 2000 SCC (Cri) 645; Sunil Fulchand Shah v. Union of India, (2000) 3 SCC 409: 2000 SCC (Cri) 659; State of Haryana v. Nauratta Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 514: 2000 SCC (Cri) 711; Satpal v. State of Haryana, (2000) 5 SCC 170: 2000 SCC (Cri) 920, relied on [6299] — S. 432 — Remission of sentence — Refusal of — Grounds for — Petitioner in jail for more than 26 years including remissions — State Government not considering his case for release on ground that he had no source of income and he would revert to crime and abscond — Held, order refusing to release the petitioner wholly bad in law — Direction for release of petitioner passed. Kansi Ram v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 134: 1990 SCC (Cri) 536.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-7-1988]

[6300] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Para 516-B, of Punjab Jail Manual as amended in 1971 and 1976 will prevail over the Note below Para 613 — Para 516-B, only an executive instruction, originally enjoining submission of case of prisoner who completed 14 years of imprisonment, inclusive of remissions, to State Government for consideration and also conferring discretion on Superintendent of Jail to refer the case even before completion of 14 years if in his opinion the case was fit for commuting the sentence — Main part of Para 631, having statutory force, only classifying prisoners and fixing duration of their sentences and Note below the para merely reproducing the gist of Para 516-B with reference to the relevant executive instruction — Para 516-B amended by executive instructions first in 1971 providing that a convict must have undergone 8½ years of substantive sentence and then in 1976 providing in consonance with S. 433-A, CrPC that life convicts must have undergone 14 years of substantive sentence before submission of their cases for premature release — Held, Note below Para 631 has no statutory force and it containing the gist of the unamended Para 516-B will not override the amended Para 516-B — Prisons Act, 1894, S. 59 — Punjab Jail Manual, Paras 516-B and 631 Note

Remission schemes are introduced to ensure prison discipline and good behaviour and not to upset sentences; if the sentence is of imprisonment for life, ordinarily the convict has to pass the remainder of his life in prison but remissions and commutations are granted in exercise of power under Ss. 432 and 433, CrPC carving out an exception in the category of those convicts who have already enjoyed the generosity of executive power on the commutation of death sentence to one of life imprisonment. Even in such cases S. 433-A of the Code or the executive instruction of 1976 does not insist that the convict pass the remainder of his life in prison but merely insists that he shall have served time for at least 14 years. In the case of other 'lifers' the insistence under the 1971 amendment is that he should have a period of at least 8½ years of incarceration before release. The 1976 amendment was possibly introduced to make the remission scheme consistent with S. 433-A of the Code. Since S. 433-A is prospective, so also would be the 1971 and 1976 amendments.

The Note at the foot of Para 631 is neither an integral part of paragraph 631 nor does it have statutory favour. The Note at the foot of paragraph 631 merely reproduces paragraph 516-B, the marginal note thereto say so in no uncertain terms and therefore, the note cannot be ascribed a statutory character. According to the preface only those paragraphs which are backlined have statutory character. The Note in question is not so backlined. Where the Note is intended to be given statutory character it is backlined. Secondly, the source of paragraph 516-B and the note is the very same Resolution Nos. 159-167 of the Government of India dated September 6, 1905. The same resolution cannot be said to have been intended to be a mere executive instruction in one part of the Manual and was intended to be conferred a statutory character in another part of the same Manual. Thirdly, the marginal note to the Note in question in terms refers to paragraph 516-B which means it was merely a reproduction of the latter paragraph was not intended to confer a statutory character. Lastly, paragraph 631 classifies prisoners and fixes the duration of their sentences. The Note at the foot of the paragraph is by way of a remainder that notwithstanding the duration fixed under the said rule, paragraph 516-B requires that cases of such prisoners should be submitted on the expiry of the duration fixed under paragraph 516-B. It is therefore not possible to accept the view that the Note below Para 631 was also statutory in character like the main provision and therefore, in case of conflict between the Note and the amended Para 516-B the Note would prevail. However, paragraph 516-B insofar as it stands amended or modified by the 1971 and 1976 executive orders is prospective in character. State of Punjab v. Joginder Singh, (1990) 2 SCC 661: 1990 SCC (Cri) 419: AIR 1990 SC 1396: 1990 Cri LJ 1464.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-1990]

[6301] — Ss. 432 and 428 — State Government directed to reconsider petitioner's case for his premature release. Babu v. State of U.P., 1987 Supp SCC 147: 1987 SCC (Cri) 673.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-1987]

[6302] — Ss. 432 and 433 — Imprisonment for life awarded to the appellant for committing murder of a young girl — Motive being frustration in love — Recommendation made by the High Court to State Government for showing some concession to the convict towards remission or reprieve — No interference by the Supreme Court is called for. Ashok Kumar Barik v. State of Orissa, (1998) 8 SCC 539: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1520.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and M. Srinivasan, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-1997]

[Ed.: In view of Section 433-A, CrPC the appellant cannot be released from prison unless he has served at least 14 years of imprisonment.]

[6303] — Ss. 432 and 433 — Power to remit and commute sentence — Held, though the facts and circumstances of the instant case prima facie justifying remission of the sentence to some extent, but having found the appellants guilty under Ss. 302/34 IPC it was not possible for the Supreme Court to reduce the sentence of life imprisonment — Appellants directed to approach the State Government/Governor concerned for the commutation or remission of sentence (Para 12). Suresh Chandra v. State of U.P., (2005) 6 SCC 130: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1364: AIR 2005 SC 3120: 2005 Cri LJ 3449.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-7-2005]

[6304] — Ss. 432, 433 and 433-A — Rights of convict under — Held, are limited to the extent that his case be considered according to remission rules/short-sentencing schemes — He cannot claim premature release as a matter of right — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161 (Para 39). State of Haryana v. Jagdish, (2010) 4 SCC 216.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and J.M. Panchal and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2010]

[6305] — Ss. 432 and 433-A — Life convict claiming to be in jail for more than 23 years including remission — Normally entitled to premature release under relevant rules — But his claim being still unconfirmed, State Government directed to consider his case of premature release within four weeks and pass a reasoned order within eight weeks from the date of the present order. Lale v. State of U.P., 1986 Supp SCC 734: 1987 SCC (Cri) 224.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-10-1986]

[6306] — Ss. 432 and 433-A — Person undergoing sentence of life imprisonment claiming to be already in jail for more than 22 years — Period claimed to have been spent in jail would have entitled him to be released under relevant rules — But the claim still being unconfirmed, State Government directed to consider his case for premature release within four weeks and pass a reasoned order within eight weeks from the date of the present order. Dhyan Singh v. State of U.P., 1986 Supp SCC 694: 1987 SCC (Cri) 222.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-10-1986]

[6307] — Ss. 432 and 433-A — Remission of sentence in terms of G.O./MS No. 580/Home (Prisons C) Department, dated 20.10.1984 issued by Government of A.P — Held, benefit of remission not confined to prisoners actually in jail on date of G.O. — Person on bail on date of G.O. also entitled to benefit of remission — State Government directed to consider the matter afresh without reference to the fact that appellants were not in jail on date of G.O. Nalamolu Appala Swamy v. State of A.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 192: 1990 SCC (Cri) 44.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Natarajan, K. Jagannatha Shetty and Kuldip Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-4-1989]

[6308] — S. 432(1) — Grant of special remission to prisoners belonging to the SC and ST and denial of the same to other prisoners rightly held by the High Court to be discriminatory — Grant of such special remission cannot be said to be a measure for advancement of the SC & ST — However, the High Court was not justified in giving the same benefit to the non-SC & ST prisoners — Proper course was to strike down the order — Prisoners who had obtained the benefit of the High Court's order permitted to retain it. State of M.P. v. Mohan Singh, (1995) 6 SCC 321: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1100: AIR 1996 SC 2106.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.P. Bharucha and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-1995]

[6309] — S. 432(1) — State Government remitting only that part of sentence of imprisonment for life which was in excess of twenty-four years of total imprisonment — Held, order not bad for non-application of mind — Decision not arbitrary or irrational. Jabbar Khaja Saudagar v. State of Maharashtra, 1990 Supp SCC 637: 1991 SCC (Cri) 157(1).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.P. Sen, B.C. Ray and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-10-1987]

[6310] — Ss. 432(1) and 433-A (as inserted by Act 45 of 1978) — State Government declining to give to petitioner benefit of premature release without giving any reason — State Government presumably misled that petitioner's case was governed by S. 433-A — Provision of S. 433-A not applicable to conviction recorded prior to December 18, 1978, the date of insertion of the section — Therefore, State Government directed to reconsider and dispose of petitioner's application within a period of four weeks. Damji v. State of Gujarat, 1990 Supp SCC 143: 1990 SCC (Cri) 633: 1987 PLJR 78 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-9-1987]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, followed

— S. 432(7) See Ss. 406, 432(7), 385(1), 225, 2(u), 24 and 378

— S. 433 See also S. 402, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1180 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 433 See Ss. 366, 415, 433, 434 & 435
See also Ss. 389, 432 & 433
See also Ss. 413, 414, 418 and 433 & 433-A and Ch. XXXII (Ss. 413 to 435)
See also Ss. 428 and 433
See also Ss. 432 and 433
See also Ss. 432, 433 & 433-A
See also Ss. 432, 433, 433-A and 306
See also Ss. 433-A, 432 and 433
See also Ss. 482 and 433

[6311] — Ss. 433, 432 and 433-A — Sentence of life imprisonment — Means sentence of entire life — Prisoner has no right to be released after serving 20 years' imprisonment including remission — Sub-rules (4) and (29) of R. 591 of the W.B. Rules only confers right to have his case put up by the prison authorities in time to State Government for consideration for premature release — Explanation to S. 61 of W.B. Correctional Services Act does not entitle accused to automatic release after 20 years' imprisonment — A positive order has to be passed by State Government after due consideration for premature release — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161 — W.B. Rules for Superintendence and Management of Jails, R. 591(4) & (29) — W.B. Correctional Services Act, 1992 (32 of 1992), S. 61, Expln. — Penal Code, 1860, S. 53 Secondly

A sentence of imprisonment for life does not automatically expire at the end of 20 years of imprisonment including remission, as a sentence of imprisonment for life means a sentence for the entire life of the prisoner unless the appropriate Government chooses to exercise its discretion to remit either the whole or part of the sentence. Therefore, a positive order of release has to be passed by the Government after due consideration. (Paras 4 and 9)

Sub-rules (4) and (29) of Rule 591 of the West Bengal Rules for the Superintendence and Management of Jails do not provide for automatic release of a life convict after he has completed 20 years of the detention including remission. Under these sub-rules the only right which a life convict can be said to have acquired is a right to have his case put up by the prison authorities in time to the State Government for consideration for premature release and in doing so the Government would follow the guidelines mentioned in sub-rule (4). (Para 6)

The Explanation to Section 61 of the West Bengal Correctional Services Act is only for the purpose of calculation of the total period of imprisonment of a life convict under Section 61, which shall be taken to be equivalent to the period of imprisonment for 20 years and a life convict would not be entitled to automatic release under this provision of law. (Para 8). Zahid Hussein v. State of W.B., (2001) 3 SCC 750: 2001 SCC (Cri) 631: AIR 2001 SC 1312: 2001 Cri LJ 1692.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-3-2001]

Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 3 SCR 440: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 736; State of M.P. v. Ratan Singh, (1976) 3 SCC 470: 1976 SCC (Cri) 428; Sohan Lal v. Asha Ram, (1981) 1 SCC 106; Bhagirath v. Delhi Admn., (1985) 2 SCC 580: 1985 SCC (Cri) 280; Laxman Naskar (Life Convict) v. State of W.B., (2000) 7 SCC 626: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1431, relied on

Followed in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767*

[6312] — S. 433 — Commutation of sentence — Relevant factors and considerations — Duty of Government — Non-application of mind, non-specific grounds and insufficient evidence regarding ground of ailment and callous attitude of A-1 towards rule of law — Trial court convicting A-1 under Ss. 148, 452 and 392 IPC — High Court convicting A-1 under Ss. 147 and 451 IPC and acquitting him of rest of the charges — On appreciation of evidence in SLP, trial court's order found justified and restored — High Court giving decision on 29-1-2007 — A-1 surrendering before Sessions Court only on 16-4-2007 — State Government ignoring facts that A-1 was absconding and also his callous attitude towards rule of law by drawing his salary during period of his abscondence — State Government commuting sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment to Rs 5000 — State Government not independently scrutinising documents (in support of commutation of sentence of A-1) which were identical though given by different independent government authorities — A-1 taking stand that he was suffering from multiple medical ailments, but no document providing any details about his medical ailments — Effect — Held, S. 433 may not be extended to a law-breaker and absconder — State Government not having applied it mind, the order of commutation, held, improper — Trial court's order having been restored, commutation of sentence was set aside — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 148, 452, 392, 147 and 451

In Writ Petition (Crl.) No. 13 of 2008, State Government did not apply its mind. The order of commutation was only a reiteration of the identical reports submitted by different government authorities without any independent scrutiny. Section 433 CrPC may not be extended to a law-breaker and an absconder. Admittedly A-1 was absconding for 4 months before his surrender. The records clearly show that the High Court gave its decision on 29-1-2007, but A-1 surrendered before the Sessions Court only on 16-4-2007. Interestingly, A-1 is stated to have been drawing his salary during the period when he was absconding, which unmistakably showed his callous attitude towards rule of law. The State Government completely ignored this aspect. The sentence of A-1 was commuted from six month's rigorous imprisonment to fine of Rs 5000 and A-1 was released immediately after one week of his surrender on 24-4-2007. (Paras 30 to 32 and 24)

The powers conferred upon the appropriate Government under Section 433 CrPC, must be exercised in accordance with the rules and established principles. Such power must be viewed as a trust, coupled with a duty to exercise the same in the larger public and social interest. While exercising such power, relevant facts, reasons and purpose of law necessitating the commutation must be reflected and well established. Government must not as a matter of routine, indulge in exercise of such powers at its sweet will, pleasure and whim or fancy. (Para 34)

By simply making vague and bald statements, without having even an iota of indication with regard to the actual disease or ailment is not sufficient to justify the order of commutation. The order of commutation on the basis of these statements without ascertaining its genuineness/veracity shows that the impugned order was passed without any application of mind. It has been stated that A-1 is suffering from multiple medical ailments, but neither his petition for commutation nor any report nor the order of commutation provides any details with regard to what kind of medical ailment he is suffering from. (Para 33)

In view of the aforesaid discussion, the order of the State Government is untenable in law. It is also to be indicated that in view of the order passed in SLP, convicting the appellant under Sections 148, 382 and 452 IPC and restoration of the order of sentence passed by the trial court, the impugned order passed by the State Government is also liable to be struck down on the ground of changed situation and circumstances. The writ petition is allowed to the aforesaid extent. (Para 35). Mohd. Ishaq v. S. Kazam Pasha, (2009) 12 SCC 748: 2009 Cri LJ 3063.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2009]

[6313] — S. 433 — Exercise of State Government's power to commute sentence — Whether subject to judicial review — Principles reiterated — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161

Simply because a remedy exists in the form of Article 226 of the Constitution for filing a writ in the High Court concerned, it does not prevent or place any bar on an aggrieved person to directly approach the Supreme Court under Article 32 of the Constitution. It is true that the Court has imposed a self-restraint in its own wisdom on the exercise of jurisdiction under Article 32 where the party invoking the jurisdiction has an effective, adequate alternative remedy in the form of Article 226 of the Constitution. However, this rule which requires the exhaustion of alternative remedies is a rule of convenience and discretion rather than a rule of law. It does not oust the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to exercise its writ jurisdiction under Article 32 of the Constitution. (Para 23). Mohd. Ishaq v. S. Kazam Pasha, (2009) 12 SCC 748: 2009 Cri LJ 3063.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2009]

Epuru Sudhakar v. Govt. of A.P., (2006) 8 SCC 161: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 438, relied on

[6314] — Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368 and 371 — Murder — Death sentence — Commutation to/Substitution by sentence of life imprisonment — Actual term of imprisonment that may be directed by court — Power of court to direct the actual period of incarceration to be undergone by convict without the same being subject to remission/commutation, etc. by the executive under provisions of CrPC, Prisons Acts and rules framed by different States — Power to direct that in such cases, convict would serve out imprisonment for the remainder of the natural term of his life without any remission — Such power when to be exercised — Unacceptability of sentence of imprisonment for a term of 14 years, that goes under the name of (the ordinary remittable) sentence of life imprisonment in such cases of substitution — Reasons for, discussed in detail — Held, the sentence of imprisonment for life (till its full natural span) given to a convict as a substitute for the death sentence must be viewed differently and segregated from the ordinary life imprisonment given as the sentence of first choice — Life imprisonment when awarded as a substitute for death penalty has to be carried out strictly as directed by the court —When the death sentence comes up for confirmation, if the Court's option is limited only to two punishments, one a sentence of imprisonment, for all intents and purposes, of not more than 14 years and the other death, the Court may feel tempted and find itself nudged into endorsing the death penalty — A far more just, reasonable and proper course would be to expand the options and to take over what, as a matter of fact, lawfully belongs to the Court i.e. the vast hiatus between 14 years' imprisonment and death — The Court would take recourse to the expanded option primarily because in the facts of the case, the sentence of 14 years' imprisonment would amount to no punishment at all — Further, the formalisation of a special category of sentence, though for an extremely few number of cases, shall have the great advantage of having the death penalty on the statute book but to actually use it as little as possible, really in the rarest of rare cases — Contention rejected that execution of punishment was a matter in the hands of the executive alone and the court had no control over the same — Clarified that ruling in this case did not relate to constitutional provisions relating to commutation, remission, suspension, etc. of sentences by the President or the Governor — Present case not falling in the rarest of rare cases to merit the death sentence awarded by trial court and confirmed by High Court, death sentence substituted by imprisonment for life with the direction that the appellant convict would not be released from prison for the rest of his life — Reasons given for why present case did not fall in the rarest of rare category — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The conviction of the appellant under Sections 302 and 201 IPC had attained finality. The trial court and the High Court had sentenced him to death. On appeal before the Supreme Court before a two-Judge Bench, in (2007) 12 SCC 288, both the Hon'ble Judges unanimously upheld the appellant's conviction for the two offences but they were unable to agree as to the punishment to be meted out to the appellant. One of the learned Judges felt that in the facts and circumstances of the case the punishment of life imprisonment, rather than death would serve the ends of justice. The said learned Judge however, made it clear that the appellant would not be released from prison till the end of his life. The other learned Judge on the other hand, took the view that the appellant deserved nothing but death. Hence the matter had been placed before the present three-Judge Bench.

Commuting the death sentence to life imprisonment with the direction that the appellant would not be released from prison till the end of his life,

Held :

The provisions in regard to commutation, remission, suspension, etc. are to be found both in the Constitution of India and in the statutes. Here it needs to be made absolutely clear that this judgment is not concerned at all with the constitutional provisions that are in the nature of the State's sovereign power. What is said hereinafter relates only to provisions of commutation, remission, etc. as contained in CrPC, the Prisons Acts and the rules framed by the different States. (Para 77)

Though the present case is not one of "rarest of the rare" to merit the death penalty, the question arises as to the penalty commensurate to the appellant's crime. The sentence of imprisonment for a term of 14 years, that goes under the euphemism of life imprisonment is equally, if not more, unacceptable. All that is changed by the insertion of Section 433-A CrPC is that before its insertion an imprisonment for life in most cases worked out to a dozen years of imprisonment and after its introduction it works out to fourteen years' imprisonment. As a matter of fact the respondent State has brought on record the fact that the appellant was taken in custody on 28-3-1994 and submitted that by virtue of the provisions relating to remission, the sentence of life imprisonment, without any qualification or further direction would, in all likelihood, lead to his release from jail in the first quarter of 2009 since he has already completed more than 14 years of incarceration. This eventuality is simply not acceptable. (Paras 56 and 89)

Once the judgment is signed and pronounced, the execution of the sentence passes into the hands of the executive and is governed by different provisions of law. There is no surety that the sentence awarded to the convict after painstaking and anxious deliberation would be carried out in actuality. The answer lies in breaking this standardisation that, in practice, renders the sentence of life imprisonment equal to imprisonment for a period of no more than 14 years: in making it clear that the sentence of life imprisonment when awarded as a substitute for death penalty would be carried out strictly as directed by the court. The sentence of imprisonment for life (till its full natural span) given to a convict as a substitute for the death sentence must be viewed differently and segregated from the ordinary life imprisonment given as the sentence of first choice. (Paras 2, 3, 56, 67 and 91)

It was submitted that just as the court could not direct the appropriate Government for granting remission to a convicted prisoner, it was not open to the court to direct the appropriate Government not to consider the case of a convict for grant of remission in sentence. It was contended that giving punishment for an offence was indeed a judicial function but once the judgment was pronounced and punishment awarded, the matter no longer remained in the hands of the court. The execution of the punishment passed into the hands of the executive and under the scheme of the statute the court had no control over the execution. The submission is wholly misconceived and untenable. (Paras 72 and 73)

The issue of sentencing has two aspects. A sentence may be excessive and unduly harsh or it may be highly disproportionately inadequate. When an appellant comes to the Supreme Court carrying a death sentence awarded by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court, the Supreme Court may find, as in the present appeal, that the case just falls short of the rarest of the rare category and may feel somewhat reluctant in endorsing the death sentence. But at the same time, having regard to the nature of the crime, the Court may strongly feel that a sentence of life imprisonment subject to remission normally works out to a term of 14 years would be grossly disproportionate and inadequate. If the Court's option is limited only to two punishments, one a sentence of imprisonment, for all intents and purposes, of not more than 14 years and the other death, the Court may feel tempted and find itself nudged into endorsing the death penalty. Such a course would indeed be disastrous. A far more just, reasonable and proper course would be to expand the options and to take over what, as a matter of fact, lawfully belongs to the Court i.e. the vast hiatus between 14 years' imprisonment and death. It needs to be emphasised that the Court would take recourse to the expanded option primarily because in the facts of the case, the sentence of 14 years' imprisonment would amount to no punishment at all. (Para 92)

Further, the formalisation of a special category of sentence, though for an extremely few number of cases, shall have the great advantage of having the death penalty on the statute book but to actually use it as little as possible, really in the rarest of rare cases. This would only be a reassertion of the Constitution Bench decision in Bachan Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 684, besides being in accord with the modern trends in penology. (Para 93)

It is undeniable that the appellant killed his victim in a planned and cold-blooded manner but at least this much can be said in his favour that he devised the plan so that the victim could not know till the end and even for a moment that she was betrayed by the one she trusted most. Further, though the way of killing appears quite ghastly it may be said that it did not cause any mental or physical pain to the victim. Thirdly, the appellant confessed his guilt at least partially before the High Court. This must not be understood to mean that the crime committed by the appellant was not very grave or the motive behind the crime was not highly depraved. Nevertheless, this Bench is hesitant in endorsing the death penalty awarded to him by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court. The absolute irrevocability of the death penalty renders it completely incompatible to the slightest hesitation on the part of the Court. The hangman's noose is thus taken off the appellant's neck. (Paras 53 to 55)

However, there is a good and strong basis for the Court to substitute a death sentence by life imprisonment or by a term in excess of fourteen years and further to direct that the convict must not be released from the prison for the rest of his life or for the actual term as specified in the order, as the case may be. The death sentence given to the appellant by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court is accordingly substituted by imprisonment for life and it is directed that he shall not be released from prison till the rest of his life. (Paras 94 and 95). Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767: AIR 2008 SC 3040: 2008 Cri LJ 3911.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Agrawal, G.S. Singhvi and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2008]

Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of W.B., (2007) 12 SCC 230: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264; Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 3 SCC 745: 1979 SCC (Cri) 848; Jayawant Dattatraya Suryarao v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 10 SCC 109: 2002 SCC (Cri) 897, followed

Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., (1973) 1 SCC 20: 1973 SCC (Cri) 169; Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458: 2001 SCC (Cri) 735; State of M.P. v. Ratan Singh, (1976) 3 SCC 470: 1976 SCC (Cri) 428; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Bhagirath v. Delhi Admn., (1985) 2 SCC 580: 1985 SCC (Cri) 280; Zahid Hussein v. State of W.B., (2001) 3 SCC 750: 2001 SCC (Cri) 631; Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 6 SCC 296: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095; Prakash Dhawal Khairnar (Patil) v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 2 SCC 35: 2002 SCC (Cri) 281; Ram Anup Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 686: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1466; Mohd. Munna v. Union of India, (2005) 7 SCC 417: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1688; Nazir Khan v. State of Delhi, (2003) 8 SCC 461: 2003 SCC (Cri) 2033; Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 3 SCR 440; Pandit Kishori Lal v. King Emperor, (1944-45) 72 IA 1: AIR 1945 PC 64, relied on

State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586, distinguished

Delhi Admn. v. Manohar Lal, (2002) 7 SCC 222: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1670; State of Punjab v. Kesar Singh, (1996) 5 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1034, impliedly distinguished

[6315] — Ss. 433, 433-A & 434 and 413, 414 & 418 and Ss. 53, 55 & 57, Penal Code, 1860 — "Life imprisonment" — Meaning of — Remission practices followed by the States, leading effectively to a sentence of "life imprisonment" amounting only to a sentence of 14 years in practice — Legality of, doubted — Held, it is conclusively settled by a catena of decisions of Supreme Court that a sentence of "life imprisonment" means a sentence of imprisonment for the convict for the rest of his life — S. 57 IPC does not in any way limit the punishment of imprisonment for life to a term of twenty years — Hence deemed conversion of life imprisonment by various States into one for a fixed term by executive orders, is illegal — There is no legal provision sanctioning such a course — It is thus seen that life convicts are granted remission and released from prison on completing a fourteen year term without any sound legal basis

It is now conclusively settled by a catena of decisions that the punishment of imprisonment for life handed down by the court means a sentence of imprisonment for the convict for the rest of his life. (Para 75)

It is equally well settled that Section 57 IPC does not in any way limit the punishment of imprisonment for life to a term of twenty years. Section 57 IPC is only for calculating fractions of terms of punishment and provides that imprisonment for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for twenty years. The object and purpose of Section 57 will be clear by simply referring to Sections 65, 116, 119, 129 and 511 IPC. (Para 76). Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767: AIR 2008 SC 3040: 2008 Cri LJ 3911.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Agrawal, G.S. Singhvi and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2008]

Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600; Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 3 SCC 745: 1979 SCC (Cri) 848; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Naib Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 454: 1983 SCC (Cri) 536; Ashok Kumar v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 498: 1991 SCC (Cri) 845; Laxman Naskar v. State of W.B., (2000) 7 SCC 626: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1431; Zahid Hussein v. State of W.B., (2001) 3 SCC 750: 2001 SCC (Cri) 631; Kamalanantha v. State of T.N., (2005) 5 SCC 194: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1121; Mohd. Munna v. Union of India, (2005) 7 SCC 417: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1688; C.A. Pious v. State of Kerala, (2007) 8 SCC 312: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 544, followed

[6316] — Ss. 433, 433-A & 434 and 413, 414 & 418 and Ss. 53, 55 & 57, Penal Code, 1860 — Remission of sentences of life imprisonment — When permissible — Necessity for sociological and psychiatric appraisal of convict, with proper appraisal of effect of early release of a particular convict into society — Penology — 'Life imprisonment'

From the Prisons Acts and the Rules it appears that for good conduct and for doing certain duties, etc. inside the jail the prisoners are given some days' remission on a monthly, quarterly or annual basis. The days of remission so earned by a prisoner are added to the period of his actual imprisonment (including the period undergone as an undertrial) to make up the term of sentence awarded by the court. The way in which remission is allowed, it can only apply to a fixed term and life imprisonment, being for the rest of life, is by nature indeterminate. Both in Karnataka and Bihar remission is granted to life convicts by deemed conversion of life imprisonment into a fixed term of 20 years. The deemed conversion of life imprisonment into one for fixed term by executive orders issued by the State Governments apparently flies in the face of a long line of decisions by the Supreme Court and there is no provision of law which was brought to the Supreme Court's notice to sanction such a course. It is thus seen that life convicts are granted remission and released from prison on completing the fourteen-year term without any sound legal basis. One can safely assume that the position would be no better in the other States. The Supreme Court can also take judicial notice of the fact that remission is allowed to life convicts in the most mechanical manner without any sociological or psychiatric appraisal of the convict and without any proper assessment as to the effect of the early release of a particular convict on the society. The grant of remission is the rule and remission is denied, one may say, in the rarest of rare cases. (Paras 80 and 88). Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767: AIR 2008 SC 3040: 2008 Cri LJ 3911.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Agrawal, G.S. Singhvi and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2008]

[6317] — Ss. 433 and 432 — Premature release of life sentencee — Guidelines framed by State Government for Review Board constituted for considering prayers for premature release — Held on facts, guidelines not properly followed by the Board in rejecting cases of the petitioner convicts — Hence matter remitted for fresh decision — Generally

The State Government constituted a Review Board to consider the cases of premature release of the petitioners. Following guidelines were framed by the Government for the premature release of life convicts, namely:

(i) Whether the offence is an individual act of crime without affecting the society at large.

(ii) Whether there is any chance of future recurrence of committing crime.

(iii) Whether there is any fruitful purpose of confining of these convicts any more.

(iv) Whether the convicts have lost potentiality in committing crime.

(v) Socio-economic condition of the convicts' families.

In the present case the jail authority recommended premature release of the writ petitioners. But the Review Board refused to grant premature release of the petitioners on the following grounds: (1) police report is adverse; (2) the convicts are not overaged persons and as such have not lost the potentiality in committing crime; (3) since other co-convicts were trying to come out from jail, there was a possibility of regrouping for antisocial activities; (4) the offence was not an individual act of crime but was affecting society at large; (5) convicts were antisocial; and (6) the witnesses who had deposed at the trial as well as local people were apprehensive of retaliation in the event of premature release. In case of one of the petitioners T, the Review Board also noted that one of the co-convicts was granted premature release who was murdered in an encounter after the release.

Held :

The conduct of the petitioners while in jail is an important factor to be considered as to whether they have lost their potentiality in committing crime due to long period of detention. The views of the witnesses who were examined during trial and the people of the locality cannot determine whether the petitioners would be a danger to the locality, if released prematurely. This has to be considered keeping in view the conduct of the petitioners during the period they were undergoing sentence. Age alone cannot be a factor while considering whether the petitioners still have potentiality of committing crime or not as it will depend on changes in mental attitude during incarceration. While coming to the conclusion for possibility of regrouping for anti-social activities, the Review Board did not take into account that the life convicts are in jail for more than 18 years. The Board also did not consider whether there would be any fruitful purpose of confining the convicts any more and also the socio-economic condition of their families. Regarding the petitioner T the Review Board also noted that one co-convict was released prematurely and was murdered in the encounter with other criminals after his release. It is learnt that the said co-accused was released in the year 1991 and was murdered in the year 1998 and therefore, this fact has no nexus with the consideration of premature release of the petitioner, T. Thus the reasons given by the Review Board for rejecting the prayers for premature release of the petitioners are irrelevant and devoid of any substance.

Accordingly, the impugned order of the State Government is quashed and the matter is remitted again for deciding it afresh within three months. (Paras 14 to 16). Zahid Hussein v. State of W.B., (2001) 3 SCC 750: 2001 SCC (Cri) 631: AIR 2001 SC 1312: 2001 Cri LJ 1692.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-3-2001]

[6318] — Ss. 433 and 433-A — Respondent not completing 14 years' sentence when he filed the petition seeking premature release — Direction by the High Court to release the respondent forthwith held, illegal — Even if the High Court could give such a direction, it could only direct consideration of respondent's case of premature release by the Government and could not have itself ordered the premature release of the respondent — Order of the High Court set aside — However, respondent can approach the Government for commutation of his sentence and premature release in terms of order dated 6-3-1985 issued by the Governor of Punjab. State of Punjab v. Kesar Singh, (1996) 5 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1034: AIR 1996 SC 2512.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-1996]

Impliedly distinguished in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767

[Ed.: Under Section 433-A a person convicted for an offence for which death is one of the punishments cannot be released unless he has served at least 14 years of imprisonment. In the instant case the respondent was convicted under Sections 302/34 and had served only a little more than 8 years' imprisonment. It is not clear under which provision can he approach the Government for premature release as observed in para 4 of the judgment.]

[6319] — S. 433 — Sentence — Commutation of — Age of accused more than 80 years — Incident relating to the year 1979 — Peculiar facts and circumstances of the case — Held, having regard to the relevant rules and the said facts, the State would consider the case of accused-appellant sympathetically as and when an application in that regard would be made by him — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 149

Having regard to the relevant rules and keeping in view that Appellant D is more than 80 years old, the incident relates to the year 1979 and the case involves peculiar facts and circumstances, the respondent State will consider the case of D sympathetically as and when an application is made by him for commutation of sentence. (Para 9). Dila v. State of U.P., (2002) 7 SCC 450: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1782: AIR 2002 SC 3387.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, Shivaraj V. Patil and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2002]

[6320] — S. 433 — Commutation of sentence by appropriate Government — Conditional/direction for — On peculiar facts of present case accused-appellant directed to deposit Rs 7500 and move appropriate Government for commutation of custodial sentence — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 7(1) and 16. Om Prakash v. State (NCT) of Delhi, (2007) 5 SCC 370: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 512: (2007) 55 AIC 26 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-6-2007]

— S. 433(a) See Ss. 433-A and 433(a)
See also Ss. 433-A, 433(a) and 5

[6321] — Ss. 433(a) and 354(3) — Death sentence — Commutation of — Role of NHRC — Order for commutation of death sentence based on recommendations of NHRC — Jurisdiction and powers of NHRC regarding such recommendations — Entertainment of complaint/application by NHRC where cause of action is judicial order — Questions regarding whether accused's human rights were violated and by whom violated, unanswered — Held, NHRC proceedings not in line with procedure prescribed in Act — Recommendations, non est — Moreover, commutation order indicated no other reason — Hence set aside, with direction for reconsideration of application of accused — Protection of Human Rights Act, 1993, Ss. 2(1)(d) and 17 — Constitution of India — Arts. 32, 161 and 72

The accused had been found guilty of brutally massacring four persons of a family. Death sentence was awarded by the trial court, confirmed by the High Court and the Supreme Court. A review petition filed thereagainst was dismissed. Subsequently the Governor of Assam ordered the commutation of the death sentence to that of life imprisonment. The order of commutation had its foundation on recommendations made by the National Human Rights Commission. NHRC made the recommendation purportedly on the basis of a complaint made by Prof. V.

The appellant had thus filed the present writ petition.

Allowing the petition,

Held :

In the documents filed before the Court by NHRC the name of the victim has been stated and cause of action is stated to be the date of judgment of the Supreme Court i.e. 31-7-2000. (Para 10)

The Protection of Human Rights Act, 1993 in Section 17 deals with inquiry into complaints regarding violation of human rights. There have to be at least two individual persons. One whose human rights have been violated and the other who has violated the human rights. The counsel for NHRC was asked as to who had violated the human rights of the accused. An evasive reply was given that when any action violated the human rights, there can be violation of the human rights. This situation is not conceivable in law. (Para 11)

Since the date of cause of action was indicated to be the date of the Supreme Court's judgment, it was pointedly asked of counsel for NHRC as to whether the Judges of the Supreme Court or the Court itself had violated the human rights. Here again an evasive reply was given. This is the same thing as saying that by an order of the Supreme Court there has been violation of human rights. Such a position can never be countenanced. (Para 12)

Proceedings before NHRC were without sanction of law and were not in line with the procedure prescribed under the Act. The recommendations, if any, by NHRC are non est. (Paras 15 and 16)

The State of Assam has indicated that not only the recommendations of NHRC but several other aspects have been taken note of. But the order directing commutation does not indicate any reason. Order of commutation of death sentence to life imprisonment is set aside. Reconsideration of the application filed by the accused for commutation of sentence is directed. (Paras 17 and 18). Bani Kanta Das v. State of Assam, (2009) 15 SCC 206: (2009) 3 CTC 283 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-2009]

Epuru Sudhakar v. Govt. of A.P., (2006) 8 SCC 161: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 438, relied on [6322] — Ss. 433(b) and 433-A — Imprisonment for life — In absence of commutation of sentence under S. 55 IPC or S. 433(b) CrPC for a term not exceeding 14 years, held, a life convict not entitled to be released before 14 years of actual imprisonment — Naib Singh case does not require reconsideration — Appellant having undergone 13 years and 6 months' actual imprisonment and over 17 years' imprisonment including remission, not entitled to be released on ground that government must be deemed to have commuted his sentence to 14 years. Sat Pal v. State of Haryana, (1992) 4 SCC 172: 1992 SCC (Cri) 866: AIR 1993 SC 1218.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1992]

[6323] — S. 433(c) — "Commutation" — Meaning of — Power to commute sentence — Held, exclusively vests with the appropriate Government — "Appropriate Government", meaning of — Said power how to be exercised, stated — Thus, on facts, order of High Court enhancing fine to Rs 15,000 in commutation of sentence of imprisonment and directing that on deposit of the said amount and intimation thereof to the appropriate Government, the State Government might formalise the matter by passing an order under S. 433(c), held, not justified — Hence, set aside

In the instant case, accused P was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 2 years with a fine of Rs 500 and imprisonment for 3½ years with a fine of Rs 1000 under Section 7 and Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 respectively. Both the sentences were directed to run concurrently. P filed an appeal before the High Court for commutation of sentence on the grounds (i) that he was on the verge of retirement, (ii) that he had faced the ordeal of trial for 11 years, and (iii) that he was not a previous convict. The High Court held that no useful purpose would be served in requiring P to undergo imprisonment at that belated stage. Thus, the High Court enhanced the fine to Rs 15,000 in commutation of sentence of imprisonment and directed that on the deposit of the said amount and intimation of the same to the appropriate Government, the State Government might formalize the matter by passing an appropriate order under Section 433 CrPC.

The only question raised in the instant appeal was whether the High Court acted within the framework of law in exercising power available under Section 433(c) CrPC.

Setting aside the order of the High Court,

Held :

"Commutation" is in essence the alteration of a sentence of one kind into a sentence of less severe kind. The powers of commutation exclusively vest with the appropriate Government. The expression "appropriate Government" means the Central Government in cases where the sentence or order relates to the matter to which the executive power of the Union extends, and the State Government in other cases. The powers conferred upon the appropriate Government under Section 433 have to be exercised reasonably and rationally keeping in view the reasons germane and relevant for the purpose of law, mitigating circumstances and/or commiserative facts necessitating the commutation and factors like interest of the society and public interest. (Paras 14 and 10)

The order of the High Court is set aside. It is open to the accused to move the appropriate Government for such relief as is available in law. It would be at the sole discretion of the appropriate Government to exercise the power conferred on it in accordance with law. (Para 16). State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2003]

41st Report of the Law Commission, referred to

Delhi Admn. (now NCT of Delhi) v. Manohar Lal, (2002) 7 SCC 222: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1670; State of Punjab v. Kesar Singh, (1996) 5 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1034, relied on

[6324] — Ss. 433(c) and (d) — Reduction sentence — If warranted — Age of appellant and time since incident took place — Plea that sentence of appellants, particularly Appellant 2 aged about 81 years who had already undergone five months' RI, may be reduced — In the facts and circumstances of the case and that incident had taken place almost two decades ago, held, it is a fit case for reduction of sentences

The order of conviction passed against all the appellants is maintained. However, the sentence of two months' RI awarded to Appellants 1 and 3 is set aside and instead they are sentenced to pay a fine of Rs 20,000 each within six weeks, failing which they will undergo RI for a period of one month. Similarly, the sentence of three years' RI awarded by the trial court to Appellant 2 is reduced to RI for one year. He shall also be liable to pay a fine of Rs 20,000 within six weeks and in default will undergo further RI for a period of one month. The amount(s) of fine so recovered shall be paid in equal proportion to all who were injured in the incident. (Paras 23 and 24). Ashok Kumar Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2008) 12 SCC 173: AIR 2008 SC 2436: (2008) 66 AIC 13 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3030.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2008]

— S. 433(d) See also Ss. 433(c) & (d)

[6325] — S. 433(d) — Addition of colouring matter to chillies powder per se would make the article adulterated — Conviction maintained — But sentence of six months' RI reduced to three months' simple imprisonment enabling the appellant to approach the State Government under S. 433(d) CrPC for conversion of simple imprisonment to fine — Adulteration possibly done to please the customer's eye, the Supreme Court directed the State Government to release the appellant on charging of Rs 2000 as fine in addition to fine of Rs 1000 imposed by the lower courts — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 2(ia)(j), 7/16 and Appendix B, Item A.05.05.01. Badri Prasad v. State of M.P., 1995 Supp (4) SCC 682: 1996 SCC (Cri) 79.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, Faizan Uddin and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-1995]

Limited to its facts in Delhi Admn. v. Manohar Lal, (2002) 7 SCC 222

[6326] — S. 433(d) — Commutation of sentence — Maintainability — High Court, while upholding conviction of respondent-accused under Ss. 7 and 16, PFA Act, 1954, commuting his sentence of six months' RI, awarded by trial court, to fine of Rs 6000 and directing appropriate Government for formalising matter by passing appropriate order under S. 433(d), if amount deposited within particular period — Sustainability — Following Dayal Singh case, (2004) 5 SCC 721, sentence as imposed by trial court restored — However, as occurrence took place nearly three decades back, directions given, that if respondent-accused moves appropriate Government for commuting sentence of imprisonment, same shall be considered in the proper perspective — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 7 and 16 (Paras 4 and 5). State of Rajasthan v. Jagdish Prasad, (2009) 12 SCC 646.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2009]

Dayal Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2004) 5 SCC 721: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1715, followed [6327] — S. 433(d) — Offence of selling adulterated ice cream — Sentence — High Court imposing sentence of six months' simple imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs 1000 — Offence committed in 1984 — Held, this would be an appropriate case for commutation of sentence where almost a decade has passed — Appellant directed to deposit in trial court Rs 6000 as fine in commutation of imprisonment and to move the State Government for appropriate orders under S. 433(d) — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 7 and 16. N. Sukumaran Nair v. Food Inspector, (1997) 9 SCC 101: 1997 SCC (Cri) 608.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-1-1995]

Limited to its facts in Delhi Admn. v. Manohar Lal, (2002) 7 SCC 222

[6328] — S. 433(d) — Commutation of sentence — Executive discretion, being part of residuary sovereign power of the State, held, is to be exercised reasonably and rationally in the interests of the society and public interest having regard to the fact situation of the particular case — Where legislature has prescribed a minimum sentence for an offence, appropriate authority must exercise its power under S. 433 with great circumspection — Held, High Court in exercise of revisional jurisdiction had no power to itself decide to commute the sentence imposed under Ss. 16/7 of Prevention of Food Adulteration Act and direct the convict to deposit in trial court a specified sum as fine and inform the Government of such deposit for formalising the matter by passing appropriate order under S. 433(d) — Supreme Court in N. Sukumaran Nair v. Food Inspector, (1997) 9 SCC 101 and Santosh Kumar v. Municipal Corpn., (2000) 9 SCC 151 has not laid down any such law in this regard — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 16/7 and 2(ia), (j)

The respondent was convicted for an offence under Section 16 read with Section 7 for violation of Sections 2(ia), (a), (j) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act by the Magistrate and was sentenced to simple imprisonment for one year, in addition to a fine of Rs 2000, in default of payment of which to undergo a further imprisonment for one month. In appeal the Additional Sessions Judge sustained the conviction. As regards the respondent's claim for benefit of Section 433(d) CrPC, the appellate court took the view that the power to commute the sentence thereunder vests with the State Government and it was not possible to adopt the course taken in Badri Prasad v. State of M.P., 1995 Supp (4) SCC 682 by the Supreme Court in exercise of its inherent powers. The sentence imposed by the trial court was also thus confirmed. In the revision petition filed before the High Court, the respondent's conviction was not challenged. In respect of the sentence, adverting to the certificate of the Director, Central Food Laboratory, wherein it was found stated that the colouring matter was not injurious to health and placing reliance upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Santosh Kumar v. Municipal Corpn., (2000) 9 SCC 151, wherein a direction was issued by the Supreme Court to the Government under Section 433 CrPC, benefit of Section 433(d) CrPC was claimed for the respondent. Taking into account the same and the concession said to have been made by the counsel for the State, the High Court extended the benefit of commutation of sentence, as envisaged under Section 433(d) CrPC and directed the respondent to deposit in the trial court Rs 20,000 as fine, in commutation of the sentence of imprisonment and inform the Government of such deposit, for formalising the matter by passing appropriate orders under Section 433(d) CrPC. It was also ordered that on deposit of the fine amount, the sentence of imprisonment imposed shall stand suspended.

Allowing the appeal by the State,

Held :

Apparently, the High Court was merely swayed by considerations of judicial comity and propriety and failed to see that merely because the Supreme Court has issued directions in some other cases, to deal with the fact situation in those other cases, in the purported exercise of its undoubted inherent and plenary powers to do complete justice, keeping aside even technicalities, the High Court, exercising statutory powers under the criminal laws of the land, could not afford to assume to itself the powers or jurisdiction to do the same or similar things. The High Court and all other courts in the country were no doubt ordained to follow and apply the law declared by the Supreme Court, but that does not absolve them of the obligation and responsibility to find out the ratio of the decision and ascertain the law, if any, so declared from a careful reading of the decision concerned and only thereafter proceed to apply it appropriately, to the cases before them. Considered in that context, in decisions in Sukumaran, (1997) 9 SCC 101 and Santosh Kumar, (2000) 9 SCC 151 neither any law had been declared nor any principle or question of law decided or laid down. In those cases the Supreme Court merely proceeded to give certain directions to dispose of the matter in the special circumstances noticed by it and the need felt therein to give such a disposal. The same could not have been mechanically adopted as a general formula to dispose of, as a matter of routine, all cases coming before any or all the courts as a universal and invariable solution in all such future cases. The High Court had no justifying reason to disturb the conclusion of the first appellate court, in this regard. (Para 5)

That apart, from the nature and content of the order passed by the High Court in this case, it could be seen that no discretion or liberty whatsoever has been left with the State Government to exercise powers under Section 433(d) CrPC at its discretion which was part of the residuary sovereign power of the State. Not only has the High Court decided to commute but issued a mandatory direction to the Government with no discretion or liberty left with it, except to "formalise the same", on payment of the fine amount specified by the Court. This is nothing but assuming powers where there are none for the High Court and where the statute concerned specifically entrusts it only to the appropriate Government. (Para 6)

Even the appropriate Government may not, as a matter of routine course, indulge in exercise of such powers at its sweet will, pleasure and whim or fancy. The powers conferred upon the appropriate Government under Section 433 CrPC have to be exercised in accordance with rules and established principles — reasonably and rationally, keeping in view the reasons germane and relevant for the purpose of law under which the conviction and sentence has been imposed, commiserative facts necessitating the commutation, and the interests of the society and public interest. The exercise of any power vested by the statute in a public authority is to be always viewed as in trust, coupled with a duty to exercise the same in the larger public and societal interest, too. When the legislature concerned has chosen to mandate for the imposition of a minimum sentence in a given situation, the responsibility of the appropriate Government becomes all the more greater and power under Section 433 CrPC, may have to be exercised with great circumspection. Otherwise, the legislative will might become a mere dead letter at the whim of the executive. (Para 7)

However, this judgment shall not be construed to take away the benefit, if any, already given to an accused, purporting to follow the earlier decisions, as has been done in this case. To some extent, this situation seems to have arisen due to a misunderstanding of the impact of the two judgments, noticed above, and the reporting of such cases as though they constituted any precedent for future guidance. So far as the case on hand is concerned, it has been represented that the accused has remitted the sum of Rs 20,000 as stipulated by the High

Court and treating this and such cases where already orders have been passed by courts, at least, the appropriate Government would do well to grant relief to the accused concerned. If, in any case, it is considered by the Government, in its discretion, not advisable to do so, it is always open to the Government concerned to either move the very court or the appellate revisional forum to modify the orders so as to leave the matter to the sole discretion of the appropriate Government, to be exercised in accordance with law. (Para 8). Delhi Admn. v. Manohar Lal, (2002) 7 SCC 222: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1670: AIR 2002 SC 3088.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2002]

N. Sukumaran Nair v. Food Inspector, Mavelikara, (1997) 9 SCC 101: 1997 SCC (Cri) 608; Santosh Kumar v. Municipal Corpn., (2000) 9 SCC 151: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1184; Badri Prasad v. State of M.P., 1995 Supp (4) SCC 682: 1996 SCC (Cri) 79, limited

State of Punjab v. Kesar Singh, (1996) 5 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1034, relied on

Impliedly distinguished in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767*

[6329] — S. 433(d) — Commuting simple imprisonment to fine — Sustainability — Appellant charged and convicted under S. 7 r/w S. 16(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act for selling spurious chilli powder and sentenced to six months' SI and fine of Rs 1000 — High Court not finding any scope for interference, however increasing the fine to Rs 5000 and allowing the appellant to approach the appropriate Government under S. 433 CrPC — Dismissing the appeal, held, that appellant may challenge the order of the appropriate Government passed under S. 433 CrPC — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 7 and 16(1). Satya Narayan Agarwal v. State of Assam, (2007) 9 SCC 156: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 99: (2007) 55 AIC 155 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 3733.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-2007]

N. Sukumaran Nair v. Food Inspector, (1997) 9 SCC 101: 1997 SCC (Cri) 608; Santosh Kumar v. Municipal Corpn., (2000) 9 SCC 151: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1184, relied on [6330] — S. 433(d) — Commutation of sentence — Food adulteration — Food article viz. groundnut oil on analysis found not to contain any foreign substance or anything injurious to health and found to be adulterated solely on ground that its constituents fell below the standard very marginally — Appellant convicted under S. 16(1)(a) r/w S. 7(i) of Prevention of Food Adulteration Act and sentenced to 6 months' RI and fine of Rs 2000 — Having regard to the nature of the offence, held, this would be an appropriate case for commutation of sentence under S. 433(d) — Hence appellant directed to deposit in trial court Rs 10,000 in commutation of sentence of imprisonment within 6 months (Paras 5 and 6). Santosh Kumar v. Municipal Corpn., (2000) 9 SCC 151: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1184: AIR 2000 SC 3416: 2000 Cri LJ 2777.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-1-2000]

N. Sukumaran Nair v. Food Inspector, (1997) 9 SCC 101: 1997 SCC (Cri) 608, followed

Limited to its facts in Delhi Admn. v. Manohar Lal, (2002) 7 SCC 222

— S. 433-A See Ss. 354(3), 366 and 433-A
See also Ss. 413, 414, 418 and 433 & 433-A and Ch. XXXII (Ss. 413 to 435)
See also Ss. 427(2) and 433-A
See also Ss. 432, 433 & 433-A
See also Ss. 432, 433, 433-A and 306
See also Ss. 432 & 433-A
See also Ss. 432, 433-A, 389, 482
See also Ss. 433, 432 and 433-A
See also Ss. 433 and 433-A
See also Ss. 433, 433-A & 434 and 413, 414 & 418
See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368 and 371
See also Ss. 433(b) & 433-A

[6331] — S. 433-A — Constitutionality — Whether a legislative fraud — Assuming that IPC (Amendment) Bill passed by Rajya Sabha read with CrPC (Amendment) Bill intended to provide an integrated scheme of legislation to the effect that S. 433-A was to apply only to those convicted of capital offence, held, failure to pass the IPC (Amendment) Bill by Lok Sabha while passing the CrPC (Amendment) Act, 1978 had not rendered S. 433-A a legislative fraud or colourable legislation — IPC (Amendment) Bill having not become a law, plain language of S. 433-A cannot be read down or interpreted with the changes proposed by that Bill

It may be assumed that the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill and the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill were intended to provide an integrated scheme of legislation, in that S. 433-A was expected to apply to exceptionally heinous offences falling within the definition of 'capital offence' once the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill became law. Section 433-A was, therefore, expected to deny premature release before completion of actual 14 years of incarceration to only those limited convicts convicted of a capital offence, i.e., an exceptionally heinous crime specified in the second part of the proposed S. 302, IPC. But failure on the part of the Lok Sabha to pass the IPC (Amendment) Bill had not rendered the enactment of CrPC (Amendment) Act, 1978 by which S. 433-A was introduced in the Code, a 'legislative fraud' or 'colourable exercise of legislative power' on the ground that S. 433-A was got introduced on the statute book by deception. Whether or not the connecting Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill ought to have been cleared was a matter left to the wisdom of the Lok Sabha. Merely because the Criminal Procedure Bill was made law and the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill was passed by the Rajya Sabha did not obligate the Lok Sabha to clear it. The Lok Sabha could have its own views on the proposed Indian Penal Code amendments. It may agree with the executive's policy reflected in the Bill, with or without modifications, or not at all. Merely because in the subsequent instructions issued by the letter of July 10, 1979 and the accompanying note the Joint Secretary had interlinked the two Bills, the Lok Sabha was under no obligation to adopt the measure as such representation could not operate as estoppel against it. If both the Bills had become law, it would have been justified to assert that in understanding or construing one legislation or the other, the scheme common to both must be kept in view and be permitted to interact. But where the linkage does not exist on account of the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill not having become law, S. 433-A cannot be read down to apply to only those classes of capital offences to which it would have applied had the said Bill been passed by the Lok Sabha in the terms in which it was approved by the Rajya Sabha. The language of S. 433-A is clear and unambiguous and does not call for extrinsic aid for its interpretation. Reading down or interpreting S. 433-A with the aid of the changes proposed by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill would tantamount to treating the provisions of the said Bill as forming part of the Indian Penal Code which is clearly impermissible. To put such an interpretation with the aid of such extrinsic material would result in violence to the plain language of S. 433-A. (Paras 8, 7, 9 and 10). Ashok Kumar v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 498: 1991 SCC (Cri) 845: AIR 1991 SC 1792: (1991) 3 Crimes 185: 1991 Cri LJ 2483.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, P.B. Sawant and S.C. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-1990]

[6332] — S. 433-A — Exclusion of Ss. 432 and 433(a) by S. 433-A, held, would not affect power under Arts. 72 and 161 — Where government's grant of power is guided by proper rules or schemes framed in exercise of power under Art. 72 or Art. 161, that will override Art. 433-A

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ. (Koshal, J. concurring)

Although power under Art. 72 or Art. 161, which is constitutional and that under Ss. 432 and 433(a), which is statutory, may be similar but they are not the same or identical. The two powers differ in their source, substance and strength. The constitutional power is untouchable and unapproachable and cannot suffer the vicissitudes of simple legislative processes. Therefore, S. 433-A cannot be invalidated as indirectly violative of Arts. 72 and 161. What the Code gives, it can take, and so, an embargo on Ss. 432 and 433(a) is within the legislative power of Parliament.

Undoubtedly, S. 433-A does not and cannot affect the pardon power under Art. 72 or 161 and therefore, notwithstanding S. 433-A the President and the Governor continue to exercise the power of commutation and release under the aforesaid articles. In exercising this power the Governor or the President act and must act not on their own judgment but in accordance with the aid and advice of their council of ministers. But all public power, including constitutional power, shall never be exercisable arbitrarily or mala fide and, ordinarily, guide-lines for fair and equal execution are guarantors of the valid play of power. The power being of the greatest moment cannot be a law unto itself but must be informed by the finer canons of constitutionalism spelt out in R.D. Shetty and Punnan Thomas cases. All power, whatever its source, must in its exercise anathematise arbitrariness, and obey standards and guide-lines intelligible and intelligent and integrated with the manifest purpose of the power. Hence the power to pardon, commute or remit is subject to the wholesome creed that guide-lines should govern the exercise even of Presidential power. The court, if it finds frequent misuse of this power may have to investigate the discrimination. Therefore, the proper thing to do is to make rules for its own guidance in the exercise of the pardon power keeping, or course, a large residuary power to meet special situations or sudden developments. This will exclude the vice of discrimination. Such rules of remission may be effective guide-lines of a recommendatory nature, helpful to government to release the prisoner by remitting the remaining term.

Until fresh rules are made in keeping with experience gathered, current social conditions and accepted penological thinking, the present remission and release schemes may usefully be taken as guide-lines under Arts. 72/161 and orders for release passed. The Government is not at fault if in some intractably savage delinquents, S. 433-A is itself treated as a guide-line for exercise of Arts. 72/161.

These observations are recommendatory to avoid a hiatus, but it is for Government, Central or State, to decide whether and why the current Remission Rules should not be survive until replaced by a more wholesome scheme.

Per Fazal Ali, J. (concurring)

There is no real inconsistency between S. 433-A and Arts. 72 and 161. In cases where S. 433-A applies, no question of reduction of sentence arises at all unless the President of India or the Governor chooses to exercise their wide powers under Art. 72 or Art. 161 of the Constitution which also have to be exercised according to sound legal principles. While exercising powers under Arts. 72 and 161, neither the President, who acts on the advice of the council of ministers, nor the State Government is likely to overlook the object, spirit and philosophy of S. 433-A so as to create a conflict between the legislative intent and the executive power. It cannot be doubted as a proposition of law that where a power is vested in a very high authority, it must be presumed that the said authority would act properly and carefully after an objective consideration of all the aspects of the matter. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6333] — S. 433-A — Reiterated, power of President of India under Art. 72 or of Governor under Art. 161, cannot be restricted by S. 433-A CrPC — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161. Samjuben Gordhanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 13 SCC 466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and T.S. Thakur, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2010]

[6334] — S. 433-A — Held, does not violate Art. 14 — Classification based on gravity of crime and need for deterrent punishment

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ.

There is an initial presumption of constitutionality of a legislation. Unless one reaches far beyond unwisdom to absurdity, irrationality, colourability and the like, the court must keep its hands off.

Deterrence is a valid punitive component of sentencing. So a measure of minimum incarceration of 14 years envisaged in S. 433-A for the gravest class of crimes like murder cannot be castigated as so outrageous as to be utterly arbitrary and violative of rational classification between lifers and lifers and as so blatantly barbarous as to be irrational enough to be struck down as ultra vires. Time has not, perhaps, come to exclude deterrence and even public denunciation altogether. Even the submission that no penal alibi justifies a prisoner being kept behind the bars if by his conduct, attainments and proven normalisation, he has become fit to be a free citizen, cannot spell unconstitutionality. Though the uniform infliction of a 14 year minimum on the transformed and the unkempt is an unkind disregard for redemption inside prison, to overcome the constitutional hurdle much more material, research results and specialist reports, are needed. Even for correctional therapy a long hospitalisation in prison may be needed.

The classification of persons included under S. 433-A is not based on an irrational differentia unrelated to the punitive end of social defence. The classification cannot be castigated as one capricious enough to attract the lethal consequence of Art. 13 read with Art. 14.

Per Fazal Ali, J.

Section 433-A is actually a social piece of legislation which by one stroke seeks to prevent dangerous criminals from repeating offences and by the other protects the society from harm and distress caused to innocent persons. The dominant purpose and avowed object of the legislature in introducing S. 433-A is to secure a deterrent punishment for heinous offences committed in a dastardly, brutal or cruel fashion or offences committed against the defence or security of the country and the section confines its application only to those categories of offences. As the Parliament by enacting S. 433-A has in its wisdom rejected the reformative character of punishment in respect of offences contemplated by it for the time being in view of the prevailing conditions in our country, courts cannot interfere in this sphere.

Per Koshal, J.

The argument based on the object of reformation having to be in the forefront of the legislative purposes behind punishment must be held to be fallacious. In the first place, there is no evidence that all or most of the criminals who are punished are amenable to reformation. Secondly, it is outside the scope of the inquiry undertaken by the court into the vires of the provisions contained in S. 433-A to find out the extent to which the object of reformation is sought to be achieved. Thirdly, under the Penal Code the severity of each punishment sanctioned by the law is directly proportional to seriousness of the offence for which it is awarded. This is strongly indicative of reformation not being the foremost object sought to be achieved by the penal provisions adopted by the legislature. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6335] — S. 433-A — Held, does not violate Art. 20(1)

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ. (Fazal Ali and Koshal, JJ. concurring)

Section 302, IPC or other like offence fixes the sentence to be life imprisonment and 14 years' imprisonment under S. 433-A is never heavier than life term. Remission vests no right to release when sentence is life imprisonment. No greater punishment is inflicted by S. 433-A than the law annexed originally to the crime. Nor is any vested right to remission cancelled by compulsory 14-year jail life, since a life sentence is a sentence for life. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6336] — S. 433-A — Held, falls under Entry of List III in Schedule VII to the constitution and within legislative competence of Parliament — Even assuming that State legislature has competence to enact such law under Entry 4 of List II in Sch. VII in case of repugnancy, Central law would prevail

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ (Fazal Ali and Koshal, JJ., concurring)

Parliament has competency to pass S. 433-A, CrPC since it falls under Entry 2 of List III as a cognate provision integral to remission and commutation, as it sets limits to the power conferred by the preceding two sections. Even if the State passed laws for remission and short-sentencing, in case of repugnancy S. 433-A would prevail. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6337] — S. 433-A — Held, overrides all other laws which reduce or remit the term of life sentence referred to under — Nature and scope of the non-obstante clause in S. 433-A — Absence of words 'or any other law in force' in the clause — Effect — Constitution of India, Arts. 246 and 254

The argument is that the non-obstante clause covers only S. 432 and significantly omits the common phraseology 'or any other law in force' and, therefore, all other provisions of law which reduce or remit the length of the incarceration prevail over S. 433-A. In particular, the Prison Rules made by the State under S. 59 of the Prisons Act and local short-sentencing laws will diminish the length of prison tenancy of all the lifers, despite the command of S. 433-A.

Held :

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ. (Fazal Ali and Koshal, JJ. concurring)

To read down S. 433-A to give overriding effect to the Remission Rules of the States would render the purposeful enactment of S. 433-A a futility. Therefore, notwithstanding the non-obstante clause in S. 433-A, the Remission Rules and like provisions stand excluded so far as 'lifers' punished for capital offences are concerned (except when applied under Arts. 72 and 161).

Moreover, a non-obstante clause cannot whittle down the wide import of the principal pArt. If the enacting part is clear, the non-obstante clause cannot cut down its scope.

Sentencing is a judicial function and whatever may be done in the matter of executing that sentence in the shape of remitting, commuting or otherwise abbreviating, the executive cannot alter the sentence itself. Remission cannot detract from the quantum or quality of sentence or its direct and side-effects except to the extent of entitling the prisoner to premature freedom if the deduction following upon the remission has that arithmetic effect. But in case of life imprisonment the term being indeterminate, remissions lead nowhere and do not entitle a prisoner to release. Imprisonment for life lasts until the last breath and whatever be the length of remission earned, the prisoner can claim release only if the remaining sentence is remitted by Government. Hence, the remission rules do not militate against S. 433-A; the petitioners must suffer 14 years' imprisonment till an order for release is made under S. 432 or Arts. 72/161 of the Constitution. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6338] — S. 433-A — Held, prospective in operation — Not applicable to person convicted by sentencing court before this provision came into force or to person acquitted by trial Court before its coming into force but convicted by appellate Court after its enforcement

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ. (Fazal Ali and Koshal, JJ. concurring)

Every person who has been convicted by the sentencing court before December 18, 1978, shall be entitled to the benefits accruing to him from the remission scheme or short-sentencing project as if S. 433-A did not stand in his way. So also if the sentence of death is commuted after December 18, 1978, such person shall not be released unless he spends 14 years in jail.

When A person is acquitted by trial Court before S. 433-A came into force and is convicted in appeal, it follows that the appellate Court has exercised its power in the place of the original court and the guilt, conviction and sentence must be substituted for and shall have retroactive effect from the date of judgment of the trial Court. The appellate conviction must relate back to the date of the trial Court's verdict and substitute it. In this view, even if the appellate Court reverses an earlier acquittal rendered before S. 433-A came into force but allows the appeal and convicts the accused, after S. 433-A came into force, such person will also be entitled to the benefit of the remission system prevailing prior to S. 433-A. An appeal is a continuation of an appellate judgment as a replacement of the original judgment.

It follows, by the same logic, that short-sentencing legislations, if any, will entitle a prisoner to claim release thereunder if his conviction by the court of first instance was before S. 433-A was brought into effect. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6339] — S. 433-A — Not applicable to persons convicted and sentenced by trial court prior to its coming into force. Suklal Hansda v. State of W.B., (1986) 4 SCC 433: 1986 SCC (Cri) 497.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, R.S. Pathak and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-1983]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, followed

[6340] — S. 433-A — Policy underlying — Prisoners covered by S. 433-A constitute a single class

One who could have been visited with the extreme punishment of death but on account of the sentencing court's generosity was sentenced to the lesser punishment of imprisonment for life and another who actually was sentenced to death but on account of executive generosity his sentence was commuted under S. 433(a) for imprisonment for life have been treated under S. 433-A as belonging to that class of prisoners who do not deserve to be released unless they have completed 14 years of actual incarceration. Thus the effect of S. 433-A is to restrict the exercise of power under Ss. 432 and 433 by the stipulation that the power will not be so exercised as would enable the two categories of convicts referred to in S. 433-A to freedom before they have completed 14 years of actual imprisonment. This is the legislative policy which is clearly discernible from the plain language of S. 433-A of the Code. Such prisoners constitute a single class and have, therefore, been subjected to the uniform requirement of suffering at least 14 years of internment. (Para 11). Ashok Kumar v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 498: 1991 SCC (Cri) 845: AIR 1991 SC 1792: (1991) 3 Crimes 185: 1991 Cri LJ 2483.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, P.B. Sawant and S.C. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-1990]

[6341] — S. 433-A — Prospective in operation — Convicts whose death sentence commuted to life imprisonment prior to December 18, 1978 when S. 433-A was introduced — Held, will be entitled to consideration for release by government as per rules or executive instruction then prevailing and mandatory minimum of 14 years' actual imprisonment under S. 433-A will not operate against them — Punjab Jail Manual, Para 516-B — Memorandum No. 1331-6JJ-71/39656 dated November 10, 1971 — Memorandum No. 403-6JJ-76/3456 dated January 30, 1976 — Letter No. 43/15783-JJ(2) dated February 27, 1984 — Prisons Act, 1894, S. 59. State of Haryana v. Ram Diya, (1990) 2 SCC 701: 1990 SCC (Cri) 426: AIR 1990 SC 1336: (1990) 3 Crimes 35.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-1990]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Sant Ram v. Union of India, decided on December 10, 1980, followed

[6342] — S. 433-A (ins. by Act 45 of 1978, S. 32) — Temporal applicability — Prospective or retrospective — Held, S. 433-A as well as short-sentencing policy would apply prospectively — Further held, remission rules/short-sentencing policies could be taken as guidelines for exercise of power under Arts. 72 and 161 of the Constitution, and in such eventuality such remission rules would override S. 433-A — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161

Section 433-A CrPC and the short-sentencing policy would apply prospectively. The life convicts who had been sentenced prior to 18-12-1978 i.e. date of enforcement of amendment would not come within the purview of the provisions of Section 433-A CrPC. Remission rules/short-sentencing policies could be taken as guidelines for exercise of power under Article 72 or 161 of the Constitution and in such an eventuality, remission rules will override Section 433-A CrPC. (Paras 22 and 39). State of Haryana v. Jagdish, (2010) 4 SCC 216.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and J.M. Panchal and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2010]

[6343] — Ss. 433-A, 432 and 433 — Prisoner is not entitled to be released under remission rules unless his sentence is remitted under S. 432 which is subject to limitation under S. 433-A — S. 433-A restricts exercise of powers under Ss. 432 and 433 but is itself subject to the overriding powers under Arts. 72/161 of the Constitution of India — Rajasthan Prisons (Shortening of Sentences) Rules, 1958

Where a person has been sentenced to imprisonment for life the remissions earned by him during his internment in prison under the relevant remission rules have a limited scope and must be confined to the scope and ambit of the said rules and the convict is bound in law to serve the entire life term in prison until the sentence is remitted under S. 432, in which case the remission would be subject to limitation of S. 433-A of the Code, or constitutional power has been exercised under Art. 72 and 161 of the Constitution. The constitutional power under Arts. 72 and 161 would override the statutory power contained in Ss. 432 and 433 and the limitation of S. 433-A of the Code as well as the power conferred by Ss. 54 and 55, IPC. This power has to be exercised by the President/Governor on the advice of his Council of Ministers. (Paras 15 and 16)

Though Arts. 72 and 161 make use of two expressions 'remissions' with regard to punishment and 'remit' in relation to sentence but it is not proper to express any opinion as to the content and amplitude of these two expressions in the abstract in the absence of a fact-situation. (Para 18)

The hypothetical question whether it was permissible in law to grant conditional premature release to a life convict even before completion of 14 years of actual imprisonment, which release would tantamount to the prisoner serving time for the purpose of S. 433-A need not be answered without being fully aware of the nature of conditions imposed for release. In each case, the question whether the grant pf conditional premature release answers the test laid down by the Supreme Court in Maru Ram case (SCC page 153, para 71) would depend on the nature of the conditions imposed and the circumstances in which the order is passed and is to be executed. No general observation can be made. (Para 19). Ashok Kumar v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 498: 1991 SCC (Cri) 845: AIR 1991 SC 1792: (1991) 3 Crimes 185: 1991 Cri LJ 2483.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, P.B. Sawant and S.C. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-1990]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Bhagirath v. Delhi Administration, (1985) 2 SCC 580: 1985 SCC (Cri) 280; Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 736, harmonised and affirmed

[6344] — Ss. 433-A, 432 and 433 — Life convicts — Premature release of — Government policy/instructions in force at the time of conviction by the trial court not applicable — Held, instead the policy decision or instructions which were in force at the time their case came up for consideration will apply — Remission does not vest right to be released prematurely — Rule or scheme made by the Government for early release of the life convict to be treated as guidelines for exercising clemency power under Art. 161 of the Constitution — Life convict already undergoing the sentence for a period mentioned in the remission scheme has only a right to have his case put up by the prison authorities before the authorities concerned for considering his case under Art. 161 — To ensure that the life convict does not loose benefit of any remission scheme, the date on which convict's case is required to be put up before the Governor should be treated as relevant date with reference to which date his case is to be considered — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161

By earning remissions a life convict does not acquire a right to be released prematurely. But if the Government has framed any rule or made a scheme for early release of such convicts then those rules or schemes will have to be treated as guidelines for exercising its power under Article 161 of the Constitution. (Para 4)

No life convict can validly contend that his case for premature release should be considered according to the government policy/instructions that were in force on the date on which he came to be convicted as he acquired a right to get remissions as declared and to be released accordingly. If according to the government policy/instructions in force at the relevant time the life convict has already undergone the sentence for a period mentioned in the policy decision/instructions, then the only right which he can be said to have acquired is the right to have his case put up by the prison authorities in time before the authorities concerned for considering exercise of power under Article 161 of the Constitution. Ordinarily, when an authority is called upon to exercise its powers that will have to be done consistently with the legal position and the government decision/instructions prevalent at that time. However, in order to see that a life convict does not lose any benefit available under the remission scheme which has to be regarded as the guideline, it would be just and proper to direct the State Government to treat the date on which his case is/was required to be put up before the Governor under Article 161 of the Constitution as the relevant date with reference to which their cases are to be considered. (Para 5). State of Haryana v. Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1193: AIR 1999 SC 3333.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-9-1999]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 3 SCR 440, relied on

Limited and dissented from in State of Haryana v. Bhup Singh, (2009) 2 SCC 268*

[6345] — Ss. 433-A, 433(a) and 5 — Life imprisonment under Army Act — Bar under S. 433-A on release before completion of fourteen years of imprisonment — Applicability — In absence of a specific provision in Army Act similar or contrary to S. 433-A, the bar under S. 433-A, held, applicable to a convict under the Army Act — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 — Army Act, 1950, Ss. 69, 177 and 179 to 190

The respondent was awarded life imprisonment and was dismissed from service by the General Court Martial after being tried for the offence under Section 302 IPC and under Section 69 of the Army Act, 1950. Although he had remained in actual custody for less than 14 years, the High Court, taking into consideration 4 years' remission earned by him in the jail, held that his period of imprisonment exceeded 14 years and, therefore, directed him to be released immediately.

Allowing the Central Government's appeal,

Held :

In the present case, the respondent was convicted under Section 69 of the Army Act, 1950 for the offence of murder. It is true that the Army Act is a special Act, inter alia, providing for investigation, trial and punishment for the offences mentioned therein by a special procedure. Section 177 empowers the Central Government to make rules in respect of prisons and prisoners. Sections 179 to 190 provide for pardon, remissions and suspension of the sentence. There is no specific provision similar to Section 433-A CrPC or contrary to it. Hence, Section 433-A CrPC would operate in the field and a prisoner who is undergoing sentence of imprisonment for life and is convicted for an offence for which death is one of the punishments provided by law or where a sentence of death imposed on a person has been commuted under Section 433 CrPC to imprisonment for life, has to serve at least 14 years of imprisonment excluding remissions earned in jail. As the respondent has not completed 14 years of actual imprisonment, the order passed by the High Court has to be quashed and set aside. (Paras 7 and 9). Union of India v. Sadha Singh, (1999) 8 SCC 375: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1442: AIR 1999 SC 3833.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-10-1999]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112, followed

Ajit Kumar v. Union of India, 1987 Supp SCC 493: 1988 SCC (Cri) 101, distinguished

[6346] — Ss. 433-A and 433(a) — Power to commute death sentence — Applicability of S. 433-A — Release of prisoners condemned to death, if amounts to interference with the due and proper course of justice — Constitution of India, Art. 161

The power to commute a sentence of death is independent of Section 433-A. The restriction under Section 433-A comes into operation only after the power under Section 433 is exercised. (Para 11)

The release of prisoners condemned to death in exercise of powers conferred under Section 433-A of the Code and Article 161 of the Constitution does not amount to interference with the due and proper course of justice, as the power of the High Court to pronounce upon the validity, propriety and correctness of the conviction and sentence remains unaffected. Powers under Article 161 can be exercised before, during or after trial. By reducing the sentence, the authority concerned does not thereby modify the judicial sentence. The fact that the sentence was remitted by the appropriate Government or that on account of certain remissions which he earned under the jail rules or under some order of general amnesty, the person was released earlier, does not affect disqualifications incurred, if any. (Para 10). State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi) v. Prem Raj, (2003) 7 SCC 121: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2003]

[6347] — Ss. 433-A, 432 and 433 — Life convicts — Remission of sentence — Power of State in respect of — Scope — Power of court to direct remission (instead of a direction to the State to consider or reconside a case for remission) — Unavailability of — In a writ petition filed by respondents questioning policy decision of State Government whereby their cases for remission were not considered, High Court by impugned judgment directing remission and hence their release — Unsustainability — Impugned judgment modified directing appellant State to consider cases of respondents in terms of Mahender Singh case, (2007) 13 SCC 606, having regard to the policy decision as was applicable on the date on which they were convicted and not on the basis of a subsequent policy decision — Constitution of India — Art. 226 (Paras 2, 4, 6 and 11). State of Haryana v. Bhup Singh, (2009) 2 SCC 268.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2008]

State of Haryana v. Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1193, dissented from

State of Haryana v. Mahender Singh, (2007) 13 SCC 606: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 221, applied

[6348] — Ss. 433-A, 432 and 433 — Remission of sentence (of life convicts) — Rules/Policy applicable — Date with respect to which to be determined — Held, right to ask for remission of sentence by a life convict would be under the law as was prevailing on the date on which the judgment of conviction and sentence was passed — Clarified, that date on which life convict's case is to be put up before Governor for clemency under Art. 161 is not the relevant date — Balwan case, (1999) 7 SCC 355 limited in this regard (Paras 7, 9 and 10). State of Haryana v. Bhup Singh, (2009) 2 SCC 268.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2008]

State of Haryana v. Balwan, (1999) 7 SCC 355: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1193, limited and dissented from

State of Haryana v. Mahender Singh, (2007) 13 SCC 606: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 221, considered [6349] — S. 433-A — Accused alleged to be a child not tried separately under Children Act — No material to establish accused a child at the commission of offence — Offence under Ss. 302/149 IPC, committed by a boy of 14 years age — Trial conducted by Sessions Court challenged before High Court on ground of it being not conducted by the Children's Court envisaged to be set up under S. 5 of Bihar Children Act, 1982 — In view of nothing being there to establish the existence of Children's Court when offence was committed or tried and in absence of any positive evidence to determine the age of offender so as to attract the provisions of said Act, Supreme Court finding it impossible to undertake such an inquiry at this stage — Extrapolation of age at the time of occurrence from age mentioned in judgment of Sessions Court not by itself enough — Rejecting the appeal, appellant permitted to approach State Government for commutation of sentence under S. 433-A, Criminal Procedure Code — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/149 — Bihar Children Act, 1982 (54 of 1982), Ss. 2(d) and 5 — Children Act, 1960, S. 24. Kalinath Munda v. State of Bihar, (2001) 9 SCC 228: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1568.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and Sujata V. Manohar, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-1996]

[6350] — S. 433-A — Terrorist activity — Accused belonging to a criminal gang — Murder of a person belonging to a rival gang within the campus of a government hospital — Indiscriminate firing resulting in death of two policemen also who were on guard duty there — Accused in his confession not stating that he himself had fired any gunshot and instead stating that he was asking his associate to go back from the hospital without firing — Held on facts, though accused committed act of terrorism but it is not a fit case for imposing death sentence — Hence death sentence awarded by Designated Court modified to imprisonment till rest of life — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

Accused 6, who has confessed his involvement in the crime including the crimes committed by him previously, has specifically stated that he asked his companion to go back from the hospital without firing. He has not confessed that he had fired any shot during the incident. In this set of circumstances, even though it is held that it was an act of terrorism committed by the accused, this would not be a fit case for imposing death sentence. However, considering the confessional statement as a whole coupled with the other evidence and the terror created by the accused, the conviction is confirmed but the sentence is modified from death penalty to imprisonment for life — till rest of life. Considering the heinous act of terrorism and brutal murder of two Police Constables who were on duty to guard the deceased, even though it is held that this would not be a fit case for imposing death sentence, it is directed that the accused will not be entitled to any commutation or premature release under Section 433-A of the Criminal Procedure Code, Prisoners

Act, Jail Manual or any other statute and the Rules made for the purpose of commutation and remissions. (Paras 65 and 69). Jayawant Dattatraya Suryarao v. State of Maharashtra, (2001) 10 SCC 109: AIR 2002 SC 143: 2002 Cri LJ 226.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-2001]

Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458: 2001 SCC (Cri) 735; Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 6 SCC 296: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095; Bhagirath v. Delhi Admn., (1985) 2 SCC 580: 1985 SCC (Cri) 280; Zahid Hussein v. State of W.B., (2001) 3 SCC 750: 2001 SCC (Cri) 631, relied on

Followed in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767

[6351] — S. 433-A — Premature release of prisoner — Though there is no right to be prematurely released but when Government has framed rules, scheme or guidelines in that behalf prisoner has right to have his case put up before prison authorities for considering the same in exercise of power under Art. 161 in accordance with those rules, schemes or guidelines — Though police report was called for on several points for considering prisoner's prayer for early release, police only reported about the prisoner's chances of committing crime again and on that basis prisoner's prayer rejected — Relevant aspects having not been taken into account, held, Government failed to consider the prisoner's case as per relevant rules and guidelines and hence its order rejecting prayer for premature release liable to be quashed — Constitution of India, Arts. 161, 21, 32 — W.B. Jail Code, Rr. 591(4) and 591(29)

Sub-rules (4) and (29) of Rule 591 of the West Bengal Rules relating to premature release of a life convict run as follows:

"(4) In considering the cases of prisoners submitted to it under sub-rules (1) and (2), the State Government shall take into consideration — (i) the circumstances in each case, (ii) the character of the convict's crime, (iii) his conduct in prison, and (iv) the probability of his reverting to criminal habits or instigating others to commit crime. If the State Government is satisfied that the prisoner can be released without any danger to the society or to the public it may take steps for issue of orders for his release under Section 401 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(29) Every case in which a convict, who has not received the benefit of any of the foregoing rules, is about to complete a period of 20 years of continued detention including remission earned, if any, shall be submitted three months before such completion by the Superintendent of the Jail in which the convict is for the time being detained, through the Inspector General, for orders of the State Government. If the convict's jail records during the last three years of his detention are found to be satisfactory the State Government may remit the remainder of his sentence."

All the "life convicts" in the present case have completed continued detention of 20 years including remission earned. To consider their prayer for premature release, a police report was called for on the following points:

(i) Whether the offence is an individual act of crime without affecting the society at large.

(ii) Whether there is any chance of future recurrence of committing crime.

(iii) Whether the convict has lost his potentiality in committing crime.

(iv) Whether there is any fruitful purpose of confining this convict any more.

(v) Socio-economic condition of the convict's family.

Though the police report did not cover all the above points, the prayer of "life convicts" for premature release was rejected mainly on the ground of objections by police about the chances of the petitioners committing crime again. They filed writ petitions before the Supreme Court alleging that though they are entitled to premature release under the relevant rules, their prayer was rejected by the Government on extraneous consideration.

Allowing the writ petitions,

Held :

Life sentence is nothing less than lifelong imprisonment and by earning remissions a life convict does not acquire a right to be released prematurely; but if the Government has framed any rule or made a scheme for early release of such convicts then those rules or schemes will have to be treated as guidelines for exercising its power under Article 161 of the Constitution and if according to the government policy/instructions in force at the relevant time the life convict has already undergone the sentence for the period mentioned in the policy/instructions, then the only right which a life convict can be said to have acquired is the right to have his case put up by the prison authorities in time before the authorities concerned for considering exercise of power under Article 161 of the Constitution. When an authority is called upon to exercise its powers under Article 161 of the Constitution that will have to be done consistently with the legal position and the government policy/instructions prevalent at that time. (Para 3)

In the present case the Government did not consider the prayer for premature release as per the Rules. Thus the orders of the Government suffer from infirmities and are liable to be quashed. (Para 7)

Therefore, all the orders of the Government are set aside and the authorities are directed to reconsider the cases for premature release of all "life convicts" who have approached the Supreme Court by filing the present writ petitions as per relevant rules/guidelines within a period of one month from the receipt of this order. (Para 8). Laxman Naskar v. Union of India, (2000) 2 SCC 595: 2000 SCC (Cri) 509: AIR 2000 SC 986: 2000 Cri LJ 1471.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-2-2000]

[6352] — S. 433-A — Any G.O. passed before the decision in Maru Ram must be construed according to that decision — Maru Ram case only clarified the law — Assumption in deciding Cri. A. No. 247 of 1981 not wrong. State of A.P. v. G.M. Morey, (1982) 2 SCC 436: 1982 SCC (Cri) 464: AIR 1982 SC 1195: 1982 Cri LJ 1571.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1982]

[6353] — S. 433-A — Punjab Government G.O. dt. 14-8-2002 — Interpretation — Dowry death — Sentence — Remission — Entitlement to — *Government Order dt. 14-8-2002 Pt. A related to "remission of balance of sentence of imprisonment for life as on 15-8-2002" — Benefit under Pt. A excluded in respect of "offences under S. 304-B IPC" — Pt. A of G.O., held, is wholly inapplicable in this case, where sentence was seven years' RI and not life imprisonment — Pt. B of G.O. relates to special remission of one year to prisoners who have been convicted by courts of criminal jurisdiction in State of Punjab and confined in jail as on 15-8-2002 — Exclusion list did not refer to offences under S. 304-B IPC — Hence, special remission of one year was available to convict sentenced to seven years' RI under S. 304-B IPC — Supreme Court, while disposing of the criminal appeal [*Dharam Chand case, (2008) 15 SCC 513], overlooked the fact that benefit of remission under Pt. B of G.O. was in fact available to Accused 1 and 2 — Judgment modified accordingly — Constitution of India, Art. 137 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B (Paras 8 to 10). Reshma Devi v. State of Punjab, (2010) 12 SCC 121.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2010]

Dharam Chand v. State of Punjab, (2008) 15 SCC 513: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1107, modified

[6354] — S. 433-A — Applicability — Respondent life convict, after serving 11½ years' imprisonment, filing writ petition before High Court seeking his premature release alleging delay in disposal of mercy petition — High Court after considering State's explanation for the delay passing order of respondent's release on bail with the condition that in case of dismissal of his mercy petition, he will have to surrender — Held, S. 433-A attracted — High Court's bail order not an interim order but a final order of release, and respondent, having served less than 14 years of imprisonment, not entitled to premature release. State of Punjab v. Babu Singh, (1991) 3 SCC 18: 1991 SCC (Cri) 562.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: L.M. Sharma and J.S. Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-4-1991]

[6355] — S. 433-A — Applicability — Does not cover those convicted prior to December 18, 1978 — G.O. dated October 30, 1980 providing that except the prisoners sentenced for life who are "governed by S. 433-A", all other convicts who have undergone a total sentence of five years as on October 31, 1980 to be released — Life convicts convicted before December 18, 1978 are not 'governed' by S. 433-A and if they have undergone five years' sentence, held would be entitled to be released by virtue of the G.O. — Andhra Pradesh G.O. Ms. No. 557, Home (Prisons C) Department dated October 30, 1980, Cl. (a). G.M. Morey v. Govt. of A.P., (1982) 2 SCC 433: 1982 SCC (Cri) 462: AIR 1982 SC 1163: 1982 Cri LJ 1249.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-3-1982]

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: (1981) 1 SCR 1196, explained & applied

[6356] — S. 433-A — Case prior to coming into force of — Yet looking at the fact and that all the accused had served more than 14 years imprisonment, Government should consider their release (Para 4). Jayaram Shiva Tagore v. State of Maharashtra, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 677: AIR 1991 SC 1735: 1991 Cri LJ 2192.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1990]

[6357] — S. 433-A — Claim of premature release on completion of minimum actual imprisonment prescribed under

No one has got a vested right to claim premature release on the ground that he has suffered the minimum actual imprisonment as prescribed under S. 433-A because a sentence of 'imprisonment for life' is incarceration until death, that is, for the remaining period of convicted person's actual life. State of Haryana v. Ram Diya, (1990) 2 SCC 701: 1990 SCC (Cri) 426: AIR 1990 SC 1336: (1990) 3 Crimes 35.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-1990]

[6358] — S. 433-A — Held, does not ban parole and does not exclude U.P. Prisoners' Release on Probation Act, 1938 (U.P. Act 8 of 1938)

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ. (Fazal Ali and Koshal, JJ. dissenting)

Section 433-A does not obligate continuous fourteen years in jail and so parole is permissible. The period spent in open jail, house detention, etc. or on parole is as much imprisonment for computation of 14 years under S. 433-A. The Prison Administration should liberalise parole to prevent pent-up tension and sex perversion.

The U.P. Prisoners' Release on Probation Act, 1938, will survive S. 433-A for two reasons. Firstly Government may resort to the statutory scheme, not qua law but as guide-line. Secondly, the expression 'prison' and 'imprisonment' must receive a wider connotation and include any place notified as such for detention purposes. Therefore, the U.P. Act enabling limited enlargement under licence will be effective as legislatively sanctioned imprisonment of a loose and liberal type and such licensed enlargement will be reckoned for the purpose of the 14-year duration. Similar other statutes and rules will enjoy similar efficacy. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6359] — S. 433-A — Not applicable where detention effected under S. 10-A of A.P. Borstal Act, 1925. State of A.P. v. Vallabhapuram Ravi, (1984) 4 SCC 410: 1984 SCC (Cri) 635: AIR 1985 SC 870.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-1984]

[6360] — S. 433-A — Life convict transferred to Borstal School under S. 10-A — Held, entitled to be released after serving the maximum period of detention of 5 years or on his attaining 23 years as prescribed under S. 8 — He cannot thereafter be retransferred to serve the remaining period of sentence of imprisonment — S. 433-A, CrPC would not apply in case of release of such a detenu — Words 'as if' and "the whole or any part of the unexpired residue of his sentence" — Constitution of India, Art. 254 and Schedule VI, List III, Entries 2 and 4 — Andhra Pradesh Borstal Schools Act, 1925 (5 of 1926), Ss. 10-A and 8

Per Venkataramiah, J.

A person detained in a Borstal School under S. 10-A has to be released after he has served the full term 5 years of detention or on his completing 23 years of age. He cannot be retransferred thereafter to prison. Such a retransfer would defeat the very object and purpose of the Act of providing for detention of young offenders in Borstal School for the purpose of reformation and rehabilitation of such offenders. The words 'as if' appearing in the second sentence in S. 10-A make it a deeming provision which should be carried to its logical end. Although there is some apparent contradiction between the words 'as if' and the words "the whole or any part of the unexpired residue of his sentence" in S. 10-A, having regard to the object of the legislation and the meaning of the words 'as if', all the privileges available to an offender detained under S. 8 should be extended to a prisoner who is directed to be transferred to a Borstal School under S. 10-A. Apart from S. 8, which prescribes the maximum period of detention, there are other provisions as well, such as Ss. 13-A, 19-C, 21-A, which are applicable to a person transferred under S. 10-A. Section 433-A, CrPC would not operate where a person is detained by an order under S. 10-A of the Act. Section 433-A of the Code was introduced not to set at naught provisions like S. 10-A of the Act which dealt with a special class of offenders like adolescent offenders but only to regulate capricious and arbitrary decisions under S. 432 of the Code and the remission rules sometimes reducing the sentence of imprisonment for life imposed on persons who had been convicted of capital offences but had been sentenced to imprisonment for life to short periods like five to six years.

Section 14 is the only provision in the Act which authorises the State Government to shift a person who is in a Borstal School to a prison but in that case also the period of imprisonment that can be substituted by the State Government in the place of the period of detention cannot exceed five years in any event. Such shifting is possible only where there is an adverse report against him by the Superintendent of the Borstal School and in absence of such a report, as in the present case, there is no legal way in which he can be sent back to prison to satisfy the requirements of S. 433-A of the Code.

The Act which is a local law prevails on all the provisions of the Code including S. 433-A as there is no provision which excludes the operation of the Act which deals with Borstal institutions. Although in view of the non obstante clause in S. 433-A, the remission rules which are traceable to S. 432 cannot prevail over S. 433-A; but in the instant case reliance is placed on an independent statute which specially deals with the case of a small section of persons, namely adolescent offenders, traceable to the legislative power derived from the expressions 'prisons' and 'Borstal institutions' in Entry 4 of the State List. If in the case of such offenders, the State Government makes an order under S. 10-A of the Act directing their detention in a Borstal School, then they cease to be persons undergoing imprisonment for life but become detenus in a Borstal School. Section 433-A refers to a person who is actually undergoing imprisonment. But detention ordered under the Act is not imprisonment and Borstal School is not a prison. Merely because S. 5 of the Act has made the Prisons Act, 1894 and Prisoners Act, 1900 applicable to Borstal School regarding matters not otherwise provided for, that does not make it a prisoner its inmates prisoners.

Therefore, the argument that by reason of Art. 254 of the Constitution, the Act should yield in favour of a later Central legislation which is repugnant to the Act would not arise because there would be no such repugnancy at all. If S. 433-A of the Code is kept out of the way, S. 10-A of the Act should be interpreted in the same way in which it was understood all along. So construed a person who is detained under S. 10-A of the Act in a Borstal School would have to be released on his attaining 23 years of age.

Per Mukharji, J.

In the present case the expression used by the State Government in its order under S. 10-A reads "to serve the unexpired portion of the sentence till he attains the age of 23". If literally read as a consequence of the deeming provision, one should deem the above expression to be the sentence passed by the court at the time of passing the original sentence instead of the one actually passed. The anomaly is obvious and should be avoided either by altering the language of S. 10-A or the State Government be more specific while passing any order under S. 10-A. State of A.P. v. Vallabhapuram Ravi, (1984) 4 SCC 410: 1984 SCC (Cri) 635: AIR 1985 SC 870.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-1984]

Kunwar Bahadur v. State of U.P., 1980 Supp SCC339: 1981 SCC (Cri) 275, relied on

Bondili Jagannath Singh v. Government of A.P., (1983) 2 APLJ 262; In re T. Munirathnam Reddi, AIR 1955Andh 118: 1955 Andh WR 53: 1955 Cri LJ 917; In re Krishnaswami,AIR 1949 Mad 109 (I): ILR 1949 Mad 354: (1948) 2 Mad LJ 115: 50Cri LJ 115 and In re Periaswami Asari, AIR 1949 Mad 223: (1948) 2 Mad LJ 452: 61 Mad LW 777: 50 Cri LJ 240, approved

In re Ganpati, 1983 Cri LJ 509: 1982 Mad LW (Cri) 217, overruled

Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107:1981 SCC (Cri) 112, considered

[6361] — S. 433-A — 'Imprisonment for life' — Means imprisonment for the full span of life — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 57 and 54

The expression 'imprisonment for life' must be read in the context of S. 45, IPC. So read it would ordinarily mean imprisonment for the full or complete span of life. The provision in S. 57 that imprisonment for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to imprisonment for 20 years is for the purpose of working out the fraction of the terms of punishment. If such a provision had not been made it would have been impossible to work out the fraction of an indefinite term. (Para 12). Ashok Kumar v. Union of India, (1991) 3 SCC 498: 1991 SCC (Cri) 845: AIR 1991 SC 1792: (1991) 3 Crimes 185: 1991 Cri LJ 2483.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, P.B. Sawant and S.C. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-1990]

Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 3 SCR 440: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 736, affirmed

Followed in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767

[6362] — Ss. 433-A and 5 — Rules regarding remission of sentence are special law but S. 433-A being a 'specific provision to the contrary' would prevail over that special law by virtue of S. 5 — [Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Bhagwati and Krishna Iyer, JJ. (Fazal Ali and Koshal, JJ. concurring)]. Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112: AIR 1980 SC 2147: (1981) 1 SCR 1196.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[1], V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2] and A.D. Koshal[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[6363] — Ss. 433-A and 57 — Sentence of "imprisonment for life" — Ordinarily means sentence of imprisonment for whole of the remaining period of the convicted person's natural life — Rules framed under Prisons Rules do not substitute a lesser sentence for a sentence for life — For release of a prisoner on expiry of a particular term, an appropriate order of the Government is necessary (Paras 20 to 23). Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 6 SCC 296: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095: AIR 2001 SC 2342.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2001]

Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 3 SCC 745: 1979 SCC (Cri) 848; Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458; State of M.P. v. Ratan Singh, (1976) 3 SCC 470: 1976 SCC (Cri) 428; Maru Ram v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 107: 1981 SCC (Cri) 112; Laxman Naskar v. State of W.B., (2000) 7 SCC 626: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1431, relied on

— S. 434 See Ss. 366, 415, 433, 434 & 435

See also Ss. 432 and 434

See also Ss. 433, 433-A & 434 and 413, 414 & 418

See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368, 371

— S. 435 See Ss. 366, 415, 433, 434 & 435

— Ch. XXXIII (Ss. 436 to 450) See S. 167(2) proviso and Ch. XXXIII (Ss. 436 to 450)

— S. 436 See also S. 496, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1272 et. seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 436 See Ss. 2(c) and 436

See also Ss. 167(5) [as amended by S. 4 of W.B. Act 24 of 1988], 436, 437, 204, 205, 206 and 161

See also Ss. 482, 436 and 81

[6364] — S. 436 — Bail — Principles for granting — Should not ordinarily be refused

The basic rule is to grant bail except where there are circumstances suggestive of fleeing from justice or thwarting the course of justice or creating other troubles in the shape of repeating offences, or intimidating witnesses and the like. The gravity of the offence involved which is likely to induce the petitioner to avoid the course of justice as well as the heinousness of the crime should also be taken into account by the Court. Any possibility of absconding or evasion or other abuse can be taken care of by a direction that the petitioner should report himself before the police station once every fortnight. State of Rajasthan v. Balchand, (1977) 4 SCC 308: 1977 SCC (Cri) 594: AIR 1977 SC 2447: 1978 Cri LJ 195.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-1977]

[6365] — Ss. 436, 2, 81 and Sch. I — Right to claim bail in bailable offences — Nature and scope of — Held, the said right is an absolute and indefeasible right — Therefore, if accused is prepared, court/police officer concerned is bound to release him on bail — In bailable offences there is no question of discretion in granting bail as the words of S. 436 are imperative

The respondent filed a complaint case against the appellant-accused on the ground that the appellant-accused gave a defamatory interview against him on a TV channel. When the appellant-accused approached the Magistrate for grant of bail, the same was granted the very same day without hearing the respondent complainant by noticing that the offences alleged to have been committed were bailable offences under Sections 499 and 500 IPC. The High Court in a Section 482 CrPC petition filed by the respondent complainant cancelled the bail of the appellant-accused on the ground that the principles of natural justice had not been followed in as much as the complainant was not heard on the issue of grant of bail. Aggrieved thereagainst, the appellant-accused invoked the remedy under Article 136 of the Constitution of India.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The bail granted to the appellant for alleged commission of bailable offence could not have been cancelled by the High Court on the ground that the respondent complainant was not heard by the Magistrate while granting bail and that the principles of natural justice were violated. Principles of natural justice are not a "mantra" to be applied in a vacuum in all cases. The question as to what extent, the principles of natural justice are required to be complied with, will depend upon the facts of the case. They are not required to be complied with when it will lead to an empty formality. Therefore, the order of the High Court cancelling the bail granted to the appellant is hereby set aside and the order passed by the Magistrate is restored. (Paras 19 to 21)

The right to claim bail granted by Section 436 CrPC in a bailable offence is an absolute and indefeasible right. In bailable offences there is no question of discretion in granting bail as the words of Section 436 are imperative. As soon as it appears that the accused person is prepared to give bail, the police officer or the court before whom he offers to give bail, is bound to release him on such terms as to bail as may appear to the officer or the court to be reasonable. It would even be open to the officer or the court to discharge such person on his executing a bond as provided in Section 436 instead of taking bail from him. (Paras 10 and 9)

The only choice available to the officer or the court is as between taking a simple recognizance of the accused and demanding security with surety. The persons contemplated by Section 436 cannot be taken into custody unless they are unable or willing (sic unwilling) to offer bail or to execute personal bonds. There is no manner of doubt that bail in a bailable offence can be claimed by the accused as of right and the officer or the court, as the case may be, is bound to release the accused on bail if he is willing to abide by reasonable conditions which may be imposed on him. (Para 10). Rasiklal v. Kishore, (2009) 4 SCC 446.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-2009]

State Bank of Patiala v. S.K. Sharma, (1996) 3 SCC 364: 1996 SCC (L&S) 717; Karnataka SRTC v. S.G. Kotturappa, (2005) 3 SCC 409: 2005 SCC (L&S) 484, relied on

[6366] — Ss. 436, 389, 437, 441 and 445 — Bail includes with or without sureties — Amount of bond court should insist upon — Propriety of demanding large sums from those of ordinary means — Propriety of insisting that surety be from the same district

The Court, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, can enlarge on his own bond without sureties, a person undergoing incarceration for a non-bailable offence either as under-trial or as convict who has appealed or sought special leave.

The power of the Supreme Court to enlarge a person during the pendency of the Special Leave Petition or of an appeal is very wide under Or. 21, R. 27. And these guidelines, which prevail with the Supreme Court when granting suspension of sentence must, in a broad sense, have relevance to what the Code indicates except where special circumstances call for a different course. Bearing in mind the need for liberal interpretation in areas of social justice, individual freedom and indigent's rights, it must be held that bail covers both release on one's own bond with or without surety.

When sureties should be demanded and what sum should be insisted upon are dependent on variables. It shocks one's conscience to ask a mason to furnish sureties for Rs 10,000.

The law does not prescribe sureties from outside. The law does not prescribe geographical discrimination implicit in asking for sureties from the Court district. Article 14 of the Constitution protects all Indians qua Indians within the territory of India. Moti Ram v. State of M.P., (1978) 4 SCC 47: 1978 SCC (Cri) 485: AIR 1978 SC 1594: 1978 Cri LJ 1703.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-8-1978]

[6367] — Ss. 436, 2, 81 and Sch. I — Terms/Conditions (security and surety) of bail in bailable offence — Extent of discretion available — Held, only choice available to the officer or the court concerned is as between taking a simple recognizance of the accused and demanding security with surety

The only choice available to the officer or the court is as between taking a simple recognizance of the accused and demanding security with surety. The persons contemplated by Section 436 cannot be taken into custody unless they are unable or willing (sic unwilling) to offer bail or to execute personal bonds. There is no manner of doubt that bail in a bailable offence can be claimed by the accused as of right and the officer or the court, as the case may be, is bound to release the accused on bail if he is willing to abide by reasonable conditions which may be imposed on him. (Para 10). Rasiklal v. Kishore, (2009) 4 SCC 446.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-2009]

State Bank of Patiala v. S.K. Sharma, (1996) 3 SCC 364: 1996 SCC (L&S) 717; Karnataka SRTC v. S.G. Kotturappa, (2005) 3 SCC 409: 2005 SCC (L&S) 484, relied on

[6368] — Ss. 436 to 450 — Bail — Principles and considerations for granting or refusing

The granting or refusing of bail is in the discretion of the court and the following guidelines have been laid down by the Supreme Court for the exercise of the discretion. Deprivation of freedom by refusal of bail is not for punitive purposes but for the bifocal interests of justice. The nature of the charge is a vital factor and the nature of the evidence is also pertinent. The severity of the punishment to which the accused may be liable if convicted also bears upon the issue. Another relevant factor is whether the course of justice would be thwarted by him who seeks the benignant jurisdiction of the Court to be freed for the time being. The Court has also to consider the likelihood of the applicant interfering with the witnesses for the prosecution or otherwise polluting the process of justice. It is rational to enquire into the antecedents of the man who is applying for bail to find out whether he has a bad record, particularly a record which suggests that he is likely to commit serious offences while on bail. However, it makes sense to assume that a man on bail has a better chance to prepare or present his case than one remanded into custody. If public justice is to be promoted, mechanical detention should be demoted. The considerable public expense in keeping in custody where no danger of disappearance or disturbance can arise, is not a negligible consideration. Equally important is the deplorable condition, verging on the inhuman, of our sub-jails, that the unrewarding cruelty and expensive custody of avoidable incarceration makes refusal of bail unreasonable and a policy favouring release justly sensible.

Police exaggerations of prospective misconduct of the accused if enlarged must be soberly sized up lest danger of excesses and injustice creep subtly into the discretionary curial technique. Bad record and police prediction of criminal prospects to invalidate the bail plea are admissible in principle but shall not stampede the Court into a complacent refusal. Further, there are cases where parties suffer 3-4 years in prison before their case comes up for trial which may sometimes end in acquittal and therefore, a circumstance of some consequence, when considering a motion for bail is the period in prison already spent and the prospect of the appeal being delayed for hearing. If the State takes up a flexible attitude it may be possible to permit long spells of parole under controlled conditions so that fear, that the full freedom if bailed out might be abused, may be eliminated. At the same time, heavy bails from poor men is obviously wrong.

The ground for denial of provisional release becomes weaker when the fact stares us in the face that a fair finding — if that be so — of innocence has been recorded by one Court.

In the present case, it is a fact that the petitioners have been acquitted along with others in the trial Court although that acquittal has been set aside in the High Court. There is no suggestion that during the time they were on bail — and they were on bail during the pendency of the trial and when the appeal was pending in the High Court — they abused the trust reposed by the Court allowing them to be at large. Moreover, four of the fellow-accused have already been enlarged on bail by this Court and an attempted cancellation thereof has been rebuffed. The petitioners have suffered imprisonment around a year and a reasonable prediction of the time of bearing of the appeal may take us to a few years ahead. The magistrate's report of the conduct of the petitioners while in jail is not uncomplimentary. The potentiality of community peace being disturbed should, however, be obviated by proper safeguards, because the village is factious and the petitioners are activists in one faction. Such safeguards could be imposed by allowing them to enter the village on one day in a week only after report to the police and compelling them to report to the police when they are departing from the village the next day. Therefore, the petitioners should be allowed to be enlarged on bail on their own bond to appear and receive sentence in the event of adverse verdict from this Court. Gudikanti Narasimhulu v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of A.P., (1978) 1 SCC 240: 1978 SCC (Cri) 115: AIR 1978 SC 429: 1978 Cri LJ 502.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, J. [Date of decision: 6-12-1977]

[6369] — Ss. 436, 437 and 439 — Bail — Nature and exercise of judicial discretion in the exercise of — Principles and considerations before the Court — CrPC, 1898, Ss. 496 to 502

The petitioners should be granted bail. All the petitioners are the entire male members of a family and all of them are in jail. Their defence in the Supreme Court may therefore be jeopardised. Nothing was indicated that during the five years when the petitioners had been out of prison pending appeal in the High Court there had been any conduct on their part suggestive of disturbing the peace of the locality, threatening any one in the village or otherwise thwarting the life of the community or the course of justice. Moreover, when the High Court entertained the appeal the State did not press for their custody for apprehended abscondence or menace to justice. The episode of murder itself is attributed as the outcome of a faction fight or feud between the two clans in the village. The petitioners, however, must be subjected to two conditions, namely, that they shall not enter the village which is alleged to be the hotbed of clan clashes and they should report at the local police station once every week. Babu Singh v. State of U.P., (1978) 1 SCC 579: 1978 SCC (Cri) 133: AIR 1978 SC 527: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 465: (1978) 2 SCR 777: 1978 Cri LJ 651.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-1-1978]

[6370] — Ss. 436, 437 and 439 — Grant of bail by Magistrate — Interference by High Court — When warranted

It is ordinarily for the Magistrate to consider as to whether a case for grant of bail has been made out or not, the High Court, therefore, may not be correct in observing, that valid grounds exist for granting bail to the petitioners. Similarly, the High Court should not have, for all intent and purport, issued the direction for grant of exemption from personal appearance. Such a matter undoubtedly shall be left for consideration before the Magistrate. The Magistrate is expected to exercise his jurisdiction in a fair and judicious manner. The impugned directions are set aside and the matters are remitted to the High Court for consideration of the application filed before it by the parties afresh on merit. (Paras 43 and 44)

The jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 482 is limited. It can interfere with an order of summoning an accused by the Magistrate inter alia in the event if a finding is arrived at that the accused were being prosecuted mala fide and/or even if the allegations contained in the FIR are given face value and taken to be correct in their entirety, no case has been made out for taking cognizance of the offence. It is furthermore made clear that the parties hereto may approach the High Court in Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 518 of 2008. Allegations of mala fide made against the State may also be gone into. The High Court can pass any such interim order as it may think fit and proper. (Paras 32, 34 and 41). Manoj Narain Agrawal v. Shashi Agrawal, (2009) 6 SCC 385.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-4-2009]

Arun Shankar Shukla v. State of U.P., (1999) 6 SCC 146: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1076; Hamida v. Rashid, (2008) 1 SCC 474: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 234; State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426; Ruchi Agarwal v. Amit Kumar Agrawal, (2005) 3 SCC 299: 2005 SCC (Cri) 719, relied on [6371] — S. 436 — Right to bail — Delay in trial should not affect — Undertrial prisoner — Trial courts' slackness in accelerating the process during trial stage even where accused are languishing in prisons for long years as undertrials deprecated — Accused continuing in jail as undertrial for more than seven years due to trial court's insensitivity to take swift action by adopting appropriate trial procedures — Trial court adopting an archaic practice during evidence-taking stage by disposing of objections raised by defence regarding admissibility of some documents after hearing both the parties at length and then stopping the trial for long just to enable the defence to challenge that order before High Court — Bail not granted to accused — Held, no further time need be granted to trial court to complete the trial — It is for the trial court to complete it as early as possible — But accused should not be deprived of his right to move for bail on account of the delay — Bail application would be disposed of by the court concerned on its own merits — Constitution of India — Art. 21. Bipin Shantilal Panchal v. State of Gujarat, (2001) 3 SCC 1: 2001 SCC (Cri) 417: AIR 2001 SC 1158: 2001 Cri LJ 1254.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-2001]

[6372] — S. 436 — Bail — Juvenile accused — On a prima facie satisfaction, that the accused was a juvenile on the date of the offence direction issued to release him on bail subject to further enquiry regarding his age — Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2000, S. 7-A (Paras 3 and 4). Abdul Rab v. State of Bihar, (2008) 17 SCC 475.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2008]

[6373] — Ss. 436, 437, 440, 441 and 442 — Speedy trial — Cases relating to various types of offences pending in criminal courts for long periods — Undertrials languishing in jail for long periods directed to be released on conditions laid down in the order — Guidelines and directions for disposal of other category of cases, whether instituted on police report or private complaint, also issued — These directions shall be valid for all the States and Union Territories and would apply not only to pending cases but also to future cases — However, they are not applicable to certain class of cases mentioned in the order — But they should be tried on a priority basis — Courts trying criminal cases directed to take appropriate action without any delay — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 32. Common Cause, A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 4 SCC 33: 1996 SCC (Cri) 589: AIR 1996 SC 1619.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Jeevan Reddy and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-1996]

Partly overruled in P. Ramachandra Rao v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578

See also State v. Dr. Narayan Waman Nerukar, (2002) 7 SCC 6

Held overruled in Shankerlal v. State of Rajasthan, (2005) 12 SCC 330

Clarified in Supdt. of Police, Karnataka Lokayukta v. B. Srinivas, (2008) 8 SCC 580

[6374] — Ss. 436 and 437 — Bail — Order granting or refusing, should not normally contain elaborate reasoning in support of the order

As embedded in the criminal jurisprudence obtaining in this country, courts exercising bail jurisdiction normally do and should refrain from indulging in elaborate reasoning in their orders in justification of grant or non-grant of bail. For, in that manner, the principle of "presumption of innocence of an accused" gets jeopardized; and the structural principle of "not guilty till proved guilty" gets destroyed, even though all sane elements have always understood that such views are tentative and not final, so as to affect the merit of the matter. Kashi Nath Roy v. State of Bihar, (1996) 4 SCC 539: 1996 SCC (Cri) 789: AIR 1996 SC 3240.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-4-1996]

[6375] — Ss. 436, 437, 438, 439 and 482 — Arrest — When warranted — Held, not a must in all cases of cognizable offences — Police officer in such cases must be guided by and act according to the principles laid down in Joginder Kumar case, (1994) 4 SCC 260 — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 22 (Para 8). Lal Kamlendra Pratap Singh v. State of U.P., (2009) 4 SCC 437.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-2009]

Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 260: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1172, applied

Amarawati v. State of U.P., 2005 Cri LJ 755 (All), approved

[6376] — Ss. 436, 437, 438, 439 and 482 — Interim bail pending disposal of bail application — Grant of — Principles to be followed — Absence of provision for anticipatory bail — Effect — In State of U.P. where State Amendment had omitted S. 438, held, judgment of Allahabad High Court in Amarawati case, 2005 Cri LJ 755 (All), to be followed by all courts in letter and spirit — Copy of instant judgment directed to be sent to Registrar General of Allahabad High Court for onward circulation to Judges of High Court and all District Judges in the State — In present case, considering that charge-sheet had been filed and cognizance had been taken, High Court's refusal to quash FIR filed against appellant for committing offences under Ss. 467, 468, 471, 420, 409 and 218 IPC, not interfered with — Directions, however, issued to trial court to grant interim bail to appellant pending final disposal of his bail application if so applied for and deemed fit — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 467, 468, 471, 420, 409 and 218 (Paras 7 to 10). Lal Kamlendra Pratap Singh v. State of U.P., (2009) 4 SCC 437.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-2009]

Amarawati v. State of U.P., 2005 Cri LJ 755 (All), approved and directed to be followed in letter and spirit

[6377] — Ss. 436, 437, 440 and 441 — Bail system as prevalent oppressive and discriminatory against the poor — Courts and the police must abandon the antiquated practice of release only against bond with sureties and permit release on personal bond — Other possible considerations for such pre-trial release pointed out — Factors for determining accused's roots in the community listed

Per Bhagwati, J.

It is a travesty of justice that the poor, because the bail procedure is beyond their meagre means, have to suffer long years in pre-trial detention. Risk of monetary loss is not the only deterrent against fleeing from justice. The antiquated procedure perpetuated by the new Code which insists on a bond with a monetary obligation invariably supported by sureties whose solvency must be proved, operates very harshly against the poor, being beyond their means. They are exploited, suffer deprivation and losses and are unable to defend themselves. The discriminatory nature of the bail system becomes all the more acute by reason of the mechanical way in which it is customarily operated. Hence to eliminate the evil effects of poverty and assure fair and just treatment to the poor in the administration of justice, it is imperative that the bail system should be thoroughly reformed so that it should be possible for the poor, as easily as the rich, to obtain pre-trial release without jeopardising the interests of justice.

Parliament would do well to consider whether it would not be more consonant with the ethos of our Constitution that instead of risk of financial loss, other relevant considerations such as family ties roots in the community, job security, membership of stable organisations etc., should be the determinative factors in grant of bail and the accused should in appropriate cases be released on his personal bond without monetary obligation, subject to penalty in case of breach.

But even under the law as it stands today the courts must abandon the antiquated concept under which pre-trial release is ordered only against bail with sureties. The new insight into the subject of pre-trial release which has been developed in socially advanced countries and particularly the United States should now inform the decisions of Indian courts in regard to pre-trial release. To determine whether the accused has his roots in the community several factors may be considered (see para 4). If the Court is satisfied on a consideration of such factors that the accused has his ties in the community and there is no substantial risk of non-appearance, the accused may, as far as possible, be released on his personal bond. Of course, if facts are brought to the notice of the court which go to show that having regard to the condition and background of the accused his previous record and the nature and circumstances of the offence there may be a substantial risk of his non-appearance at the trial, the court may not release the accused on his personal bond and may insist on bail with sureties.

But even while releasing the accused on personal bond it is necessary to caution the court that the amount of the bond which it fixes should not be based merely on the nature of the charge. The decision as regards the amount of the bond should be an individualised decision depending on the individual financial circumstances of the accused and the probability of his absconding. Moreover when the accused is released on his personal bond, it would be very harsh and oppressive if he is required to satisfy the court regarding his solvency. An enquiry into his solvency can become a source of great harassment to him and often results in denial of bail and deprivation of liberty and should not, therefore, be insisted upon as a condition of acceptance of the personal bond.

What has been stated here in regard to the court must apply equally in relation to the police while granting bail.

On the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case all prisoners named in the newspaper should be released forthwith on their personal bond. Hussainara Khatoon (I) v. State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 81: 1980 SCC (Cri) 23: AIR 1979 SC 1360 (Order: 1979 Cri LJ 1036: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 76.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati[1], R.S. Pathak[2] and A.D. Koshal[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-1979]

[6378] — S. 436 — Evasion of duty or prohibitions — Offence under S. 135(1)(ii), Customs Act, 1962 — Nature of — Bailable or not — Held, offence committed under amended S. 135(1)(ii) is a bailable offence — Hence, Magistrate could grant bail — Customs Act, 1962, S. 135(1)(ii). Avinash Bhosale v. Union of India, (2007) 14 SCC 325.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.P. Naolekar and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2007]

[6379] — S. 436 — Bail — Fodder scam in Bihar — Petitioner a former Chief Minister — Where charge-sheet already submitted and no investigation pending against him, bail granted to Dr. Jagannath Mishra subject to certain conditions. Jagannath Mishra (Dr.) v. CBI, (1998) 9 SCC 611.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee, S.P. Kurdukar and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-10-1997]

[6380] — S. 436 — Bail application meriting grant of bail — Rejection of — If by itself an act of judicial misconduct — Judicial acts of such nature — Grant of bail — Rejection of first bail application followed by grant of bail on second application which contained no fresh grounds — In such circumstances, even if it was found that in the first instance itself the bail ought to have been granted, in the absence of material to reflect on the Judge's reputation, integrity, good faith or devotion to duty or any corrupt motive on his part, omission to grant bail in the first instance, held would not constitute misconduct

The appellant was a judicial officer. In a departmental enquiry, he was found guilty of certain charges and consequently, his services were terminated. The charges, inter alia, pertained to orders of bail granted in certain cases. In two of these cases, according to the enquiry officer, bail ought to have been granted on the very first application, but it was granted on the second application although the second application contained no fresh grounds. The appellant challenged unsuccessfully before the High Court his termination on the ground that none of the acts he was charged of, constituted mis- conuct.

Allowing his appeal,

Held :

Inferences have been drawn by the enquiry officer only on the basis that either the applications had been rejected at earlier stage for grant of bail or such applications ought to have been granted at the first stage itself. However, no specific material was brought on record to show or prove that there were any mala fide or extraneous reasons on the part of the appellant in passing the orders. (Para 4)

That there was possibility on a given set of facts to arrive at a different conclusion is no ground to indict a judicial officer for taking one view and that too for alleged misconduct for that reason alone. The enquiry officer has not found any other material, which would reflect on his reputation or integrity or good faith or devotion to duty or that he had been actuated by any corrupt motive. At best, he might say that the view taken by the appellant was not proper or correct. (Para 7). P.C. Joshi v. State of U.P., (2001) 6 SCC 491: 2001 SCC (L&S) 984: AIR 2001 SC 2788.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Doraiswamy Raju, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-2001]

Union of India v. A.N. Saxena, (1992) 3 SCC 124: 1992 SCC (L&S) 861: (1992) 21 ATC 670; Union of India v. K.K. Dhawan, (1993) 2 SCC 56: 1993 SCC (L&S) 325: (1993) 24 ATC 1; Ishwar Chand Jain v. High Court of Punjab & Haryana, (1988) 3 SCC 370: 1988 SCC (L&S) 797: 1988 Supp (1) SCR 396, followed

[6381] — Ss. 436, 437 and 439 — Bail — Second application for bail when first is dismissed, held, is maintainable

An order refusing an application for bail does not necessarily preclude another on a later occasion giving more materials, further developments and different considerations. While the Court should set store by the circumstance that the bail application was once rejected it cannot be said that the Court is barred from second consideration at a later stage. Babu Singh v. State of U.P., (1978) 1 SCC 579: 1978 SCC (Cri) 133: AIR 1978 SC 527: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 465: (1978) 2 SCR 777: 1978 Cri LJ 651.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-1-1978]

[6382] — Ss. 436, 437 and 439 — Successive application of bail, after cancellation of earlier bail — Factors to be considered — Conduct of accused on being re-imprisoned after cancellation of bail — Held, in normal course it is expected that such accused would not behave in a manner that would give room for prosecution to contend that he had been misusing facilities available to him in law while he is in jail (Para 8). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 3 SCC 284: 2005 SCC (Cri) 705: AIR 2005 SC 972: 2005 Cri LJ 1441.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-2005]

[6383] — Ss. 436 & 437(5) and 439(2) — Accused enlarged on bail by court — Rearrest when permissible — Held, such accused cannot be rearrested soon thereafter without apprising such Court specially when no disclosure was made to that Court before it granted bail that investigation for any other offence was then pending against the accused — Rearrest illegal. Uday Chand v. Sk. Mohd. Abdullah, Chief Minister, J&K, (1983) 2 SCC 417: 1983 SCC (Cri) 529.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-1981]

[6384] — Ss. 436 and 437 — Bail — Grant of — Parameters for — Culpable homicide or murder — Bail granted to accused-Respondent 2 by High Court primarily on the ground that co-accused was released on bail and his case at most would fall under S. 304 Pt. II IPC and not under S. 302 IPC — Accused-Respondent 2 along with his father (co-accused) involved in daylight cold-blooded murder of his elder brother — Dispute regarding distribution of property — After getting bail Respondent 2 and his father threatening and assaulting appellant (wife of deceased) physically to finish the case — Held, no reason was indicated by High Court as to what was the relevance of grant of bail to the co-accused ignoring that Respondent 2 was the alleged assailant who fired the gun and killed the deceased — Conclusions by High Court that there was no motive or there was a sudden quarrel appear to have been arrived at without any discussion and/or without reference to any particular material — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for considering bail application afresh, keeping in view the principles delineated — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/304 Pt. II (Paras 2, 3 and 15). Sudha Verma v. State of U.P., (2007) 12 SCC 507: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 275: (2007) 58 AIC 218 (SC): (2007) 6 All LJ 157.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-8-2007]

Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2007) 4 SCC 343; Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157; V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 560; Imran Ali v. Habibullah, (2007) 12 SCC 506; State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2), relied on

[6385] — S. 436 and Ch. V (Ss. 41 to 60) — Arrest — Bail application — Non-compliance with Supreme Court's directions relating to arrest issued in D.K. Basu v. State of W.B., (1997) 1 SCC 416 and Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 260 — Plea in respect of — Held, in the normal course should have been made in the bail application, especially when the same was drafted and filed by a lawyer — Hence the said plea made later on in the instant writ petitions and contempt petitions, held on facts, was not correct

Petitioner 1 was produced in the Court of Magistrate on the same day of her arrest. She applied for bail before the Magistrate concerned. She did not state anything nor did she make any grievance before the said Magistrate regarding non-compliance with the directions issued in the aforesaid two cases, though her bail application was drafted and filed by a lawyer. If the plea taken now in the writ petitions was correct, in normal course grievance regarding the same should have been made on that very day when she was produced before the Magistrate especially when the legal aid and advice of a counsel was available to her. (Para 13). Rajkumari v. SHO, NOIDA, (2003) 11 SCC 500: 2004 SCC (Cri) 196: AIR 2003 SC 4693.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-2003]

[6386] — Ss. 436 to 439 and 446-A — High Court's orders regarding grant or cancellation of bail or anticipatory bail final — Appeal before Supreme Court under Art. 136 against such orders ordinarily not entertainable — Constitution of India — Art.136. Jagdish v. Harendrajit Singh, (1985) 4 SCC 508: 1986 SCC (Cri) 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J. and Ranganath Misra, J. [Date of decision: 31-10-1985]

— S. 436-A See also Ss. 437, 436-A and 439

[6387] — S. 436-A — Not retrospective — Consolidation of cases, therefore, cannot be granted under Art. 142 of Constitution of India — Consolidation of cases and trial in one court by retrospective application of S. 436-A CrPC without any express provision for the same — Permissibility — Exercise of power under Art. 142 — Scope of interference in criminal matters — Held, the Supreme Court cannot direct an authority to act contrary to law even if it has ample jurisdiction to pass orders under Art. 142 for doing complete justice (between the parties in any case or matter) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 409, 420 and 120-B — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Constitution of India, Arts. 142, 32 and 21

As many as forty-eight pending cases in six different States had been instituted by different depositors and investors against the writ petitioner in his capacity as ex-MD and ex-Director of the company concerned for commission of offences punishable under Sections 406, 409 and 420 read with Section 120-B IPC and Section 138 of the NI Act. The petitioner as an undertrial prisoner remained in jail for more than ten years (i.e. since August 1998) before he approaching the Supreme Court under Article 32 for enforcement of fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 14, 19, 20 and 21.

Allowing the appeal partly,

Held:

The petitioner deserves some relief. Although various cases are pending in different courts, the hard reality that the petitioner is in jail since more than ten years cannot be lost sight of. If the petitioner comes out of jail he may be able to make arrangement for repayment of amount and also to defend cases registered against him. On the overall facts and circumstances, the ends of justice would be served if appropriate court is directed to release him on bail on his executing a bond to the satisfaction of such court and the arresting officer. Assurance/undertaking of the writ petitioner-accused required to be filed for appearance in the court proceedings, surrender of passport (if any) to the police till final disposal of the case and liberty to the court concerned and the investigating agency to take required action if the petitioner misuses the liberty granted herein. (Paras 24, 31 and 32)

So far as consolidation of cases and trial of all the cases in one court is concerned such relief cannot be granted. Even in exercise of inherent powers the Supreme Court cannot direct an authority to act contrary to law even if it has ample jurisdiction to pass orders under Article 142 of the Constitution for doing complete justice between the parties in any case or matter. No retrospective effect has been given to Section 436-A CrPC. (Paras 31, 27 and 30). Pramod Kumar Saxena v. Union of India, (2008) 9 SCC 685: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 866: (2008) 70 AIC 4 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-2008]

V.K. Sharma v. Union of India, (2000) 9 SCC 449: 2001 SCC (Cri) 467; State of Punjab v. Rajesh Syal, (2002) 8 SCC 158: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1867, relied on

V.K. Sharma v. Union of India, (2000) 9 SCC 449: 2001 SCC (Cri) 467, held overruled

Section 437 — Bail in non-bailable offences

Synopsis

(1) Generally 431

(2) Ss. 437 and 439 — Relative scope 433

(3) Matters at large/Orders/Directions that may be passed 433

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally 434

(5) Grounds for bail in murder cases 445

(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences 451

(7) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application 454

(8) Temporary/Interim bail 459

(9) Successive/repeated bail applications 460

(10) Conditions for bail 466

(11) Cancellation of bail 467

(12) Cancellation of bail after charge-sheet filed: Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and S. 167(2) 469

(13) Cancellation of bail and appeal against order granting bail 473

(14) Appeal 474

(15) Interference by Supreme Court 474

(16) Duties of accused after release on bail 476

(17) Bail application by juvenile 476

(18) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes 476

(19) Other issues 486

— S. 437 See Ss. 157 & 155 and 41 to 44 & 46 and Ss. 437 to 439

See also Ss. 167 proviso (a) [as stood prior to 1978 amendment] 170 and 437

See also Ss. 167(2), 57, 437 and 439

See also Ss. 167(2) proviso, 437 and 4

See also Ss. 167(2) proviso, 437 and 439

See also Ss. 167(5) (as amended by S. 4 of W.B. Act 24 of 1988), 436, 437, 204, 205, 206 and 161

See also Ss. 231, 242, 244, 309 and 437 & 439
See also Ss. 389 and 437
See also Ss. 389, 437 and 439
See also Ss. 436, 389, 437, 441 and 445
See also Ss. 436 and 437
See also Ss. 436 to 450
See also Ss. 436 to 439 and 446-A
See also Ss. 436, 437, 438, 439 and 482
See also Ss. 436, 437 and 439
See also Ss. 436, 437, 440 & 441
See also Ss. 436, 437, 440, 441 and 442
See also Ss. 438 and 437
See also Ss. 438, 437 & 438 and 2(h), 155 to 157 and 41 to 44 & 46
See also Ss. 438 and 437 & 439
See also Ss. 438, 437 & 439 and 41 to 44 & 46
See also Ss. 439 & 437
See also Ss. 439, 437 and 389
See also Ss. 482 and 437
— S. 437(1) See Ss. 167(2) & 437(5), (1) and (2)
See also Ss. 437(5), (1) & (2) and 167(2)
— S. 437(1)(i) See Ss. 439 and 437(1)(i)
See also Ss. 439 and 437(1)(i) & (ii)
— S. 437(1)(ii) See Ss. 439 and 437(1)(i) & (ii)
— S. 437(2) See Ss. 167(2) & 437(5), (1) and (2)
See also Ss. 437(5), (1) & (2) and 167(2)
See also Ss. 439 and 437(2)
— S. 437(4) See Ss. 437(1), (4) & (5) and 439(1) & (2)
See also Ss. 437(1) & (4) and 439(1)
— S. 437(5) See Ss. 167(2) & 437(5), (1) and (2)
See also Ss. 167(2) proviso, 437(5), 439(2), 57 and 173
See also Ss. 167(2), proviso (a), 309(2), 437(5), 439(2), 441, 442(1) and 444
See also Ss. 436 & 437(5) and 439(2)
See also Ss. 437(1), (4) & (5) and 439(1) & (2)
See also Ss. 439(2) and 437(5)
See also Ss. 439(2), 438 and 437(5)
— S. 437(6) See Ss. 437(1) & (6)
See also Ss. 482 and 197, 173, 309, 437(6) and 468

(1) Generally

[6388] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Concept and purpose of. Aslam Babalal Desai v. State of Maharashtra, (1992) 4 SCC 272: 1992 SCC (Cri) 870: AIR 1993 SC 1.
Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi[1], M.M. Punchhi[2] and K. Ramaswamy[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 15-9-1992]

[6389] — S. 437 — Bail — Role of, in protection of right to personal liberty — Essence of function involved in grant of bail, and measures to ensure proper performance thereof — Held, exercise of said jurisdiction requires maintaining of perfect balance between two conflicting interests viz. sanctity of individual liberty and interest of society — Hence, it should be entrusted to judicial officers with some experience and good track record — High Courts advised to periodically organise (through their Judicial Academies) workshops, symposiums, seminars and lectures for orientation of judicial officers and police officers in respect of importance of, and method of balancing of, said conflicting interests — Direction given for periodical evaluation of performance of judicial officers concerned on the basis of cases decided by them — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 22

Just as liberty is precious to an individual, so is the society's interest in maintenance of peace, law and order. Both are equally important. (Para 84)

A large number of undertrials are languishing in jail for a long time even for allegedly committing very minor offences. This is because Section 438 CrPC has not been allowed its full play. The Constitution Bench in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565 clearly mentioned that Section 438 CrPC is extraordinary because it was incorporated in CrPC, 1973 and before that other provisions for grant of bail were Sections 437 and 439 CrPC. It is not extraordinary in the sense that it should be invoked only in exceptional or rare cases. Some courts of smaller strength have erroneously observed that Section 438 CrPC should be invoked only in exceptional or rare cases. (Para 85)

According to the Report of the National Police Commission, when the power of arrest is grossly abused and clearly violates the personal liberty of the people, as enshrined under Article 21 of the Constitution, then the courts need to take serious notice of it. When conviction rate is admittedly less than 10%, then the police should be slow in arresting the accused. The courts considering the bail application should try to maintain fine balance between the societal interest vis-à-vis personal liberty while adhering to the fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence that the accused is presumed to be innocent till he is found guilty by the competent court. (Para 86)

(1) Bail in non-bailable offences — Generally (contd.)

The complaint filed against the accused needs to be thoroughly examined including the aspect whether the complainant has filed a false or frivolous complaint on earlier occasion. The court should also examine the fact whether there is any family dispute between the accused and the complainant and the complainant must be clearly told that if the complaint is found to be false or frivolous, then strict action will be taken against him in accordance with law. If the connivance between the complainant and the investigating officer is established then action be taken against the investigating officer in accordance with law. (Para 87)

The gravity of charge and the exact role of the accused must be properly comprehended. Before arrest, the arresting officer must record the valid reasons which have led to the arrest of the accused in the case diary. In exceptional cases the reasons could be recorded immediately after the arrest, so that while dealing with the bail application, the remarks and observations of the arresting officer can also be properly evaluated by the court. (Para 88)

It is imperative for the courts to carefully and with meticulous precision evaluate the facts of the case. The discretion to grant bail must be exercised on the basis of the available material and the facts of the particular case. In cases where the court is of the considered view that the accused has joined investigation and he is fully cooperating with the investigating agency and is not likely to abscond, in that event, custodial interrogation should be avoided. A great ignominy, humiliation and disgrace is attached to arrest. Arrest leads to many serious consequences not only for the accused but for the entire family and at times for the entire community. Most people do not make any distinction between arrest at a pre-conviction stage or post-conviction stage. (Paras 89 and 90)

Society has a vital interest in grant or refusal of bail because every criminal offence is the offence against the State. The order granting or refusing bail must reflect perfect balance between the conflicting interests, namely, sanctity of individual liberty and the interest of the society. The law of bails dovetails two conflicting interests, namely, on the one hand, the requirements of shielding the society from the hazards of those committing crimes and potentiality of repeating the same crime while on bail and on the other hand, absolute adherence to the fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence regarding presumption of innocence of an accused until he is found guilty and the sanctity of individual liberty. (Para 1)

Exercise of jurisdiction under Section 438 CrPC is an extremely important judicial function of a Judge and must be entrusted to judicial officers with some experience and good track record. Both the individual and society have vital interest in orders passed by the courts in anticipatory bail applications. (Para 119)

It is imperative for the High Courts through their judicial academies to periodically organise workshops, symposiums, seminars and lectures by the experts to sensitise judicial officers, police officers and investigating officers so that they can properly comprehend the importance of personal liberty vis-à-vis social interests. They must learn to maintain fine balance between the personal liberty and the social interests. The performance of the judicial officers must be periodically evaluated on the basis of the cases decided by them. In case, they have not been able to maintain balance between personal liberty and societal interests, the lacunae must be pointed out to them and they may be asked to take corrective measures in future. Ultimately, the entire discretion of grant or refusal of bail has to be left to the judicial officers and all concerned must ensure that grant or refusal of bail is considered basically on the facts and circumstances of each case. (Paras 120 and 121). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on

[6390] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Detention of person accused of non-bailable offences during pendency of trial — Held, not violative of Art. 21 — "Personal liberty" — Right to, of prisoners and undertrials — Incarceration of persons charged with non-bailable offences during pendency of trial — Held, is permissible under the criminal laws, unless enlarged on bail in accordance with law — Hence, held, such detention cannot be questioned as violative of Art. 21 since the same is authorised by law — Constitution of India — Art. 21

Personal liberty cannot be taken away except in accordance with the procedure established by law. Personal liberty is a constitutional guarantee. However, Article 21 which guarantees the above right also contemplates deprivation of personal liberty by procedure established by law. Under the criminal laws of this country, a person accused of offences which are non-bailable is liable to be detained in custody during the pendency of trial unless he is enlarged on bail in accordance with law. Such detention cannot be questioned as being violative of Article 21 since the same is authorised by law. But even persons accused of non-bailable offences are entitled to bail if the court concerned comes to the conclusion that the prosecution has failed to establish a prima facie case against him and/or if the court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded, that in spite of the existence of a prima facie case there is a need to release such persons on bail where fact situations require it to do so. (Para 18). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42: 2005 SCC (Cri) 489: AIR 2005 SC 921: (2005) 27 AIC 717 (SC): (2005) 2 Guj LR 921: 2005 Cri LJ 944.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2005]

Jayendra Saraswathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2005) 2 SCC 13, clarified

[6391] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Jurisprudence of (Paras 6 to 8). Vaman Narain Ghiya v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 2 SCC 281.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2008]

A.K. Gopalan v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 27, relied on

(2) Ss. 437 and 439 — Relative scope

[6392] — Ss. 437 and 439(1) & (2) — Bail — Nature and relative scope of the sections — Ss. 497 and 498 CrPC, 1898, compared

Section 437(1), Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 takes care of the situation arising out of an accused being arrested by the police and produced before a Magistrate. While S. 497(1), Criminal Procedure Code of the old Code, in terms, refers an accused being "brought before a Court", S. 437(1), Criminal Procedure Code uses the expression "brought before a Court other than the High Court or a Court of Session". This change does not affect the true legal position. What has been the rule of production of accused person after arrest by the police under the old Code has been made explicitly clear in S. 437(1) of the new Code by excluding the High Court or the Court of Session. There is no provision in the Code whereby the accused is for the first time produced after initial arrest before the Court of Session or before the High Court.

The principle underlying S. 437 is towards granting of bail except in cases where there appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life and also when there are valid reasons to justify the refusal of bail. From sub-section (1) to sub-section (7) the change is from 'reasonable grounds for believing the accused guilty' to 'reasonable grounds for believing the accused not guilty'. At the stage of S. 437(1) the limited enquiry before the Magistrate relates to materials for basing the suspicion.

Since the Sessions Judge or the High Court will be approached by an accused only after refusal of bail by the Magistrate, it is not possible to hold that the mandate of the law of bail under S. 437, Criminal Procedure Code for the Magistrate, namely, considerations of likelihood of the accused being guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life, will be ignored by the High Court or the Sessions Judge.

Under S. 439(1) the High Court or the Court of Session will have to exercise its judicial discretion in considering the question of granting of bail. The overriding considerations in granting bail which are common both in the case of S. 437(1) and S. 439(1), of the new Code are the nature and gravity of the circumstances in which the offence is committed; the position and the status of the accused with reference to the victim and the witnesses; the likelihood, of the accused fleeing from justice, of repeating the offence; of jeopardising his own life being faced with a grim prospect of possible conviction in the case; of tampering with witnesses; the history of the case as well as of its investigation and other relevant grounds which, in view of so many variable factors, cannot be exhaustively set out. Of these, on the two paramount considerations viz. likelihood of the accused fleeing from justice and his tampering with prosecution evidence relate to ensuring a fair trial of the case in a Court of Justice, due and proper weight should be bestowed. Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41: AIR 1978 SC 179: 1978 Cri LJ 129.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.K. Goswami and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-1977]

(3) Matters at large/Orders/Directions that may be passed

[6393] — Ss. 437, 439, 438 and 389 — Jurisdiction of court while deciding bail application — Scope of — Determination of civil disputes — Held, said jurisdiction does not extend to decide civil disputes as between the parties (Para 3). Mahesh Chandra v. State of U.P., (2006) 6 SCC 196: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 23.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-2006]

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally

See also Section 437, '(5) Grounds for bail in murder cases', and

'(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences', below

[6394] — S. 437 — Grant of bail in case of non-bailable offence — Nature and scope — Reasonable grounds — Connotation of — Limitations for grant of bail — Held, such limitations come only when the question of granting bail on merit arises — Limitations stipulated in the said provision are cumulative and not alternative — Satisfaction contemplated, regarding innocence of the accused, to be based on reasonable grounds — "Reasonable grounds" mean something more than prima facie grounds — It contemplates substantial probable cause for believing that the accused is not guilty of the offence alleged and is not likely to commit any offence while on bail — Such embargo, further held, has been envisaged in view of the deleterious nature of the offence, public interest and tendency of the persons involved in such crimes to pursue their activities with greater vigour and make hay when at large — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 37(1)(b) (Paras 9 to 12). Narcotics Control Bureau v. Dilip Pralhad Namade, (2004) 3 SCC 619: 2004 SCC (Cri) 916: 2004 Cri LJ 1815.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2004]

Union of India v. Thamisharasi, (1995) 4 SCC 190: 1995 SCC (Cri) 665, considered and relied on [6395] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Basic considerations normally weighed by the courts for granting bail in non-bailable offences — Held the same, are (1) nature and seriousness of the offence (2) character of the evidence (3) reasonable apprehension of witness being tampered with and, (4) reasonable possibility of the presence of the accused not being secured at the trial (Para 10). Gokul Bhagaji Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 2 SCC 475: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 597: (2007) 49 AIC 27 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 776.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-12-2006]

Chenna Boyanna Krishna Yadav v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 1 SCC 242, relied on [6396] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Propriety of — Gravity of the offence ignored — Instead mitigating factors considered — Matter treated in a cursory manner — Cancellation of bail — Effect of long passage of time — 31 minor girls rescued from houses of some of respondent-accused — Bail granted to respondent-accused by impugned judgment on ground that: (i) no specific role was assigned to them, nor was there any description of their activities in statements of witnesses recorded under S. 161 CrPC, (ii) statements of witnesses were not recorded under S. 164 CrPC which would have given weight to their testimony, and (iii) there was no specific evidence regarding inducing or taking a specific person for the sake of prostitution — Held, High Court was not correct in dealing with the matter in such a cursory manner — Further held, recording of statements of girls under S. 164 CrPC was not necessary — However, considering the fact that respondent-accused had been granted bail long time back, and in some cases trials also had been concluded, cancellation of bail not ordered — Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956, Ss. 3, 5, 6, 7 & 9 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 323, 504, 506, 117, 366-A & 373. Guria, Swayam Sevi Sansthan v. State of U.P., (2009) 15 SCC 75.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2009]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124, relied on [6397] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Relevant considerations for reiterated — Held, the same are (1) nature of accusation, severity of punishment in case of conviction and nature of supporting evidence, (2) reasonable apprehension of tampering with witness and apprehension of threat to complainant, (3) prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge — Reasons to be given while granting bail — Respondents booked under Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967, Arms Act, 1959 and Penal Code, 1860 — Bail granted by High Court observing that charge-sheet did not disclose as to what were the imputations of acts done by respondents under Arms Act and other offences but relevant considerations as stated above, not kept in view — High Court's bail order set aside — Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967, Ss. 10, 13, 18 and 20 — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 3 and 4 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 353, 34 and 120-B (Paras 5 and 8). State of Maharashtra v. Dhanendra Shriram Bhurle, (2009) 11 SCC 541: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1480: AIR 2009 SC 1706: (2009) 76 AIC 197 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 1546: (2009) 2 All LJ 124.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-2009]

Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41; Lokesh Singh v. State of U.P., (2008) 16 SCC 753, relied on

[6398] — Ss. 437, 438 and 439 — Magistrate's power to grant bail in case of non-bailable offence — Magistrate can grant bail only when there is no reasonable ground to believe that the accused is guilty of offence punishable with sentence of death or life imprisonment, unless the accused is covered by the provisos to S. 437(1) — Factors to be kept in mind while granting bail — Merely because accused was initially granted anticipatory bail under S. 438 for a lesser offence (under Ss. 306 and 398-A IPC), that would not entitle him to grant of a regular bail under S. 437 when later he was found to be involved in a graver offence like murder under S. 302 — Held, Magistrate erred in granting bail under S. 437 when accused was charged with offence under S. 302

A case was registered against Respondent 2 under Sections 306 and 498-A IPC. After the investigating officer recorded statements of the witnesses under Section 161 CrPC, the respondent-accused moved an application for grant of anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC. The Addl. Sessions Judge granted interim bail observing that if on facts a case under Section 302 IPC is made out against the accused, the State shall be at liberty to arrest him. Subsequently, a charge-sheet was filed against the respondent under Sections 302, 406 and 498-A IPC by the investigating agency and he was directed to appear before the Metropolitan Magistrate. As he failed to appear in that court, non-bailable warrants were issued against him. In the meanwhile the respondent filed a criminal miscellaneous application under Section 482 CrPC in the High Court without impleading the appellant (deceased's father) as a party. The High Court kept the order of the Magistrate in abeyance. In his petition filed in the High Court, the accused suppressed the fact that a charge-sheet under Section 302 had been filed against him. Notice to the appellant was issued but in the meantime the respondent moved an application under Section 438 of the Code for anticipatory bail before the Additional Sessions Judge for which no order was passed and direction was issued to the accused to first appear before the Magistrate by a Single Judge of the High Court by passing a telegraphic order to the effect "having considered the case before me I am of the opinion that no ground has been made for cancellation of bail".

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

In the instant case while exercising the jurisdiction, apparently under Section 437 of the Code, the Metropolitan Magistrate appears to have completely ignored the basic principles governing the grant of bail. The mere initial grant of anticipatory bail for lesser offence, did not entitle the respondent to insist for regular bail even if he was subsequently found to be involved in the case of murder. Neither Section 437(5) nor Section 439(1) of the Code was attracted. There was no question of cancellation of bail earlier granted to the accused for an offence punishable under Sections 498-A, 306 and 406 IPC. With the change of the nature of the offence, the accused becomes disentitled to the liberty granted to him in relation to a minor offence, if the offence is altered for an aggravated crime. Instead of referring to the grounds which entitled the respondent-accused the grant of bail, the Magistrate adopted a wrong approach to confer on him the benefit of liberty on allegedly finding that no grounds were made out for cancellation of bail. Despite the involvement of important questions of law, the High Court failed in its obligation to adjudicate the pleas of law raised before it and dismissed the petition of the appellant by a one-sentence order. The orders of the Magistrate as also of the High Court being contrary to law are liable to be set aside. (Paras 9 and 10)

The proviso to Section 437(1) is an enabling provision which confers jurisdiction upon a court, other than the High Court and the Court of Session, to release a person on bail despite the fact that there appears reasonable ground for believing that such person has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Even though there is no legal bar for a Magistrate to consider an application for grant of bail to a person who is arrested for an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session yet it would be proper and appropriate that in such a case the Magistrate directs the accused person to approach the Court of Session for the purposes of getting the relief of bail. Even in a case where any Magistrate opts to make an adventure of exercising the powers under Section 437 of the Code in respect of a person who is suspected of the commission of such an offence, arrested and detained in that connection, such Magistrate has to specifically negate the existence of reasonable ground for believing that such an accused is guilty of an offence punishable with the sentence of death or imprisonment for life. In a case where the Magistrate has no occasion and in fact does not find that there were no reasonable grounds to believe that the accused had not committed the offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life he shall be deemed to be having no jurisdiction to enlarge the accused on bail. (Paras 5 and 6)

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

Powers of the Magistrate, while dealing with the applications for grant of bail, are regulated by the punishment prescribed for the offence in which the bail is sought. Generally speaking if punishment prescribed is for imprisonment for life and death penalty and the offence is exclusively triable by the Court of Session, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to grant bail unless the matter is covered by the provisos attached to Section 437 of the Code. The limitations circumscribing the jurisdiction of the Magistrate are evident and apparent. Assumption of jurisdiction to entertain the application is distinguishable from the exercise of the jurisdiction. (Para 7)

The jurisdiction to grant bail has to be exercised on the basis of well-settled principles having regard to the circumstances of each case and not in an arbitrary manner. While granting the bail, the court has to keep in mind the nature of accusations, the nature of evidence in support thereof, the severity of the punishment which conviction will entail, the character, behaviour, means and standing of the accused, circumstances which are peculiar to the accused, reasonable possibility of securing the presence of the accused at the trial, reasonable apprehension of the witnesses being tampered with, the larger interests of the public or State and other similar considerations. It has also to be kept in mind that for the purposes of granting the bail the legislature has used the words "reasonable grounds for believing" instead of "the evidence" which means the court dealing with the grant of bail can only satisfy it as to whether there is a genuine case against the accused and that the prosecution will be able to produce prima facie evidence in support of the charge. It is not expected, at this stage, to have the evidence establishing the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. (Para 8). Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT of Delhi, (2001) 4 SCC 280: 2001 SCC (Cri) 674: AIR 2001 SC 1444: 2001 Cri LJ 1730.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-2001]

[6399] — Ss. 437 and 438 — Bail — Grant of — Court's satisfaction about reasonable grounds — Factors to be considered — Supreme Court's interference with order granting bail when called for — TADA, 1987, S. 29(8)(b)

In view of the assertions made by the respondent earlier, it was necessary for the court to consider the further materials collected by the investigating agency by recording statements of witnesses. The court below misdirected itself in refusing to look into such statements and concluding that it was a case for granting bail taking into account only the position held by the respondent in the party.

The matter regarding grant or refusal of bail calls for judicious exercise of discretion by the court on merits. Where the offence is of a serious nature the court has to decide the question of grant of bail in the light of such considerations as the nature and seriousness of the offence, character of the evidence, circumstances which are peculiar to the accused, a reasonable possibility of presence of the accused not being secured at the trial and the reasonable apprehension of witness being tampered with, the larger interest of the public or such similar other considerations.

The Supreme Court would not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of the lower court in granting or refusing bail but in cases where bail has been granted on irrelevant considerations, such as the status or influence of the person accused and regardless of the nature of the accusation and relevancy of materials on record, the Court would not hesitate to interfere for the ends of justice. In the present case the Designated Court clearly erred in disposing of the application for bail. The order of the Designated Court granting bail has, therefore, to be set aside, without prejudice to the respondent's right to move the Designated Court at any subsequent stage. State of Maharashtra v. Anand Chintaman Dighe, (1990) 1 SCC 397: 1990 SCC (Cri) 142: AIR 1990 SC 625: 1990 Cri LJ 788.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-1990]

[6400] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant or refusal of bail — Factors to be considered, restated

The matters to be considered in an application for bail are (i) whether there is any prima facie or reasonable ground to believe that the accused had committed the offence; (ii) nature and gravity of the charge; (iii) severity of the punishment in the event of conviction; (iv) danger of the accused absconding or fleeing, if released on bail; (v) character, behaviour, means, position and standing of the accused; (vi) likelihood of the offence being repeated; (vii) reasonable apprehension of the witnesses being tampered with; and (viii) danger, of course, of justice being thwarted by grant of bail. While a vague allegation that the accused may tamper with the evidence or witnesses may not be a ground to refuse bail, if the accused is of such character that his mere presence at large would intimidate the witnesses or if there is material to show that he will use his liberty to subvert justice or tamper with the evidence, then bail will be refused. (Para 18). State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2): AIR 2005 SC 3490: (2005) 123 DLT 362: 2005 Cri LJ 4149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2005]

Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT of Delhi, (2001) 4 SCC 280: 2001 SCC (Cri) 674; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977, relied on

Followed in Gobarbhai Naranbhai Singala v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 3 SCC 775*

[6401] — Ss. 437 and 439 — When bail may be taken in case of non-bailable offences — Bail may be granted in such cases, held, if court concerned comes to the conclusion that prosecution has failed to establish a prima facie case against accused and/or if the court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded, that in spite of existence of a prima facie case there is a need to release such persons on bail where fact situations require the court to do so

Persons accused of non-bailable offences are entitled to bail if the court concerned comes to the conclusion that the prosecution has failed to establish a prima facie case against him and/or if the court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded, that in spite of the existence of a prima facie case there is a need to release such persons on bail where fact situations require it to do so. (Para 18). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42: 2005 SCC (Cri) 489: AIR 2005 SC 921: (2005) 27 AIC 717 (SC): (2005) 2 Guj LR 921: 2005 Cri LJ 944.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2005]

[6402] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Non-bailable offences — Bail — Necessary considerations while grant of

The considerations which normally weigh with the court in granting bail in non-bailable offences are — the nature and seriousness of the offence; the character of the evidence; circumstances which are peculiar to the accused; a reasonable possibility of the presence of the accused not being secured at the trial; reasonable apprehension of witnesses being tampered with; the larger interest of the public or the State and other similar factors which may be relevant in the facts and circumstances of the case. (Para 9). State of Gujarat v. Salimbhai Abdulgaffar Shaikh, (2003) 8 SCC 50: AIR 2003 SC 3224.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2003]

State v. Jagjit Singh, AIR 1962 SC 253: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 215; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41, relied on [6403] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail in cases involving non-bailable offences — Considerations to be weighed by court reiterated — Applicability of prohibition contained in S. 437(1)(i) to S. 439, not considered — On facts, held, prima facie a strong case has been made out for grant of bail to appellant-petitioner — Hence bail granted, on certain terms

Allowing the appeal and granting bail,

Held :

The considerations which normally weigh with the court in granting bail in non-bailable offences basically are — the nature and seriousness of the offence; the character of the evidence; circumstances which are peculiar to the accused; a reasonable possibility of the presence of the accused not being secured at the trial; reasonable apprehension of witnesses being tampered with; the larger interest of the public or the State and other similar factors which may be relevant in the facts and circumstances of the case. (Para 16)

A prima facie strong case has been made out for grant of bail to the petitioner. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the impugned order of the High Court is set aside. However, till the submission of the charge-sheet in court, the petitioner shall not visit the Mutt premises. He shall also surrender his passport before the CJM. (Para 17). Jayendra Saraswathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2005) 2 SCC 13: 2005 SCC (Cri) 481: AIR 2005 SC 716: 2005 Cri LJ 883: (2005) 116 DLT 354: (2005) 99 Cut LT 644: (2005) 1 KLT 471.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2005]

State v. Jagjit Singh, (1962) 3 SCR 622: AIR 1962 SC 253: (1962) 1 Cri LJ 215; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41, followed

Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977, distinguished

Clarified in Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42*

[6404] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Factual considerations for rejection of bail under S. 439 — Confessing witnesses declared hostile, likelihood of accused S and N fleeing being residents of border districts, and allegation of accused persons' capability in influencing other witnesses — Effect — High Court, Sessions Court and SDJM rejecting bail, upheld — However, on the ground of ill health of accused S, timely medical help directed

There was reason for not releasing the appellants on bail more so when the trial was at a precarious stage. It was admitted that some witnesses who were the witnesses for conspiracy and had been examined had to be declared hostile. The prosecution had expressed that the appellants were politically influential and financially strong and were capable of influencing the witnesses. The appellants S and N were the residents of Baragaon District which was a border district and, therefore, there was every likelihood of their fleeing from the judicial process. However, in view of the plea regarding the ill health of S timely medical help was directed to be made available to him. (Paras 10, 9 and 13). Narayan Ghosh v. State of Orissa, (2008) 3 SCC 693: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 723: AIR 2008 SC 1159: 2008 Cri LJ 1625.

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2008]

Jayendra Saraswathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2005) 2 SCC 13: 2005 SCC (Cri) 481, distinguished

[6405] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Application of mind — Factors to be considered by court restated — Criminal antecedents though not conclusive yet are relevant — Reasons for prima facie conclusion for grant of bail must be recorded by court

It is necessary for the courts dealing with application for bail to consider among other circumstances, the following factors also before granting bail:

1. The nature of accusation and the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of supporting evidence.

2. Reasonable apprehension of tampering with the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant.

3. Prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge. (Para 6)

Any order dehors such reasons suffers from non-application of mind. (Para 7)

Looked at from the above angle, the grant of bail to the respondents does not appear to be in order. Accordingly, the order of the High Court granting bail to the respondents is set aside. (Para 10). State of Maharashtra v. Sitaram Popat Vetal, (2004) 7 SCC 521: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1971: AIR 2004 SC 4258.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-2004]

Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528, relied on [6406] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Considerations — Relevance of criminal history-sheet of accused — High Court granting bail to accused charged under Ss. 302/149 etc. IPC solely on ground that only a single firearm injury was sustained by deceased — Criminal history-sheet of accused showing that accused were involved in a series of crimes, including murder — Held, considering this fact, High Court was not justified in granting bail. Narender Kumar Sharma v. Manoj Chowdhary, (2005) 13 SCC 171: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 131.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-9-2005]

[6407] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Considerations for

In cases of undertrials charged with the commission of an offence or offences the court is generally called upon to decide whether to release him on bail or to commit him to jail. This decision has to be made, mainly in non-bailable cases, having regard to the nature of the crime, the circumstances in which it was committed, the background of the accused, the possibility of his jumping bail, the impact that his release may make on the prosecution witnesses, its impact on society and the possibility of retribution, etc. State of Maharashtra v. Buddhikota Subha Rao, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 605: 1990 SCC (Cri) 126: AIR 1989 SC 2292: 1989 Cri LJ 2317.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K.N. Saikia, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-1989]

[6408] — Ss. 437 and 439(2) — Grant or refusal of bail — Cumulative effect of the circumstances must be considered — In facts and circumstances of the case, order of High Court granting bail to the respondents not sustainable

In the present case the High Court came to the conclusion that it could not be said that no prima facie case was made out against the respondents. The High Court then, however, found that there was no risk of winning over of witnesses or tampering with their evidence because the only incriminating material i.e. the dying declaration had been made in the presence of doctors, lawyers and police officers. This, in the facts and circumstances of the case, was not adequate reason to release the respondents on bail.

The cumulative effect of the dying declarations, the statements under S. 164 CrPC of the two security men, the fact that the deceased was set afire within the premises of the mill, the dispute as to the mill between the deceased and her father and brother on the one hand and the respondents on the other hand, and the cruelty and heinousness of the crime lead to the conclusion that this is a case where bail ought not to have been given to the respondents and where the Supreme Court under Art. 136 must intervene and set aside the order of the High Court. State of Orissa v. Rajendra Prasad Bharadia, (1994) 5 SCC 146: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.S. Verma and S.P. Bharucha, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1994]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, followed

[6409] — Ss. 437 and 438 — Bail — Grant of — Factors to be considered — TADA, 1987 (28 of 1987), S. 29(8)(b)

There are no hard and fast rules regarding grant or refusal of bail, each case has to be considered on its own merits. The matter always calls for judicious exercise of discretion by the court. Where the offence is of serious nature the court has to decide the question of grant of bail in the light of such considerations as the nature and seriousness of offence, character of the evidence, circumstances which are peculiar to the accused, a reasonable possibility of presence of the accused not being secured at the trial and the reasonable apprehension of witness being tampered with, the larger interest of the public or such similar other considerations. State of Maharashtra v. Anand Chintaman Dighe, (1990) 1 SCC 397: 1990 SCC (Cri) 142: AIR 1990 SC 625: 1990 Cri LJ 788.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-1990]

[6410] — S. 437 — Bail — Grant of — Guidelines for exercise of discretion involved in — No invariable rule or formula can be laid down — Discretion has to be exercised as per guidelines laid in Supreme Court case-law keeping all the relevant facts and circumstances in view

The Supreme Court in its decisions has laid down broad guidelines which the courts must bear in mind while dealing with an application for grant of bail. None of the said decisions lay down any invariable rule for grant of bail on completion of a specified period of detention in custody. Indeed in a discretionary matter, like grant or refusal of bail, it would be impossible to lay down any invariable rule or evolve a straitjacket formula. The court must exercise its discretion having regard to all the relevant facts and circumstances. What the relevant facts and circumstances are, which the court must keep in mind, has been laid down in a large number of decisions which are well known. It is, therefore, futile to attempt to lay down any invariable rule or formula in such matters. (Para 9). Surinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 7 SCC 387: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1674: 2005 Cri LJ 4119.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-9-2005]

Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 291: 1977 SCC (Cri) 559, relied on [6411] — S. 437 — Bail — Grant of — Grounds for — Delay in trial — TADA case — Petitioner in jail for more than 12 years — Bail refused to him assuming that trial would commence at an early date — Absence of regular TADA Court — Hence, some more time required to commence the trial — On such facts, Supreme Court granting bail to the petitioner on certain stringent conditions — TADA, 1987 — Constitution of India — Art.136 (Paras 2 and 3). Babba v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 11 SCC 569.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-4-2005]

[6412] — S. 437 — Bail — Case against appellants based on FIR lodged by the complainant whereas counter-case based on FIR lodged by the second appellant — Though both the cases investigated but final report laid only in one case — On facts, held, appellants must be released on bail on each of them executing a bond in a sum of Rs 25,000 with solvent sureties. Bashishth Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 10 SCC 384: AIR 2002 SC 487.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-2001]

[6413] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Relevant factors to be considered before grant of, stated

Among the other circumstances of the case, the factors which are required to be considered by the court before granting bail are (a) the nature of accusation and the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of supporting evidence, (b) reasonable apprehension of tampering with the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant, and (c) prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge. (Para 11). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977: AIR 2004 SC 1866: 2004 Cri LJ 1796.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2004]

Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124, relied on

See also Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42

[6414] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Medical condition of accused — Consideration of, in grant of bail

The plea that the respondent had undergone a cardiac operation and needed constant medical attention is not sufficient to order his bail. The prison authorities will arrange for proper treatment of the respondent whenever the need for it arises. State v. Jaspal Singh Gill, (1984) 3 SCC 555: 1984 SCC (Cri) 444: AIR 1984 SC 1503: 1984 Cri LJ 1211.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah, J. [Date of decision: 25-6-1984]

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

[6415] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Medical condition of accused — Consideration of, in grant of bail — Relief that may granted — Though accused directed to be given specialised treatment in reputed mental hospital (in Ranchi) outside the State where trial was being held and accused was in custody (Bihar), grant of bail denied (Paras 3 and 5). Bibhuti Nath Jha v. State of Bihar, (2005) 12 SCC 286.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-2005]

[Ed.: See also (1984) 3 SCC 555]

[6416] — S. 437 — Bail — Trial delayed — Undertrial prisoner — Trial of accused, taken into custody five years ago, not indicating any substantial progress, nor likely in future — Having regard to the dilatory progress of the proceedings against the accused, incarceration of accused for further period, held, could not be permitted — Trial Judge to release the accused imposing such conditions as he deems fit — Constitution of India — Art. 21. Satya Brat Gain v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 398: 2001 SCC (Cri) 406: AIR 2000 SC 1925: 2000 Cri LJ 2296.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2000]

[6417] — S. 437 — When should bail be refused — Where allegation of tampering of evidence on behalf of accused is made, court should test its veracity and if it is not found to be concocted, court should not grant bail

There were serious allegations of tampering of evidence on behalf of the accused persons. But the learned Judge did not either consider or test the same. One of the salutary principles in granting bail is that the court should be satisfied that the accused being enlarged on bail will not be in a position to tamper with the evidence. When allegations of tampering of evidence are made, it is the duty of the court to satisfy itself whether those allegations have basis (they can seldom be proved by concrete evidence) and if the allegations are not found to be concocted it would not be a proper exercise of jurisdiction in enlarging the accused on bail. Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 1987 SC 1613.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1987]

[6418] — Ss. 437, 439 and 482 — Grant of bail and gravity of offence — Charges relating to offence of passing on Defence secrets to foreign agency punishable under Official Secrets Act — Bail application made by accused-respondent during investigation rejected by Additional Sessions Court — But High Court under S. 482 going into merits and granting bail to accused while refusing the same to co-accused on ground of insufficient material to sustain conviction of the accused, though trial against the accused had not yet commenced — Held on facts, charges against the accused prima facie made out and High Court not justified in the larger interest of the State in enlarging the accused on bail — Official Secrets Act, 1923, Ss. 3, 5 and 9 r/w Penal Code, 1860 — S. 120-B

The court before granting bail in cases involving non-bailable offences particularly where the trial has not yet commenced should take into consideration various matters such as the nature and seriousness of the offence, the character of the evidence, circumstances which are peculiar to the accused, a reasonable possibility of the presence of the accused not being secured at the trial, reasonable apprehension of witnesses, being tampered with, the larger interests of the public or the State and similar other considerations. The Court should exercise a greater degree of care in enlarging on bail an accused who is charged with the offence punishable under S. 3 of the Official Secrets Act when it relates to military matters.

On facts, a prima facie case appears to have been made out against the respondent. The alleged offences are of very grave and serious nature which relate to security of the State inasmuch as espionage and intelligence were utilised to pass on information regarding military plans, equipment, technical advances etc. of our country to another. The allegations made by the prosecution suggest that the respondent and the persons accused along with him are person of easy conscience insofar as the interest and security of the country are concerned. The current situation in the country is such that it can easily be exploited by unscrupulous men to their own or to some foreign power's advantage. These aspects of the case have not been considered by the High Court. While dismissing the bail application of a co-accused, who was also his employee, the High Court had relied on the Supreme Court's decision in Jagjit Singh case but did not even refer to that decision while granting bail to the respondent. Moreover, the circumstances of this case are such that the question whether the case of criminal conspiracy had been made out or not should have been left to be decided by the trial court at the end of the trial on a consideration of the entire evidence adduced in the case. In the circumstances, the High Court should not have enlarged the respondent on bail in the larger interests of the State. State v. Jaspal Singh Gill, (1984) 3 SCC 555: 1984 SCC (Cri) 444: AIR 1984 SC 1503: 1984 Cri LJ 1211.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah, J. [Date of decision: 25-6-1984]

[6419] — Ss. 437 and 319 — Petitioner arrested on the basis of FIR but when prosecution filed the charge-sheet no charge-sheet was filed against him and even so petitioner continuing in custody and his prayer for bail rejected — Held, rejection of petitioner's application for bail not justified — S. 319 not attracted. Madan Lal v. State of Punjab, (2002) 9 SCC 473.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-1999]

[6420] — Ss. 437 and 374(2) — Long pendency of trial with no prospects of early hearing — Bail during pendency of appeal justified — Dowry death and cruelty to woman by husband or in-laws — Where appellant, convicted and sentenced to 7 years' RI under S. 304-B and 2 years' RI under S. 498-A, IPC had been in custody for more than three years and there was no likelihood of early hearing of appeal, appellant directed to be released on bail — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 304-B and 498-A (Para 3). Shailendra Kumar v. State of Delhi, (2000) 4 SCC 178: 2000 SCC (Cri) 795: AIR 2000 SC 3404 (2): 2000 Cri LJ 2452.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-2000]

[6421] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Considerations permissible — Plea that efficacious conduct of defence not possible without accused being on bail — Application for bail on ground of — Held, such a consideration is impermissible

It was then submitted that since the appellant is not on bail, he cannot conduct his defence effectively. If this argument is to be accepted, then logically in every case bail has to be granted. This contention cannot be accepted. (Para 23). Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2007) 1 SCC 70: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 254: AIR 2007 SC 451: 2007 Cri LJ 304: (2006) 48 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-11-2006]

[6422] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Accused languishing in jail since long time without commencement of the trial — Despite suppression of certain facts in bail application by the appellant's counsel, in view of the circumstances of the case, Supreme Court releasing the appellant on bail — Constitution of India — Art. 21 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 307 and 395 r/w 149. Vivek Kumar v. State of U.P., (2000) 9 SCC 443: 2001 SCC (Cri) 416: AIR 2000 SC 3406 (2): 2000 Cri LJ 2774: 2000 All LJ 1470.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-2000]

[6423] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Considerations — Age of accused — Accused aged seventy-nine years and seventy-six years — Bail opposed on the ground that the accused were not available for investigation, that it was a case of misappropriation of huge amount and for the purpose of investigation the custody of the accused was required — Accused submitting that they were never called by the investigating agency for the purpose of investigation and that they were ready and willing to cooperate with the investigation — Considering the facts and circumstances of the case, bail granted to accused subject to certain conditions — Constitution of India, Art. 136 (Para 5). Pandurang Baliramji Kharad v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 13 SCC 521.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Shivaraj V. Patil and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-10-2004]

[6424] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of, in non-bailable offence — Relevant considerations — Gravity and nature of offence — Held, the same must be one of the considerations for grant of bail in such offences — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 4). State v. Eslian, (2006) 9 SCC 785: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 399.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2006]

[6425] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail, grant of — Factors that may considered — Period of incarceration/delay in trial — Held, though mere period of incarceration and/or likelihood of delays in conclusion of trial are not by themselves singly or conjointly enough for grant of bail, yet both these factors may be taken into consideration (Para 16). Chenna Boyanna Krishna Yadav v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 1 SCC 242: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 329: 2007 Cri LJ 782: (2007) 50 AIC 637 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-12-2006]

[6426] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail when not to be granted — Impeding progress of trial — Past conduct of accused showing that if he were released on bail he would certainly tamper with evidence and threaten witnesses — This was clear from the fact that a number of witnesses had already turned hostile, many of them during the period when accused was on bail — Held, conduct of respondent-accused clearly indicates that enlarging him on bail would impede progress of trial, hence releasing him would not be in the larger interests of justice — Hence allowing the appeal, bail granted by High Court cancelled (Paras 44 and 46). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42: 2005 SCC (Cri) 489: AIR 2005 SC 921: (2005) 27 AIC 717 (SC): (2005) 2 Guj LR 921: 2005 Cri LJ 944.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2005]

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

[6427] — Ss. 437 & 439 — Refusal to grant bail — Grounds — Apprehension of abscondence, appellant being from another State — Refusal to grant bail merely on ground that appellant hailing from another State may abscond from the jurisdiction of the court granting bail, held, not justified — For ensuring his participation in trial court some conditions can be imposed — Conditional bail granted. Sanjay v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 10 SCC 403: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1534.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2001]

[6428] — Ss. 437, 436-A and 439 — Undertrial having been in judicial custody longer than maximum punishment imposable for the offence he was charged with, held, deserves to be released on bail subject to certain conditions (Para 14). Gokul Bhagaji Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 2 SCC 475: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 597: (2007) 49 AIC 27 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 776.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-12-2006]

[6429] — Ss. 437, 439 and 102 — Bail — Grant of — Relevant considerations — Nature and seriousness of offence (accusations of spying and leakage of Defence information) — Character of evidence — Ease of securing presence of accused — Some Defence personnel, both serving and retired, arrested in connection with leakage of Defence information — Pen drive recovered from one of them showed that respondent, who was a private person, had received commission between 0.5 to 1.5% on supply of equipment to Defence — There was, however, no direct evidence linking respondent with leakage of Defence information — On facts found that pen drive handed over by Defence authorities to CBI was not tamper-proof inasmuch as it was not sealed, and Defence authorities themselves had made several copies of data in the pen drive — Moreover, several restrictions had been imposed under FERA and Passports Act against respondent in another case and therefore securing his presence in the trial in the present case was not difficult — Bail granted by High Court therefore upheld — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 3, 65-A and 65-B — Information Technology Act, 2000, S. 4 — Official Secrets Act, 1923, Ss. 3(1)(c), 5 and 13 (Paras 25, 26, 31 and 32). CBI v. Abhishek Verma, (2009) 6 SCC 300.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2009]

State v. Jaspal Singh Gill, (1984) 3 SCC 555: 1984 SCC (Cri) 444, relied on

Govt. of (NCT of Delhi) v. Jaspal Singh, (2003) 10 SCC 586: 2004 SCC (Cri) 933, distinguished [6430] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Rejection of bail application by High Court — Propriety — Cases of appellants more serious than those of co-accused released on bail — Allegation that one C, MD of a Bank (Appellant 1) and other Directors of the Bank siphoned off the funds of the Bank by bogus loans and fictitious letters of credit in names of their friends, relatives, associates, companies, either without any security or with wholly inadequate security — Such fraudulent transactions aggregating to more than Rs 50 crores — Contention by appellant-accused that: (1) one R, a share-broker, who according to the appellants was the real beneficiary was released on bail by the Supreme Court; (2) even though the charge-sheet was filed long back on 22-1-2003 but charges had not been framed and trial was likely to be protracted, hence failure to grant bail would amount to detention by way of punishment; and (3) even if prima facie case was established, where presence of accused was readily available for trial and there was no likelihood of the accused tampering with evidence as investigation had been completed, the accused should not be detained — Held, cases of appellants cannot be compared with others who had been released on bail — Cases of appellants were more serious than that of other Directors except C — Besides, one or two Directors had been released on ground of old age and medical problems while the other Directors were released after they repaid the entire dues — Moreover, case of R was different as he was not directly involved in defrauding the Bank — Having regard to the huge amounts involved in the systematic fraud, there was danger of the appellants absconding, if released on bail, or attempting to tamper with evidence by pressurising witnesses — Hence, interference with High Court's order refusing bail uncalled for as grant of relief sought may thwart the course of justice (Paras 2, 5, 6 and 7). Himanshu Chandravadan Desai v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 13 SCC 234: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 143: AIR 2006 SC 179: 2006 Cri LJ 136: (2006) 101 Cut LT 385.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-11-2005]

[6431] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail to accused when bail already denied to co-accused for cogent reasons — Cancellation, held on facts, called for. State v. Jaspal Singh Gill, (1984) 3 SCC 555: 1984 SCC (Cri) 444: AIR 1984 SC 1503: 1984 Cri LJ 1211.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah, J. [Date of decision: 25-6-1984]

[6432] — Ss. 437 to 439 — Grant of bail — "Fodder scam" case — Co-accused already granted bail — Appellant having been in custody for 14

months, nearly 8 months having elapsed since Supreme Court rejected his last bail application — Given these facts and that other accused in said case, who had been in custody for about six months or more, having been released on bail, appellant also granted bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Shashi Bhushan Jaruhar v. State of Bihar, (2005) 11 SCC 457.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2005]

[Ed.: See also (2005) 11 SCC 453.]

[6433] — Ss. 437 to 439 — Grant of bail — "Fodder scam" case — Co-accused already granted bail — Appellant having been in custody for 15 months, nearly 8 months having elapsed since Supreme Court rejected his last bail application — Given these facts and that other accused in said case, who had been in custody for about six months or more, having been released on bail, appellant also granted bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Shiv Nandan Prasad v. State of Jharkhand, (2005) 11 SCC 453.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2005]

[Ed.: See also (2005) 11 SCC 457.]

[6434] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Police not seeking production of appellant in any of 24 cases registered against him — Affidavit filed by sister of appellant in May 2004 that in none of the 24 cases registered against the appellant for the period from the year 1980 to 2002 the police had applied for production of the appellant — That averment having not been controverted, despite grant of opportunity, held, it was a fit case for release of appellant on bail pending trial of the case in question (Para 2). Raju v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 13 SCC 522.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-2004]

[6435] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail to (MP) undertrials/accused after long period of incarceration (six years) — Balancing of right to personal liberty versus interests of society — Factors to be considered — Nature of offence — Conduct of accused in prison, and when on bail when granted on earlier occasions — Membership of Parliament by accused on four occasions — Stage of investigation, trial reached at the point when bail sought — Held, there is no absolute rule that a long period of incarceration by itself would entitle an undertrial to bail — It would be wholly inappropriate to grant bail when the investigation and trial are nearly over, and allegations against the accused are serious — Further, conduct of appellant-accused was such that he did not deserve bail — He had deliberately used dilatory tactics for delaying the trial — Lastly, it is irrelevant that appellant has been MP four times — The law is no respecter of persons, and is the same for everyone — Day-to-day conduct of trial directed for expeditious conclusion thereof — However, directed that no court was to entertain any further bail application by appellant-accused — Constitution of India, Arts. 136, 21, 105 and 194

This appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution was filed against the impugned judgment and order dated 27-4-2006 of the High Court by which the appellant's application for bail was dismissed. The appellant's bail application had been rejected earlier on several occasions by the High Court as well as by the Supreme Court. The last order of the Supreme Court dated 3-10-2005 inter alia requested the Sessions Judge to expedite the trial. If the trial was not completed within a period of six months from that order, it was left open to the appellant to renew the bail application. At the time of hearing of this appeal all the prosecution witnesses had been examined and cross-examined, and only the defence witnesses remained to be examined.

The appellant submitted that 60/70 defence witnesses were proposed to be examined and some more defence witnesses on behalf of the other accused were to be examined. Hence, he submitted that it would take a long time to examine these witnesses. That he had been in jail for more than six years and hence he should be released on bail. That if ultimately he was found innocent by the trial court, he would have undergone a long period of incarceration in jail which would be violative of Article 21 of the Constitution.

The State submitted that the appellant himself was at least partly responsible for the delay in the conclusion of the trial because most of the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined by his counsel for several days, mostly by asking irrelevant questions, and these were deliberate dilatory tactics used for delaying the trial so that on that basis the appellant could pray for bail.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

None of the decisions cited by the appellant can be said to have laid down any absolute and unconditional rule about when bail should be granted by the court and when it should not. It all depends on the facts and circumstances of each case and it cannot be said that there is any absolute rule that the mere fact that the undertrial/accused has undergone a long period of incarceration by itself would entitle him to be enlarged on bail. (Paras 10 and 12)

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

While it is true that Article 21 is of great importance because it enshrines the fundamental right to individual liberty, but at the same time a balance has to be struck between the right to individual liberty and the interest of society. No right can be absolute, and reasonable restrictions can be placed on them. While it is true that one of the considerations in deciding whether to grant bail to an accused or not is whether he has been in jail for a long time, the court has also to take into consideration other facts and circumstances, such as the interest of the society. (Para 16)

It has been stated that the appellant has been a Member of Parliament on four occasions. This is wholly irrelevant. The law is no respecter of persons, and is the same for everyone. (Para 17)

A perusal of the FIR itself shows that it is a triple murder case, and the incident was committed in broad daylight with sophisticated weapons. It is true that the appellant was not named in the FIR, but it has come in the statement before the Magistrate under Section 164 CrPC of one Ranjan Tiwari that he and other assailants had been hired by the appellant to commit this ghastly crime. Though no comment is sought to be made on the veracity or otherwise of the statement of Ranjan Tiwari and other witnesses, as it may influence the trial, but looking at the allegations against the appellant, both in the statement of Ranjan Tiwari and other witnesses, on the facts and circumstances of the case, it is clear that this is certainly not a case for grant of bail to the appellant, particularly, since the prosecution witnesses have been examined and now the defence witnesses alone have to be examined. It would be wholly inappropriate to grant bail when not only the investigation is over but even the trial is partly over, and the allegations against the appellant are serious. (Paras 18 and 19)

The appellant's conduct as recorded in Kalyan Chandra Sarkar case, (2005) 3 SCC 284, [set out in para 13 herein] has been such that he does not deserve bail and the Supreme Court as of now is not inclined to exercise its discretion under Article 136 for granting bail to the appellant. (Paras 13 and 20)

It is made clear that no further application for bail will be considered in this case by any court, as already a large number of bail applications have been rejected earlier, both by the High Court and the Supreme Court. It is directed that the trial court shall ensure that the defence witnesses are examined on a day-to-day basis in accordance with a fixed time schedule so that the trial is completed as expeditiously as possible and the judgment is delivered soon thereafter. (Paras 24 and 25). Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2007) 1 SCC 70: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 254: AIR 2007 SC 451: 2007 Cri LJ 304: (2006) 48 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-11-2006]

State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2); Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT of Delhi, (2001) 4 SCC 280: 2001 SCC (Cri) 674; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 218: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 3 SCC 284: 2005 SCC (Cri) 705, relied on

Babu Singh v. State of U.P., (1978) 1 SCC 579: 1978 SCC (Cri) 133; Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 291: 1977 SCC (Cri) 559; Bhagirathsinh v. State of Gujarat, (1984) 1 SCC 284: 1984 SCC (Cri) 63; Shaheen Welfare Assn. v. Union of India, (1996) 2 SCC 616: 1996 SCC (Cri) 366; Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 260: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1172, clarified

[6436] — S. 437 — Rejection of bail applications merely on ground that applicants belonged to a particular community or State in which terrorist activity prevailing or that similar applications had been earlier rejected unjustified — Constitution of India, Art. 136. Jaswant Singh v. State of U.P., 1988 Supp SCC 567: 1988 SCC (Cri) 913.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1987]

[6437] — S. 437 — Grant of bail in case of non-bailable offence — Non-compliance with the court's order to supply certain documents to the accused — Whether ground for — Held, accused not entitled to bail in such cases — On facts, held, the High Court erred in transgressing the statutory limitations imposed and allowing bail — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 37(1)(b) (Paras 9 to 12). Narcotics Control Bureau v. Dilip Pralhad Namade, (2004) 3 SCC 619: 2004 SCC (Cri) 916: 2004 Cri LJ 1815.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2004]

[6438] — S. 437 — Grant of bail — Matters that may be considered — Post-mortem report indicating absence of external injury, diseased state of viscera and that death was due to shock followed by chronic illness — Held, particularly having regard to the post-mortem report, it is appropriate to enlarge appellant on bail. Ballav Narain v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 87.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Shivaraj V. Patil and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2004]

[6439] — S. 437 — Bail — On facts allowed — Plea that presence of accused was necessary for making a search and recovery of certain documents untenable as taking into custody not necessary for that purpose — Order directing her to appear for interrogation passed. Harsh Sawhney v. UT (Chandigarh Admn.), (1978) 2 SCC 365: 1978 SCC (Cri) 189: AIR 1978 SC 1016: 1978 Cri LJ 774.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, Jaswant Singh and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-1978]

[6440] — Ss. 437(1) & (6) — Bail in case of non-bailable offence — Paramount consideration should always be whether enlargement on bail would jeopardise the prosecution case — Where prosecution case relating to commission of offence under S. 120-B r/w S. 420 IPC about 16 years ago not covered by the exception clauses (i) and (ii) of S. 437(1) and examination-in-chief and part of cross-examination of the main witness viz. the complainant was already over and it could not be shown that there was any evidence which could be tampered with or influenced by the accused, held, there was no reasonable basis for High Court's apprehension regarding tampering or influencing by accused — Hence accused-appellants entitled to be released on bail on furnishing bail bonds for Rs 1 lakh each with one surety in like amount and subject to conditions laid down by the Court. Chandraswami v. CBI, (1996) 6 SCC 751: 1997 SCC (Cri) 14: AIR 1997 SC 2575.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and J.S. Verma and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-1996]

[6441] — Ss. 437(1) and 439(1) — Bail — Grant of — Necessary considerations — Held, what the court has to bear in mind while granting bail is what is provided for in S. 437 — Grant of bail on the basis of an assurance of compromise, held, not permissible (Para 7). Biman Chatterjee v. Sanchita Chatterjee, (2004) 3 SCC 388: 2004 SCC (Cri) 814: AIR 2004 SC 1699: 2004 Cri LJ 1451.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-2-2004]

(5) Grounds for bail in murder cases

See also Section 437, '(4) Grounds for bail — Generally', above

[6442] — S. 437 — Bail — Grounds for — Application by person accused of murder who had already been convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment for another murder — Absence of reasonable ground for believing that he had not committed the alleged murder — No special reason for grant of bail stated — Matter dealt in cursory manner by High Court — Bail not justified, not even on the medical ground alleged

Respondent 2 convicted under Section 302 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment by trial court released on bail by the appellate court. Thereafter, pursuant to an FIR alleging that Respondent 2 along with his companion committed murder of the person who had given evidence against him in the earlier murder case, a case under Section 302 r/w Section 34 IPC registered against him while his co-accused was absconding. Two servants of the deceased in the second incident, in their statements recorded under Section 164, stating to have been present at the time of occurrence but later filing affidavits before trial court denying to have witnessed the incident. On these facts bail application of Respondent 2 rejected by Sessions Court. But subsequent application for bail filed by Respondent 2 before High Court allowed on grounds that investigation of the case had been entrusted to CBI/CID which normally takes about a year in concluding the investigation and that the applicant's claim of ailment was not specifically denied. The High Court granting bail to Respondent 2 in spite of the fact that he had already been convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment and the two eyewitnesses retracted their statements even before commencement of trial. Striking down the grant of bail,

Held :

The High Court has dealt with the matter in a most cursory manner. Bail has been granted ignoring the provisions of Section 437 CrPC. According to that section a person who has been previously convicted of an offence punishable with life imprisonment shall not be released on bail unless there is no reasonable ground for believing that the person has committed the offence and/or there are special reasons to do so. In this case the co-accused is still absconding. Two witnesses have already retracted their statements. There are still eyewitnesses, who have directly connected the 2nd respondent and assigned a specific role to the 2nd respondent in the murder of the deceased. Thus at this stage it could not be said that there is reasonable ground for believing that the 2nd respondent has not committed the offence. No special reasons for granting bail have been indicated by the High Court. The alleged ailment of the 2nd respondent is also not such as required releasing him on bail. The 2nd respondent can always apply to the jail authorities to see that he gets the required medical treatment. (Paras 10 and 11). Ram Prakash Pandey v. State of U.P., (2001) 9 SCC 121: AIR 2001 SC 3592.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-8-2001]

(5) Grounds for bail in murder cases (contd.)

[6443] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Murder case — Propriety — Matters at large before High Court — Findings that may be recorded — High Court by impugned judgment while granting bail to Respondent 2 arriving at a definite conclusion about non-possibility of the injuries having been sustained in the manner indicated by the prosecution and ignoring the allegations of suspicion cast over firearm report and medical report — Held, while considering the bail application such a finding should not have been recorded — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Ashok Kumar v. State of U.P., (2009) 11 SCC 392: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1393: AIR 2009 SC 1921: (2009) 75 AIC 120 (SC): (2009) 3 All LJ 252.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2009]

[6444] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of by High Court — Sustainability — Accused convicted by Sessions Judge under S. 302 IPC and in custody — High Court rejecting his bail application thrice, but on further application being filed, granting bail, inter alia, on the ground that there was no chance of the appeal being heard in the near future — Held, High Court erred in doing so — Such a ground, by itself, would be no ground for releasing the accused who had not been in custody even for three years — High Court directed to take up all appeals pending under S. 302 IPC, especially those where the accused were not on bail on priority basis and dispose of them expeditiously (Paras 2 to 4). Sunil Kumar Sinha v. State of Bihar, (2009) 16 SCC 370.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Kirpal, C.J. and K.G. Balakrishnan and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-9-2002]

[6445] — S. 437 — Bail — Life convict — Guidelines for grant of bail — Direction given by Punjab & Haryana High Court in Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2000) 1 Chan LR 74 that "life convicts, who have undergone at least five years of imprisonment of which at least three years should be after conviction, should be released on bail" — Held, is in the nature of guidelines only and does not lay down any invariable rule — It is a discretionary matter for the court which should be exercised having regard to all relevant facts and circumstances of the case — Appellant convicted under Ss. 302/34 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment — During pendency of his appeal before High Court, application for regular bail was rejected by High Court on ground that appellant's case was not covered by the rule laid down in Dharam Pal case as he remained in actual custody after conviction only for two years and five months and he remained on parole for eight months and twelve days — Having regard to the fact that appellant remained in custody for about six years and four months and that his co-accused had been released on bail by High Court, held, appellant deserved to be released on bail

The High Court of Punjab and Haryana in Dharam Pal case laid down guidelines which ought to be kept in mind by the courts dealing with applications for grant of bail in a pending appeal. But, it does not lay down any hard-and-fast rule of universal application. Difficulties may arise if such a direction is treated as an invariable rule in the matter of grant of discretionary relief. The rule laid down in Dharam Pal case may be inferentially understood to mean that unless a convict has undergone five years' imprisonment, he should not be released on bail. This would again lead to travesty of justice, because in a given case having regard to the evidence on record and the reasoning of the court convicting the accused, the High Court in an appeal may well be persuaded and justified in granting bail to the appellant even while admitting his appeal. (Paras 12 and 11)

In the present case, the Supreme Court by its interim order dated 12-5-2005 had granted bail to the appellant who had remained in custody for about six years and four months. Apart from the facts and circumstances of the case, there is further fact that the co-accused had been released on bail by the High Court. The interim order made on 12-5-2005 is made absolute. (Para 13). Surinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 7 SCC 387: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1674: 2005 Cri LJ 4119.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-9-2005]

Kashmira Singh v. State of Punjab, (1977) 4 SCC 291: 1977 SCC (Cri) 559, relied on

Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2000) 1 Chan LR 74, explained

But see Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2007) 1 SCC 70

[6446] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Reasons for — Necessity of, particularly in serious cases like murder — High Court granting bail to respondent-accused charged under Ss. 302, 504 and 506 IPC mechanically without considering the pros and cons of the matter — Held, while granting bail, particularly in serious cases like murder some reasons justifying the grant of bail are necessary — Hence, matter remitted to High Court for deciding the bail application afresh — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Paras 12 and 13). Brij Nandan Jaiswal v. Munna, (2009) 1 SCC 678.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-12-2008]

[6447] — S. 437 — Murder case — Reasons, held, mandatory for refusing bail — Accused petitioner in custody since 21-2-1988 even though investigating agency had laid final report — High Court refusing application for bail by non-speaking order — Petitioner permitted to move High Court again and High Court requested to pass reasoned order while disposing of the application — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 2). Dhruv K. Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, (2000) 10 SCC 84: AIR 2000 SC 209.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-2-1999]

[6448] — S. 437 — Bail application by person accused of murder — Factors to be considered in granting bail — Liberty of the accused not the sole concern of the court

No doubt liberty of a citizen must be zealously safeguarded by court, nonetheless when a person is accused of a serious offence like murder and his successive bail applications are rejected on merit there being prima facie material, the prosecution is entitled to place correct facts before the court. Liberty is to be secured through process of law, which is administered keeping in mind the interests of the accused, the near and dear of the victim who lost his life and who feel helpless and believe that there is no justice in the world as also the collective interest of the community so that parties do not lose faith in the institution and indulge in private retribution. Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 1987 SC 1613.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1987]

[6449] — S. 437 — Bail application of person accused of murder — Where his earlier successive applications already rejected by court, prosecution's prayer for opportunity to furnish detailed facts and material must be allowed before taking decision on the subsequent application

In this case the Judge refused to grant the prayer for time to file counter-affidavit giving the details of the proceedings pending before the trial court and proceeded to grant bail simply on the ground that the liberty of a citizen was involved which is the case in every criminal case more particularly in a murder case where a citizen who let alone losing his liberty has lost his very life. The first factor which influenced the Judge does not stand since the accused persons obtained adjournment after adjournment on one pretext or the other and they did not allow the court to proceed with the trial, and the second factor regarding delay in trial also cannot be helped if a litigant is encouraged to make half a dozen applications on the same point without any new factor having arisen after the first was rejected. Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 1987 SC 1613.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1987]

[6450] — S. 437 — Refusal of bail — Consideration of seriousness of crime in the facts and circumstances of the case — Bail to person accused of murder — Occurrence taking place in broad daylight in a busy market place and witnessed by several persons — Accused named in FIR absconding after occurrence but surrendering before court after a month — In view of seriousness of the matter, bail should be refused

Normally, the Supreme Court does not interfere with bail matters and the orders of the High Court are generally accepted to be final relating to grant or rejection of bail. But in this case the Judge committed serious error in recalling his earlier order and enlarging the respondent on bail. In view of the facts and circumstances of the case the respondent was not entitled to bail if the seriousness of the matter was realised and a judicious approach was made. Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 1987 SC 1613.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1987]

[6451] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Factors for consideration — Nature and gravity of offence a relevant factor — Gulshan Kumar murder case — Evidence regarding payment of money by respondent to contract killers who alleged to have killed the deceased is an incriminating circumstance — Apart from that, other incriminating circumstances also collected by the investigating agency to make out a strong prima facie case against the respondent — Held, High Court erred in granting bail to the respondent

The circumstance that the accused-respondent had handed over an amount of Rs 25 lakhs to the contract killers (who according to the prosecution committed the murder of Gulshan Kumar) incriminates the respondent in a large way. Apart from that, the Investigating Agency has collected other incriminating materials also against the respondent, to make out a strong prima facie case against him. It is trite that among other considerations which the Court has to take into account in deciding whether bail should be granted in a non-bailable offence is the nature and gravity of the offence. Therefore, the High Court should not have granted bail to the respondent considering the seriousness of the allegations levelled against him, particularly at a stage when the investigation is continuing. State of Maharashtra v. Ramesh Taurani, (1998) 1 SCC 41: 1998 SCC (Cri) 257: AIR 1998 SC 586: 1998 Cri LJ 855.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-11-1997]

[6452] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Non-application of mind — Accused charged with murder — Evidence of eyewitness P*, which was of vital importance to the case, not recorded by trial court — After some adjournments High Court granted bail — On dates of hearing after repeated adjournments accused remained absent on ground, as disclosed by his counsel, that he was arrested in some other case, though details thereof not disclosed before the Court — High Court granted bail on ground that* P did not appear before trial court — Held on facts — Grant of bail vitiated by non-application of mind — Accused misused the liberty and unnecessarily prolonged the trial

An FIR was lodged by the appellant on 14-5-2003 alleging murder of her brother and naming Respondent 2 as the sole accused. One P stated to be an eyewitness appeared before the Magistrate concerned and her statement was recorded under Section 164 CrPC. In her statement she specifically stated that the murder was committed by Respondent 2 in her presence. After charge-sheet was filed on 19-11-2004, cognizance of the offence was taken by the Magistrate. Thereafter, the State Government transferred the investigation to CB CID. The order of the State Government was challenged by filing a writ petition before High Court. The High Court quashed the order transferring investigation to CB CID. A bail application was filed by Respondent 2 before the High Court but the same was rejected on 15-3-2005 with the observation that any fresh bail application, if filed, shall be considered after the statements of the appellant and P were recorded by the trial court. On 20-6-2005 the appellant's evidence was recorded and she categorically stated that in her presence murder was committed. On 25-8-2005 P was also examined and her evidence was recorded by the trial court. The cross-examination was concluded on 5-9-2005. In January 2006 Respondent 2 filed the second bail application before the High Court but the same was rejected reiterating the earlier view that the application for bail could be considered after the evidence of P is recorded or if she failed to appear for the purpose of recording her evidence. A certificate issued by Ministry of Health, Ukraine, where P was studying, was filed before the trial court, which stated that summer vacation of P was during the period between 3-7-2006 and 31-8-2006. In May 2006 Respondent 2 filed the third bail application which was granted by the High Court on 22-5-2006. The High Court noted that the first application was rejected as the witnesses were apprehending danger to their lives and the trial was going to commence and therefore, it was not proper to release the applicant on bail. Second application was moved when there was no significant progress and P was not examined. The High Court noted that in spite of adjournments P did not appear. According to the High Court the fact that P was not appearing though her dates of appearance had been fixed entitled the appellant to be released on bail.

P after coming to India appeared before the Court on 28-7-2006 but on that date Respondent 2 was not represented. Therefore, the court issued a non-bailable warrant and adjourned the matter to 10-8-2006. On 10-8-2006 when the matter was taken up, counsel appearing for Respondent 2 submitted before the Court that Respondent 2 had been arrested in some other case and his absence may be exempted. The trial court rejected the application and adjourned the matter to 21-8-2006 but on that day again Respondent 2 was not present. The counsel appearing for Respondent 2 did not file the details of the case where Respondent 2 was arrested. The matter was adjourned to 21-9-2006 but on that date again Respondent 2 did not appear.

The present appeal was filed before the Supreme Court challenging the High Court's order granting bail to Respondent 2. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the grant of bail was unwarranted and in any event Respondent 2 has misused the liberty of bail. Although notices on Respondent 1, State and Respondent 2 accused had been served but none appeared to represent them when the matter was taken up.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court's order shows complete non-application of mind. The reasoning of the High Court is totally fallacious. The trial court was informed of the fact that P was pursuing her studies abroad and would be available to appear as witness during the summer vacation. The fact that the trial court adjourned the matter for a few dates notwithstanding this intimation cannot be a factor to release Respondent 2 who chose not to appear and made a prayer for exemption on the ground that he was in custody in some other case. The details of that case were not furnished to the Court though ample opportunity was granted. The appellant is, therefore, justified in her grievances that there has been misuse of the liberty and that the trial had been unnecessarily prolonged. The evidence of P was of vital importance to the case, but she had to go back to pursue her studies. This is a factor which has been lost sight of. The High Court instead has unnecessarily emphasised on the number of adjournments which has no relevance. The order of bail passed by the High Court is not sustainable and is accordingly set aside. (Paras 9 and 12)

Though detailed examination of the evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case is to be avoided by the court while passing orders on bail applications, yet a court dealing with the bail application should be satisfied as to whether there is a prima facie case, but exhaustive exploration of the merits of the case is not necessary. The court dealing with the application for bail is required to exercise its discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. (Para 9)

There is a need to indicate in the order, reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted, particularly where an accused was charged of having committed a serious offence. It is necessary for the courts dealing with application for bail to consider among other circumstances, the following factors also before granting bail, they are:

1. the nature of accusation and the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of supporting evidence;

2. reasonable apprehension of tampering of the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant;

3. prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge. (Para 10)

Any order dehors such reasons suffers from non-application of mind. (Para 11). Suman Pandey v. State of U.P., (2007) 12 SCC 364: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 394: (2007) 3 All LJ 162: 2007 Cri LJ 1789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-2007]

Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157; V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 560; Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974; Kamaljit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 7 SCC 226: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1668; Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2006) 12 SCC 131: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 568; Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohd., (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669, relied on

[6453] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Propriety — Murder case — On facts, where the accused was charged with murder and the High Court did not look into factum of recovery of weapons and his identification at TI parade, and brushed aside his criminal antecedents as not being of recent past, and based on surmises concluded that a false case had been foisted due to political rivalry, then, the grant of bail was improper and liable to be cancelled

In the instant case the deceased met homicidal death due to attack by several persons. The High Court has lightly brushed aside the factum of recovery of the weapons and identification at the test identification parade. Its conclusion that political rivalry has a double-edged effect was based on surmises without any material before it to show that a false case had been foisted because of political rivalry. Further, the antecedents of the respondents though noticed were also lightly brushed aside on the ground that they were not of recent past. Even though criminal antecedents are always not determinative of the question whether bail is to be granted, yet their relevance cannot be totally ignored. (Para 9)

Looked at from the above angle, the grant of bail to the respondents does not appear to be in order. Accordingly, the order of the High Court granting bail to the respondents is set aside. (Para 10). State of Maharashtra v. Sitaram Popat Vetal, (2004) 7 SCC 521: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1971: AIR 2004 SC 4258.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-2004]

[6454] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail, when not justified — Gulshan Kumar murder case — Several persons arrested — Respondent arrested subsequently — Non-mention of name of respondent in the remand applications presented by investigating agency in respect of persons who were earlier arrested, held, not a justifiable ground for grant of bail to respondent by High Court. State of Maharashtra v. Ramesh Taurani, (1998) 1 SCC 41: 1998 SCC (Cri) 257: AIR 1998 SC 586: 1998 Cri LJ 855.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-11-1997]

[6455] — Ss. 437 and 439(2) — Bail — Grant or refusal of — Discretionary jurisdiction of court should be exercised carefully and cautiously by balancing rights of the accused and interests of society — Court must also indicate brief reasons for granting or refusing bail — Held on facts, High Court erred in granting bail to only one

(5) Grounds for bail in murder cases (contd.)

accused (respondent) out of several accused facing trial for offences under Ss. 302, 307, 323 r/w Ss. 147, 148 and 149 IPC without indicating any reasons therefor — Application for cancellation of bail, however, sent to Sessions Judge before whom the trial was proceeding

The judgment rendered by the High Court cannot be approved. The provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code confer discretionary jurisdiction on criminal courts to grant bail to the accused pending trials or in appeals against convictions. Since the jurisdiction is discretionary it is required to be exercised with great care and caution by balancing valuable right of liberty of an individual and the interest of the society in general. In granting or refusing the bail, the courts are required to indicate, maybe very briefly, the reasons for grant or refusal of bail. The jurisdiction is not to be exercised in a casual and cavalier fashion as has been done by the learned Judge in this case. (Paras 7 and 4)

However, in this case it is not necessary to undertake the exercise of going through the police papers and the evidence so far recorded by the trial court to consider the prayer of the complainant for cancellation of bail since it has been informed that the sessions trial in which the accused was enlarged on bail is proceeding with expedition and a major part of the evidence has been recorded. The Sessions Judge, therefore, is directed to consider the present application of the complainant for cancellation of bail on the basis of the police papers and the evidence so far recorded in the case. It is left to the judicious discretion of the learned Sessions Judge to continue the bail or cancel the same after hearing the counsel for the prosecution and the accused. (Paras 7 and 8). Mansab Ali v. Irsan, (2003) 1 SCC 632: 2003 SCC (Cri) 399: AIR 2003 SC 707.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-12-2002]

[6456] — Ss. 437(1), (4) & (5) and 439(1) & (2) — Grant of bail after once refusing it — Duty of court to record reasons and to take note of events subsequent to the incident — On facts, grant found unjustified — Hence, bail cancelled — Voter obstructed from voting at election for the post of Pradhan, Gram Panchayat and that leading to scuffles during polling process — A person trying to rescue the voter, killed on the spot — FIR lodged under S. 302 IPC and the accused persons arrested — Bail refused by trial court, High Court and again by Sessions Court — Accused persons again moving the High Court for grant of bail — Witnesses were allegedly threatened and assaulted and therefore a second FIR was registered under Ss. 323 and 504 IPC — High Court, however, granting the bail and rejecting the application for cancellation thereof — After completing the investigation, police filing charge-sheet but the accused, who were on bail, not appearing before the Magistrate till he issued bailable warrants against them and thus committal getting delayed — In the said circumstances, held, High Court erred in granting bail — It ought to have explicitly stated the reasons of sudden departure in the order of grant as against rejection just about a month ago — The subsequent FIR also ought to have been taken note of — Spending of one year in jail, held, was not a relevant consideration for grant of bail — More so, when the offence charged was that of murder punishable with death or life imprisonment — Total circumstances of the case, held, warranted cancellation of the bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 323 and 504

The appellant's brother, A, was a candidate contesting the election for the post of Pradhan in a Gram Panchayat. During the polling process on 23-6-2000 booth-capturing took place several times. The informant was prevented from casting his vote and that resulted in scuffles. On hearing the cries of the informant, A rushed to rescue him but, was himself for the reason of his interference, killed. FIR was lodged, inter alia, under Section 302 IPC and the private respondents herein were, consequently, arrested. Their bail applications were rejected by the trial court and High Court and again by Sessions Court. Thereafter, they again moved the High Court. Between 4-12-2000 and 6-12-2000 the witnesses in the matter were allegedly threatened and assaulted for which an FIR under Sections 323 and 504 IPC was registered by the police on 6-12-2000. After investigation charge-sheet was filed before the Chief Judicial Magistrate. The said co-accused, who had been granted bail, were not attending Court of the Magistrate and appeared only after issuance of bailable warrants against them. On 3-5-2001 the High Court granted bail to both the accused persons. The High Court rejected the application for cancellation of the bail and, therefore, the instant appeal was filed before the Supreme Court

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

Grant of bail though is a discretionary order — but, however, calls for exercise of such a discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. Order for bail bereft of any cogent reason cannot be sustained. While placement of the accused in the society, though may be considered but that by itself cannot be a guiding factor in the matter of grant of bail and the same ought always to be coupled with other circumstances warranting the grant of bail. The nature of the offence is one of the basic considerations for the grant of bail — more heinous is the crime, the greater is the chance of rejection of the bail, though, however, dependent on the factual matrix of the matter. (Para 3)

Certain other relevant considerations, which are only illustrative and not exhaustive, are as follows:

(a) not only the nature of accusations but the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of the supporting evidence,

(b) reasonable apprehension of tampering with the witnesses or apprehension of threat to the complainant,

(c) prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge, and

(d) frivolity and genuineness of the prosecution, and it is only the element of genuineness that has to be considered in the matter of grant of bail, and in the event of some doubt as to the genuineness of the prosecution, in the normal course of events, the accused is entitled to an order of bail. (Para 4)

Although the availability of overwhelming circumstances is necessary for an order as regards the cancellation of a bail order, the basic criterion, however, is interference or even an attempt to interfere with the due course of administration of justice and/or any abuse of the indulgence/privilege granted to the accused. The incident occurred at the time when the election was going on and the murder was said to have been committed in broad daylight by reason of interference of the deceased when the informant was prohibited from casting his vote. The situation is rather grave and having regard to the same, the High Court on 29-8-2000 refused the application for bail. (Para 8)

Undoubtedly, considerations applicable to the grant of bail and considerations for cancellation of such an order of bail are independent and do not overlap each other, but in the event of non-consideration of considerations relevant for the purpose of grant of bail and in the event an earlier order of rejection available on the records, it is a duty incumbent on the High Court to explicitly state the reasons as to why the sudden departure in the order of grant as against the rejection just about a month ago. The High Court has not recorded any such reason. The subsequent FIR was on record containing charges under Sections 323 and 504 IPC in which the charge-sheet has already been issued — the court ought to take note of the facts on record rather than ignore them. In any event, the discretion to be used shall always have to be strictly in accordance with law and not dehors the same. The consideration of the period of one year spent in jail cannot be a relevant consideration in the matter of grant of bail, more so by reason of the fact that the offence charged is that of murder under Section 302 IPC having the punishment of death or life imprisonment. (Para 9)

The High Court has committed a manifest error in the matter of grant of bail when public tranquillity was disturbed on the election day and when there was an obstruction to the exercise of a right guaranteed under the Constitution and when there was an existence of crime against the society at large. Irrespective of different factors to be taken note of in regard to the cancellation of the grant of bail, interest of justice seems to be overwhelmingly in favour of the appellant herein in the matter of cancellation of the bail. His elder brother had been brutally murdered and the proceeding was pending before the Sessions Judge. It is during the period when the accused persons were enlarged on bail that another FIR was recorded and the charge-sheet having been filed, the Court ought to have taken a serious note of these factual details. Tampering with the evidence and threatening of the witnesses are two basic grounds for cancellation of bail — both these two factors stand alleged and by reason of subsequent filing of the charge-sheet therein, there should have been some mention of it in the order for grant of bail. The factum of the second charge-sheet has been omitted in its entirety. (Para 10)

The order of the High Court stands set aside and quashed. The bail order as granted by the High Court stands cancelled and the private respondents be rearrested forthwith. (Para 11). Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688: AIR 2002 SC 1475.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2002]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415; Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT of Delhi, (2001) 4 SCC 280: 2001 SCC (Cri) 674, relied on

(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences

See also Section 437, '(4) Grounds for bail — Generally', and

'(5) Grounds for bail in murder cases', above

[6457] — S. 437 — Bail — Grant of — Offences under S. 13, Prevention of Corruption Act as well as Ss. 467, 468 and 120-B IPC — Appellant in jail for a period of more than one year — No necessity for keeping him as an undertrial prisoner any more — Hence, appellant released on bail imposing certain conditions — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 2). Sri Ram Choubey v. State of Bihar, (2002) 10 SCC 199: 2004 SCC (Cri) 465: AIR 2002 SC 2338.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-4-2001]

(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences (contd.)

[6458] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Rejection of — Grounds for — Sustainability — Accused charged under S. 7 of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 for demanding a bribe of Rs 470 for issue of coal release order, which entailed a maximum punishment of 5 years — Accused in jail for 3 years — Directions of High Court for expeditious disposal of trial not complied with by trial court — High Court rejecting the bail application without going into the facts and circumstances of the case and examining the matter in depth — Only ground for rejection was that the bail application had been rejected five times earlier — Strongly deprecating the practice adopted by High Court, bail granted to the appellant (Paras 4, 8 and 9). Bisheshwar Ganjhu v. State of Jharkhand, (2007) 15 SCC 736.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-2-2003]

[6459] — S. 437 — Bail — Grant of — Criminal conspiracy — Cheating and falsification of accounts — Embezzlement of amount to the extent of one crore of rupees — Accused languishing in jail for a long time — Trial court directed to complete the trial within three months else the accused shall be released on bail provided that the delay in conducting the trial is not attributable to the accused — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B, 468 and 477-A — Constitution of India — Art. 21. Mahesh Kumar Bhawsinghka v. State of Delhi, (2000) 9 SCC 383: 2001 SCC (Cri) 400: 2000 Cri LJ 2786.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-2000]

[6460] — S. 437 — Bail — Where appellants, charged with misappropriating Rs 75,000 and charged under Ss. 406/420/34 IPC, had been in custody for 9 months and the earlier High Court order was that if trial did not commence within six months, prayer for bail could be renewed, held, case for grant of bail had been made out (Para 4). Ram Narayan Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 55: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1157: AIR 2000 SC 1945.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-2000]

[6461] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Fraudulent transactions aggregating to more than Rs 50 crores — Accused sharebroker, apparently not directly involved in the fraud — Accused directed to be released on bail subject to certain conditions (Para 3). Rajendra Kumar Dhanraj Banthia v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 13 SCC 238: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 147.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-2003]

[6462] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of, whether justified — Free fight between two groups — Several persons from both the sides caused injuries to the other side and some succumbed to injuries — While several accused received injuries, Respondent 4 did not sustain any injury — Respondent 4 claiming to be a Bank Manager posted at another place and not present at the place and time of occurrence — Eyewitness version that deceased was attacked by several persons — Held, if different persons have been alleged to have caused injuries to the deceased, then on the face of it, it cannot be said with certainty at this stage that it was Respondent 4 who caused injuries to the deceased or was the only person who was responsible for causing injuries resulting in death of the deceased — High Court was, therefore, justified in taking the view that case was made out by Respondent 4 for grant of bail, although other accused persons have been refused bail. Azhar Sah v. State of Bihar, (2008) 5 SCC 82: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 518: 2008 Cri LJ 2622.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-2008]

[6463] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Offence under S. 326 IPC — Grievous hurt by dangerous weapons or means — Trial delayed — Bail in case of — Appellant-accused having been in jail for about one year pending appeal against their conviction and punishment of 3 years' imprisonment, and there being no likelihood of the appeal being heard in near future, bail granted — Penal Code, 1860, S. 326. Ganpat Shankar Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 12 SCC 279.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2005]

[6464] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Cancellation of — Respondent-accused N and A convicted under S. 304-A r/w S. 36 IPC, while respondent-accused S and G convicted under Ss. 304-A, 337 and S. 338 r/w S. 36 IPC in Uphaar tragedy case, granted bail by High Court — Propriety — Held, it is well settled that in an appeal against conviction under these sections, the offences being bailable, bail is granted without much ado but, in the facts and circumstances of the present case, especially in view of the conduct of these accused persons after grant of bail during trial, the High Court was not justified in granting bail to them — Impugned order set aside — Directions issued for expeditious disposal of the case — Since Single Judge who was presently hearing the appeals was not in a position to devote full time as he was in charge of the original jurisdiction, matter directed to be placed before any other appropriate Judge nominated by the Chief Justice of the Delhi High Court — Further, transferee court directed to hear the appeals on day-to-day basis for the whole day as agreed to by the parties — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-A, 337 and 338 r/w S. 36 (Paras 3, 4, 9, 10, 12 and 13). Assn. of Victims of Uphaar Tragedy v. Gopal Ansal, (2008) 14 SCC 611.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2008]

[6465] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Rejection of — Propriety — Case involving smuggling of antiques — High Court rejecting appellant's second bail application who was alleged to be involved in several nefarious activities of smuggling of antiques, particularly idols, to foreign countries for heavy sums of money — Only distinguishing feature pointed out by appellant for seeking reconsideration of bail application was the order of discharge, which was set aside by High Court — Held, no interference with impugned judgment called for — Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Sites and Remains Act, 1958, Ss. 30 and 25 — Ancient Monuments Preservation Act, 1904, S. 17 (Paras 1, 5 and 12). Vaman Narain Ghiya v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 2 SCC 281.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2008]

[6466] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail under NDPS Act — Approach — Appeal from an order granting bail and an order directing cancellation of bail, distinguished — Factors to be considered while entertaining an application for cancellation of bail, stated — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 37(2) & (1)

On 14-8-2004, the luggage of two persons travelling in a bus were searched and 2 kg of contraband (heroin) was recovered. Besides a purported statement that the contraband (heroin) was meant to be delivered to the appellant-accused, no other material was available on record to sustain the charge against the appellant. The designated chemical laboratory reported to the investigating officer that the seized article did not contain any contraband substance. The court, therefore, granted bail to the appellant-accused. A second sample sent to another laboratory reported that the seized sample contained 2.6% of diacetyl morphine (heroin). On the basis of the second test, bail of the appellant-accused, granted earlier, was cancelled. A revision filed thereagainst in the High Court was dismissed by reason of the impugned order.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The question, however, as to whether the contraband found came within the purview of the commercial quantity within the meaning of Section 2(vii-a) or not is one of the factors which should be taken into consideration by the courts in the matter of grant or refusal to grant bail. It is true that the general principles of grant of bail are not applicable in a case involving the NDPS Act. However, even a distinction is made as regards grant of bail in relation to a commercial quantity and a small quantity. Even, according to the Central Revenue Control Laboratory, New Delhi, only 2.6% of the sample sent was found to be containing heroin. The quantity, thus, alleged to have been recovered from the co-accused persons could be said to be an intermediate quantity and, thus, the rigours of the provisions of Section 37 of the Act relating to grant of bail may not be justified. (Paras 12 and 11)

Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 (the Act) although is a self-contained code, the application of the provisions of CrPC, however, either expressly or by necessary implication, have not been excluded. There exists a distinction between an appeal from an order granting bail and an order directing cancellation of bail. While entertaining an application for cancellation of bail, it must be found that the accused had misused the liberty granted to him as a result whereof: (a) he has attempted to tamper with evidence; (b) he has attempted to influence the witnesses; (c) there is a possibility of the accused to abscond and, therefore, there is a possibility that the accused may not be available for trial. (Para 10). Sami Ullaha v. Narcotic Central Bureau, (2008) 16 SCC 471: AIR 2009 SC 1357: 2009 Cri LJ 1306.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2008]

Ouseph v. State of Kerala, (2004) 4 SCC 446: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1303; E. Micheal Raj v. Narcotic Control Bureau, (2008) 5 SCC 161: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 558, relied on

[6467] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail under NDPS Act — Cancellation of — Considerations appropriate to the stage — Distinguished from considerations that need to be gone through during trial — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 37(2) & (1)

For the purpose of grant of bail, the court cannot be said to have committed any illegality in relying on the definition of "chemical examiner" in Rule 2(c) of the Rules because the authorised laboratory at Neemuch categorically found that the seized substance did not contain any contraband. It is not necessary to consider the matter in depth as to whether the definition of "chemical examiner" in Rule 2(c) of the Rules is exhaustive, but then this is a question involving cancellation of an order of bail. A person's liberty is protected in terms of Article 21 of the Constitution of India. When two views are possible, the view which leans in favour of an accused must be favoured. (Paras 14 and 15)

(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences (contd.)

There exists a difference of opinion insofar as the opinion of the laboratory (Central Revenue Control Laboratory, New Delhi) conducting test of the second sample that it contained 2.6% heroin is concerned. The effect of the said contradictory report must be gone into only at trial. It is not the stage where the court is required to take into consideration that a judgment of conviction is possible to be recorded on the basis of a confessional statement made by an accused. It may be so, but the question is that when the prosecution itself had failed to show that the seized substance contained any narcotic substance or psychotropic substance, the question of reliance on the confession of the accused does not arise; at least at this stage. For the purpose of cancellation of bail, the statutory requirements must be satisfied. The appellant has failed to do so. For the reasons aforementioned, the impugned judgment cannot be sustained which was set aside. (Paras 15 to 19). Sami Ullaha v. Narcotic Central Bureau, (2008) 16 SCC 471: AIR 2009 SC 1357: 2009 Cri LJ 1306.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2008]

Noor Aga v. State of Punjab, (2008) 16 SCC 417; State of Mauritius v. Khoyratty, (2007) 1 AC 80: (2006) 2 WLR 1330: 2006 UKPC 13; State (Delhi Admn.) v. Sanjay Gandhi, (1978) 2 SCC 411: 1978 SCC (Cri) 223, relied on

[6468] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail under NDPS Act — Cancellation of — Overriding considerations — Seized substance not proved as contraband — Confession under S. 67 of co-accused that substance was heroin — Effect — Held, when the prosecution itself had failed to show that the seized substance contained any narcotic substance or psychotropic substance, the question of reliance on the confession of the accused does not arise

For the purpose of grant of bail, the court cannot be said to have committed any illegality in relying on the definition of "chemical examiner" in Rule 2(c) of the Rules because the authorised laboratory at Neemuch categorically found that the seized substance did not contain any contraband. It is not necessary to consider the matter in depth as to whether the definition of "chemical examiner" in Rule 2(c) of the Rules is exhaustive, but then this is a question involving cancellation of an order of bail. A person's liberty is protected in terms of Article 21 of the Constitution of India. When two views are possible, the view which leans in favour of an accused must be favoured. (Paras 14 and 15)

There exists a difference of opinion insofar as the opinion of the laboratory (Central Revenue Control Laboratory, New Delhi) conducting test of the second sample that it contained 2.6% heroin is concerned. The effect of the said contradictory report must be gone into only at trial. It is not the stage where the court is required to take into consideration that a judgment of conviction is possible to be recorded on the basis of a confessional statement made by an accused. It may be so, but the question is that when the prosecution itself had failed to show that the seized substance contained any narcotic substance or psychotropic substance, the question of reliance on the confession of the accused does not arise; at least at this stage. For the purpose of cancellation of bail, the statutory requirements must be satisfied. The appellant has failed to do so. For the reasons aforementioned, the impugned judgment cannot be sustained which was set aside. (Paras 15 to 19). Sami Ullaha v. Narcotic Central Bureau, (2008) 16 SCC 471: AIR 2009 SC 1357: 2009 Cri LJ 1306.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2008]

Noor Aga v. State of Punjab, (2008) 16 SCC 417; State of Mauritius v. Khoyratty, (2007) 1 AC 80: (2006) 2 WLR 1330: 2006 UKPC 13; State (Delhi Admn.) v. Sanjay Gandhi, (1978) 2 SCC 411: 1978 SCC (Cri) 223, relied on

(7) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application

See also under Section 439, below

[6469] — S. 437 — Bail — Application for — Need for consideration on merits — Bail application rejected by High Court, without considering on merits, on ground that the appellant had intentionally obtained an order from the trial court (court in seisin) to move out of Siwan Jail to take oath as MP at Delhi, when his application for bail was pending before High Court — Contempt proceedings against the appellant as well as the Presiding Officer therefor, pending in the High Court — Held, in these circumstances, the appropriate course to be followed by the High Court would be to decide the contempt proceedings and the application for bail filed by the appellant on merits together or decide the contempt proceedings in the first instance and then take up the application for bail for decision on merits immediately thereafter — Impugned order so far as it relates to rejection of appellant's bail set aside but that relating to initiation of contempt proceedings undisturbed (Paras 3 and 6). Mohd. Shahabuddin v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 565.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Shivaraj V. Patil and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-11-2004]

[6470] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Consideration of question of — Examination of material on record — Duty of court — Held, though a detailed examination of the evidence (material collected by prosecution) is to be avoided but to ensure that there is no prejudging and no prejudice, a brief examination to be satisfied about the existence or otherwise of a prima facie case is necessary (Para 22). State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2): AIR 2005 SC 3490: (2005) 123 DLT 362: 2005 Cri LJ 4149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2005]

[6471] — S. 437 — Bail — Grant of — Recording evidence — Bail order earlier set aside by Supreme Court with liberty to move the Designated Court for bail at any subsequent stage — Accordingly fresh bail application moved — Instead of recording any fresh evidence, bail again granted by Designated Court by appreciating the statements of witnesses and material collected at investigation stage — Held on facts, Designated Court grossly erred in foreclosing the trial by pre-judging the evidence which was yet to come on record — In absence of any fresh material justifying release of accused on bail, order granting bail must be set aside. State of Maharashtra v. Anand Chintaman Dighe, (1991) 3 SCC 209: 1991 SCC (Cri) 500: AIR 1991 SC 1603.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Ranganath Misra, C.J. and Kuldip Singh and P.B. Sawant, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1991]

[6472] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Application of mind by court imperative though detailed reasons unnecessary — Factors to be considered by court: Whether accused had requisite mens rea and whether he may not be ultimately convicted for offence under the Act, accused's culpability and involvement in commission of an organised crime directly or indirectly and whether having regard to accused's antecedents and other relevant aspects there was probability of his not committing any offence under the Act in future — Court has to record its findings which would be only tentative based on broad probabilities — Where case is based on circumstantial evidence, court should consider whether all the links in the chain of circumstances are complete — Such findings are required to be recorded for the purpose of arriving at an objective finding on the basis of materials on record only for grant of bail and for no other purpose — It should also be kept in mind that the Act does not differentiate between offences entailing life imprisonment and those entailing only one or two years' imprisonment, that some acts of commission or omission on the part of a public servant may attract disciplinary proceedings but not penal provisions and that merely because some allegations have been made against a high-ranking officer which cannot be brushed aside, it is by itself not sufficient to deny him bail — Onus of proof not on accused — Having regard to facts and circumstances of the case (relating to printing of counterfeit stamps and forgery by Telgi), held, it cannot be concluded that appellant, then a Commissioner of Police, prima facie committed offences under Ss. 3(2) and 24 of the Act, hence appellant entitled to bail — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 101 and 102 — Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (30 of 1999), S. 21(4) and Ss. 3(2) & 24

One Telgi was arrested and proceeded against for alleged commission of offence of printing counterfeit stamps and forgery in various States including the State of Maharashtra. He was lodged in jail. During the appellant's tenure as Commissioner of Police, Pune, fake stamp papers worth Rs 2.98 lakhs were seized whereupon a first information report was registered under Sections 120-B, 255, 249, 260, 263(a) and (b), 478, 472 and 474 read with Section 34 IPC but later a proposal was mooted to invoke Section 3 of MCOCA and upon obtaining the opinion of the Senior Public Prosecutor therefor, the same was invoked against the accused T. On the ground of alleged involvement of the appellant in the said case, he was arrested and was remanded to police custody and thereafter to judicial custody. His application for bail was rejected by the Special Court whereupon he filed similar application before the High Court. The role of the appellant was said to be rendition of help and support to organised crime syndicate by certain acts of omission and commission i.e. by rendering help or support to an Assistant Commissioner of Police (Crime Branch), a co-accused when he was Commissioner of Police, Pune and through an API, co-accused while he was the Commissioner of Police, Mumbai. The High Court rejected the bail application of the appellant.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court considered the matter from a wrong perspective. Only because the appellant had the power, the same would not by itself lead to a conclusion that he was a privy to the crime. For all intent and purport, the High Court has placed the onus of proof upon the appellant, which is impermissible. The materials on record show that the High Court may not be entirely correct in coming to the conclusion that the appellant prima facie committed an offence under Section 3(2) as well as Section 24 of the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999. The order dated 4-11-2004 granting interim bail to the appellant should continue subject to the same conditions. (Paras 51, 62, 81 and 82)

(7) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application (contd.)

The restrictions on the power of the court to grant bail should not be pushed too far. If the court, having regard to the materials brought on record, is satisfied that in all probability the applicant for bail may not be ultimately convicted, an order granting bail may be passed. The satisfaction of the court as regards his likelihood of not committing an offence while on bail must be construed to mean an offence under the Act and not any offence whatsoever be it a minor or major offence. If such an expansive meaning is given, even likelihood of commission of an offence under Section 279 of the Indian Penal Code may debar the court from releasing the accused on bail. A statute, it is trite, should not be interpreted in such a manner as would lead to absurdity. What would further be necessary on the part of the court is to see the culpability of the accused and his involvement in the commission of an organised crime either directly or indirectly. The court at the time of considering the application for grant of bail shall consider the question from the angle as to whether he was possessed of the requisite mens rea. Every little omission or commission, negligence or dereliction may not lead to a possibility of his having culpability in the matter which is not the sine qua non for attracting the provisions of the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999. A person in a given situation may not do that which he ought to have done. The court may in a situation of this nature keep in mind the broad principles of law that some acts of omission and commission on the part of a public servant may attract disciplinary proceedings but may not attract a penal provision. (Para 38)

Section 21(4) of the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 does not make any distinction between an offence which entails punishment of life imprisonment and an imprisonment for a year or two. It does not provide that even in case a person remains behind the bars for a period exceeding three years, although his involvement may be in terms of Section 24 of the Act, the court is prohibited to enlarge him on bail. Each case, therefore, must be considered on its own facts. The question as to whether he is involved in the commission of organised crime or abetment thereof must be judged objectively. Only because some allegations have been made against a high-ranking officer, which cannot be brushed aside, may not by itself be sufficient to continue to keep him behind the bars although on an objective consideration the court may come to the conclusion that the evidences against him are not such as would lead to his conviction. In case of circumstantial evidence like the present one, not only culpability or mens rea of the accused should be prima facie established, the court must also consider the question as to whether the circumstantial evidence is such whereby all the links in the chain are complete. (Para 43)

It is, furthermore, trite that for the purpose of considering an application for grant of bail, although detailed reasons are not necessary to be assigned, the order granting bail must demonstrate application of mind at least in serious cases as to why the applicant has been granted or denied the privilege of bail. (Para 45)

The duty of the court at this stage is not to weigh the evidence meticulously but to arrive at a finding on the basis of broad probabilities. However, while dealing with a special statute like the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 having regard to the provisions contained in Section 21(4) of this Act, the court may have to probe into the matter deeper so as to enable it to arrive at a finding that the materials collected against the accused during the investigation may not justify a judgment of conviction. The findings recorded by the court while granting or refusing bail undoubtedly would be tentative in nature, which may not have any bearing on the merit of the case and the trial court would, thus, be free to decide the case on the basis of evidence adduced at the trial, without in any manner being prejudiced thereby. (Para 46). Ranjitsing Brahmajeetsing Sharma v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 5 SCC 294: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1057: AIR 2005 SC 2277: 2005 Cri LJ 2533.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, B.P. Singh and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-2005]

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; Prakash Kumar v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 2 SCC 409: 2005 SCC (Cri) 518; Abdulla Mohammed Pagarkar v. State (UT, Goa, Daman and Diu), (1980) 3 SCC 110: 1980 SCC (Cri) 546; C. Chenga Reddy v. State of A.P., (1996) 10 SCC 193: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1205; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Jayendra Saraswathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2005) 2 SCC 13: 2005 SCC (Cri) 481; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42: 2005 SCC (Cri) 489, relied on

Ranjitsing Brahmajeetsing Sharma v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 4 Bom LR 119, reversed

[6473] — S. 437 — Grant or refusal of bail — Proper mode for — Held, is the function of court to be discharged judiciously and not arbitrarily (Para 5). Suresh Kumar Somabhai Rana v. Ashok Kumar Haraklal Mittal, (2009) 14 SCC 292: (2003) 1 Guj LR 686.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2002]

[6474] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of by Magistrate in a haste, with oblique motive, in arbitrary exercise of discretion vested in him, by taking into consideration totally irrelevant documents never referred to in complaint at all — Complaint filed by respondent wife against appellant husband and others under S. 498-A IPC — Appellant surrendering and moving bail application on the same day, which was taken up for hearing by Magistrate on that day itself, thereby enlarging appellant on bail, without hearing either respondent wife or her counsel — As judicial discretion was exercised by Magistrate in an arbitrary manner and with oblique motives, Sessions Court was justified in cancelling the bail — High Court rightly confirmed the same

The facts of the present case indicate that the appellant himself and others had moved the Sessions Court by way of filing revision for quashing summons issued by the Magistrate and, therefore, the Sessions Judge had called for the record from the court of Judicial Magistrate, First Class. (Para 17)

On 19-10-2002, the appellant had, all of a sudden decided to surrender before the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, and presented a bail application. The Magistrate, found that the record of the case was lying in the Sessions Court with reference to the revision which was filed by the appellant and others. The Magistrate did not think it proper to wait at all and by passing a judicial order called for the record pending in a superior court. (Para 18)

In view of the judicial order passed by the Magistrate, the Registry of the Sessions Court forthwith sent the record of the case to the court of the Judicial Magistrate, First Class. Thereafter, the Magistrate proceeded to hear the bail application submitted by the appellant. (Para 19)

In the order summoning the record, it was nowhere indicated by the Magistrate that the application submitted by the appellant would be heard on the same day i.e. on 19-10-2002. The advocate for the complainant was not put on notice at all and, therefore, could not remain present at the time when the bail application was taken up for hearing. (Para 20)

The Magistrate considered the documents produced by the appellant. After considering those documents, the Magistrate enlarged the appellant on bail. (Para 21)

The undue haste exhibited by the Magistrate as well as his decision to hear the bail application on the same day without hearing the learned counsel for the complainant, compelled the Sessions Judge to draw adverse inferences against the Magistrate. (Para 22)

On the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the Sessions Judge was justified in drawing adverse inferences against the Magistrate and holding that the order granting bail was passed by the Judicial Magistrate for considerations other than judicial. (Para 23)

Hence, the High Court did not commit any error in confirming the order of the Sessions Judge cancelling the bail which was arbitrarily granted to the appellant by the Judicial Magistrate, First Class. (Paras 25 to 27). Subodh Kumar Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2009) 14 SCC 638: (2009) 80 AIC 74 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-2009]

State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2), clarified

[6475] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Considerations for — Restated — Elaborate analysis or exhaustive exploration of merit not to be done (Para 11). Vaman Narain Ghiya v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 2 SCC 281.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2008]

Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508; State of Maharashtra v. Anand Chintaman Dighe, (1990) 1 SCC 397: 1990 SCC (Cri) 142; State v. Surendranath Mohanty, (1990) 3 OCR 462, relied on [6476] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Duty of court while considering application made for — Held, though detailed examination of the merits of the case is not required, but court to exercise its discretion on the basis of well-settled principles and in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course (Para 5). Ajay Kumar Sharma v. State of U.P., (2005) 7 SCC 507: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1702.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, B.N. Srikrishna and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2005]

[6477] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant/Refusal of — Reasoned order — Necessity of — Held, though a reasoned order needs to be passed while disposing of a bail application, yet, it is trite that detailed reasons touching the merit of the matter should not be given, which may prejudice the accused (Para 16). Afzal Khan v. State of Gujarat, (2007) 9 SCC 387: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 563: AIR 2007 SC 2111: 2007 Cri LJ 3223.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-5-2007]

(7) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application (contd.)

[6478] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Court's discretion must be exercised in a judicious manner — Court must be satisfied as to whether a prima facie case made out — Order granting bail must indicate reasons therefor, particularly where accused is charged of committing serious offence like murder — Any order sans reasons would be vitiated by non-application of mind — Factors to be taken into consideration while dealing with bail application

The High Court's order shows complete non-application of mind. The reasoning of the High Court is totally fallacious. The trial court was informed of the fact that P was pursuing her studies abroad and would be available to appear as witness during the summer vacation. The fact that the trial court adjourned the matter for a few dates notwithstanding this intimation cannot be a factor to release Respondent 2 who chose not to appear and made a prayer for exemption on the ground that he was in custody in some other case. The details of that case were not furnished to the Court though ample opportunity was granted. The appellant is, therefore, justified in her grievances that there has been misuse of the liberty and that the trial had been unnecessarily prolonged. The evidence of P was of vital importance to the case, but she had to go back to pursue her studies. This is a factor which has been lost sight of. The High Court instead has unnecessarily emphasised on the number of adjournments which has no relevance. The order of bail passed by the High Court is not sustainable and is accordingly set aside. (Paras 9 and 12)

Though detailed examination of the evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case is to be avoided by the court while passing orders on bail applications, yet a court dealing with the bail application should be satisfied as to whether there is a prima facie case, but exhaustive exploration of the merits of the case is not necessary. The court dealing with the application for bail is required to exercise its discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. (Para 9)

There is a need to indicate in the order, reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted, particularly where an accused was charged of having committed a serious offence. It is necessary for the courts dealing with application for bail to consider among other circumstances, the following factors also before granting bail, they are:

1. the nature of accusation and the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of supporting evidence;

2. reasonable apprehension of tampering of the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant;

3. prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge. (Para 10)

Any order dehors such reasons suffers from non-application of mind. (Para 11). Suman Pandey v. State of U.P., (2007) 12 SCC 364: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 394: (2007) 3 All LJ 162: 2007 Cri LJ 1789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-2-2007]

Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157; V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 560; Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974; Kamaljit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 7 SCC 226: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1668; Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2006) 12 SCC 131: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 568; Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohd., (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669, relied on [6479] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Order granting or refusing bail — Need for reasons — Reasons, wherever necessary, may be given only indicating the considerations that may have weighed with the court in passing the order but without prejudicing the case of the parties — High Court while granting bail to respondents in pending appeal before it, passed detailed reasoned order holding that prosecution case has no merit — Held, High Court erred in doing so — Findings recorded in the order granting bail ought to be eschewed when appeal itself is taken up for hearing. Imran Ali v. Habibullah, (2007) 12 SCC 506: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 274: (2007) 53 AIC 65 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-3-2007]

[6480] — Ss. 437 and 439(2) — Bail — Grant or refusal of — Discretionary jurisdiction of court should be exercised carefully and cautiously by balancing rights of the accused and interests of society — Court must also indicate brief reasons for granting or refusing bail — Held on facts, High Court erred in granting bail to only one accused (respondent) out of several accused facing trial for offences under Ss. 302, 307, 323 r/w Ss. 147, 148 and 149 IPC without indicating any reasons therefor — Application for cancellation of bail, however, sent to Sessions Judge before whom the trial was proceeding

The judgment rendered by the High Court cannot be approved. The provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code confer discretionary jurisdiction on criminal courts to grant bail to the accused pending trials or in appeals against convictions. Since the jurisdiction is discretionary it is required to be exercised with great care and caution by balancing valuable right of liberty of an individual and the interest of the society in general. In granting or refusing the bail, the courts are required to indicate, maybe very briefly, the reasons for grant or refusal of bail. The jurisdiction is not to be exercised in a casual and cavalier fashion as has been done by the learned Judge in this case. (Paras 7 and 4)

However, in this case it is not necessary to undertake the exercise of going through the police papers and the evidence so far recorded by the trial court to consider the prayer of the complainant for cancellation of bail since it has been informed that the sessions trial in which the accused was enlarged on bail is proceeding with expedition and a major part of the evidence has been recorded. The Sessions Judge, therefore, is directed to consider the present application of the complainant for cancellation of bail on the basis of the police papers and the evidence so far recorded in the case. It is left to the judicious discretion of the learned Sessions Judge to continue the bail or cancel the same after hearing the counsel for the prosecution and the accused. (Paras 7 and 8). Mansab Ali v. Irsan, (2003) 1 SCC 632: 2003 SCC (Cri) 399: AIR 2003 SC 707.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-12-2002]

[6481] — Ss. 437(1) & (4) and 439(1) — Grant of bail — Mode of exercise of court's discretion regarding — Held, should be exercised in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course but for cogent reasons — Factors to be taken into consideration in this regard, however not meant to be exhaustive, restated

Grant of bail though is a discretionary order — but, however, calls for exercise of such a discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. Order for bail bereft of any cogent reason cannot be sustained. While placement of the accused in the society, though may be considered but that by itself cannot be a guiding factor in the matter of grant of bail and the same ought always to be coupled with other circumstances warranting the grant of bail. The nature of the offence is one of the basic considerations for the grant of bail — more heinous is the crime, the greater is the chance of rejection of the bail, though, however, dependent on the factual matrix of the matter. (Para 3)

Certain other relevant considerations, which are only illustrative and not exhaustive, are as follows:

(a) not only the nature of accusations but the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of the supporting evidence,

(b) reasonable apprehension of tampering with the witnesses or apprehension of threat to the complainant,

(c) prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge, and

(d) frivolity and genuineness of the prosecution, and it is only the element of genuineness that has to be considered in the matter of grant of bail, and in the event of some doubt as to the genuineness of the prosecution, in the normal course of events, the accused is entitled to an order of bail. (Para 4). Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688: AIR 2002 SC 1475.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2002]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415; Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT of Delhi, (2001) 4 SCC 280: 2001 SCC (Cri) 674, relied on

(8) Temporary/Interim bail

See also Section 438, below

[6482] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Temporary bail, as granted to appellant in C.R. Patil case, (2005) 11 SCC 119 — Compliance with the hope expressed by the Supreme Court while granting temporary bail — Appellant fully paying his debt to the claimant Bank under One-Time Settlement Scheme (OTS) and the Bank also furnishing certificate to this effect — Lavad case filed against appellant through Official Liquidator of the Bank also withdrawn — Respondent State also expressing no objection to the settlement between the parties — Appellant's properties ordered to be released — Title deeds and documents, if any, also directed to handed back to appellant (Paras 11 and 13). C.R. Patil v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 12 SCC 741.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

[6483] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Temporary bail — Considerations involved — Misappropriation/misuse of funds/loans from cooperative societies/banks — SLPs pending against order of High Court declining to grant bail to petitioner-accused — Accused already having been granted temporary bail by Supreme Court on earlier occasion, term of which had come to an end — No violations of terms and conditions of earlier grant of bail — Petitioners also willing to pay misappropriated amounts, and requesting bail on ground that they would utilise opportunity to enter into meaningful negotiations with respondents, and to do all necessary acts to ensure repayment —

(8) Temporary/Interim bail (contd.)

Held, in such circumstances retention of petitioners would be adverse to interest of the several investors/depositors of the bank, while their release on temporary bail is likely to be of benefit to them — Hence petitioners released on temporary bail and urged that they make a genuine effort to use their liberty to clear their debts — Constitution of India —Art. 136. C.R. Patil v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 11 SCC 119: AIR 2005 SC 3117: 2005 Cri LJ 3452.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and C.K. Thakker and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-7-2005]

[6484] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of interim bail pending regular bail application — Scope — Interim bail pending disposal of bail application — Grant of — Held, reputation of a person is his valuable asset, and is a facet of his right under Art. 21 — Ordinarily bail application is listed after few days from the date it is applied for since the court concerned gets an opportunity to look into case diary — But till then applicant has to remain in jail and his reputation gets tarnished irreparably even after he is released on bail — Hence, court concerned has discretionary power to grant interim bail pending his regular bail application, which is inherent in its power to grant bail — On facts directed that petitioners' application for interim bail to be considered on same day, provided such application is made — Constitution of India — Art. 21 (Paras 2 and 3). Sukhwant Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 7 SCC 559: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 487.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2009]

Kamlendra Pratap Singh v. State of U.P., (2009) 4 SCC 437: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 330; Deepak Bajaj v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 16 SCC 14, followed [6485] — Ss. 437 and 439(2) — Grant of provisional bail by Magistrate despite rejection of two earlier bail applications by the High Court — Held, not only contrary to settled principles of judicial propriety but also contrary to the statutory provision — But since at a later stage Magistrate himself cancelled the bail, no order on application for cancellation of bail need be passed — However, in facts and circumstances of the case, Chief Justice of High Court directed to take action against the said Magistrate on administrative side. Bimla Devi v. State of Bihar, (1994) 2 SCC 8: 1994 SCC (Cri) 472: 1994 Cri LJ 638.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-1994]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on

(9) Successive/repeated bail applications

[6486] — Ss. 437 & 439 — Bail application before High Court — Practice — Judge before whom successive bail applications to be placed — Where earlier bail applications of the accused already rejected by a Judge of the High Court, subsequent application should also be placed before the same Judge

The long-standing convention and judicial discipline also required that the respondent's subsequent bail application should have been placed before the same Judge who had passed earlier orders. This convention has its roots in principle. It prevents abuse of process of court inasmuch as an impression is not created that a litigant is shunting or selecting a court depending on whether the court is to his liking or not, and is encouraged to file successive applications without any new factor having cropped up. If successive bail applications on the same subject are permitted to be disposed of by different Judges there would be conflicting orders and a litigant would be pestering every Judge till he gets an order to his liking resulting in the credibility of the court and the confidence of the other side being put in issue and there would be wastage of court's time. Judicial discipline requires that such matters must be placed before the same Judge, if he is available for orders. Recalling of the earlier order in this case would rudely shake the confidence of the parties in the judicial process. Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 1987 SC 1613.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1987]

[6487] — S. 437 — Bail — Grant of — Repeated bail applications — Permissibility — Raising of additional points — Consideration of — Held, on facts, as several bail applications filed by appellant raising almost similar issues were rejected, no case for release on bail made out — However, present bail application is being dealt with as some additional points have been raised — Perusal of orders of trial court shows that defence was procrastinating in the matter and not permitting defence evidence to proceed to its conclusion — Hence, held, although appellant was fully justified in exercising his legal rights but it does not then behove him to say that trial was being unduly delayed — Moreover, appellant's medical papers also do not justify his release on bail even on medical grounds the more so as all facilities are being made available to him by jail authorities (Paras 2, 8, 9, 10 and 11). Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2008) 1 SCC 667: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 305: AIR 2008 SC 942: (2008) 63 AIC 192 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1033.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-2007]

[6488] — S. 437 — Successive bail applications — Permissibility — First bail application rejected — Second one is permissible only if it is under changed circumstances

It is true that successive bail applications are permissible under the changed circumstances. But without the change in the circumstances the second application would be deemed to be seeking review of the earlier judgment which is not permissible under criminal law. (Para 8)

Thus after rejecting the first application for bail, the impugned order of the High Court allowing the second application, having been passed in violation of the provisions of the Act by ignoring the mandatory requirements of Section 37 and the conditions governing the grant of bail under the Code of Criminal Procedure and is thus not sustainable. (Para 9). State of M.P. v. Kajad, (2001) 7 SCC 673: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1520: AIR 2001 SC 3317.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-9-2001]

Hari Singh Mann v. Harbhajan Singh Bajwa, (2001) 1 SCC 169: 2001 SCC (Cri) 113, relied on

[6489] — Ss. 437, 439, 300 and Chs. XXIX (Ss. 372 to 394) and XXX (Ss. 395 to 405) — Successive bail applications — When maintainable — Material change in fact or law — Findings of higher court or coordinate Bench — Binding effect of — Res judicata — Applicability — Held, though principles of res judicata and principles analogous thereto are not applicable in criminal proceedings, still the courts are bound by doctrine of judicial discipline, having regard to the hierarchical system prevailing in the country — Findings of a higher court or coordinate Bench must receive serious consideration at hands of court entertaining a bail application at a later stage when same had been rejected earlier — Due weight to be given to grounds which weighed with former or higher court in rejecting bail application — Further held, ordinarily, issues which had been canvassed earlier would not be permitted to reagitated on the same grounds, as the same would lead to speculation and uncertainty in the administration of justice and may lead to forum hunting — Only exception is if there has been a material change in the fact situation or in law which requires the earlier view being interfered with or has rendered the earlier finding obsolete — This is the limited area in which an accused who has been denied bail earlier, can move a subsequent application — Therefore, in view of guarantee conferred by Art. 21 of the Constitution, it is not open to the aggrieved person to make successive bail applications even on a ground already rejected by the courts earlier, including by the Apex Court of the country — On facts, first respondent making ninth bail application before High Court on ground (and contending the same on appeal before Supreme Court) that grounds (A) non-existence of prima facie case against him, and (B) lack of evidentiary value of a retracted confession of one of the key witnesses against him, had not been considered in the eight prior bail applications rejected either by High Court or Supreme Court — Held, from a perusal of one of the orders of the High Court and one of the Supreme Court, it is clear that said arguments of the respondent were negatived by both Courts — Therefore, counsel for respondent was in error in contending that the said arguments had not been considered previously — This ninth bail application, allowed by the High Court by the impugned order, was made only eleven days of the order of Supreme Court cancelling bail in respondent's eighth bail application — No fresh material, factual or legal had come into existence in the said eleven days, and nor was same pleaded by respondent before High Court — High Court in impugned order has reconsidered the very same two questions [(A) & (B) above] and by substituting its subjective satisfaction practically overruled findings of Supreme Court and High Court recorded in the earlier orders, without even discussing the findings and as if the case was being argued and considered by it for the first time — Approach of High Court to say the least, was irresponsible, contrary to the record and the law — Moreover, Jayendra Saraswathi case, (2005) 2 SCC 13 only distinguished the facts obtaining therein from the facts of this case, while referring to Kalyan Chandra Sarkar case, (2004) 7 SCC 528 (which denied bail to respondent in his 8th bail application), and did not overrule it — Therefore Jayendra Saraswathi case is of no assistance to the respondent-accused in this case — Hence allowing appeal, bail cancelled — Constitution of India, Arts. 144, 141 and 136 — CPC, 1908, S. 11

The principles of res judicata, and such analogous principles, although are not applicable in a criminal proceeding, still the courts are bound by the doctrine of judicial discipline, having regard to the hierarchical system prevailing in our country. The findings of a higher court or a coordinate Bench must receive serious consideration at the hands of the court entertaining a bail application at a later stage when the same had been rejected earlier. In such an event, the courts must give due weight to the grounds which weighed with the former or higher court in rejecting the bail application. Ordinarily, the issues which had been canvassed earlier would not be permitted to be reagitated on the same grounds, as the same would lead to speculation and uncertainty in the administration of justice and may lead to forum hunting. The decisions given by a superior forum, undoubtedly, are binding on the subordinate fora on the same issue even in bail matters unless of course, there is a material change in the fact situation calling for a different view being taken. Therefore, even though there is room for filing a subsequent bail application in cases where earlier applications have been rejected, the same can be done if there is a change in the fact situation or in law which requires the earlier view being interfered with or where the earlier finding has become obsolete. In such cases if the circumstances then prevailing require that such persons be released on bail, in spite of their earlier applications being rejected, the courts can do so. This is the limited area in which an accused who has been denied bail earlier, can move a subsequent application. Therefore, in view of the guarantee conferred on a person under Article 21 of the Constitution, it is not open to the aggrieved person to make successive bail applications even on a ground already rejected by the courts earlier, including the Apex Court of the country. (Paras 19, 18 and 20)

(9) Successive/repeated bail applications (contd.)

From the order of the High Court dated 5-11-2001 in Crl. Misc. No. 22243 of 2001 it is clear that that Court took into consideration the evidentiary value of the retracted confession and the existence of prima facie case. Therefore, counsel for the respondent was factually in error in contending that the High Court in any of the previous proceedings did not go into the said questions. Apart from the observations made by the High Court in the abovesaid petition from the judgment of the Supreme Court in Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528, it is clear that the Supreme Court negatived the argument of the respondent about the existence of a prima facie case. (Paras 25, 28 to 30)

The impugned order is pursuant to an application for grant of bail made by the respondent within 11 days of the order made by the Supreme Court cancelling bail in the respondent's 8th bail application. It is also an admitted fact that during these 11 days no fresh material, factual or legal, had come into existence nor has been pleaded by the respondent in the present application for bail before the High Court. A perusal of the impugned order clearly shows that the High Court proceeded to reconsider the very same two questions namely the existence of a prima facie case and the evidentiary value of retracted confession and by substituting its subjective satisfaction practically overruled the findings of the Supreme Court as well as that of the High Court recorded in the earlier orders, without even discussing these findings and as if the case was being argued and considered by the Court for the first time, even though the previous orders of the Supreme Court as well as that of the High Court were on record. The approach of the High Court in the impugned order to say the least was irresponsible, contrary to the records and law. (Paras 34 to 36)

While deciding the cases on facts, more so in criminal cases, the court should bear in mind that each case must rest on its own facts and the similarity of facts in one case cannot be used to bear in mind the conclusion of fact in another case. In the case of Jayendra Saraswathi, (2005) 2 SCC 13, the Supreme Court only distinguished the facts of that case from the facts of the present case in hand; and the question of overruling a judgment on facts does not arise unless, of course, the Court is sitting in appeal over the judgment sought to be distinguished. The Supreme Court in Kalyan Chandra Sarkar case, (2004) 7 SCC 528, decided the said case on the facts of that case only, so the question of the said case being overruled in another case does not arise. It is clear from the perusal of Jayendra Saraswathi case as well as Kalyan Chandra Sarkar case that both the cases have been decided by this Court on their individual facts only. It is also a well-established principle that while considering the ratio laid down in one case, the court will have to bear in mind that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be true, since the generality of expressions which may be found therein are not intended to be expositions of the whole of the law, but are governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. A case is only an authority for what it actually decides, and not what logically follows from it. (Paras 42 and 41). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42: 2005 SCC (Cri) 489: AIR 2005 SC 921: (2005) 27 AIC 717 (SC): (2005) 2 Guj LR 921: 2005 Cri LJ 944.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2005]

Pandurang v. State of Hyderabad, (1955) 1 SCR 1083: 1955 Cri LJ 572; Quinn v. Leathem, 1901 AC 495: (1900-03) All ER Rep 1: 85 LT 289 (HL); State of Orissa v. Sudhansu Sekhar Misra, (1968) 2 SCR 154: AIR 1968 SC 647; Ambica Quarry Works v. State of Gujarat, (1987) 1 SCC 213, relied on

Jayendra Saraswathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2005) 2 SCC 13, clarified

[6490] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Successive bail applications — Ground being agitated in instant bail application (without there being any material change in fact or law) if rejected by Courts earlier — Discovery of — Held, all the earlier orders rejecting bail need not be considered in this respect — It would be sufficient if any such findings can be found in any one of the earlier orders

The first respondent, Pappu Yadav, was charged for offences punishable under Sections 302 read with 34, 307 read with 34, 120-B, 302/307 IPC and Section 27 of the Arms Act. The bail application before the High Court out of which this appeal arose was the ninth application in the series of applications filed by the respondent for grant of bail. His earlier applications were either rejected by the High Court or when allowed by the High Court, were set aside by the Supreme Court. Moreover, when his earlier applications were rejected by the High Court the appeals filed by the respondent were dismissed by the Supreme Court, confirming the refusal of the bail.

Barely 11 days after the order of the Supreme Court in Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528 i.e. on 23-3-2004, which set aside the bail granted by the High Court on the eighth bail application by the respondent, a fresh ninth bail application was filed by the respondent without there being any change in the factual situation, which came to be allowed by the High Court by the impugned order dated 21-9-2004.

Allowing the appeals and setting aside the ninth bail application of the respondent,

Prior to the impugned order, eight attempts made by the respondent-accused to seek bail have proved futile. The appellants have contended that in almost all the proceedings when the bail was refused the Court (the High Court and/or the Supreme Court) had considered the existence of prima facie case and had given a finding in this regard. But it is not necessary to go into all those orders; it will be sufficient if any such findings can be found in any one of those cases for the purpose of disposal of the two issues namely (A) the existence of the prima facie case against the accused, and (B) the evidentiary value of retracted confession. (Paras 24 and 23). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42: 2005 SCC (Cri) 489: AIR 2005 SC 921: (2005) 27 AIC 717 (SC): (2005) 2 Guj LR 921: 2005 Cri LJ 944.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2005]

[6491] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Successive bail applications rejected on merits by a common order — Two days later another Judge of High Court granting bail on ground on which earlier application rejected without substantial change in fact-situation — Held, order not sustainable — Proper course was to place the application before same Judge who disposed of earlier application — Change in fact-situation — What amounts to — Power of Supreme Court to interfere with order granting bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136

In the present case the successive bail applications were rejected on merits. Once that application was rejected there was no question of granting a similar prayer. That is virtually overruling the earlier decision without there being a change in fact-situation. Change in fact-situation means a substantial change which has a direct impact on the earlier decision and not merely cosmetic changes which are of little or no consequence. Between two orders there was a gap of only two days and it is nobody's case that during these two days drastic changes had taken place necessitating the release of the respondent on bail. In such a situation the proper course was to direct that the matter be placed before the same Judge who disposed of the earlier applications. Such a practice or convention would prevent abuse of the process of court inasmuch as it will prevent an impression being created that a litigant is avoiding or selecting a court to secure an order to his liking. Such a practice would also discourage the filing of successive bail applications without change of circumstances. Such a practice if adopted would be conducive to judicial discipline and would also save the court's time as judge familiar with the facts would be able to dispose of the subsequent application with despatch. It will also result in consistency.

It is true that ordinarily the Supreme Court does not interfere with an order granting bail but in the facts of the present case judicial discipline will be sacrificed at the altar of judicial discretion if the court refuses to exercise jurisdiction under Art. 136 of the Constitution. State of Maharashtra v. Buddhikota Subha Rao, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 605: 1990 SCC (Cri) 126: AIR 1989 SC 2292: 1989 Cri LJ 2317.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K.N. Saikia, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-1989]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684, relied on

[6492] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Cancellation of — Considerations for — While first bail application of appellant rejected, second granted just after 19 days — High Court cancelling bail on the ground that when first bail application was rejected on valid grounds, just 19 days after its rejection, appellant had no ground to urge for bail as there was no change in circumstances — Also, whatever grounds were urged in the second bail application, could have been stated in the first bail application and reasons given for grant of bail by the court below in second bail application were in utter violation of settled principles of judicial propriety — Held on facts, as sessions case is pending trial against appellant, directions given to the trial court to complete it within a period of 3 months and, if for any reason, except non-cooperation of accused, trial is delayed beyond that, appellant would be at liberty to move the court below for bail and without being influenced by observations made by High Court in the impugned order, the same would be considered by it on merits and appropriate order shall be passed — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 395 and 120-B (Paras 2 and 6). Akhilesh Kumar Singh v. State of U.P., (2008) 4 SCC 449: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 428: AIR 2008 SC 1680: (2008) 3 All LJ 604: (2008) 64 AIC (SC).

(9) Successive/repeated bail applications (contd.)

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2008]

[6493] — Ss. 437 and 439(2) — Successive bail applications — Grant of provisional bail by Magistrate despite rejection of two earlier bail applications by the High Court — Held, not only contrary to settled principles of judicial propriety but also contrary to the statutory provision — But since at a later stage Magistrate himself cancelled the bail, no order on application for cancellation of bail need be passed — However, in facts and circumstances of the case, Chief Justice of High Court directed to take action against the said Magistrate on administrative side. Bimla Devi v. State of Bihar, (1994) 2 SCC 8: 1994 SCC (Cri) 472: 1994 Cri LJ 638.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-1994]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on [6494] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Bihar Fodder Scam — Special Court refusing bail — Appellants, former Chief Ministers of Bihar, challenging by SLP, the Special Court's order without seeking remedy from High Court — They were accused in a number of cases connected with Bihar Fodder Scam conspiracy — Bail already granted by Supreme Court in one of the cases on certain conditions and the appellants continuing to abide by those conditions — Appellants already having undergone pre-trial detention (including such detention in other connected cases) for 9 months — Moreover, in an earlier SLP against an order of High Court in respect of some cases including the present one, Supreme Court had stayed the arrest of the appellants till the disposal of SLP — Bail application was also filed along with that SLP but was dismissed after holding that the cases stood transferred to Jharkhand State pursuant to operation of Bihar States Reorganisation Act — In these peculiar circumstances and in view of the interconnection of the case with the facts of the case in which Supreme Court had earlier granted bail to the appellants, the present SLP entertained by Supreme Court — Since various other persons accused in Bihar Fodder Scam who had remained in jail for about six months were already granted bail, the appellants herein also granted bail by Supreme Court subject to certain conditions — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-A — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13 (Paras 6, 7 and 9). Laloo Prasad v. State of Jharkhand, (2002) 9 SCC 372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-12-2001]

[6495] — Ss. 437(1), (4) & (5) and 439(1) & (2) — Grant of bail after once refusing it — Duty of court to record reasons and to take note of events subsequent to the incident — On facts, grant found unjustified — Hence, bail cancelled — Voter obstructed from voting at election for the post of Pradhan, Gram Panchayat and that leading to scuffles during polling process — A person trying to rescue the voter, killed on the spot — FIR lodged under S. 302 IPC and the accused persons arrested — Bail refused by trial court, High Court and again by Sessions Court — Accused persons again moving the High Court for grant of bail — Witnesses were allegedly threatened and assaulted and therefore a second FIR was registered under Ss. 323 and 504 IPC — High Court, however, granting the bail and rejecting the application for cancellation thereof — After completing the investigation, police filing charge-sheet but the accused, who were on bail, not appearing before the Magistrate till he issued bailable warrants against them and thus committal getting delayed — In the said circumstances, held, High Court erred in granting bail — It ought to have explicitly stated the reasons of sudden departure in the order of grant as against rejection just about a month ago — The subsequent FIR also ought to have been taken note of — Spending of one year in jail, held, was not a relevant consideration for grant of bail — More so, when the offence charged was that of murder punishable with death or life imprisonment — Total circumstances of the case, held, warranted cancellation of the bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 323 and 504

The appellant's brother, A, was a candidate contesting the election for the post of Pradhan in a Gram Panchayat. During the polling process on 23-6-2000 booth-capturing took place several times. The informant was prevented from casting his vote and that resulted in scuffles. On hearing the cries of the informant, A rushed to rescue him but, was himself for the reason of his interference, killed. FIR was lodged, inter alia, under Section 302 IPC and the private respondents herein were, consequently, arrested. Their bail applications were rejected by the trial court and High Court and again by Sessions Court. Thereafter, they again moved the High Court. Between 4-12-2000 and 6-12-2000 the witnesses in the matter were allegedly threatened and assaulted for which an FIR under Sections 323 and 504 IPC was registered by the police on 6-12-2000. After investigation charge-sheet was filed before the Chief Judicial Magistrate. The said co-accused, who had been granted bail, were not attending Court of the Magistrate and appeared only after issuance of bailable warrants against them. On 3-5-2001 the High Court granted bail to both the accused persons. The High Court rejected the application for cancellation of the bail and, therefore, the instant appeal was filed before the Supreme Court

Allowing the appeals,

Held:

Grant of bail though is a discretionary order — but, however, calls for exercise of such a discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. Order for bail bereft of any cogent reason cannot be sustained. While placement of the accused in the society, though may be considered but that by itself cannot be a guiding factor in the matter of grant of bail and the same ought always to be coupled with other circumstances warranting the grant of bail. The nature of the offence is one of the basic considerations for the grant of bail — more heinous is the crime, the greater is the chance of rejection of the bail, though, however, dependent on the factual matrix of the matter. (Para 3)

Certain other relevant considerations, which are only illustrative and not exhaustive, are as follows:

(a) not only the nature of accusations but the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of the supporting evidence,

(b) reasonable apprehension of tampering with the witnesses or apprehension of threat to the complainant,

(c) prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge, and

(d) frivolity and genuineness of the prosecution, and it is only the element of genuineness that has to be considered in the matter of grant of bail, and in the event of some doubt as to the genuineness of the prosecution, in the normal course of events, the accused is entitled to an order of bail. (Para 4)

Although the availability of overwhelming circumstances is necessary for an order as regards the cancellation of a bail order, the basic criterion, however, is interference or even an attempt to interfere with the due course of administration of justice and/or any abuse of the indulgence/privilege granted to the accused. The incident occurred at the time when the election was going on and the murder was said to have been committed in broad daylight by reason of interference of the deceased when the informant was prohibited from casting his vote. The situation is rather grave and having regard to the same, the High Court on 29-8-2000 refused the application for bail. (Para 8)

Undoubtedly, considerations applicable to the grant of bail and considerations for cancellation of such an order of bail are independent and do not overlap each other, but in the event of non-consideration of considerations relevant for the purpose of grant of bail and in the event an earlier order of rejection available on the records, it is a duty incumbent on the High Court to explicitly state the reasons as to why the sudden departure in the order of grant as against the rejection just about a month ago. The High Court has not recorded any such reason. The subsequent FIR was on record containing charges under Sections 323 and 504 IPC in which the charge-sheet has already been issued — the court ought to take note of the facts on record rather than ignore them. In any event, the discretion to be used shall always have to be strictly in accordance with law and not dehors the same. The consideration of the period of one year spent in jail cannot be a relevant consideration in the matter of grant of bail, more so by reason of the fact that the offence charged is that of murder under Section 302 IPC having the punishment of death or life imprisonment. (Para 9)

The High Court has committed a manifest error in the matter of grant of bail when public tranquillity was disturbed on the election day and when there was an obstruction to the exercise of a right guaranteed under the Constitution and when there was an existence of crime against the society at large. Irrespective of different factors to be taken note of in regard to the cancellation of the grant of bail, interest of justice seems to be overwhelmingly in favour of the appellant herein in the matter of cancellation of the bail. His elder brother had been brutally murdered and the proceeding was pending before the Sessions Judge. It is during the period when the accused persons were enlarged on bail that another FIR was recorded and the charge-sheet having been filed, the Court ought to have taken a serious note of these factual details. Tampering with the evidence and threatening of the witnesses are two basic grounds for cancellation of bail — both these two factors stand alleged and by reason of subsequent filing of the charge-sheet therein, there should have been some mention of it in the order for grant of bail. The factum of the second charge-sheet has been omitted in its entirety. (Para 10)

(9) Successive/repeated bail applications (contd.)

The order of the High Court stands set aside and quashed. The bail order as granted by the High Court stands cancelled and the private respondents be rearrested forthwith. (Para 11). Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688: AIR 2002 SC 1475.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-3-2002]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415; Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT of Delhi, (2001) 4 SCC 280: 2001 SCC (Cri) 674, relied on [6496] — Ss. 437(1) & 439(2) and S. 300 — Bail — Repeated bail applications — Order denying bail unsuccessfully challenged before appellate forum (even the Supreme Court) — However, another Single Judge of the same Court allowing respondent's fresh bail application without adverting to any of the reasons recorded by the Single Judge who declined the bail application — Held, without there being any major change of circumstances, another fresh application should not have been dealt with within a short span of time unless there were valid grounds giving rise to a tenable case for bail — Further held, though res judicata is not applicable to bail applications but repeated filing of such applications without there being any change of circumstances would lead to bad precedents (Paras 9 and 8). State of T.N. v. S.A. Raja, (2005) 8 SCC 380: AIR 2005 SC 4462.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-10-2005]

(10) Conditions for bail

[6497] — S. 437 — Bail — Conditions imposed, if warranted — Bail granted to appellant with the condition that he shall continue to deposit Rs 1 lakh p.m. by way of repayment after release on bail on the assumption that offence had been committed by him, held, onerous and unwarranted (Para 3). Shyam Singh v. State, (2006) 9 SCC 169: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 613.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2005]

[6498] — S. 437 — Bail — Unconditional bail — Implicit conditions — Implicit in every bail is the condition that accused will not tamper with evidence (Para 7). Rizwan Akbar Hussain Syyed v. Mehmood Hussain, (2007) 10 SCC 368: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 598: (2007) 56 AIC 248 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

[6499] — S. 437 — Conditions for bail imposed by Supreme Court — Petitioners not to leave the country — Condition modified as petitioners not to leave the country unless permitted by the Supreme Court "on such conditions as the Court may impose in that event" — This would imply that each time when the petitioners intend to go abroad, they would have to seek permission of the Supreme Court — Petitioners seeking Court's permission to go abroad on grounds of their work in propagation of Hindu religion and need to take medical advice and treatment abroad — Held, there was no compulsive need for the petitioners to go abroad, hence permission cannot be granted. Chandraswami v. CBI, (1998) 9 SCC 380: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1040: AIR 1998 SC 2679.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchi, C.J. and S.C. Agrawal and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-1998]

[6500] — Ss. 437, 441(3) and 209(b) — Where case is triable by Sessions Court, Magistrate granting the bail may require the accused to execute a bond for appearance not only before him but also before the Sessions Court

It would avoid hardship to an accused if the Magistrate, while releasing the accused on bail, requires execution of a bond with or without surety,as the case may be, binding the accused not only to appear as and when required before him but also to appear when called upon in the Court of Session. Therefore, in cases triable by Sessions Court the practice followed by the Magistrates of granting bail only during the pendency of the enquiry before them must be discontinued, for, the result of such bail is that when the case is committed to the Sessions Court, the accused is rearrested and brought before that court where he has to apply once again for fresh bail. This causes considerable inconvenience to the accused without any corresponding advantage so far as the administration of criminal justice is concerned. Free Legal Aid Committee v. State of Bihar, (1982) 3 SCC 378: 1983 SCC (Cri) 53: AIR 1982 SC 1463: 1982 Cri LJ 1943.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-1981]

[6501] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Imposition of onerous conditions, while granting of — Propriety thereof — Bail granted with direction to deposit Rs 2,50,000, which was alleged to be the amount misappropriated by the accused and furnishing surety bond of Rs 50,000 — Held, direction to deposit Rs 2,50,000 was not warranted and hence while deleting the same, grant of bail confirmed — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 3 and 4). Sk. Ayub v. State of M.P., (2004) 13 SCC 457.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-9-2004]

[6502] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of, with stringent conditions — Interference with by Supreme Court — When warranted — Financial scam involving huge amount — High Court by impugned judgment granting bail to Respondent 1 accused of committing fraud of an unprecedented scale to tune of crores of rupees, imposing stringent conditions taking into consideration readiness and willingness on his part to make payment of Rs 2384 lakhs in instalments — Submission by appellant Bank that High Court erred in doing so insofar as it failed to take into consideration that total amount involved in the scam was huge viz. to tune of Rs 107 crores, and that in any event keeping in view offer made by appellant, he should at least be directed to pay Rs 41 crores — Held, power of the superior courts to enlarge an accused on bail is not in dispute — High Court while enlarging the first respondent on bail, taking into consideration the materials on record, had imposed stringent conditions which had not been contravened by him — Even if some contraventions had been made, the same could be brought to the notice of High Court — Further, submission that he may be directed to pay at least a sum of Rs 41 crores cannot be accepted because subject-matter of FIR was only Rs 8 crores — Besides, it is well settled that courts while granting bail cannot impose unreasonable conditions — Thus, in absence of any material brought on record that Respondent 1 had not complied with conditions imposed on him by High Court, impugned judgment cannot be interfered with — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 409, 420, 467, 471 & 120-B (Paras 14 to 16). M.M. Cooperative Bank Ltd. v. J.P. Bhimani, (2009) 8 SCC 727: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 937.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-7-2009]

Fida Hussain Bohra v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 5 SCC 150: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 624; Ramathal v. Inspector of Police, (2009) 12 SCC 721; I. Glaskasden Grace v. Inspector of Police, (2009) 12 SCC 769, relied on [6503] — S. 437(3) — Duty of court when bail is granted — Conditions for grant of bail — Held, the court has to ensure that the accused would not abscond and/or that he would not tamper with the evidence or witnesses — On facts, High Court erred in not applying its mind to the said aspect at all and not making any provisions in respect thereof — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, Ss. 49(7) and 4 (Para 14). State of T.N. v. R.R. Gopal, (2003) 12 SCC 237.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2003]

(11) Cancellation of bail

See also under Section 439

See also Section 437, '(12) Cancellation of bail after charge-sheet filed: Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and S. 167(2)', and

'(13) Cancellation of bail and appeal against order granting bail', below

[6504] — Ss. 437, 438 and 439 — Rejection of bail and cancellation of — Distinction between — Held, rejection of bail in a non-bailable case at the initial stage and cancellation of bail are required to be considered or dealt with on different basis — Very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order directing cancellation of bail already granted

It may be true that some of the circumstances, noticed by the High Court in the impugned order viz. no reference to lantern in the spot panchnama or the necessity of cleaning the lantern at 4 p.m. and/or availability of an inverter in the house, etc., could have persuaded the Sessions Judge to take a different view but it cannot be said that the factors which weighed with the Sessions Judge in granting bail were irrelevant to the issue before him, rendering the order as perverse. Moreover, merely because the High Court had a different view on same set of material which had been taken into consideration by the Sessions Judge, in our view, was not a valid ground to label the order passed by the Sessions Judge as perverse. It also appears that the High Court has overlooked the distinction of factors relevant for rejecting bail in a non-bailable case in the first instance and the cancellation of bail already granted. Very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order directing the cancellation of bail already granted, which were missing in the instant case. Nothing was brought on record from which it could be inferred that the appellants had not cooperated in the investigations or had, in any manner, abused the concession of bail granted to them. (Paras 29 and 30). Savitri Agarwal v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 8 SCC 325: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 683: (2009) 80 AIC 116 (SC).

(11) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-2009]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349, relied on [6505] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Cancellation of — Reasons for — Necessity — High Court by impugned order cancelling bail granted to appellants without indicating any reason — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh (Paras 4 to 6 and 13). Manjit Prakash v. Shobha Devi, (2009) 13 SCC 785: AIR 2008 SC 3032: (2008) 68 AIC 107 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3908.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-7-2008]

[6506] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Cancellation of bail when not warranted — Even when bail order suffering from infirmities — Matters to be considered — Direction for expeditious disposal of trial given instead — Submission that the complainant and independent eyewitnesses were being subjected to threats by Respondent 2 and his supporters and there was hardly any progress in the case which was being tried by Fast Track Court — Relevance — Order-sheet revealing that liberal adjournments had been granted to accused — Trial court directed to take up the matter on continuous basis to be completed within three months — However, considering the fact that accused was on bail for a considerable time, held, it would not be appropriate to cancel the bail, though there was substance in plea that the impugned order granting bail suffered from various infirmities (Paras 2 and 8 to 11). Ashok Kumar v. State of U.P., (2009) 11 SCC 392: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1393: AIR 2009 SC 1921: (2009) 75 AIC 120 (SC): (2009) 3 All LJ 252.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2009]

[6507] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail by High Court without considering nature and gravity of offence and without recording any reasons — Reversed — Substantial allegation of serious offence against all five respondent-accused, who had criminal background, of causing death by causing injuries with a weapon like knife to the deceased — Relevance — Held, normally, Supreme Court does not interfere in bail matters and orders of High Court are generally accepted to be final — But, order of High Court in present case is against the established principles of law and also against interest of justice, which has serious impact on society — In such cases if accused are let loose before trial they would get an opportunity to tamper with the evidence by means of their muscle/money power — It is equally true that personal liberty of citizens should not be interfered with without following the procedure of law but if such persons are released on the mere asking, it would affect the administration of criminal justice — Hence, grant of bail, reversed (Paras 3, 4, 6 and 7). Suresh Kumar Somabhai Rana v. Ashok Kumar Haraklal Mittal, (2009) 14 SCC 292: (2003) 1 Guj LR 686.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-2002]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on [6508] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Cancellation of bail if warranted — Bombay Bomb Blast case — Charges properly framed — Accused, an Additional Collector of Customs, alleged to be an associate of the prime accused in bomb blast case — Allegation that he facilitated the smuggling of arms, ammunition, RDX, etc. by not doing Nakabandi at the prearranged point but at some distance therefrom leaving an escape route for the smugglers to carry the goods — Held, alleged act would amount to abetment — Therefore, charges were rightly framed against him — But in the circumstances of the case no case for cancellation of bail made out — TADA, 1987, Ss. 3(3) and 2(1)(a)(iii) — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 120-B. State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, (1996) 4 SCC 659: 1996 SCC (Cri) 820: AIR 1996 SC 1744.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and B.L. Hansaria and S.C. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1996]

[6509] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Cancellation of — Considerations for — While first bail application of appellant rejected, second granted just after 19 days — High Court cancelling bail on the ground that when first bail application was rejected on valid grounds, just 19 days after its rejection, appellant had no ground to urge for bail as there was no change in circumstances — Also, whatever grounds were urged in the second bail application, could have been stated in the first bail application and reasons given for grant of bail by the court below in second bail application were in utter violation of settled principles of judicial propriety — Held on facts, as sessions case is pending trial against appellant, directions given to the trial court to complete it within a period of 3 months and, if for any reason, except non-cooperation of accused, trial is delayed beyond that, appellant would be at liberty to move the court below for bail and without being influenced by observations made by High Court in the impugned order, the same would be considered by it on merits and appropriate order shall be passed— Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 395 and 120-B (Paras 2 and 6). Akhilesh Kumar Singh v. State of U.P., (2008) 4 SCC 449: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 428: AIR 2008 SC 1680: (2008) 3 All LJ 604: (2008) 64 AIC (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2008]

[6510] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Cancellation of bail for delaying/protracting trial — Delaying/protracting trial on part of accused — What amounts to — Interference in bail matters — Scope — Fodder Scam cases — Held (per majority), the liberty of an accused cannot be taken away except in accordance with the established procedure of law under the Constitution, criminal procedure and other cognate statutes — Prayer for cancellation of bail at instance of the petitioners in the present case cannot at all be countenanced since documents on record show that Respondents 4 and 5 (the accused) have never interfered with the conduct of trial or the income tax proceedings, nor does the record show that they were deliberately protracting the trial to take unnecessary adjournments — Constitution of India — Arts. 32 and 21

Per Balakrishnan, J.

The petitioners could not prove anything that Respondents 4 and 5 have interfered in the course of justice and they misused the privilege of bail extended to them. The petitioners have also no case that they are likely to flee from justice. The petitioners have not made out any case for cancellation of their bail. (Para 28)

Per Lakshmanan, J.

The liberty of an accused cannot be taken away except in accordance with the established procedure of law under the Constitution, criminal procedure and other cognate statutes. The prayer for cancellation of the bail at the instance of the petitioner cannot at all be countenanced. The submission that Respondents 4 and 5 are interfering with the cause of justice so far as conduct of the trial and IT proceedings are concerned and, therefore, the bail granted to them is liable to be cancelled has no merits in view of the various documents and annexures, etc. to the effect that Respondents 4 and 5 have never interfered with the conduct of trial or with the IT proceedings. It is stated that Respondents 4 and 5 are deliberately protracting the trial by taking unnecessary adjournments. Then that itself would be a ground for cancellation of bail. This argument has no substance. It is a fact that the matter was adjourned at the instance of the defence on various occasions. The court itself has adjourned the matter for various reasons. It cannot therefore be held that the delay is solely attributable to Respondents 4 and 5 which cannot be a ground for cancellation of bail when it is not proved that any of the bail conditions has been violated. The delay is attributable to both the prosecution and the defence and also to the Court. Therefore, Respondents 4 and 5 cannot be held responsible for the delay. (Paras 58 and 45). Rajiv Ranjan Singh 'Lalan' (VIII) v. Union of India, (2006) 6 SCC 613: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 125.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan[1], Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan[2] and S.H. Kapadia[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-2006]

[6511] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Cancellation of — 41 kg heroin recovered from a room in possession of respondent-accused under a leave and licence agreement — High Court scrutinising the whole matter while passing the impugned order as if the trial itself had been held and expressing the findings in somewhat certain terms — Held, degree of certainty is not to be considered at this stage — Considering the facts and circumstances, and the huge recovery, held, High Court had not exercised its discretion prudently and in accordance with law — Hence, bail granted to the respondent-accused cancelled — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 8(c), 21, 25, 27, 27-A and 29 (Paras 2 to 4). Narcotics Control Bureau v. Ghashiram Kanhyalal Solanki, (2007) 15 SCC 655.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Brijesh Kumar and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-1-2003]

(12) Cancellation of bail after charge-sheet filed: Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and S. 167(2)

See also Section 437, '(11) Cancellation of bail', above

[6512] — Ss. 437(5), (1) & (2) and 167(2) — Cancellation of bail — Release on bail under S. 167(2) should be considered as one under S. 437(1) or (2) — Held, neither mere filing of challan by police subsequent to such release nor dismissal on merits of bail application before release are sufficient grounds for cancellation of the bail

(12) Cancellation of bail after charge-sheet filed: Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and S. 167(2) (contd.)

The power of the Court to cancel bail if it considers it necessary is preserved in cases where a person has been released on bail under S. 437(1) or (2). The fact that before an order was passed under S. 167(2) the bail petitions of the accused were dismissed on merits is not relevant for the purpose of taking action under S. 437(5). As the provisions of Ss. 437(1), (2) and (5) are applicable to a person who has been released under S. 167(2) the mere fact that subsequent to his release a challan has been filed is not sufficient to commit him to custody. The Court before directing the arrest of the accused and committing them to custody should consider if it is necessary to do so under S. 437(5). This may be done by the Court coming to the conclusion that after the challan had been filed there are sufficient grounds that the accused had committed a non-bailable offence and that it is necessary that he should be arrested and committed to custody. It may also order arrest and committal to custody on other grounds as tampering of the evidence or that his being at large is not in the interests of justice. But it is necessary that the Court should proceed on the basis that he has been deemed to have been released under Ss. 437(1) and (2).

In this case the cancellation of the bail on the grounds that subsequently a charge-sheet had been filed and that before the appellants were directed to be released under S. 167(2) their bail petitions were dismissed on merits by the Sessions Court was not justified and therefore, the appellants were ordered to be set at liberty. Bashir v. State of Haryana, (1977) 4 SCC 410: 1977 SCC (Cri) 608: AIR 1978 SC 55: 1978 Cri LJ 173.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-1977]

[6513] — Ss. 437(5) and 439(2) — Bail — Cancellation of — Grounds — Accused persons in criminal proceedings arising out of FIRs relating to transactions in respect of companies floated by them, stating before Supreme Court that huge amounts in their credit were lying with the Stock Exchanges specified, which could be sold for payment to the depositors — They further stating that the said Stock Exchanges had admitted that in their written statements — Misled by this statement, Supreme Court directing the said Stock Exchanges to deposit the said amounts before the Company Judge and subject to certain conditions directing the accused to be released on bail — Moreover, it issuing several directions under Art. 142 with a view to do complete justice to all the parties — However, subsequently, the Stock Exchanges approaching Supreme Court for clarification and/or recalling of that order on the ground that no amount was lying with them in the credit of the accused persons and that, on the other hand, the Stock Exchanges were themselves entitled to realise huge amounts from the accused persons — Accused persons in reply seeking direction for scrutiny of the accounts by a chartered accountant — Such plea of the accused rejected as during consideration of a bail application in a criminal case Supreme Court could not determine a dispute wherefor statutory forums had been created — Since in the absence of availability of a substantial sum with the Stock Exchanges in the credit of the accused persons release of the accused person would not subserve the purpose thereof, the order of grant of bail recalled — Constitution of India — Arts. 137, 136 and 142

The appellants herein floated various groups of companies. Two criminal cases were initiated against them arising out of various FIRs relating to transactions in respect of two of the said companies. The appellants' bail applications in the said proceedings were rejected. Therefore, the appellants approached the Supreme Court and pleaded that the assets held and possessed by them be sold for payment to the depositors of the companies. They averred that the amounts of Rs 17 crores and Rs 13 crores were lying with the Bombay Stock Exchange and the National Stock Exchange respectively. They added that the amounts lying with the Stock Exchanges stood admitted in their written statements filed in Civil Suit No. 312 of 2002. Consequently, in Arvind Mohan Johri v. State of U.P., (2005) 4 SCC 640, the Supreme Court directed the National Stock Exchange and the Bombay Stock Exchange to deposit before the Company Judge the money lying with them in the credit of the appellants. The Supreme Court further directed the appellants to be released on bail. The present applications were filed by the Bombay Stock Exchange and the National Stock Exchange for clarification and/or recalling of that order. Both the said Stock Exchanges contended that the said two contentions of the appellants were not correct. That, in fact, the Stock Exchanges were entitled to realise a huge amount from the appellants. The appellants in their counter-affidavits denied the said contentions of the two Stock Exchanges and pleaded for scrutiny of the accounts by a chartered accountant. They further pleaded for determination of the dispute between the parties.

In such circumstances,

Held :

The order granting bail to the appellants was passed relying on or on the basis of the representation made by them that all endeavours would be made to disburse to the claimants/realise as much amount as possible from the personal and other assets of the appellants by putting them on sale or otherwise. The appellant-accused were directed to be released on the conditions mentioned in the said order and several directions were issued in exercise of the jurisdiction under Article 142 to do complete justice to all the parties. While considering an application for grant of bail in a criminal case, the Supreme Court ordinarily cannot determine a dispute between the parties wherefor forums have been created under the statutes. (Paras 8 and 9)

Moreover, recoveries have been directed to be made by the Stock Exchanges in exercise of their power under the bye-laws governing the parties and several arbitration awards are said to have been passed in favour of the clients/investors and the members of the Stock Exchanges. The parties, therefore, must get their disputes determined in an appropriate forum. (Para 10)

The fact, however, remains that no amount as such is admittedly payable by the applicant Stock Exchanges. In their respective applications, the applicants had stated that they, in fact, would be entitled to realise a huge amount from the appellants. Therefore, it is held that the appellants misled the Supreme Court in passing the order in Arvind Mohan Johri v. State of U.P., (2005) 4 SCC 640 by contending that a sum of Rs 17 crores and Rs 13 crores was admittedly lying with the Bombay Stock Exchange and the National Stock Exchange in the shape of bank guarantee money and securities margin money, etc. (Para 11)

Although the prayers made by the applicants herein in their applications were confined to the directions issued against them it is found having regard to the peculiar facts and circumstances of the present case, that if a substantial sum lying with them is not available for disbursement to the claimants, the very purpose for enlarging the appellants herein on bail would not be subserved and therefore the order dated 3-11-2004 passed in Arvind Mohan Johri case, (2005) 4 SCC 640 granting bail to the appellants herein should be recalled. Accordingly, the appellants are directed to surrender before the trial court within one week whereupon they may be taken into custody. (Para 12). Arvind Mohan Johri v. State of U.P., (2005) 4 SCC 634: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1170: (2005) 127 Comp Cas 389.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, D.M. Dharmadhikari and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-2005]

Clarified in Arvind Mohan Johri v. State of U.P., (2005) 5 SCC 131

[6514] — Ss. 437(5) and 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — Object of — Delay in cancellation — Effect of — If there is delay, object of cancellation of bail practically loses all its purpose and significance to the greatest prejudice and the interest of the prosecution

The object underlying the cancellation of bail is to protect the fair trial and secure justice being done to the society by preventing the accused who is set at liberty by the bail order from tampering with the evidence in the heinous crime and if there is delay in such a case the underlying object of cancellation of bail practically loses all its purpose and significance to the greatest prejudice and the interest of the prosecution. It hardly requires to be stated that once a person is released on bail in serious criminal cases where the punishment is quite stringent and deterrent, the accused in order to get away from the clutches of the same indulge in various activities like tampering with the prosecution witnesses, threatening the family members of the deceased victim and also create problems of law and order situation. (Para 13). Panchanan Mishra v. Digambar Mishra, (2005) 3 SCC 143: 2005 SCC (Cri) 660: AIR 2005 SC 1299: 2005 Cri LJ 1721.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-1-2005]

[6515] — Ss. 437(5) and 439(2) — Grounds for cancellation of bail

Generally the grounds for cancellation of bail, broadly, are interference or attempt to interfere with the due course of administration of justice, or evasion or attempt to evade the course of justice, or abuse or the liberty granted to him. The due administration of the justice may be interfered with by intimidating or suborning witnesses, by interfering with investigation, by creating or causing disappearance of evidence etc. The course of justice may be evaded or attempted to be evaded by leaving the country or going underground or otherwise placing himself beyond the reach of the sureties. He may abuse the liberty granted to him by indulging in similar or other unlawful acts. Where bail has been granted under the proviso to S. 167(2) for the default of the prosecution in not completing the investigation in 60 days, after the defect is cured by the filing of a charge-sheet, the prosecution may seek to have the bail cancelled on the ground that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the accused has committed to non-bailable offence and that it is necessary to arrest him and commit him to custody. In the last mentioned case, one would expect very strong grounds indeed. Raghubir Singh v. State of Bihar, (1986) 4 SCC 481: 1986 SCC (Cri) 511: AIR 1987 SC 149.

(12) Cancellation of bail after charge-sheet filed: Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and S. 167(2) (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-1986]

[6516] — Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and 167(2) proviso — Bail granted under proviso to S. 167(2) — Cancellation of bail after filing of charge-sheet — Factors to be considered — Factum of dismissal of bail on earlier occasion not relevant — Cancellation different from refusal to grant bail — Cancellation involves review on merits of the decision granting bail

Per Ahmadi, J.

Bail granted under S. 437(1) or (2) or S. 439(1) can be cancelled under Ss. 437(5) and 439(2) where (i) the accused misuses his liberty by indulging in similar criminal activity, (ii) interferes with the course of investigation (iii) attempts to tamper with evidence or witnesses, (iv) threatens witnesses or indulges in similar activities which would hamper smooth investigation, (v) there is likelihood of his fleeing to another country, (vii) attempts to make himself scarce by going underground or becoming unavailable to the investigating agency, (vii) attempts to place himself beyond the reach of his surety, etc. These grounds are illustrative and not exhaustive. Rejection of bail stands on one footing but cancellation of bail is a harsh order because it interferes with the liberty of the individual and hence it must not be lightly resorted to.

When the Legislature made it obligatory that the accused shall be released on bail if the charge-sheet is not filed within the outer limit provided by proviso (a) to S. 167(2), it manifested concern for individual liberty notwithstanding the gravity of the allegation against the accused. The fact that the bail was earlier rejected or that it was secured by the thrust of proviso (a) to S. 167(2) then recedes in the background.

Per Ramaswamy, J.

Merits brought out in the charge-sheet and attending circumstances are relevant, as the bail was granted due to default of the investigating officer without court's adverting to the merits but during investigation some strong prima facie evidence and gravity and magnitude of the crime or the manner in which the crime was committed and other attending circumstances may be relevant as prima facie grounds to have a fresh look to cancel the bail. The grounds for cancellation of the bail in Chapter XXXIII are, dehors the merits in the matter, namely, necessity due to the conduct of the accused and abuse of liberty i.e. obstruction of the smooth investigation or suborning witnesses or attempting to tamper the evidence, threatening the witnesses with dire consequences or making or attempting to remove himself beyond the reach of the court to hamper the smooth trial, etc. are independent of the merits in the matter. Cancellation of the bail would be necessitated by the conduct of the accused himself after the release. The High Court or the Court of Sessions should consider the merits of the case.

Per Punchhi, J. (dissenting)

A compulsive bail order made by a court under S. 167(2) of the Code being one not on merit, when required to be cancelled after the filing of the challan, would not involve any review of a decision made on merit. Such bail is cancellable if the court has reason to entertain the belief that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence and that it is necessary to arrest him and commit him to custody. Aslam Babalal Desai v. State of Maharashtra, (1992) 4 SCC 272: 1992 SCC (Cri) 870: AIR 1993 SC 1.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi[1], M.M. Punchhi[2] and K. Ramaswamy[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 15-9-1992]

Raghubir Singh v. State of Bihar, (1986) 4 SCC 481: 1986 SCC (Cri) 511; State (Delhi Admn.) v. Sanjay Gandhi, (1978) 2 SCC 411: 1978 SCC (Cri) 223, relied on

*Rajnikant Jivanlal Patel v. NCB, New Delhi, (1989) 3 SCC 532: 1989 SCC (Cri) 612, overruled

[6517] — Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and 167(2) proviso (a) — Cancellation of bail granted under proviso (a) to S. 167(2) in case of serious offence — Discretion when exercised — Default of prosecution in filing charge-sheet within prescribed period — Magistrate bound to pass order of bail and communicate the same to accused — However, decision being not on merits, accused has no special right to remain on bail because he has been enlarged under proviso (a) to S. 167(2) — Bail can be cancelled if accused is shown to have committed a serious offence and charge-sheet is filed — On facts, order of High Court cancelling bail does not call for any interference — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 21, 23 and 29

The accused persons were arrested by officers of the Narcotic Control Bureau and sent to judicial custody. They were charge-sheeted under Ss. 21, 23 and 29 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985. Subsequent to the filing of charge-sheet the Enquiry Magistrate released them on bail on the ground that the prosecution had failed to submit the charge-sheet within ninety days as contemplated under proviso (a) to S. 167(2) of CrPC. The High Court after considering the material on record cancelled the bail order.

Held:

An order of bail granted under proviso (a) to S. 167 CrPC may be cancelled by the court if it comes to the conclusion that there are sufficient grounds that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence and that it is necessary that he should be arrested and committed to custody.

An order for release on bail under proviso (a) to S. 167(2) may appropriately be termed as an order-on-default. Indeed, it is a release on bail on the default of the prosecution in filing charge-sheet within the prescribed period. The right to bail under S. 167(2) proviso (a) thereto is absolute. It is a legislative command and not court's discretion. If the investigating agency fails to file charge-sheet before the expiry of 90/60 days, as the case may be, the accused in custody should be released on bail. But at that stage, merits of the case are not to be examined at all. In fact, the Magistrate has no power to remand a person beyond the stipulated period of 90/60 days. He must pass an order of bail and communicate the same to the accused to furnish the requisite bail bonds.

The accused cannot, therefore, claim any special right to remain on bail. If the investigation reveals that the accused has committed a serious offence and charge-sheet is filed, the bail granted under proviso (a) to S. 167(2) could be cancelled.

In the present case the offences alleged are of serious nature. Therefore, the discretion exercised by the High Court does not call for any interference. Rajnikant Jivanlal v. Narcotic Control Bureau, (1989) 3 SCC 532: 1989 SCC (Cri) 612: AIR 1990 SC 71.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty, J. [Date of decision: 26-6-1989]

Overruled in Aslam Babalal Desai v. State of Maharashtra, (1992) 4 SCC 272: 1992 SCC (Cri) 870

(13) Cancellation of bail and appeal against order granting bail

See also Section 437, '(11) Cancellation of bail', above

[6518] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Application for cancellation of bail and appeal against order granting bail — Relevant factors to be taken into account while dealing with, distinguished

In an application for cancellation of bail, conduct subsequent to release on bail and the supervening circumstances alone are relevant. But in an appeal against grant of bail, all aspects that were relevant under Section 439 read with Section 437 CrPC, continue to be relevant. However, while considering and deciding the appeals against grant of bail, where the accused has been at large for a considerable time, the post-bail conduct and supervening circumstances will also have to be taken note of. But they are not the only factors to be considered as in the case of applications for cancellation of bail. (Para 17). State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2): AIR 2005 SC 3490: (2005) 123 DLT 362: 2005 Cri LJ 4149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2005]

[6519] — Ss. 437, 439 and 397(3) — Cancellation of bail — When may the Sessions Court and when the High Court be approached for cancellation of bail, pointed out — Matters to be considered before cancelling bail — Effect of S. 397(3)

The question of cancellation of bail under S. 439(2) of the new Code is certainly different from admission to bail under S. 439(1). The approach is whether the order granting bail was vitiated by any serious infirmity for which it was right and proper for the High Court, in the interest of justice, to interfere. Ordinarily the High Court will not exercise its discretion to interfere with an order of bail granted by the Sessions Judge in favour of an accused.

Under S. 498(2) of the old Code, a person who had been admitted to bail by the High Court could be committed to custody only by the High Court. Similarly, if a person was admitted to bail by a Court of Session, it was only the Court of Session that could commit him to custody. This restriction upon the power of entertainment of an application for committing a person, already admitted to bail, to custody, is lifted in the new Code under S. 439(2). Under S. 439(2) of the new Code a High Court may commit a person released on bail under Chapter XXXIII by any Court including the Court of Session to custody, if it thinks appropriate to do so. It must, however, be made clear that a Court of Session cannot cancel a bail which has already been granted by the High Court unless new circumstances arise during the progress of trial after an accused person has been admitted to bail by the High Court. If, however, a Court of Session had admitted an accused person to bail, the State has two options. It may move the Sessions Judge if certain new circumstances have arisen which were not earlier known to the State and necessarily, therefore, to that Court. The State may as well approach the High Court being the superior Court under S. 439(2) to commit the accused to custody. When, however, the State is aggrieved by the order of the Sessions Judge granting bail and there are no new circumstances that have cropped up except those which already existed, it is futile for the State to move the Sessions Judge again and it is competent in law to move the High Court for cancellation of the bail. This position follows from the subordinate position of the Court of Session vis-à-vis the High Court.

(13) Cancellation of bail and appeal against order granting bail (contd.)

Comparing provisions of S. 397(3) with Ss. 435(1) and (4) of the old Code, the High Court has undoubtedly jurisdiction to entertain the application under S. 439(2), Criminal Procedure Code for cancellation of bail notwithstanding that the Sessions Judge had earlier admitted the appellants to bail.

However there cannot be an inexorable formula in the matter of granting bail. The facts and circumstances of each case will govern the exercise of judicial discretion in granting or cancelling bail.

In the peculiar nature of the case revealed from the allegations and the position of the appellants in relation to the eyewitnesses it was incumbent upon the Sessions Judge to give proper weight to the serious apprehension of the prosecution with regard to tampering with the eyewitnesses, which was urged before him in resisting the application for bail. The matter would have been different if there was absolutely no basis for the apprehension of the prosecution with regard to tampering of the witnesses and the allegation rested only on a bald statement.

The High Court has correctly appreciated the entire position and the Sessions Judge did not at the stage the case was before him. The Supreme Court will not, therefore, be justified under Art. 136 of the Constitution in interfering with the discretion exercised by the High Court in cancelling the bail of the appellants in this case. Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41: AIR 1978 SC 179: 1978 Cri LJ 129.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.K. Goswami and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-1977]

[6520] — Ss. 437 to 439 — Distinction between appeal from an order granting bail and an order of cancellation of bail — Correctness or otherwise of the order passed by the appellate court setting aside an order granting bail or an order of cancellation of bail to be considered on the particular facts of each case (Para 8). Fida Hussain Bohra v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 5 SCC 150.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2009]

(14) Appeal

See also Section 437, '(13) Cancellation of bail and appeal against order granting bail', above

[6521] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Appeal against order refusing or granting bail — Held, there is no provision in CrPC in respect thereof (Para 8). State of Gujarat v. Salimbhai Abdulgaffar Shaikh, (2003) 8 SCC 50: AIR 2003 SC 3224.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2003]

(15) Interference by Supreme Court

[6522] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Supreme Court would not entertain a direct application for grant of bail — Petitioner directed to approach High Court. Ram Autar Shastri Tantrik v. State of U.P., 1987 Supp SCC 185: 1988 SCC (Cri) 49.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-1-1987]

[6523] — S. 437 — Supreme Court's interference with grant of bail by High Court when called for — Constitution of India, Art. 136

Normally, the Supreme Court does not interfere with bail matters and the orders of the High Court are generally accepted to be final relating to grant or rejection of it.

But interference is called for where the High Court commits serious errors. Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415: AIR 1987 SC 1613.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1987]

[6524] — Ss. 437, 439 and 173 — Fodder Scam cases — Monitoring of, by Supreme Court — Grant/cancellation of bail — Bail extended from time to time for a period of six months by Supreme Court to monitor trial — Further need for monitoring, if any — Held, it is not now necessary to do so any further — Hence bail granted by Supreme Court directed to continue for duration of case on same terms and conditions — Deliberate protraction of trial or taking of unnecessary adjournments by itself to be a ground for cancellation of bail — Criminal Trial. Lalu Prasad v. State of Jharkhand, (2006) 6 SCC 661: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 173.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.N. Variava, P. Venkatarama Reddi and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-7-2003]

[6525] — Ss. 437 and 438 — Directions of the Supreme Court issued two years back in the matter of grant of bail to undertrial prisoners — Directions to submit report — Commissioner of Police, Delhi directed to submit a report indicating the impact of directions contained in the said order on general law and order situation — Commissioner also to indicate whether any of the persons released on bail has repeated the offence — Other State Governments/Union Territories to whom notices issued directed to file affidavit indicating present position of various categories of undertrial prisoners and the period of imprisonment undergone by them — Constitution of India — Art. 32. R.D. Upadhyay v. State of A.P., (1998) 5 SCC 696: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1380: AIR 1999 SC 2183.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.C. Agrawal, S. Saghir Ahmad and M. Srinivasan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-3-1998]

[6526] — Ss. 437 and 438 — Bail — Grant of — Court's satisfaction about reasonable grounds — Factors to be considered — Supreme Court's interference with order granting bail when called for — TADA, 1987, S. 29(8)(b)

In view of the assertions made by the respondent earlier, it was necessary for the court to consider the further materials collected by the investigating agency by recording statements of witnesses. The court below misdirected itself in refusing to look into such statements and concluding that it was a case for granting bail taking into account only the position held by the respondent in the party.

The matter regarding grant or refusal of bail calls for judicious exercise of discretion by the court on merits. Where the offence is of a serious nature the court has to decide the question of grant of bail in the light of such considerations as the nature and seriousness of the offence, character of the evidence, circumstances which are peculiar to the accused, a reasonable possibility of presence of the accused not being secured at the trial and the reasonable apprehension of witness being tampered with, the larger interest of the public or such similar other considerations.

The Supreme Court would not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of the lower court in granting or refusing bail but in cases where bail has been granted on irrelevant considerations, such as the status or influence of the person accused and regardless of the nature of the accusation and relevancy of materials on record, the Court would not hesitate to interfere for the ends of justice. In the present case the Designated Court clearly erred in disposing of the application for bail. The order of the Designated Court granting bail has, therefore, to be set aside, without prejudice to the respondent's right to move the Designated Court at any subsequent stage. State of Maharashtra v. Anand Chintaman Dighe, (1990) 1 SCC 397: 1990 SCC (Cri) 142: AIR 1990 SC 625: 1990 Cri LJ 788.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-1990]

[6527] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Interference with order granting bail — After a lapse of one year and ten months, not called for — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Abhilasha v. State of Rajasthan, (2000) 10 SCC 237.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1999]

[6528] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail — Bihar Fodder Scam — Special Court refusing bail — Appellants, former Chief Ministers of Bihar, challenging by SLP, the Special Court's order without seeking remedy from High Court — They were accused in a number of cases connected with Bihar Fodder Scam conspiracy — Bail already granted by Supreme Court in one of the cases on certain conditions and the appellants continuing to abide by those conditions — Appellants already having undergone pre-trial detention (including such detention in other connected cases) for 9 months — Moreover, in an earlier SLP against an order of High Court in respect of some cases including the present one, Supreme Court had stayed the arrest of the appellants till the disposal of SLP — Bail application was also filed along with that SLP but was dismissed after holding that the cases stood transferred to Jharkhand State pursuant to operation of Bihar States Reorganisation Act — In these peculiar circumstances and in view of the interconnection of the case with the facts of the case in which Supreme Court had earlier granted bail to the appellants, the present SLP entertained by Supreme Court — Since various other persons accused in Bihar Fodder Scam who had remained in jail for about six months were already granted bail, the appellants herein also granted bail by Supreme Court subject to certain conditions — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-A — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13 (Paras 6, 7 and 9). Laloo Prasad v. State of Jharkhand, (2002) 9 SCC 372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-12-2001]

(16) Duties of accused after release on bail

[6529] — S. 437 — Accused released on bail not to be required to appear before the court until filing of charge-sheet and issue of process

Whenever an accused is released on bail he need not be required to appear before the court until the charge-sheet is filed and the process is issued by the court. Law does not require the accused to appear before the Magistrate's court every 14 days even though he is on bail. Such practice causes considerable inconvenience to the accused. Free Legal Aid Committee v. State of Bihar, (1982) 3 SCC 378: 1983 SCC (Cri) 53: AIR 1982 SC 1463: 1982 Cri LJ 1943.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-1981]

(17) Bail application by juvenile

[6530] — Ss. 437(1) first proviso and 401 — Bail application by a juvenile — Age disputed — Medical opinion regarding age of accused — Where medical evidence including Age Estimation Report of Medical Board based on radiological examination and other physical characteristics available, held, conflicting evidence regarding date of birth entered in records of two schools in which accused studied unsafe to rely on — Medical opinion preferable to school records in case of conflict between the two. Dayachand v. Sahib Singh, (1991) 2 SCC 379: 1991 SCC (Cri) 438: AIR 1991 SC 930: 1991 Cri LJ 1370: (1991) 2 Crimes 31.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and J.S. Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-1991]

(18) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes

[6531] — S. 437 — Approach of Designated TADA Court in granting bail — It should not mechanically reject prayer for bail — Should examine each case carefully — TADA, 1987, S. 20(8)

Section 20(8) in terms places fetters on the power of a Designated Court in granting bail by imposing two conditions. The limitations specified in sub-s. (8) are in addition to those under the Code. In view of these more stringent conditions a Designated Court should carefully examine every case coming before it for finding out whether the provisions of the Act apply or not. Since before granting bail the court is called upon to satisfy itself that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is innocent of the offence and that he is not likely to commit any offence while on bail, the allegations of fact, the police report along with the statements in the case diary and other available materials should be closely examined. A prayer for bail ought not to be rejected in a mechanical manner.

Broadly speaking, the present cases fell into three distinct categories, namely: (1) Cases of communal riots resulting in offences of murder, arson, looting etc. where there were overt acts on the part of persons of one community against the other. (2) Incidents giving rise to acts of physical violence resulting in communal riots due to instigation. (3) Cases connected with trade union activities started at the instance of the management, or at the instance of owners of property to settle private disputes on the allegations that there were acts of physical violence. Normally, such cases have to be dealt with under the ordinary procedure prescribed by the Code, unless offences under Ss. 3 and 4 of the Act are made out. The Designated Courts were under a duty to examine the circumstances closely from this angle. That has not been done. The Designated Courts have not carefully considered that facts and circumstances and have rejected the applications for bail mechanically. Therefore, orders passed by the various Designated Courts are set aside and cases remitted for fresh consideration. Usmanbhai Dawoodbhai Memon v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 2 SCC 271: 1988 SCC (Cri) 318: AIR 1988 SC 922.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-1988]

Usmanbhai Pareedbhai v. State of Gujarat, 1987 Cri LJ 199 (Guj), on facts, reversed

[6532] — Ss. 437, 439 and 167 — Interpretation of proviso to S. 49(7), POTA 2002 — Held, there appears to be an omission to include "not" between the words "shall" and "apply" and the absence thereof would render the provision absurd or meaningless — Even otherwise, the proviso would mean that after the period of one year the accused can resort to the ordinary bail procedure under CrPC while he would also be at liberty to seek bail under Ss. 49(6) & (7) — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, Ss. 49(7) & (6)

In Section 49(7), POTA there appears to be an accidental omission or mistake of not including the word "not" after the word "shall" and before the word "apply". Unless such a word is included, the provision will lead to an absurdity or become meaningless. Even otherwise, read appropriately, the meaning of the proviso to Section 49(7) is that an accused can resort to ordinary bail procedure under CrPC after a period of one year. At the same time, the proviso does not prevent such an accused to approach the court for bail in accordance with the provisions of POTA under Sections 49(6) and (7) thereof. Taking into account the complexities of terrorism-related offences and the intention of Parliament in enacting a special law for its prevention, it cannot be said that the additional conditions regarding bail under POTA are unreasonable. The validity of Section 49 is upheld. (Para 70). People's Union for Civil Liberties v. Union of India, (2004) 9 SCC 580: AIR 2004 SC 456.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-2003]

[6533] — S. 437 — Bail — Offence under S. 6 TADA read with Ss. 286, 120-B and 34 IPC r/w S. 9(B), Indian Explosives Act — Accused in jail for more than 4 years and 8 months except for a period of 2½ months when he was released on parole — Minimum sentence under S. 6 TADA being only 5 years — In the circumstances, accused directed to be released on bail on terms and conditions mentioned in the order — TADA, 1987, Ss. 20(8) and 6. Giani Pratap Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1995) 5 SCC 591: 1995 SCC (Cri) 992: AIR 1996 SC 74.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and S.C. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 4-9-1995]

[6534] — S. 437 — Bail — Refusal to grant — Sustainability — Terrorism charge — Confession — Retraction of confession — Charge-sheet filed against appellant showing him an absconding accused along with other accused persons in POTA Special Court in connection with alleged conspiracy to commit murder of Hindu leaders through boys by imparting them training in arms in Pakistan — Confessional statement of appellant recorded but same retracted by appellant after 40 days by sending letter to the court through jail authorities — Bail application moved by appellant rejected by Special Court — High Court took the view that even if confession recorded under S. 32 of POTA was retracted, same could be considered as a piece of evidence at the time of deciding bail application and that Special Court was justified in refusing the bail application — Held, though there is no statutory time fixed for retraction of confession, but it must be done within a reasonable time — Considering the various factual aspects highlighted by trial court and High Court, this cannot be said to be a fit case for grant of bail to appellant — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, S. 32 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 24. Maulana Naseeruddin Mohd. Haneefuddin v. State of Gujarat, (2007) 12 SCC 545: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 299: (2007) 56 AIC 23 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-7-2007]

[6535] — S. 437 — Non-bailable offence — Bail, grant of — POTA charges — Petitioner arrested in connection with the offence related to the Godhra incident which resulted in the death of 59 persons and injuries to 48 others — Petitioner-accused charged under various sections of IPC, POTA, Railways Act and Prevention of Damage to Public Property Act, 1984 — Bail denied by the Special Judge (POTA) as well as the High Court — Held, not a fit case for bail. Moulvi Hussain Ibrahim Umarji v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 3 SCC 444: 2004 SCC (Cri) 829: 2004 Cri LJ 3348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, Arun Kumar and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-3-2004]

[6536] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Power of Designated TADA Court to grant bail — Held, derived neither from S. 20(8) TADA, nor from S. 439 CrPC but from S. 437 CrPC — Scope of that power limited by S. 20(8) TADA as well as S. 437 CrPC — TADA, 1987, Ss. 20(8), (9)

The source of power of a Designated Court to grant bail is not S. 20(8) of the Act but it only places limitations on such powers. This is implicit by S. 20(9) which in terms provides that the limitations on granting of bail specified in sub-s. (8) are in addition to the limitations under the Code or any other law for the time being in force on granting of bail. Since a Designated Court is "a court other than the High Court or the Court of Session" within the meaning of S. 437 of the Code, the power derived by a Designated Court to grant bail to a person accused of an offence under the Act, if in custody, is derived from the Code. The exercise of the power to grant bail by a Designated Court is not only subject to the limitations contained therein, but is also subject to the limitations placed by S. 20(8) of the Act. It all depends on the scheme of the particular Act as to whether the power of the High Court and the Court of Session to grant bail under Ss. 438 and 439 exists. Usmanbhai Dawoodbhai Memon v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 2 SCC 271: 1988 SCC (Cri) 318: AIR 1988 SC 922.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-1988]

[6537] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Conditions for release on bail — Held, Ss. 20(8) and (9) TADA not violative of Art. 21 — Sub-section (8) is in consonance with S. 437 CrPC and source of power for release on bail is S. 437 and not S. 439 CrPC — While exercising power court should keep in mind not only liberty of the accused but also the interest of the victims, collective interest of the community and safety of the nation — TADA, 1987, Ss. 20(8) and (9)

(18) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes (contd.)

Per curiam

Sub-section (8) which imposes a complete ban on release on bail against the accused of an offence punishable under this Act minimises or dilutes that ban under two conditions, those being (1) the Public Prosecutor must be given an opportunity to oppose the bail application for such release; and (2) where the Public Prosecutor opposes the bail application the court must be satisfied that the two conditions, namely, (a) there are reasonable grounds for believing that the person accused is not guilty of such offence and (b) he is not likely to commit any offence while on bail. Sub-section (9) qualifies sub-section (8) to the effect that the above two limitations imposed on grant of bail specified in sub-section (8) are in addition to the limitations under the Code or any other law for the time being in force on granting of bail. If either of the two conditions mentioned therein is not satisfied, the ban operates and the accused person cannot be released on bail but of course it is subject to S. 167(2) as modified by S. 20(4) of the TADA Act in relation to a case under the provisions of TADA Act. The conditions imposed under S. 20(8)(b) are in consonance with the conditions prescribed under clauses (i) and (ii) of sub-section (1) of S. 437 and clause (b) of sub-section (3) of that section. Section 439 CrPC cannot be availed of for grant of bail in cases under the TADA Act. The condition that "there are grounds for believing that he is not guilty of an offence", which condition in different form is incorporated in other Acts such as clause (i) of S. 437(1) of the Code and S. 35(1) of FERA and 104(1) of the Customs Act, cannot be said to be an unreasonable condition infringing the principle of Art. 21.

No doubt, liberty of a citizen must be zealously safeguarded by the courts; nonetheless the courts while dispensing justice in cases like the one under the TADA Act, should keep in mind not only the liberty of the accused but also the interest of the victim and their near and dear and above all the collective interest of the community and the safety of the nation so that the public may not lose faith in the system of judicial administration and indulge in private retribution.

However, the invocation of the provisions of TADA Act in cases, the facts of which do not warrant, is nothing but sheer misuse and abuse of the Act by the police. Unless, the public prosecutors rise to the occasion and discharge their onerous responsibilities keeping in mind that they are prosecutors on behalf of the public but not the police and unless the Presiding Officers of the Designated Courts discharge their judicial functions keeping in view the fundamental rights particularly of the personal right and liberty of every citizen as enshrined in the Constitution to which they have been assigned the role of sentinel on the qui vive, it cannot be said that the provisions of TADA Act are enforced effectively in consonance with the legislative intendment. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899: 1994 Cri LJ 3139.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian[1], M.M. Punchhi[1], K. Ramaswamy[2], S.C. Agrawal[1] and R.M. Sahai[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-3-1994]

Usmanbhai Dawoodbhai Memon v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 2 SCC 271: 1988 SCC (Cri) 318, affirmed

*Bimal Kaur Khalsa v. Union of India, AIR 1988 P&H 95: (1988) 93 Punj LR 189: 1988 Cri LJ 169, overruled

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689; Ishwar Chand v. State of H.P., ILR 1975 HP 569, distinguished

[6538] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Bombay blast case — Review Committees constituted by Central and State Governments pursuant to Supreme Court's direction in Kartar Singh case — Report submitted by Maharashtra State Review Committee — Considered by Central Review Committee — Matter placed before Designated Court — Designated Court directing Public Prosecutor to file application mentioning names of accused persons and reasons on the basis of which State had no objection for granting them bail — Accordingly application filed before the Designated Court mentioning three categories of accused persons, the third category whereof comprising 12 accused including the appellant who could be released on bail — Application filed by appellant for bail rejected by Designated Court — In appeal before Supreme Court, affidavit filed on behalf of State Government stating that pursuant to order of Designated Court, CBI after carefully scrutinising cases of all accused had taken a policy decision in consultation with Bombay Police that the accused listed in the third category could be released on bail and had instructed Chief Public Prosecutor accordingly — In the circumstances held, the petition should be allowed — Categorisation of accused persons based on relevant factors — Hence appellant directed to be released on bail on stated conditions — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, Ss. 20(8) & (9) and 15

As the whole exercise of the Central Review Committee was pursuant to the direction of the Supreme Court in Kartar Singh case and the Chief Special Public Prosecutor had filed the petition in question to implement the decision taken by that Committee, supplemented by the decision of the CBI, such a petition did not merit rejection. The Designated Court did not examine the matter in proper perspective. The categorisation of the accused persons in three categories being founded on relevant factors, the classification was rational. The name of the appellant being in Category III, he is ordered to be released on bail. (Para 13)

The fact-situation in which the present appeal is being examined is entirely different from that with which the Supreme Court was seized when on an earlier occasion, this very appellant was before the Court praying for his release on bail, in this very case. So, what was stated then in the case of Sanjay Dutt v. State through CBI, has ceased to be relevant. (Para 11)

The appellant shall be released on bail, on his furnishing a bond of Rs 5 lakhs with two sureties of like amount to the satisfaction of the Designated Court. The appellant shall surrender his passport immediately after release. He would not hamper the on-going investigation, tamper the evidence, threaten or influence the witnesses. On the happening of any one of these contingencies to the satisfaction of the Designated Court, his bail shall be cancelled. Further, he shall appear before the Designated Court as and when directed. He shall also comply with any other direction of the said court. (Para 14). Sanjay Dutt v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 6 SCC 189: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1055.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.N. Ray, N.P. Singh and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-10-1995]

Sanjay Dutt v. State through CBI, (1994) 6 SCC 86: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1805, distinguished [6539] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Grounds for consideration — Terrorist activity alleged — Appellant 1 (resident of Ahmedabad) alleged to have conspired to send some youths from Ahmedabad to Pakistan for obtaining training for carrying out terrorist activities with a view to take revenge of loss of lives and properties caused to the Muslim community in communal riots which had taken place consequent to Godhra massacre, and also huge quantity of arms recovered from him — Appellant 2 (resident of Hyderabad) alleged to have gone to Pakistan for training — Ordinarily, held, a bail application, in a case of this nature, which involves the security of the State should be rejected — Further held, although the complicity of the appellants is difficult to judge at the instant stage, yet, a strong prima facie case had been made out against the appellants — Their release at this juncture may hamper the smooth conduct of trial since main witnesses are yet to be examined — One of the appellants hailed from a different State and hence it may be difficult to secure his presence, if released on bail at this crucial juncture — Bail applications dismissed and Designated Judge directed to conclude the trial as expeditiously as possible and preferably within six months from the date of communication of present order — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B, 121, 121-A, 122 and 123 (Paras 17 to 21, 2 and 4). Afzal Khan v. State of Gujarat, (2007) 9 SCC 387: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 563: AIR 2007 SC 2111: 2007 Cri LJ 3223.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-5-2007]

Shaheen Welfare Assn. v. Union of India, (1996) 2 SCC 616: 1996 SCC (Cri) 366, considered

[6540] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Refusal to grant bail — TADA and FERA offences — Charge against petitioner under Ss. 3 and 4 of TADA Act and S. 8(1) of FERA for unauthorisedly dealing in foreign exchange (hawala transaction) and instrumental in transferring huge sums received from different sources to members of militant outfits of J & K for use in terrorist and disruptive activities — While petitioner in judicial custody investigation taken over by CBI — Since investigation still continuing, not necessary for the Court to express any opinion on merits or demerits of the case regarding petitioner's involvement or connection with terrorist and disruptive activities — Having regard to seriousness of the allegations levelled against the petitioner, held, his release on bail at the crucial stage may frustrate the effort of the investigating agencies in collecting evidence — Hence bail application dismissed. Mool Chand v. State, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 101: 1991 SCC (Cri) 1001: AIR 1992 SC 1618.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian, J. [Date of decision: 4-7-1991]

[6541] — Ss. 437, 173(2) and 190(1)(b) — Bail — Conditions for release on, by Designated TADA Court — Charge-sheet/police report under S. 173(2) CrPC submitted after investigation before Jammu Court — But bail application filed in Srinagar — Release on bail by Designated Court at Srinagar without perusing the charge sheet/police report held, improper — TADA, 1987 — S. 20(8)

Before a person accused of an offence under TADA is released on bail two conditions must be fulfilled: (a) an opportunity must be given to the public prosecutor to oppose the application for such release, and (b) the Court must be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the said accused is not guilty of such offence. Hence an application for bail filed on behalf of a person who has been accused of an offence punishable under the Act has to be examined carefully and cautiously on basis of the charges levelled in the first information report, and the evidence collected in the course of the investigation. The conditions for grant of bail specified under sub-section (8) of S. 20 of the TADA Act are in addition to those under the Code as made explicit by S. 20(9).

(18) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes (contd.)

In the present case the Designated Court at Srinagar released the respondent on bail without perusing the charge-sheet/police report which had been filed at Jammu. A Police Report submitted after the investigation of an alleged offence is not just mere expression of the opinion of the Investigating Officer having no connection or nexus with the materials collected during the investigation. In view of sub-section (5) of S. 173 when such report is in respect of a case to which S. 170 of the Code is applicable i.e. where it appears to the Investigating Officer "that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground ..." the Investigating Officer shall forward to the Magistrate along with the report all documents and the statements recorded under S. 161 of the Code. In fact a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under S. 190(1)(b) on the basis of such a report. Hence such a report cannot be held to be irrelevant while considering an application for bail under sub-section (8) of S. 20 of the TADA Act as to whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused in question is not guilty of such offence and as such he should be directed to be released. The Designated Court should have perused the charge-sheet/Police Report submitted after the conclusion of the investigation before passing the impugned order. That not having been done the release of the respondent on bail is set aside. Respondent to surrender within three weeks from today.

The Designated Court is directed to hear afresh the bail application and to peruse the charge-sheet/police-report along with the documents and statements recorded, which have been forwarded under sub-section (5) of S. 173 of the Code and to pass an order in accordance with law as early as possible. Union of India v. Mohd. Sadiq Rather, (1993) 1 SCC 8: 1993 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 1993 SC 379: 1993 Cri LJ 72.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.H. Kania, C.J. and N.M. Kasliwal and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-1992]

[6542] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Applications for bail/impleadment pending before Supreme Court — Court appropriate to dispose of, in cases where the accused had been charged in regard to POTA as well as non-POTA offences but the POTA offences stood withdrawn by virtue of S. 2(3) — POTA Special Judges directed to send all such cases to the respective Sessions Judge — Applications for bail/impleadment pending before Supreme Court permitted to be withdrawn with liberty to move the same before the Sessions Judge concerned who would consider the same on merits untrammelled by the observations, if any, made by superior courts in any of such bail applications — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, S. 33 — Prevention of Terrorism (Repeal) Act, 2004 — S. 2(3) (Paras 4 to 6). Anusuyaben Sadashiv Jadav v. Union of India, (2009) 2 SCC 45.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-12-2008]

[6543] — Ss. 437, 438(2) and 439 — Bail — Grant of bail in case of offences under MCOCA — On facts, allegation against the appellant that being a public servant he not only rendered help and support in the commission of the organised crime as defined in S. 2(1)(e) of MCOCA but knowingly and intentionally aided and abetted the activities of the organised crime syndicate thereby enabling them to carry on their activities — Thus by facilitating the organised crime syndicate in continuing the unlawful activities and deliberately abstaining from taking lawful measures under MCOCA against the syndicate, appellant is alleged to have committed offences punishable under Ss. 3(2) and 24 of MCOCA — Special Judge dismissing his bail application which was confirmed by the High Court — Factors to be considered while granting bail — Held, it would not be appropriate to go into detailed examination of the alleged crime for arriving at a positive finding whether appellant has committed offences under S. 3(2) or S. 24 of MCOCA — What is required to be considered is whether (1) there is a reasonable ground to believe that the appellant is not guilty of the offences he has been charged with under MCOCA (2) that he is not likely to commit an offence under MCOCA while on bail — Purported acts of omission and commission of the appellant, held, may not per se bring the case within ambit of S. 3(2) of MCOCA — However, as the circumstances tend to indicate that as a public servant the appellant failed to take lawful measures under MCOCA, provisions of S. 24 of MCOCA are attracted — As the appellant has been in judicial custody for over 3 years, being the maximum period of sentence under S. 24 of MCOCA, the appellant, held, deserves to be released on bail — Hence, order of High Court set aside — However, held, the appellant shall remain bound by all the conditions stipulated in S. 438(2) CrPC — Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (30 of 1999), Ss. 2(1)(e) and (d), 3(2), 21(4)(b) and 24

The appellant was posted as Senior Police Inspector at Mira Road Police Station, Thane District, during the period from 2-6-1999 to 13-5-2000. On or about 15-8-1999, on the basis of some information about printing of fake revenue and postal stamps by a gang, received by Mira Road Police Station, under the charge of the appellant, raids were conducted at certain places. As a result thereof some persons were arrested and case under Sections 257, 260, 420, 467, 468 read with Section 34 of the Penal Code and under Section 55 of the Post Office Act, 1898 was registered against them. An inquiry was conducted by the Additional Superintendent of Police, Thane (Rural) in the manner in which investigation was conducted by the appellant and his team, which revealed that although the printing press, where counterfeit stamps and stamp papers were being printed had been identified but the appellant and his Sub-Inspector, in charge of the case, neither sealed the said premises nor seized the machines; they ensured that Telgi (hereinafter T), the kingpin of the organised crime syndicate and the prime accused was not arrested and remained at large till he was arrested by the Karnataka police; and the counterfeit stamps seized in the case were not sent for examination to the Indian Security Press, Nasik. In a nutshell, the allegation against the appellant is that being a public servant he not only rendered help and support in the commission of the organised crime as defined in Section 2(1)(e) of MCOCA, he knowingly and intentionally aided and abetted the activities of the organised crime syndicate till 7-6-2002, thereby enabling them to carry on their activities for almost three years. Thus, by helping and facilitating the organised crime syndicate of T in continuing unlawful activities and deliberately abstaining from taking lawful measures under MCOCA against T and his syndicate, he has committed offences punishable under Sections 3(2) and 24 of MCOCA. Based on these investigations a case was registered against the appellant and some other persons. The appellant, who by then was promoted as Assistant Commissioner of Police, was arrested on 18-10-2003. Taking into consideration the gravity of charges levelled against the appellant the Special Judge dismissed his bail application. The order was affirmed by the High Court. Hence this present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

It would not be appropriate at this juncture to go into detailed examination of the alleged crime in order to arrive at a positive finding as to whether or not the appellant has committed offences under Section 3(2) or 24 of MCOCA. What is required to be considered is whether in the light of the circumstances (i) there is a reasonable ground to believe that the appellant is not guilty of the two offences he has been charged with under MCOCA, and (ii) that he is not likely to commit an offence under MCOCA while on bail. (Para 13)

The purported acts of omission and commission on the part of the appellant may not per se bring his case within the ambit of Section 3(2) of MCOCA. Nevertheless, the circumstances do tend to indicate that as a public servant he had failed to take lawful measures under MCOCA, attracting the provisions of Section 24 of MCOCA. Having reached this conclusion and bearing in mind the fact that the appellant has been in judicial custody for over three years, the maximum period of sentence contemplated under Section 24 of MCOCA, the appellant deserves to be released on bail. (Para 14)

The appeal is allowed and the order passed by the High Court is set aside. It is directed that the appellant shall be enlarged on bail on his furnishing a personal bond in the sum of Rs 2 lakhs with two sureties, each in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Special Court, Pune. He shall also remain bound by all the conditions as stipulated in Section 438(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973. The appellant shall also surrender his passport, if any, before the Special Court, Pune. (Para 15). Gokul Bhagaji Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 2 SCC 475: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 597: (2007) 49 AIC 27 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 776.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-12-2006]

[6544] — Ss. 437, 438(2) and 439 — Grant of bail — Factors to be considered — MCOCA offences — Appellant police officers arrested for offences punishable under various sections of IPC read with MCOCA on the allegations of conspiring and abetting or facilitating the organised crime syndicate to carry on their illegal activities — High Court rejecting the bail applications preferred by appellants — Held, what needs to be considered is whether there is a reasonable ground to believe that the appellants are not guilty of the offences they have been charged with and further that they are not likely to commit an offence under MCOCA while on bail — In the instant case, allegations not sufficient to bring offence within the ambit of S. 3(2) of MCOCA — Hence, as maximum punishment provided under S. 24 of MCOCA is 3 years' RI and appellants have already been in judicial custody for over two years, it is a fit case for grant of bail to both the appellants — However, they shall remain bound by all the conditions as stipulated in S. 438(2) CrPC — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 192, 217, 218 and 263-A — Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (30 of 1999), Ss. 2(1)(d), (e), (f), 3(1)(ii), 3(2), (3), (4), 21(4) and 24

(18) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes (contd.)

The appellants V and G were police officers, in charge of investigations in a case. As a result of investigations, three charge-sheets were filed against several persons, including one S and T (Telgi), head of an organised crime syndicate, engaged in unlawful activities relating to printing of counterfeit stamps and other documents and sale thereof. However, subsequently, under the orders of the Supreme Court, investigations in the case were transferred to CBI. As a result of fresh investigations by CBI, cases were registered against the appellants for the offences punishable under various sections of the Penal Code read with the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 and they were arrested on the allegations of conspiring and abetting commission or facilitation of the crime with which S, T and other co-accused were associated. Bail applications preferred by the appellants were rejected by the High Court. Hence these present appeals.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

What needs to be considered is whether there is a reasonable ground to believe that the appellants are not guilty of the two offences, they have been charged with and further that they are not likely to commit an offence under MCOCA while on bail. (Para 11)

In the light of the roles attributed to the appellants in the charge-sheet, the allegations may not per se be sufficient to bring home an offence falling within the ambit of Section 3(2) of MCOCA. Therefore, bearing in mind the fact that maximum punishment provided under Section 24 of MCOCA is three years' rigorous imprisonment and the appellants have already been in judicial custody for over two years, it is a fit case for grant of bail to both the appellants. (Para 12)

The order passed by the High Court is set aside. It is directed that the appellants shall be enlarged on bail on their furnishing personal bonds in the sum of Rs 50,000 each with two sureties, each in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Special Court, Pune. They shall also remain bound by all the conditions as stipulated in Section 438(2) CrPC. (Para 13). Dattatray Krishnaji Ghule v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 4 SCC 113: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 205: AIR 2007 SC 1133: (2007) 51 AIC 1 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1455.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and D.K. Jain, J. [Date of decision: 9-2-2007]

[6545] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Grant of bail in case of offences under MCOCA — Limitations under — Held, provisions of MCOCA having been invoked, in addition to considerations normally weighed by the court in granting bail in non-bailable offences, the limitations imposed under S. 21(4) of MCOCA have to be borne in mind — Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (30 of 1999), S. 21(4) (Para 10). Dattatray Krishnaji Ghule v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 4 SCC 113: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 205: AIR 2007 SC 1133: (2007) 51 AIC 1 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1455.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and D.K. Jain, J. [Date of decision: 9-2-2007]

Chenna Boyanna Krishna Yadav v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 1 SCC 242: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 329, relied on [6546] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Telgi counterfeit stamps and stamp papers case — MCOCA case — Appellant police officer charged with offences under Ss. 120-B, 216, 218, 221 IPC r/w Ss. 3(2), 3(5), 24 of the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act and Ss. 7, 13(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Appellant in jail for more than 3 years, moving application for bail — Special Judge and High Court rejected the application — High Court held that CBI made out prima facie involvement of appellant with Telgi crime syndicate — Appellant already undergone the maximum period of punishment prescribed under S. 24 of MCOC Act — Whether appellant's involvement goes beyond to fall under S. 3(2) of MCOC Act is yet to be decided — Several hundred witnesses to be examined and trial likely to take several years — Having regard to the nature of involvement alleged and role attributed to appellant, even with S. 21(4) of MCOC Act in view, held, this is a fit case for grant of bail to appellant — Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (30 of 1999), Ss. 3(2) & (5) and 24 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7, 13(1)(d). Shridhar Sumant Vagal v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 12 SCC 514: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 281: AIR 2007 SC 2592: (2007) 54 AIC 144 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran, J. [Date of decision: 22-3-2007]

[6547] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Application for — Rejection of — Propriety — Appellant arrested in offence relating to counterfeiting stamps/stamp papers (Telgi case) for offences under Ss. 120-B, 255, 34 and 109 IPC r/w Ss. 3(1)(ii), 3(2), 3(5) and S. 4 of MCOC Act, 1999 (30 of 1999) — Submission that involvement of the appellant was only peripheral rejected — Material prima facie showing that though he was not directly connected with the printing and selling of the fake stamps, he was associated with T and had abetted and facilitated the commission of the organised crime, and he had also aided and assisted in the money laundering operations and attempted to interfere with the witnesses on behalf of T and his family members — Prima facie material also indicating that the payment for the purchase of printing machine for T's illegitimate activities, was routed through appellant — Under S. 3(2) of the MCOC Act, the minimum sentence is five years and the maximum can be imprisonment for life — Hence, no interference with the order of the High Court rejecting the bail application, particularly, having regard to the provisions of S. 21(4) of the MCOC Act called for — Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (30 of 1999), Ss. 3(1)(ii), 3(2), 3(5) and 21(4) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B, 255, 34 and 109 (Paras 2 and 7 to 9). Manoj Ramesh Mehta v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 14 SCC 528.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-11-2008]

[6548] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of, without specifically considering parameters of S. 37(1)(b), NDPS Act — Held, renders the bail order invalid — Respondent moving bail application under S. 437 CrPC and S. 37(1)(b)(ii) of NDPS Act, 1985 — Trial court granting bail without specifically considering effect of S. 37 — High Court upholding bail order on the ground that respondent's attendance could be secured on the basis of bail bonds already signed and that respondent's release would enable him to have adequate consultation with lawyer of his choice — Held, bail order unsustainable in law in view of non-compliance with S. 37(1)(b) — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 37(1)(b) and 37(2) (Paras 5 and 12). N.R. Mon v. Mohd. Nasimuddin, (2008) 6 SCC 721: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 29: AIR 2008 SC 2576: (2008) 2 KLT 1022: (2008) 67 AIC 5 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-5-2008]

Union of India v. Gurcharan Singh, (2003) 11 SCC 764; Collector of Customs v. Ahmadalieva Nodira, (2004) 3 SCC 549: 2004 SCC (Cri) 834; Union of India v. Thamisharasi, (1995) 4 SCC 190: 1995 SCC (Cri) 665; Union of India v. Abdulla, (2004) 13 SCC 504: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 353; Narcotics Control Bureau v. R. Paulsamy, (2000) 9 SCC 549: 2001 SCC (Cri) 648; Narcotics Control Bureau v. Karma Phuntsok, (2005) 12 SCC 480: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 608, relied on

[6549] — Ss. 437 & 309 — Undertrial prisoners — Right to speedy trial — Deprivation of personal liberty without ensuring speedy trial violates Art. 21 — NDPS offences — Detention of a large number of persons under NDPS Act for a long period without trial — Delay in constitution of Special Courts frustrating the objective of S. 36(1) NDPS Act and S. 309 CrPC — Provisions of bail being strict refusing bail on the one hand and delaying trial of cases on the other is unfair and unreasonable — Undertrial prisoners, except those charged with offences under Ss. 31 and 31-A NDPS Act, languishing in jail for a period exceeding half of the punishment provided under the Act directed to be released on bail — Terms and conditions for their release laid down — State Government directed to set up Review Committees headed by a Judicial Officer to review the cases of undertrials and make recommendations for withdrawal of deserving cases — Notices issued to certain other States also to furnish information to enable the Court to decide if similar action is called for — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 36, 37, 31 and 31-A — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 14, 19 and 32

With respect to pending cases it is directed as under:

(i) Where the undertrial is accused of an offence(s) under the Act prescribing a punishment of imprisonment of five years or less and fine, such an undertrial shall be released on bail if he has been in jail for a period which is not less than half the punishment provided for the offence he is charged with and where he is charged with more than one offence, the offence providing the highest punishment. If the offence he is charged with prescribes the maximum fine, the bail amount shall be 50% of the said amount with two sureties for like amount. If the maximum fine is not prescribed bail shall be to the satisfaction of the Special Judge concerned with two sureties for like amount.

(ii) Where the undertrial accused is charged with an offence(s) under the Act providing for punishment exceeding five years and fine, such an undertrial shall be released on bail on the term set out in (i) above provided that his bail amount shall in no case be less than Rs 50,000 with two sureties for like amount.

(18) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes (contd.)

(iii) Where the undertrial accused is charged with an offence(s) under the Act punishable with minimum imprisonment of ten years and a minimum fine of Rupees one lakh, such an undertrial shall be released on bail if he has been in jail for not less than five years provided he furnishes bail in the sum of Rupees one lakh with two sureties for like amount.

(iv) Where an undertrial accused is charged with the commission of an offence punishable under Ss. 31 and 31-A of the Act, such an undertrial shall not be entitled to be released on bail by virtue of this order.

The directives in clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) above shall be subject to the following general conditions:

(i) The undertrial accused entitled to be released on bail shall deposit his passport with the learned Judge of the Special Court concerned and if he does not hold a passport he shall file an affidavit to that effect in the form that may be prescribed by the learned Special Judge. In the latter case the learned Special Judge will, if he has reason to doubt the accuracy of the statement, write to the Passport Officer concerned to verify the statement and the Passport Officer shall verify his record and send a reply within three weeks. If he fails to reply within the said time, the learned Special Judge will be entitled to act on the statement of the undertrial accused;

(ii) the undertrial accused shall on being released on bail present himself at the police station which has prosecuted him at least once in a month in the case of those covered under clause (i), once in a fortnight in the case of those covered under clause (ii) and once in a week in the case of those covered by clause (iii), unless leave of absence is obtained in advance from the Special Judge concerned;

(iii) the benefit of the direction in clauses (ii) and (iii) shall not be available to those accused persons who are, in the opinion of the learned Special Judge, for reasons to be stated in writing, likely to tamper with evidence or influence the prosecution witnesses;

(iv) in the case of undertrial accused who are foreigners, the Special Judge shall, besides impounding their passports, insist on a certificate of assurance from the Embassy/High Commission of the country to which the foreigner-accused belongs, that the said accused shall not leave the country and shall appear before the Special Court as and when required;

(v) the undertrial accused shall not leave the area in relation to which the Special Court is constituted except with the permission of the learned Special Judge;

(vi) the undertrial accused may furnish bail by depositing cash equal to the bail amount;

(vii) the Special Judge will be at liberty to cancel bail if any of the above conditions is violated or a case for cancellation of bail is otherwise made out; and

(viii) after the release of the undertrial accused pursuant to this order, the cases of those undertrials who have not been released and are in jail will be accorded priority and the Special Court will proceed with them as provided in S. 309 of the Code.

The above directions are intended to operate as one-time directions for cases in which the accused persons are in jail and their trials are delayed. They are not intended to interfere with the Special Court's power to grant bail under S. 37 of the Act. The Special Court will be free to exercise that power keeping in view the complaint of inordinate delay in the disposal of the pending cases. The Special Court will, notwithstanding the directions, be free to cancel bail if the accused is found to be misusing it and grounds for cancellation of bail exist. Lastly, we grant liberty to apply in case of any difficulty in the implementation of this order. Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee v. Union of India, (1994) 6 SCC 731: 1995 SCC (Cri) 39.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-1994]

[6550] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Conditions precedent for grant of, postulated in S. 37(1)(b), NDPS Act, held, are mandatory — Hence, in the absence of satisfaction of the said conditions High Court's order granting bail to an accused charged of offences under Ss. 8/18 of the Act, held, bad — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 37 (as subs. by Act 2 of 1989), 8 and 18

After the recovery of 5 kg of opium from the tubewell house of the respondent, he was arrested and sent to jail. The Sessions Judge rejected his bail application but the High Court by a non-speaking order directed him to be released on bail. Allowing the Central Government's appeal,

Held :

The legislative mandate contained in the Statement of Objects and Reasons for introducing Bill No. 125 of 1988 which culminated in the incorporation of the amended Section 37 has to be adhered to and followed. In a murder case, the accused commits murder of one or two persons, while those persons who are dealing in narcotic drugs are instruments in causing death or in inflicting deathblow to a number of innocent young victims, who are vulnerable; it causes deleterious effects and a deadly impact on the society; they are a hazard to the society; even if they are released temporarily, in all probability, they would continue their nefarious activities of trafficking and/or dealing in intoxicants clandestinely. To check the menace of dangerous drugs flooding the market, Parliament has provided that the person accused of offences under the NDPS Act should not be released on bail during trial unless the mandatory conditions provided in Section 37(1)(b) are satisfied. The High Court has not given any justifiable reason for not abiding by the aforesaid mandate while ordering the release of the respondent-accused on bail. Hence, the High Court's order has to be set aside. (Paras 6 to 9). Union of India v. Ram Samujh, (1999) 9 SCC 429: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1522.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-1999]

Durand Didier v. UT, Goa, (1990) 1 SCC 95: 1990 SCC (Cri) 65, relied on [6551] — Ss. 437 & 439 — Bail — Grant of, when not justified — Offences under NDPS Act — Respondent charged for offences under S. 20(b) as well as under S. 25 of NDPS Act, maximum punishment for which being 10 years' imprisonment — Bail can be granted only when ingredients of S. 37 of NDPS Act are fulfilled — Bail earlier granted cancelled subsequently by Special Judge and thereafter two applications for bail rejected — High Court without considering these aspects, held, erred in granting bail to respondent by noticing some irrelevant matters such as respondent having telephone and ration card etc. — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 37, 20(b) & 25 (Para 5). CBI v. Dhan Singh, (2003) 9 SCC 248.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-2003]

[6552] — Ss. 437 and 167(2) — S. 437(1) — Compared with S. 37 NDPS Act — Applicability of proviso to S. 167(2), CrPC, 1973 — Held, not excluded by any of the provisions of NDPS Act — Person arrested for commission of an offence under NDPS Act can claim release on bail on the expiry of total period specified in proviso to S. 167 CrPC if the complaint is not filed within that period — S. 37 not inconsistent with S. 167(2) CrPC — S. 37(1)(b) applies only when question of granting bail arises on merits and not when grant of bail is automatic on account of default in filing complaint within the specified period — Limitations on granting of bail specified under S. 37(1) NDPS Act are in addition to limitations provided under S. 437 CrPC and they do not exclude applicability of the proviso to S. 167(2) — Distinction between S. 437(1)(i) CrPC and S. 37(1)(b) NDPS Act — S. 37 NDPS Act is more stringent — Provisions of S. 20 TADA Act and S. 37 NDPS Act compared — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 37, 36-A, 36-C and 51

The limitations on granting of bail specified in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 37 come in only when the question of granting bail arises on merits. By its very nature the provision is not attracted when the grant of bail is automatic on account of the default in filing the complaint within the maximum period of custody permitted during investigation by virtue of sub-section (2) of Section 167 CrPC. The only fact material to attract the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 167 is the default in filing the complaint within the maximum period specified therein to permit custody during investigation and not the merits of the case which till the filing of the complaint are not before the court to determine the existence of reasonable grounds for forming the belief about the guilt of the accused. It cannot be said that this belief can be formed during investigation by reference to the contents of the case diary even before the charge-sheet has been filed. This is fallacious. Till the complaint is filed the accused is supplied no material from which he can discharge the burden placed on him by Section 37(1)(b) of the NDPS Act. (Para 10)

Sub-section (2) of Section 167 CrPC has been expressly applied by Section 36-A of the Act and the scheme of the Act is that the provisions of the Code would apply except where there is any inconsistent provision in this Act in relation to arrests made under this Act. It is this context in which Section 37(1)(b) has to be construed wherein are specified the limitations on granting of bail. (Para 11)

The limitation on the power to release on bail in Section 437 CrPC is in the nature of a restriction on that power, if reasonable grounds exist for the belief that the accused is guilty. On the other hand, the limitation on this power in Section 37 of the NDPS Act is in the nature of a condition precedent for the exercise of that power, so that, the accused shall not be released on bail unless the court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds to believe that he is not guilty. Under Section 437 CrPC it is for the prosecution to show the existence of reasonable grounds to support the belief in the guilt of the accused to attract the restriction on the power to grant bail; but under Section 37, NDPS Act it is the accused who must show the existence of grounds for the belief that he is not guilty, to satisfy the condition precedent and lift the embargo on the power to grant bail. This appears to be the distinction between the two provisions which makes Section 37 of the NDPS Act more stringent. (Para 12)

Provision in Section 37 to the extent it is inconsistent with Section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure supersedes the corresponding provision in the Code and imposes limitations on granting of bail in addition to the limitations under the Code of Criminal Procedure as expressly provided in sub-section (2) of Section 37. These limitations on granting of bail specified in sub-section (1) of Section 37 are in addition to the limitations under Section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and were enacted only for this purpose; and they do not have the effect of excluding the applicability of the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 167 CrPC which operates in a different field relating to the total period of custody of the accused permissible during investigation. (Para 13)

Notwithstanding the substitution of Section 37 in the NDPS Act in its present form by Act 2 of 1989 subsequent to the enactment of the TADA Act, there is nothing in Section 37 of the NDPS Act similar to sub-section (4) of Section 20 of the TADA Act even though there is striking similarity of the provision with sub-sections (8) and (9) of Section 20 of the TADA Act. The legislative intent of not excluding the applicability of the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 167 CrPC in cases of arrest made for commission of offences under the NDPS Act, is quite evident. (Para 15)

It is settled that the court will have no power of remand of an accused to any custody unless the power is conferred by law. The power must, therefore, be traced to some provision of the statute. There is clear mention of Section 167 CrPC in the NDPS Act for the exercise of this power. Ordinarily, there must also be an outer limit prescribed by specification of the total period of permissible remand during investigation. This too is provided in Section 167. To exclude merely this part of Section 167, an express provision in the statute was necessary, assuming there could be conferment of power of remand unlimited in point of time. (Para 16). Union of India v. Thamisharasi, (1995) 4 SCC 190: 1995 SCC (Cri) 665.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.S. Verma and Sujata V. Manohar, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-1995]

Natabar Parida v. State of Orissa, (1975) 2 SCC 220: 1975 SCC (Cri) 484, relied on

Narcotics Control Bureau v. Kishan Lal, (1991) 1 SCC 705: 1991 SCC (Cri) 265, distinguished

(19) Other issues

[6553] — S. 437 — Plea or statement made in bail application — Admissibility of in another case relating to such accused — Statement about returned candidate's age made in his bail application filed in an earlier criminal case in which the candidate was an accused — On the basis of that statement respondent returned candidate would be below the prescribed age of 25 years at the time of filing of his nomination — Contention that the statement was made by the lawyer without respondent's instructions, held on facts, not acceptable — View that such statements are generally made in the application for obtaining bail, held, also not acceptable as no such presumption can be raised and false statement made before the court cannot be taken lightly — Moreover, a person cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong — In absence of any satisfactory explanation, such statement can be presumed to be correct and binding — Hence court can act on the basis of such statement — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 17 to 21 — Constitution of India, Art. 173

It was contended by the appellant election petitioner that the respondent returned candidate was implicated in a criminal case wherein an application for bail was filed by him or on his behalf before CJM and it had specifically been stated therein that he, thence, was a school-going student being aged about 15 years. However, the advocate who had filed the bail application stated that the Chief Judicial Magistrate did not accept the contention that the respondent was less than 16 years of age on the ground that in the records his date of birth was mentioned as 17 years. Even if the age of the respondent being 17 years as on the date of commission of the offence was to be considered to be correct, he would still not be of the age of 25 years as on the date of filing of the nomination. The High Court observed that it is a common experience that all such pleas are taken for the purpose of obtaining bail and, thus, such a plea cannot be taken seriously for debarring a person as contemplated under Art.173(b) of the Constitution of India.

Held :

A person is not expected to take false grounds regarding his age or to make a statement that he had been reading in a school. No presumption in this behalf can be raised as such allegations would be subject to judicial scrutiny. (Para 61)

Even otherwise, making a false statement before the court whether on affidavit or not is not to be treated lightly. The court acts on the basis of the statement made by a party to the lis. Whether such defence has been accepted or not is not of much importance but whether a false statement to the knowledge of the party has been made or not is. In any view of the matter, the court must draw an adverse inference in this behalf against the respondent. (Para 64)

Furthermore, a person should not be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong. He should either stand by his statement made before a court of law or should explain the same sufficiently. In absence of any satisfactory explanation, the court will presume that the statement before a court is correct and binding on the party on whose behalf the same has been made. (Para 65)

As the law stated in Thiru John case "a party's admission as defined in Sections 17 to 20, fulfilling the requirements of Section 21 of the Evidence Act, is substantive evidence proprio vigore. An admission, if clearly and unequivocally made, is the best evidence against the party making it and though not conclusive, shifts the onus on to the maker". (Para 63). Sushil Kumar v. Rakesh Kumar, (2003) 8 SCC 673.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.N. Khare, C.J. and S.B. Sinha, J. [Date of decision: 16-10-2003]

Thiru John v. Returning Officer, (1977) 3 SCC 540, relied on [6554] — Ss. 437 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Challenge to — Locus standi — Held, the complainant can always question the order granting bail if the said order is not validly passed — It is not as if once a bail is granted by any court, the only way is to get it cancelled on account of its misuse — Bail order can be tested on merits also — On facts held, complainant could question the merits of the order granting bail (Para 12). Brij Nandan Jaiswal v. Munna, (2009) 1 SCC 678.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-12-2008]

Section 438 — Anticipatory Bail

Synopsis

(1) Generally 488
(2) Regular bail vis-à-vis anticipatory bail 496
(3) Maintainability of application 498
(4) Grounds for bail — Generally 501
(5) Grounds for bail in dowry/cruelty cases 509
(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences 512
(7) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application 516
(8) Duration and extent of anticipatory bail 519
(9) Direction under S. 438, when becomes operative 524
(10) Matters at large/Orders/Directions that may be passed 524
(11) Practice and Procedure re disposal 526
(12) Successive/repeated bail applications 526
(13) Conditions for bail under 527
(14) Cancellation of bail 530
(15) Interference by Supreme Court 532
(16) Rejection of anticipatory bail — Effect 533
(17) S. 438 and Special Statutes 533

— S. 438 See Ss. 157 & 155 and 41 to 44 & 46 and Ss. 437 to 439
See also Ss. 207, 208, 161 and 438
See also Ss. 436 to 450
See also Ss. 436 to 439 and 446-A
See also Ss. 436, 437, 438, 439 and 482
See also Ss. 437 & 438
See also Ss. 437, 438 and 439
See also Ss. 437, 439, 438 and 389
See also Ss. 438, 437 & 438 and 2(h), 155 to 157 and 41 to 44 & 46
See also Ss. 439 and 438
See also Ss. 439(2), 438 and 437(5)
See also S. 439(2) r/w S. 482 and S. 438
See also Ss. 482, 439, 438 and 407

— S. 438(2) See Ss. 437, 438(2) and 439
— Ss. 438/439 See S. 482 and Ss. 438/439

(1) Generally

See also Section 438, '(8) Duration and extent of anticipatory bail', below

[6555] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Concept of — Liberal interpretation of the section in the light of Art. 21 of the Constitution of India

An anticipatory bail is a pre-arrest legal process which directs that if the person in whose favour it is issued is thereafter arrested on the accusation in respect of which the direction is issued, he shall be released on bail. The distinction between an ordinary order of bail and an order of anticipatory bail is that whereas the former is granted after arrest and therefore means release from the custody of the police, the latter is granted in anticipation of arrest and is therefore, effective at the very moment of arrest. A direction under S. 438 is therefore intended to confer conditional immunity from the 'touch' or confinement contemplated by S. 46 of the Code.

In order to meet the challenge of Art. 21 of the Constitution, the procedure established by law for depriving a person of his liberty must be fair, just and reasonable. Section 438 is a procedural provision which is concerned with the personal liberty of the individual, who is entitled to the benefit of the presumption of innocence since he is not, on the date of his application for anticipatory bail, convicted of the offence in respect of which he seeks bail.

Since denial of bail amounts to deprivation of personal liberty, the court should lean against the imposition of unnecessary restrictions on the scope of S. 438, especially when not imposed by the legislature. An overgenerous infusion of constraints and conditions which are not to be found in S. 438 can make its provisions constitutionally vulnerable since the right to personal freedom cannot be made to depend on compliance with unreasonable restrictions. The beneficent provision contained in S. 438 must be saved, not jettisoned. Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465: AIR 1980 SC 1632: 1980 Cri LJ 1125.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and P.N. Bhagwati, N.L. Untwalia, R.S. Pathak and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-1980]

[6556] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Concept of, explained

The concept of anticipatory bail is that a person who apprehends his arrest in a non-bailable case, can apply for grant of bail to the Court of Session or to the High Court before the arrest. (Para 12). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

[6557] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — History and object of S. 438, restated

The 41st Report of the Law Commission recommended for the first time inclusion of a provision for anticipatory bail. Section 438 contemplates an application by a person on an apprehension of arrest in regard to the commission of a non-bailable offence: the object being to relieve a person from unnecessary harassment or disgrace and it is granted when the court is otherwise convinced that there is no likelihood of misuser of the liberty granted since he would neither abscond nor take such step so as to avoid due process of law. (Para 7). Narinderjit Singh Sahni v. Union of India, (2002) 2 SCC 210: AIR 2001 SC 3810.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, U.C. Banerjee and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2001]

[6558] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Court's power to grant or refuse — Nature of — Held, it is discretionary

It is a settled legal position that the court which grants the bail also has the power to cancel it. The discretion of grant or cancellation of bail can be exercised either at the instance of the accused, the Public Prosecutor or the complainant on finding new material or circumstances at any point of time. (Para 96)

The intention of the legislature is quite clear that the power of grant or refusal of bail is entirely discretionary. (Para 97). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, followed

[6559] — Ss. 438 and 437 — Anticipatory bail — Scope and ambit of — Six principles regarding, laid down in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565, reiterated — Constitution of India, Art. 21

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565, laid down the following principles with regard to anticipatory bail:

(a) Section 438(1) is to be interpreted in the light of Article 21 of the Constitution of India.

(b) Filing of FIR is not a condition precedent to exercise of power under Section 438.

(c) Order under Section 438 would not affect the right of police to conduct investigation.

(d) Conditions mentioned in Section 437 cannot be read into Section 438.

(e) Although the power to release on anticipatory bail can be described as of an "extraordinary" character this would "not justify the conclusion that the power must be exercised in exceptional cases only". Powers are discretionary to be exercised in the light of the circumstances of each case.

(f) Initial order can be passed without notice to the Public Prosecutor. Thereafter, notice must be issued forthwith and question ought to be re-examined after hearing. Such ad interim order must conform to requirements of Section 438 and suitable conditions should be imposed on the applicant. (Para 109). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, reiterated

Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 260: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1172, referred to

Law Commission Reports, 41st Report, referred to [6560] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Nature and scope of — Extraordinary/Special power for grant of, given to higher echelons of judicial service i.e. a Court of Session and a High Court — Rationale for, stated

Section 438 CrPC makes special provision for granting "anticipatory bail" which was introduced in 1973. The expression "anticipatory bail" has not been defined in CrPC. Anticipatory bail means a bail in anticipation of arrest. The expression "anticipatory bail" is a misnomer inasmuch as it is not as if bail presently granted is in anticipation of arrest. Where a competent court grants "anticipatory bail", it makes an order that in the event of arrest, a person shall be released on bail. The power of granting "anticipatory bail" is extraordinary in character and only in exceptional cases where it appears that a person is falsely implicated or a frivolous case is launched against him or "there are reasonable grounds for holding that a person accused of an offence is not likely to abscond, or otherwise misuse his liberty while on bail" that such power may be exercised. Thus, the power is "unusual in nature" and is entrusted only to the higher echelons of judicial service i.e. a Court of Session and a High Court. (Paras 23 to 26). Union of India v. Padam Narain Aggarwal, (2008) 13 SCC 305: (2008) 231 ELT 397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689, relied on

Law Commission of India, Forty-eighth Report, Vol. 6, p. 13, Para 31, relied on

[6561] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Provision as to — Object behind enactment of, restated [Per Markandey Katju, J.]

The provision for anticipatory bail was introduced in CrPC because it was realised by Parliament in its wisdom that false and frivolous cases are often filed against some persons and such persons have to go to jail because even if the first information report is false and frivolous a person has to obtain bail, and for that he has to first surrender before the Magistrate, and his bail application is heard only after several days (usually a week or two) after giving notice to the State. During this period the applicant has to go to jail. Hence even if such person subsequently obtains bail his reputation may be irreparably tarnished. The reputation of a person is a valuable asset for him just as in law the goodwill of a firm is an intangible asset. (Para 52). Som Mittal v. Govt. of Karnataka, (2008) 3 SCC 753: (2008) 1 SCC (L&S) 895: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 73: AIR 2008 SC 1126: (2008) 2 LLN 690: (2008) 65 AIC 187 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1610.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

[6562] — S. 438 — Object of, restated

The object of Section 438 is to prevent undue harassment of the accused persons by pre-trial arrest and detention. The gravity of the offence is an important factor to be taken into consideration while granting such anticipatory bail so also the need for custodial interrogation, but these are only factors that must be borne in mind by the courts concerned while entertaining a petition for grant of anticipatory bail and the fact of taking cognizance or filing of a charge-sheet cannot by itself be construed as a prohibition against the grant of anticipatory bail. The courts i.e. the Court of Session, High Court or Supreme Court have the necessary power vested in them to grant anticipatory bail in non-bailable offences under Section 438 CrPC even when cognizance is taken or a charge-sheet is filed provided the facts of the case require the court to do so. (Para 7). Bharat Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2003) 8 SCC 77: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1953: AIR 2003 SC 4662.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-2003]

(1) Anticipatory Bail — Generally (contd.)

[6563] — S. 438 and Statement of Objects and Reasons — Legislative history of S. 438 and object of providing anticipatory provision therein, restated (Paras 9 to 11, 13 and 14). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Law Commission Reports, 41st Report, Para 39.9 and 31st Report, Para 31, referred to [6564] — S. 438 — Measures to avoid curtailment of personal liberty — Six suggestions, albeit illustrative ones and not exhaustive, given which might dispense with necessity to curtail personal liberty of accused — Constitution of India — Art. 21

Observed :

In case, the State considers the following suggestions in proper perspective then perhaps it may not be necessary to curtail the personal liberty of the accused in a routine manner. These suggestions are only illustrative and not exhaustive:

(1) Direct the accused to join the investigation and only when the accused does not cooperate with the investigating agency, then only the accused be arrested.

(2) Seize either the passport or such other related documents, such as, the title deeds of properties or the fixed deposit receipts/share certificates of the accused.

(3) Direct the accused to execute bonds.

(4) The accused may be directed to furnish sureties of a number of persons which according to the prosecution are necessary in view of the facts of the particular case.

(5) The accused be directed to furnish undertaking that he would not visit the place where the witnesses reside so that the possibility of tampering of evidence or otherwise influencing the course of justice can be avoided.

(6) Bank accounts be frozen for small duration during the investigation. (Para 117). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Pokar Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1985) 2 SCC 597: 1985 SCC (Cri) 297; N. Meera Rani v. Govt. of T.N., (1989) 4 SCC 418: 1989 SCC (Cri) 732; Rameshwar Shaw v. District Magistrate, Burdwan, AIR 1964 SC 334: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 257: (1964) 4 SCR 921; Vijayalaxmi Cashew Co. v. CTO, (1996) 1 SCC 468; Union of India v. K.S. Subramanian, (1976) 3 SCC 677: 1976 SCC (L&S) 492; State of U.P. v. Ram Chandra Trivedi, (1976) 4 SCC 52: 1976 SCC (L&S) 542; Palanikumar v. State, (2007) 4 CTC 1 (Mad), cited

[6565] — Ss. 438, 437 & 2(h), 155 to 157 and 41 to 44 & 46 — Arrest — Remedies against — Anticipatory order restraining arrest — Power of court to pass — Nature of direction that can be passed under S. 438 — Condition precedent for operation of S. 438 — Remedy open to applicant making prayer for anticipatory order restraining arrest — Held, legality of a proposed arrest cannot be gone into in an application under S. 438, and the court cannot pass an interim order restraining the arrest of the applicant while the application for anticipatory bail is pending — This is the case as the condition precedent for the operation of a direction under S. 438 is arrest of the accused — Rationale behind the same discussed, it being that an order restraining arrest would amount to an interference in the investigation, which was not permissible under S. 438 — Clarified, however, that such an applicant, after surrendering to custody, could file an application in terms of S. 437 or 439, as the case may be

Ordinarily, arrest is a part of the process of investigation intended to secure several purposes. The accused may have to be questioned in detail regarding various facets of motive, preparation, commission and aftermath of the crime and the connection of other persons, if any, in the crime. There may be circumstances in which the accused may provide information leading to discovery of material facts. It may be necessary to curtail his freedom in order to enable the investigation to proceed without hindrance and to protect witnesses and persons connected with the victim of the crime, to prevent his disappearance, to maintain law and order in the locality. For these or other reasons, arrest may become an inevitable part of the process of investigation. The legality of the proposed arrest cannot be gone into in an application under Section 438 of the Code. The role of the investigator is well defined and the jurisdictional scope of interference by the court in the process of investigation is limited. The court ordinarily will not interfere with the investigation of a crime or with the arrest of the accused in a cognizable offence. An interim order restraining arrest, if passed while dealing with an application under Section 438 of the Code will amount to interference in the investigation, which cannot, at any rate, be done under Section 438 of the Code. (Para 19)

Therefore, (even though no application for protection in terms of Section 438 is pending) what the appellant can do after surrendering to custody is to file an application in terms of Section 437 or 439, as the case may be. Even otherwise, the direction which a court can issue under Section 438 of the Code is that in the event of arrest of an accused on an accusation of committing a non-bailable offence, he shall be released on bail subject to such conditions as the court may deem fit to impose. An application under Section 438 of the Code can be moved only by a person who has not already been arrested. Once he is arrested, his remedy is to move the court concerned either under Section 437 or Section 439 of the Code. In the very nature of the direction which the court can issue under Section 438 of the Code, it is clear that the direction is to be issued only at the pre-arrest stage. The provisions cannot be invoked after arrest of the accused. The direction becomes operative only after arrest. The condition precedent for the operation of the direction issued is arrest of the accused. This being so, the irresistible inference is that while dealing with an application under Section 438 of the Code the court cannot restrain arrest. (Para 18)

While upholding the rejection of the prayer in terms of Section 438 CrPC, no opinion is expressed on the merits of the case. (Para 20). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

[6566] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, and duration for which to be granted — Proper course of action for court — After evaluating averments and accusation available on record, if anticipatory bail is to be granted, held, interim bail should be granted and notice should be issued to Public Prosecutor — After hearing him, court may either reject anticipatory bail application or confirm grant of anticipatory bail — It may also impose conditions for grant of anticipatory bail — If the liberty granted by court is misused then at the instance of Public Prosecutor or complainant, court can cancel or modify conditions of anticipatory bail — Anticipatory bail can be cancelled even on finding of new material or circumstances at any point of time — Anticipatory bail granted should ordinarily be continued till trial of the case — In the present case, applicant although allegedly involved in murder case, High Court's order refusing him anticipatory bail, held, not sustainable — Appellant directed to join investigation and cooperate with investigator — Further directed that in case of arrest, he should be released on bail on personal bond as specified — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 21 — CrPC, 1973 — S. 438

The appellant belonged to a political party. According to the FIR, one S, the candidate of a rival party for the State Assembly election, came to the village and met his party workers. When they were about to leave, supporters of the appellant suddenly appeared, challenged S and shouted in favour of the appellant. Some of them fired from their pistols to kill S and his party workers which resulted in instant death of one person. They also assaulted certain other supporters of S. According to the FIR, about eight days earlier, the appellant had visited the village and instigated his party workers to beat the opponents and do whatever they liked. The High Court declined to grant anticipatory bail to the appellant and therefore, he had filed the present appeal by special leave.

Opposing the appeal, the respondents contended that in murder cases custodial interrogation was necessary.

Allowing the appeal and granting anticipatory bail,

Held:

There is no justification for reading into Section 438 CrPC the limitations mentioned in Section 437 CrPC. The plentitude of Section 438 must be given its full play. There is no requirement that the accused must make out a "special case" for the exercise of the power to grant anticipatory bail. This virtually, reduces the salutary power conferred by Section 438 CrPC to a dead letter. A person seeking anticipatory bail is still a free man entitled to the presumption of innocence. He is willing to submit to restraints and conditions on his freedom, by the acceptance of conditions which the court may deem fit to impose, in consideration of the assurance that if arrested, he shall be enlarged on bail. (Paras 91 and 93)

The proper course of action on an application for anticipatory bail ought to be that after evaluating the averments and accusations available on the record if the court is inclined to grant anticipatory bail then an interim bail be granted and notice be issued to the Public Prosecutor. After hearing the Public Prosecutor the court may either reject the anticipatory bail application or confirm the initial order of granting bail. The court would certainly be entitled to impose conditions for the grant of anticipatory bail. The Public Prosecutor or the complainant would be at liberty to move the same court for cancellation or modifying the conditions of anticipatory bail any time if liberty granted by the court is misused. The anticipatory bail granted by the court should ordinarily be continued till the trial of the case. (Para 94)

(1) Anticipatory Bail — Generally (contd.)

The order granting anticipatory bail for a limited duration and thereafter directing the accused to surrender and apply for regular bail is contrary to the legislative intention and the judgment of the Constitution Bench in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565. (Para 95)

It is a settled legal position that the court which grants the bail also has the power to cancel it. The discretion of grant or cancellation of bail can be exercised either at the instance of the accused, the Public Prosecutor or the complainant on finding new material or circumstances at any point of time. (Para 96)

The intention of the legislature is quite clear that the power of grant or refusal of bail is entirely discretionary. (Para 97)

The court which grants the bail has the right to cancel the bail according to the provisions of the General Clauses Act; but ordinarily after hearing the Public Prosecutor when the anticipatory bail order is confirmed then the benefit of the grant of the bail should continue till the end of the trial of that case. Section 438 CrPC does not mention anything about the duration to which a direction for release on bail in the event of arrest can be granted. The order granting anticipatory bail is a direction specifically to release the accused on bail in the event of his arrest. Once such a direction of anticipatory bail is executed by the accused and he is released on bail, the court concerned would be fully justified in imposing conditions including a direction of joining the investigation. (Paras 98 and 100)

In pursuance of the order of the Court of Session or the High Court, once the accused is released on anticipatory bail by the trial court, then it would be unreasonable to compel the accused to surrender before the trial court and again apply for regular bail. (Para 102)

The court must bear in mind that at times the applicant would approach the court for grant of anticipatory bail on mere apprehension of being arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence. In fact, the investigating agency concerned may not otherwise arrest that applicant who has applied for anticipatory bail but just because he makes an application before the court and gets the relief from the court for a limited period and thereafter he has to surrender before the trial court and only thereafter his bail application can be considered and the life of anticipatory bail comes to an end. This may lead to disastrous and unfortunate consequences. The applicant who may not have otherwise lost his liberty loses it because he chose to file application of anticipatory bail on mere apprehension of being arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence. No arrest should be made because it is lawful for the police officer to do so. The existence of power to arrest is one thing and the justification for the exercise of it is quite another. The police officer must be able to justify the arrest apart from his power to do so. (Para 103)

The restriction imposed in Salauddin case, (1996) 1 SCC 667 that anticipatory bail should be granted only for a limited period and on the expiry of that duration the accused released on anticipatory bail must submit himself to custody and only thereafter can apply for regular bail is contrary to the basic intention and spirit of Section 438 CrPC. It is also contrary to Article 21 of the Constitution. The test of fairness and reasonableness is implicit under Article 21 of the Constitution of India. Directing the accused to surrender to custody after the limited period of anticipatory bail amounts to deprivation of his personal liberty. It is unreasonable to lay down strict, inflexible and rigid rules for exercise of such discretion by limiting the period of which an order under Section 438 could be granted. (Paras 104, 106 and 107)

Once the anticipatory bail is granted then the protection should ordinarily be available till the end of the trial unless the interim protection by way of the grant of anticipatory bail is curtailed when the anticipatory bail granted by the court is cancelled by the court on finding fresh material or circumstances or on the ground of abuse of the indulgence by the accused. (Para 108)

In view of the clear declaration of law laid down by the Constitution Bench in Sibbia case it would not be proper to limit the life of anticipatory bail. Therefore, the clear declaration of the law by the Constitution Bench, the life of the order under Section 438 CrPC granting bail cannot be curtailed. (Paras 123 and 138)

In the present case, the impugned judgment and order of the High Court declining anticipatory bail to the appellant cannot be sustained and is consequently set aside. The appellant is directed to join the investigation and fully cooperate with the investigating agency. In the event of arrest the appellant shall be released on bail on his furnishing a personal bond in the sum of Rs 50,000 with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the arresting officer. (Paras 141 and 142). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248, followed

Hyman v. Rose, 1912 AC 623, 631, cited

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277, held, per incuriam

[6567] — S. 438 — Admissions made by accused in anticipatory bail — Admissibility — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 5

The question as to admissions made in an application for anticipatory bail were binding on the accused, being a matter of inference, can also be urged during trial. The other and further remedies as pointed out can be resorted to as also invocation of the provisions of Section 319 CrPC at the stage of trial is also permissible in law, if an appropriate case is made out therefor. It is clarified that any observations by higher courts should not prejudice either party and the Magistrate should consider the matter on its own merit if the issue of further investigation again arises in future. (Paras 26 and 27). Kishan Lal v. Dharmendra Bafna, (2009) 7 SCC 685: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 611: 2009 Cri LJ 3721: (2009) 81 AIC 141 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-7-2009]

[6568] — S. 438 — Direction given under, for grant of bail to person apprehending arrest — Question of constitutionality not decided — Constitution of India — Art. 32. Ghanshyam Dass Jain v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 389(1): 1983 SCC (Cri) 62(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-1981]

[6569] — S. 438 — Restoration of provision as to anticipatory bail in State concerned — Recommendation made to State Government/State Legislature by Supreme Court — Binding effect, if any — Per Markandey Katju, J., although such a recommendation [pertaining to restoration of a deleted statutory provision in this case] is not binding on State Government/State Legislature, it should be seriously considered and not simply ignored — Court usually makes recommendation when it feels that public is facing some hardship — Such recommendation should, therefore, be given respect and serious consideration — Constitution of India — Arts. 226, 32, 136, 50 and 245

No doubt the recommendation of a court is not binding on the State Government/State Legislature but still it should be seriously considered, and not simply ignored. The court usually makes a recommendation when it feels that the public is facing some hardship. Such recommendation should, therefore, be given respect and serious consideration. (Para 56)

Therefore, a strong recommendation is made to the U.P. Government to immediately issue an ordinance to restore the provision for anticipatory bail in U.P. by repealing Section 9 of U.P. Act 16 of 1976, and empowering the Allahabad High Court as well as the Sessions Courts in U.P. to grant anticipatory bail. (Paras 57 and 53). Som Mittal v. Govt. of Karnataka, (2008) 3 SCC 753: (2008) 1 SCC (L&S) 895: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 73: AIR 2008 SC 1126: (2008) 2 LLN 690: (2008) 65 AIC 187 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1610.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

[6570] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Provision as to — Deletion of, in State of U.P. — Restoration of — Recommendation made by Supreme Court for — Deletion of said provision leading to filing of thousands of writ petitions and S. 482 CrPC applications every year in the High Court concerned for stay of petitioner's arrest and/or quashing of FIR — This unnecessarily increasing workload of High Court — That apart, said deletion causing hardship to public and overcrowding in jails — Problems caused would be obviated by restoring the provision for anticipatory bail in State of U.P. — Hence, Supreme Court [Markandey Katju, J.] making a strong recommendation to U.P. Government to immediately issue an ordinance to restore the provision for anticipatory bail

In U.P. provision for anticipatory bail has been deleted while it continues to exist in all other States in India, even in terrorist affected States. The result is that thousands of petitions under Section 482 CrPC are filed every year in the Allahabad High Court praying for stay of arrest or for quashing the FIR, because in the absence of the provision of anticipatory bail many persons who are innocent cannot get anticipatory bail even though the FIR filed against them may be frivolous and/or false. Even if such persons get regular bail under Section 439 CrPC, before that they will have to go to jail, and thus their reputation in society may be irreparably tarnished. (Paras 39, 50 and 45)

(1) Anticipatory Bail — Generally (contd.)

Thus the deletion of the provision for anticipatory bail in U.P. is unnecessarily increasing the workload of the High Court and adding to the arrears, apart from the hardship to the public, and overcrowding in jails. The problem will be obviated by restoring the provision for anticipatory bail in the State concerned. (Paras 45, 54, 55 and 49)

The Allahabad High Court had on several occasions requested the State Government of U.P. to issue an ordinance immediately to restore the provision for anticipatory bail but all its requests seem to have fallen on deaf ears. It seems that there is an impression in some quarters that if the provision for anticipatory bail is restored crimes will increase. This is a specious argument, since it has not made much difference to the crime position in the States where the provision for anticipatory bail exists, even in terrorist affected States. Som Mittal v. Govt. of Karnataka, (2008) 3 SCC 753: (2008) 1 SCC (L&S) 895: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 73: AIR 2008 SC 1126: (2008) 2 LLN 690: (2008) 65 AIC 187 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1610.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

[6571] — S. 438 — Does not form an integral part of Art. 21 — Anticipatory bail provided for the first time under the new code is concerned with the Sessions Court and High Court and cannot be claimed as a matter of right. State of M.P. v. Ram Kishna Balothia, (1995) 3 SCC 221: 1995 SCC (Cri) 439: AIR 1995 SC 1198: (1995) 1 KLT 535: 1995 MPLJ 303: 1995 Cri LJ 2076.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Jeevan Reddy and Sujata V. Manohar, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-2-1995]

[6572] — Ss. 438 and 42 — Arrest — Arrest of person applying for anticipatory bail, when such arrest becomes imperative — Necessity of recording reasons in case diary emphasised — Such reasons should be recorded before arrest, and in exceptional cases immediately after arrest, so that court may have opportunity to properly consider case for grant or refusal of bail — Importance of fundamental right to personal liberty pointed out — Constitution of India, Arts. 22 and 21

Discretion vested in the court in all matters should be exercised with care and circumspection depending upon the facts and circumstances justifying its exercise. Similarly, the discretion vested with the court under Section 438 CrPC should also be exercised with caution and prudence. It is unnecessary to travel beyond it and subject the wide power and discretion conferred by the legislature to a rigorous code of self-imposed limitations. (Para 126)

No inflexible guidelines or straitjacket formula can be provided for grant or refusal of anticipatory bail because all circumstances and situations of future cannot be clearly visualised for the grant or refusal of anticipatory bail. In consonance with the legislative intention the grant or refusal of anticipatory bail should necessarily depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. (Para 111)

The following factors and parameters can be taken into consideration while dealing with the anticipatory bail:

(i) The nature and gravity of the accusation and the exact role of the accused must be properly comprehended before arrest is made;

(ii) The antecedents of the applicant including the fact as to whether the accused has previously undergone imprisonment on conviction by a court in respect of any cognizable offence;

(iii) The possibility of the applicant to flee from justice;

(iv) The possibility of the accused's likelihood to repeat similar or other offences;

(v) Where the accusations have been made only with the object of injuring or humiliating the applicant by arresting him or her;

(vi) Impact of grant of anticipatory bail particularly in cases of large magnitude affecting a very large number of people;

(vii) The courts must evaluate the entire available material against the accused very carefully. The court must also clearly comprehend the exact role of the accused in the case. The cases in which the accused is implicated with the help of Sections 34 and 149 of the Penal Code, 1860 the court should consider with even greater care and caution because overimplication in the cases is a matter of common knowledge and concern;

(viii) While considering the prayer for grant of anticipatory bail, a balance has to be struck between two factors, namely, no prejudice should be caused to the free, fair and full investigation and there should be prevention of harassment, humiliation and unjustified detention of the accused;

(ix) The court to consider reasonable apprehension of tampering of the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant;

(x) Frivolity in prosecution should always be considered and it is only the element of genuineness that shall have to be considered in the matter of grant of bail and in the event of there being some doubt as to the genuineness of the prosecution, in the normal course of events, the accused is entitled to an order of bail. (Para 112)

Arrest should be the last option and it should be restricted to those exceptional cases where arresting the accused is imperative in the facts and circumstances of that case. The court must carefully examine the entire available record and particularly the allegations which have been directly attributed to the accused and these allegations are corroborated by other material and circumstances on record. These factors are by no means exhaustive but they are only illustrative. (Paras 113 and 114)

Personal liberty is a very precious fundamental right and it should be curtailed only when it becomes imperative according to the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case. (Para 116)

In case the arrest is imperative, according to the facts of the case, in that event, the arresting officer must clearly record the reasons for the arrest of the accused before the arrest in the case diary, but in exceptional cases where it becomes imperative to arrest the accused immediately, the reasons be recorded in the case diary immediately after the arrest is made without loss of any time so that the court has an opportunity to properly consider the case for grant or refusal of bail in the light of reasons recorded by the arresting officer. (Para 118). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, followed

Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 260: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1172, referred to

National Police Commission Reports, 3rd Report, cited

[6573] — S. 438 — Provision for anticipatory bail — Whether S. 9 of U.P. Act 16 of 1976 omitting S. 438 of Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 violative of Arts. 19, 14 and 21 — Held, matter should be referred to a larger Bench — Constitution of India — Arts. 19, 14 and 21 — Criminal Procedure Code (U.P. Amendment) Act, 1976 (16 of 1976), S. 9. Jagat Prasad v. State of U.P., (1998) 8 SCC 632: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1724.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-8-1996]

[Note: But see Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569 where a Bench of five Judges has upheld the constitutionality of Section 9 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (U.P. Amendment) Act, 1976 (16 of 1976).]

[6574] — S. 438 — Multiple cases — Grant of bail in one case — Effect — Entitlement to bail in all cases if arises — In the present case, the writ petitioners charged with offences at different places in different States though were granted bail in one case could not avail of the benefit thereof due to incarceration on account of production warrant in another case — Such a situation, held, not ipso facto violative of Art. 21 — In absence of material to substantiate the allegation of infraction of Art. 21, relief of release on bail by a blanket order refused — However, in view of the right under Art. 21 to speedy trial, Central Government directed to evolve a formula or procedure for early conclusion of the trial — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 406, 409, 407, 120-B, 467, 468 & 471 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(2) & (1)(d) — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 — Constitution of India — Art. 21

Admittedly, the protection of personal liberty stands expanded to make the right to life under Article 21 more meaningful, the language of the article itself records an exception indicating thereby that a person may be deprived of his liberty in accordance with the procedure established by law and it is in this sphere the courts will scrupulously observe as to whether the alleged violation of Article 21 stands differently and contra as regards the procedure established by law and in the event it is not so done, it would be a plain exercise of judicial power to grant redress to the petitioner. While there is no difficulty in appreciating the grievance and grant of relief in a given case but facts are too insufficient however, to come to a conclusion as regards the infraction of Article 21. Production warrants have been spoken of without any details whatsoever therefor — the reason offered is that the petitioners, in fact, are not in the know of things being behind the prison bars and it starts pouring in from all parts of the country and in the factual backdrop, it is a well-nigh impossible to come to a finding as regards the infraction of Article 21. In any event the liberty of the petitioners cannot be said to have been trifled with in the absence of due process of law. Deprivation, if any, cannot be claimed to be not in accordance with due process of law. (Para 50)

It cannot be held that an accused involved in large number of criminal cases in different parts of the country, if is not able to be released from custody even on getting bail orders in some cases, itself would tantamount to violation of the right of a citizen under Article 21 of the Constitution. The object of Article 21 is to prevent encroachment upon personal liberty by the executive save in accordance with law, and in conformity with the provisions thereof. It is, therefore, imperative that before a person is deprived of his life or personal liberty, the procedure established by law must strictly be followed and must not be departed from, to the disadvantage of the person affected. In each case where a person complains of the deprivation of his life or personal liberty, the Court, in exercise of its constitutional power of judicial review, has to decide whether there is a law authorising such deprivation and whether in the given case, the procedure prescribed by such law is reasonable, fair and just, and not arbitrary, whimsical and fanciful. On account of liberal interpretation of the words "life" and "liberty" in Article 21, the said article has now come to be invoked almost as a residuary right, even to an extent which the founding fathers of the Constitution never dreamt of. Issuance of production warrants by the court and the production of accused in the court, in cases where he is involved is a procedure established by law and consequently, the accused cannot be permitted to complain of infraction of his rights under Article 21. However, in a given case, the court may be justified in directing release of the accused, taking a stock of the entire situation in the case. While, therefore, holding that an accused could maintain a petition under Article 21, it has to be held that the court would not be justified in directing the release of such accused under a blanket order. (Paras 57 and 63)

The right of an accused to have speedy trial is now recognised as a right under Article 21. Even it has been extended to investigation of offences against child offenders. The procedural fairness required by Article 21, including the right to a speedy trial, has, therefore to be observed throughout and to be borne in mind. (Para 58)

Therefore, while no relief is granted herein to the accused persons, the Central Government should evolve certain formula or procedure, so that the accused will not complain of undue harassment on account of protraction of their cases and the persons deceived who have filed complaints, will be satisfied with the early conclusions of the trial. (Para 58). Narinderjit Singh Sahni v. Union of India, (2002) 2 SCC 210: AIR 2001 SC 3810.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, U.C. Banerjee and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2001]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, followed

Sheela Barse (I) v. Union of India, (1986) 3 SCC 632: 1986 SCC (Cri) 352, relied on

JVG Group of Companies, Re, WP (Crl.) No. 256 of 1999, decided on 28-3-2000 (quoted in Para 1) and Kuber Group of Companies, Re, WPs (Crl) Nos. 72-75 of 2000, decided on 5-5-2000 (quoted in Para 2) overruled on this point

(2) Regular bail vis-à-vis anticipatory bail

[6575] — Ss. 438 and 437 & 439 — Considerations for grant of anticipatory bail vis-à-vis regular bail — Relevant considerations for granting anticipatory bail — Differ from those for granting other kinds of bail — On facts, held, grant of anticipatory bail not justified

Relevant considerations governing the court's decision in granting anticipatory bail under S. 438 are materially different from those when an application for bail by a person who is arrested in the course of investigation as also by a person who is convicted and his appeal is pending before the higher court and bail is sought during the pendency of the appeal. Some of the relevant considerations for granting anticipatory bail are the nature and seriousness of the proposed charges, the context of the events likely to lead to the making of the charges, a reasonable possibility of the applicant's presence not being secured at the trial, a reasonable apprehension that witnesses will be tampered with and "the larger interests of the public or the State". Status in life, affluence or otherwise, are hardly relevant considerations while examining the request for granting anticipatory bail. Pokar Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1985) 2 SCC 597: 1985 SCC (Cri) 297: AIR 1985 SC 969: 1985 Cri LJ 1175.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar, D.A. Desai and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-4-1985]

[6576] — Ss. 438, 439 and 46(1) — Distinction between anticipatory bail and regular bail, restated — Conditional immunity from touch and arrest as envisaged under S. 46(1) in case of anticipatory bail, reiterated

The distinction between an ordinary order of bail and an order under Section 438 CrPC is that whereas the former is granted after arrest, and therefore means release from custody of the police, the latter is granted in anticipation of arrest and is therefore effective at the very moment of arrest. Section 46(1) CrPC, which deals with how arrests are to be made, provides that in making an arrest the police officer or other person making the same would actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action. The order under Section 438 is intended to confer conditional immunity from the touch as envisaged by Section 46(1) or any confinement. (Para 6). Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 2008 SC 218: (2008) 1 KLT 839.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-2007]

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, relied on

[6577] — Ss. 438 and 437 — Relative scope — Reiterated, there is no justification for reading into S. 438 the limitations mentioned in S. 437 — The plentitude of S. 438 must be given its full play — There is no requirement that accused must make out a "special case" for exercise of the power to grant anticipatory bail — This virtually reduces salutary power conferred by S. 438 to a dead letter

There is no justification for reading into Section 438 CrPC the limitations mentioned in Section 437 CrPC. The plentitude of Section 438 must be given its full play. There is no requirement that the accused must make out a "special case" for the exercise of the power to grant anticipatory bail. This virtually, reduces the salutary power conferred by Section 438 CrPC to a dead letter. A person seeking anticipatory bail is still a free man entitled to the presumption of innocence. He is willing to submit to restraints and conditions on his freedom, by the acceptance of conditions which the court may deem fit to impose, in consideration of the assurance that if arrested, he shall be enlarged on bail. (Paras 91 and 93)

In pursuance of the order of the Court of Session or the High Court, once the accused is released on anticipatory bail by the trial court, then it would be unreasonable to compel the accused to surrender before the trial court and again apply for regular bail. (Para 102)

The court must bear in mind that at times the applicant would approach the court for grant of anticipatory bail on mere apprehension of being arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence. In fact, the investigating agency concerned may not otherwise arrest that applicant who has applied for anticipatory bail but just because he makes an application before the court and gets the relief from the court for a limited period and thereafter he has to surrender before the trial court and only thereafter his bail application can be considered and the life of anticipatory bail comes to an end. This may lead to disastrous and unfortunate consequences. The applicant who may not have otherwise lost his liberty loses it because he chose to file application of anticipatory bail on mere apprehension of being arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence. No arrest should be made because it is lawful for the police officer to do so. The existence of power to arrest is one thing and the justification for the exercise of it is quite another. The police officer must be able to justify the arrest apart from his power to do so. (Para 103)

The restriction imposed in Salauddin case, (1996) 1 SCC 667 that anticipatory bail should be granted only for a limited period and on the expiry of that duration the accused released on anticipatory bail must submit himself to custody and only thereafter can apply for regular bail is contrary to the basic intention and spirit of Section 438 CrPC. It is also contrary to Article 21 of the Constitution. The test of fairness and reasonableness is implicit under Article 21 of the Constitution of India. Directing the accused to surrender to custody after the limited period of anticipatory bail amounts to deprivation of his personal liberty. It is unreasonable to lay down strict, inflexible and rigid rules for exercise of such discretion by limiting the period of which an order under Section 438 could be granted. (Paras 104, 106 and 107)

Once the anticipatory bail is granted then the protection should ordinarily be available till the end of the trial unless the interim protection by way of the grant of anticipatory bail is curtailed when the anticipatory bail granted by the court is cancelled by the court on finding fresh material or circumstances or on the ground of abuse of the indulgence by the accused. (Para 108)

In view of the clear declaration of law laid down by the Constitution Bench in Sibbia case it would not be proper to limit the life of anticipatory bail. Therefore, the clear declaration of the law by the Constitution Bench, the life of the order under Section 438 CrPC granting bail cannot be curtailed. (Paras 123 and 138)

In the present case, the impugned judgment and order of the High Court declining anticipatory bail to the appellant cannot be sustained and is consequently set aside. The appellant is directed to join the investigation and fully cooperate with the investigating agency. In the event of arrest the appellant shall be released on bail on his furnishing a personal bond in the sum of Rs 50,000 with two sureties in the like amount to the satisfaction of the arresting officer. (Paras 141 and 142). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, followed

Hyman v. Rose, 1912 AC 623, 631, cited

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277, held, per incuriam

(2) Regular bail vis-à-vis anticipatory bail (contd.)

[6578] — Ss. 438, 437 and 439 — Anticipatory bail — Duration for which to be granted — Following Constitution Bench in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565, held, grant of anticipatory bail for limited period is illegal — When order of anticipatory bail is confirmed after hearing Public Prosecutor, held, ordinarily its benefit should continue till end of trial — Grant of anticipatory bail for a limited period coupled with requirement to submit to custody thereafter and then seek, if at all, regular bail, held, violative of S. 438 — Such order would also be unreasonable and therefore, violative of Art. 21 of Constitution which enshrines test of fairness and reasonableness — Constitution of India, Art. 21 — CrPC, 1973, Ss. 438, 437 and 439. (Paras 141 and 142). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248, followed

Hyman v. Rose, 1912 AC 623, 631, cited

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277, held, per incuriam

[6579] — Ss. 438 and 439 — "Custody" and "move" — Held, a person who is under the control of the court or is in the physical hold of an officer with coercive power is in "custody" for the purpose of S. 439 CrPC — Further held, it must be taken to be a compendious expression referring to the events on the happening of which the Magistrate can entertain bail petition of accused — "Move" comprehends all things necessary to be done by a litigant to obtain an order of the court directing the relief sought — Hence held, unless the applicant is in custody, his making an application under S. 439 CrPC will not confer any jurisdiction on the court to which such application is made — Further held, the view regarding extension of time to "move" the higher court as culled out from the decision in K.L. Verma case shall be treated as per incuriam, as no reference was made to the prescription in S. 439 requiring the accused to be in custody Words and Phrases (Paras 14 to 18). Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435: AIR 2005 SC 498: (2004) 115 DLT 517: (2005) 2 Guj LR 1096: (2005) 1 KLT 748: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 534.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2004]

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198, considered

K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031, held per incuriam

[6580] — Ss. 438 and 439 — Regular bail after surrender before trial court after grant of limited duration anticipatory bail — Need for disposal on the same day, emphasised — Request for direction for no adjournment on ground of non-availability of records if the accused-respondents proposed to surrender three days in advance, allowed — State giving an undertaking accordingly — Constitution of India — Art. 21

The State had undertaken that all relevant records should be produced before the court dealing with the bail application and no adjournment would be asked for on the ground of non-availability of records if the respondent-accused intimate the date on which they propose to surrender three days in advance. If an application for bail would be moved, the court concerned would do well to dispose of it on the day it is filed. (Para 8). Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 2008 SC 218: (2008) 1 KLT 839.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-2007]

(3) Maintainability of application

[6581] — S. 438 — Principles for invoking — 'Reasons to believe' — Meaning of — Application for invoking the section should disclose specific facts and events and should not be vague — Court should not issue blanket orders and should apply its own mind — It can be invoked prior to arrest — FIR need not be filed before it is invoked — Previous notice to Public Prosecutor not necessary

The use of the expression 'reason to believe' in S. 438(1) shows that the belief that the applicant may be so arrested must be founded on reasonable grounds. Mere 'fear' is not 'belief'. A belief can be said to be founded on reasonable grounds only if there is something tangible to go by on the basis of which it can be said that the applicant's apprehension that he may be arrested is genuine. Such belief must be capable of being examined by the court objectively, because it is then alone that the court can determine whether the applicant has reason to believe that he may be so arrested. Specific events and facts must be disclosed by the applicant in order to enable the court to judge the reasonableness of his belief.

A blanket order i.e. an order which serves as a blanket to cover or protect any and every kind of allegedly unlawful activity, in fact any eventuality, likely or unlikely regarding which, no concrete information can possibly be had, should not generally be passed. Such a blanket order is bound to cause serious interference with the functions of the police.

If an application for anticipatory bail is made to the High Court or the Court of Session it must apply its own mind to the question and decide whether a case has been made out for granting such relief. It cannot leave the question for the decision of the Magistrate concerned under S. 437 of the Code, as and when an occasion arises.

The filing of an FIR is not a condition precedent to the exercise of the power under S. 438.

Anticipatory bail can be granted even after an FIR is filed, so long as the applicant has not been arrested.

But the provisions of S. 438 cannot be invoked after the arrest of the accused.

An order of bail can be passed under S. 438(1) without notice to the Public Prosecutor. But notice should issue to the Public Prosecutor or the Government Advocate forthwith and the question of bail should be re-examined in the light of the respective contentions of the parties. The ad interim order too must conform to the requirements of the section and suitable conditions should be imposed on the applicant even at that stage.

Regarding time-limit, if any, for anticipatory bail, the court may, if there are reasons for doing so, limit the operation of the order to a short period until after the filing of an FIR in respect of the matter covered by the order. The applicant may in such cases be directed to obtain an order of bail under S. 437 or 439 of the Code within a reasonably short period after the filing of the FIR as aforesaid. But this need not be followed as an invariable rule. The normal rule should be not to limit the operation of the order in relation to a period of time.

In short the courts should strike a balance between the individual's right to personal freedom and the investigational rights of the police. Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465: AIR 1980 SC 1632: 1980 Cri LJ 1125.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and P.N. Bhagwati, N.L. Untwalia, R.S. Pathak and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-1980]

[6582] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — In case involving bailable offences — Petition under S. 438, by person accused of having committed bailable offence, not maintainable. Joginder v. State of Haryana, (2008) 10 SCC 138.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2008]

[6583] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Person who may apply for — Stage at which application may be made — Application for anticipatory bail, held, can be moved by a person who has not been arrested and a direction thereunder can be issued by court only at pre-arrest stage to the effect that in the event of his arrest he shall be released on bail (Para 7). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

[6584] — S. 438 — Provision for anticipatory bail under — Applicability — Bailable offences — Held, S. 438 not applicable in case of a bailable offence. R.K. Krishna Kumar v. State of Assam, (1998) 1 SCC 474: 1998 SCC (Cri) 406: AIR 1998 SC 530: 1998 Cri LJ 848: (1998) 92 Comp Cas 14.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-1997]

[6585] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Provision for — Applicability — Held, not applicable to persons already inside the prison after arrest for cognizable offences

Section 438 CrPC is made applicable only in the event of there being an apprehension of arrest. The petitioners in the writ petitions herein are all behind the prison bars upon arrest against all cognizable offences, and therefore, the question of relieving the petitioners from unnecessary disgrace and harassment would not arise. Therefore, and since no infraction can be identified, the petition cannot be sustained as regards the issue of anticipatory bail under Section 438. (Paras 51 and 52). Narinderjit Singh Sahni v. Union of India, (2002) 2 SCC 210: AIR 2001 SC 3810.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, U.C. Banerjee and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2001]

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee Representing Undertrial Prisoners v. Union of India, (1994) 6 SCC 731: 1995 SCC (Cri) 39, distinguished

Shaheen Welfare Assn. v. Union of India, (1996) 2 SCC 616: 1996 SCC (Cri) 366; R.D. Upadhyay v. State of A.P., (1996) 3 SCC 422: 1996 SCC (Cri) 519; "Common Cause" A Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 4 SCC 33: 1996 SCC (Cri) 589, considered

[6586] — Ss. 438, 437 & 439 and 41 to 44 & 46 — Arrest — Remedies against — Application for anticipatory bail under S. 438 — Stage at which may be moved — Held, said application can be moved only at the pre-arrest stage, that is, only by a person who has not already been arrested — Once he is arrested, however, (an application not having been made or allowed under S. 438) his remedy lies under S. 437 or S. 439 (Para 18). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

(3) Maintainability of application (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

[6587] — Ss. 438 and 173 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, after challan has been filed in criminal court — Permissibility — Relevance of defence taken, that dispute purely of civil nature — Held, S. 438 contains a salutary provision which has been introduced to prevent deprivation of personal liberty — It cannot be jettisoned on technicalities such as challan having been filed, anticipatory bail cannot be granted — Court must exercise its discretion judiciously — Anticipatory bail can be granted at any time so long the applicant has not been arrested — Anticipatory bail cannot also be denied merely because allegations of cheating and forgery have been made — Further held on facts, High Court could not ignore appellant's plea that dispute between him and complainant regarding sale of specific flats, was purely of civil nature and complainant had already filed suit for specific performance — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 415, 463 and 467

There was dispute between appellant and complainant regarding sale of specific flats. The complainant apart from filing suit for specific performance, also got an FIR registered against appellant for alleged commission of offences under Sections 420, 467, 468 and 120-B IPC. Appellant's repeated applications for anticipatory bail were rejected. High Court rejected third application on the ground that challan had already been filed in criminal court.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Anticipatory bail can be granted at any time so long as the applicant has not been arrested. When application is made to High Court or Court of Session, it must apply its own mind on the question and decide when the case is made out for granting such relief. The High Court ought not to have left the matter to Magistrate only on the ground that challan has now been presented. There is also no reason to deny anticipatory bail merely because allegation in this case pertains to cheating or forgery of a valuable security. Merits of these issues are to be assessed at the time of trial of accused persons and denial of anticipatory bail only on the ground that the challan has been presented would not satisfy the requirements of Sections 437 and 438 CrPC. High Court is required to exercise its discretion upon examination of facts and circumstances, and to grant anticipatory bail "if it thinks fit". Salutary provision contained in Section 438 was introduced to enable the court to prevent deprivation of personal liberty. It cannot be permitted to be jettisoned on technicalities such as the challan having been presented, anticipatory bail cannot be granted. (Paras 7 to 11)

The defence put forward by appellant cannot be obliterated at this stage itself. Appellant's plea cannot be ignored that dispute between parties is purely of a civil nature. Anticipatory bail is therefore granted to appellant. (Para 12). Ravindra Saxena v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 1 SCC 684.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and S.S. Nijjar, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-2009]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on

[Ed.: See however HDFC Bank Ltd. v. J.J. Mannan, (2010) 1 SCC 679, which was decided on 16-12-2009 i.e. next day the present case was decided. In HDFC Bank case, the Supreme Court has adopted strict approach regarding grant of anticipatory bail, holding that anticipatory bail should be granted for a limited period to enable the accused to surrender to court and to obtain regular bail. On expiry of limited period, the court granting anticipatory bail should leave it to regular court to consider granting bail by taking into consideration evidence collected as a result of investigation or charge-sheet filed in court.]

[6588] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Registration of a case and entries of case diary not necessary for entertaining an application for grant of — Mere imminence of a likely arrest on a reasonable belief on an accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence, will be sufficient to invoke that provision. Directorate of Enforcement v. Deepak Mahajan, (1994) 3 SCC 440: 1994 SCC (Cri) 785: AIR 1994 SC 1775: 1994 Cri LJ 2269: (1994) 2 BLJR 912: (1994) 2 An LT(Cri) 173: (1994) 70 ELT 12.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-1-1994]

[6589] — S. 438 — Applicability of — Applicability to all non-bailable offences — Held, not confined to offences punishable with death or imprisonment for life or offences triable exclusively by Court of Session — It also applies to all non-bailable offences — Considerations for grant of anticipatory bail different from considerations for post-arrest bail. State of A.P. v. Bimal Krishna Kundu, (1997) 8 SCC 104: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1245: AIR 1997 SC 3589: 1997 Cri LJ 4056.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-1997]

Pokar Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1985) 2 SCC 597: 1985 SCC (Cri) 297; State v. Anil Sharma, (1997) 7 SCC 187: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1039, followed [6590] — S. 438 — Invocation of, after arrest — Held, provisions of S. 438 cannot be invoked after arrest (Para 18). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

[6591] — Ss. 438 & 406 — Anticipatory bail — Territorial jurisdiction to grant — Respondents suspected of giving aid to banned militant groups in Assam — Assam Police wanting to interrogate them for investigation — Whether in such circumstances, Bombay High Court had jurisdiction to entertain the respondents' application for anticipatory bail — Question left open — However, grant of bail by Single Judge of Bombay High Court set aside on a different ground and since for all practical purposes it was necessary that the question of grant of bail be considered by the High Court within whose territorial jurisdiction the alleged offences were committed, respondents' applications for anticipatory bail transferred to Gauhati High Court and directed to be heard by a Division Bench — All future petitions for anticipatory bails in common or related matters referring to such activities committed within the jurisdiction of Gauhati High Court, directed to be heard only by that Division Bench and not by any other court — Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967. State of Assam v. Dr. Brojen Gogol, (1998) 1 SCC 397: 1998 SCC (Cri) 403: AIR 1998 SC 143, 144.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-10-1997]

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally

See also Section 438, '(5) Grounds for bail in dowry/cruelty cases', and

'(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences', below

[6592] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — "Reason to believe" — Belief that the applicant may be arrested must be based on reasonable ground(s) capable of being examined — Mere fear or vague apprehension not sufficient

Section 438 CrPC is a procedural provision which is concerned with the personal liberty of an individual who is entitled to plead innocence, since he is not on the date of application for exercise of power under Section 438 CrPC convicted for the offence in respect of which he seeks bail. The applicant must show that he has "reason to believe" that he may be arrested in a non-bailable offence. Use of the expression "reason to believe" shows that the belief that the applicant may be arrested must be founded on reasonable grounds. A belief can be said to be founded on reasonable grounds only if there is something tangible to go by on the basis of which it can be said that the applicant's apprehension that he may be arrested is genuine. Mere "fear" is not "belief" for which reason it is not enough for the applicant to show that he has some sort of vague apprehension that someone is going to make an accusation against him in pursuance of which he may be arrested. Grounds on which the belief of the applicant is based that he may be arrested in non-bailable offence must be capable of being examined. If an application is made to the High Court or the Court of Session, it is for the court concerned to decide whether a case has been made out for granting of the relief sought. (Para 16). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

[6593] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Principles for grant of — Reiterated, no straitjacket formula can be prescribed for universal application, as each case for grant of bail has to be considered on its own merits and in the facts and nuances of each case. Pravinbhai Kashirambhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 7 SCC 598.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-7-2010]

State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2), relied on

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; CBI v. Tapan Kumar Singh, (2003) 6 SCC 175: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1305; Animireddy Venkata Ramana v. Public Prosecutor, (2008) 5 SCC 368: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 600; State v. Anil Sharma, (1997) 7 SCC 187: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1039; Anil Kumar Tulsiyani v. State of U.P., (2006) 9 SCC 425: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 565, considered

[6594] — Ss. 438 and 437 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Considerations — Exercise of power under S. 438 — Conditions mentioned in S. 437 if can be read into S. 438 — Powers of High Court and Sessions Court to grant or refuse bail discretionary to be exercised in the circumstances of each case — No risk involved in exercise of the discretion, being vested in higher courts and subject to appeal and revision — Conditions mentioned in S. 437 cannot be read into S. 438 — S. 438 does not interfere with investigation

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

In regard to anticipatory bail, if the proposed accusation appears to stem not from motives of furthering the ends of justice but from some ulterior motive, the object being to injure and humiliate the applicant by having him arrested, a direction for the release of the applicant on bail in the event of his arrest would generally be made. On the other hand, if it appears likely, considering the antecedents of the applicant, that taking advantage of the order of anticipatory bail he will flee from justice, such an order would not be made. But the converse of these propositions is not necessarily true. In fact, there are numerous considerations, the combined effect of which must weigh with the court while granting or rejecting anticipatory bail. The nature and seriousness of the proposed charges, the context of the events likely to lead to the making of the charges, a reasonable possibility of the applicant's presence not being secured at the trial, a reasonable apprehension that witnesses will be tampered with and "the larger interests of the public or the State" are some of the considerations which the court has to keep in mind while deciding an application for anticipatory bail.

In the evaluation of the consideration whether the applicant is likely to abscond, there can be no presumption that the wealthy and the mighty will submit themselves to trial and that the humble and the poor will run away from the course of justice.

The question whether to grant bail or not depends for its answer upon a variety of circumstances, the cumulative effect of which must enter into the judicial verdict. Any one single circumstance cannot be treated as of universal validity or as necessarily justifying the grant or refusal of bail. Therefore, the High Court and the Court of Session to whom the application for anticipatory bail is made ought to be left free in the exercise of their judicial discretion to grant bail if they consider it fit so to do on the particular facts and circumstances of the case and on such conditions as the case may warrant. Similarly, they must be left free to refuse bail if the circumstances of the case so warrant, on considerations similar to those mentioned in S. 437 or which are generally considered to be relevant under S. 439 of the Code. The judicial discretion granted under S. 438 should not be read down by reading into the statute conditions that are not to be found therein. The courts have to be allowed a little free play in the joints if the conferment of discretionary power is to be meaningful. There is no risk involved in entrusting a wide discretion to the Court of Session and the High Court in granting anticipatory bail because, firstly, these are higher courts manned by experienced persons, secondly, their orders are not final but are open to appellate or revisional scrutiny and above all because, discretion has always to be exercised by courts judicially and not according to whim, caprice or fancy. On the other hand, there is a risk in forceclosing categories of cases in which anticipatory bail may be allowed because life throws up unforeseen possibilities and offers new challenges which have to be met.

There is no warrant for reading into S. 438 the conditions and limitations subject to which bail can be granted under S. 437(1). The expression 'if it thinks fit', which occurs in S. 438(1) in relation to the power of the High Court or the Court of Session, is conspicuously absent in S. 437(1). The High Court, therefore, erred in laying down that the discretion under S. 438 cannot be exercised in regard to offences punishable with death or imprisonment for life unless, the court at the stage of granting anticipatory bail, is satisfied that such a charge appears to be false or groundless. Circumstances may justify grant of anticipatory bail in cases such as criminal breach of trust for which the punishment provided is imprisonment for life, though of course, the court is free to refuse anticipatory bail in any case if there is material before it justifying such refusal.

An order of anticipatory bail does not in any way, directly or indirectly, take away from the police their right to investigate into charges made or to be made against the person released on bail. While granting relief under S. 438(1), appropriate conditions can be imposed under S. 438(2) so as to ensure an uninterrupted investigation. One of such conditions can even be that in the event of the police making out a case of a likely discovery under S. 27 of the Evidence Act, the person released on bail shall be liable to be taken in police custody for facilitating the discovery. Besides, if and when the occasion arises, it may be possible for the prosecution to claim the benefit of S. 27 of the Evidence Act in regard to a discovery of facts made in pursuance of information supplied by a person released on bail. When a person not in custody approaches a police officer investigating an offence and offers to give information leading to the discovery of a fact, having a bearing on the charge which may be made against him, he may appropriately be deemed to have surrendered himself to the police. Section 46 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not contemplate any formality before a person can be said to be taken in custody: submission to the custody by word or action by a person is sufficient.

So also there is no warrant for the proposition that where a legitimate case for the remand of the offender to the police custody under S. 167(2) can be made out by the investigating agency, the power under S. 438 should not be exercised.

It is also not proper to hold that in serious cases like economic offences involving blatant corruption at the higher rungs of the executive and political power the discretion under S. 438 of the Code should not be exercised. It is not possible for the court to assess the blatantness of corruption at the stage of anticipatory bail.

It is also not possible to hold that anticipatory bail cannot be granted unless it is alleged and shown that the proposed accusations are mala fide.

Under S. 438 the applicant has undoubtedly to make out a case for the grant of anticipatory bail. But one cannot go further and say that he must make out a 'special case'. A wise exercise of judicial power inevitably takes care of the evil consequences which are likely to flow out of its intemperate use.

Nor is one justified in reading the conclusion that the power under S. 438 must be exercised in "exceptional cases only" merely because it is of an extraordinary character. Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465: AIR 1980 SC 1632: 1980 Cri LJ 1125.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and P.N. Bhagwati, N.L. Untwalia, R.S. Pathak and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-1980]

[6595] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Factors to be taken into consideration for grant of, held, are the gravity of the offence and the need for custodial interrogation — The mere fact of taking of cognizance or filing of charge-sheet, held, is not by itself a bar against grant of anticipatory bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 504, 498-A and 406 — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, Ss. 3 and 4

The appellants herein were husband and wife. They were accused by their daughter-in-law of offences punishable under Sections 504, 498-A and 406 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. Their application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC was rejected by the Patna High Court. They filed the instant appeal by special leave. After hearing the parties the Supreme Court was inclined to grant the anticipatory bail but the respondent State raised a legal objection that since the trial court had taken cognizance of the offence, Section 438 could not be used for granting anticipatory bail even by the Supreme Court and the only remedy available to the appellants was to approach the trial court and surrender, and thereafter apply for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC.

Rejecting the State's objection and allowing the appeal,

Held :

The object of Section 438 is to prevent undue harassment of the accused persons by pre-trial arrest and detention. The gravity of the offence is an important factor to be taken into consideration while granting such anticipatory bail so also the need for custodial interrogation, but these are only factors that must be borne in mind by the courts concerned while entertaining a petition for grant of anticipatory bail and the fact of taking cognizance or filing of a charge-sheet cannot by itself be construed as a prohibition against the grant of anticipatory bail. The courts i.e. the Court of Session, High Court or Supreme Court have the necessary power vested in them to grant anticipatory bail in non-bailable offences under Section 438 CrPC even when cognizance is taken or a charge-sheet is filed provided the facts of the case require the court to do so. (Para 7). Bharat Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2003) 8 SCC 77: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1953: AIR 2003 SC 4662.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-2003]

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198, explained

[6596] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Power to grant — Nature and object — When should be exercised — On facts held, exercise of power not warranted

A complaint was lodged in the Court of CJM against the appellant and others alleging commission of offences under Sections 406, 467, 468, 471 and 420 IPC. The CJM directed the officer in charge of the police station to investigate after taking the petition of complaint as FIR and to submit report before Sub-Divisional Judicial Magistrate. According to the appellant they were victims of a conspiracy. Large number of cases were pending between the parties. Having failed in their attempt to get any relief from the civil courts, allegedly the complainant and his associates falsely instituted the complaint. An application under Section 438 CrPC was filed before the High Court which by the impugned order was rejected. It was submitted on behalf of the appellant that without appreciating the factual background and the points involved in the application under Section 438, the prayer for anticipatory bail should not have been rejected summarily and that a case for interference was made out.

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

The present case does not prima facie appear to be one where any order in terms of Section 438 CrPC can be passed. (Para 17)

The power exercisable under Section 438 CrPC is somewhat extraordinary in character and it is only in exceptional cases where it appears that the person may be falsely implicated or where there are reasonable grounds for holding that a person accused of an offence is not likely to otherwise misuse his liberty, then power is to be exercised under Section 438. The power being of important nature it is entrusted only to the higher echelons of judicial forums i.e. the Court of Session or the High Court. It is the power exercisable in case of an anticipated accusation of non-bailable offence. The object which is sought to be achieved by Section 438 CrPC is that the moment a person is arrested, if he has already obtained an order from the Court of Session or the High Court, he shall be released immediately on bail without being sent to jail. (Para 7)

As observed in Salauddin case, (1996) 1 SCC 667, the protection in terms of Section 438 CrPC is for a limited duration during which the regular court has to be moved for bail. Obviously, such bail is bail in terms of Section 439 CrPC, mandating the applicant to be in custody. Otherwise, the distinction between orders under Sections 438 and 439 CrPC shall be rendered meaningless and redundant. In K.L. Verma case, (1998) 9 SCC 348 it was observed: "Anticipatory bail may be granted for a duration which may extend to the date on which the bail application is disposed of or even a few days thereafter to enable the accused persons to move the higher court, if they so desire." The expression "or even a few days thereafter" relates to grey areas. If the protective umbrella of Section 438 CrPC is extended beyond what was laid down in Salauddin case the result would be clear bypassing of what is mandated in Section 439 CrPC regarding custody. In other words, till the applicant avails remedies up to higher courts, the requirements of Section 439 become dead letter. No part of a statute can be rendered redundant in that manner. (Paras 14, 11 and 15). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689; Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; Nirmal Jeet Kaur v. State of M.P., (2004) 7 SCC 558: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1989; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508, relied on

K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031, overruled

Followed in Rekha Patel v. Pankaj Verma, (2008) 4 SCC 17

[6597] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Parameters for — Order for anticipatory bail when becomes operative — Held, anticipatory bail is granted if appellant has "reason to believe" that he may be arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence — It means "bail in anticipation of arrest" — When a competent court grants anticipatory bail it makes an order that in the event of arrest, a person shall be released on bail — There is no question of release on bail unless a person is arrested — Thus, it is only on arrest that such order becomes operative — Further held, said power being unusual in nature is entrusted only to higher echelons of judicial service i.e. Sessions Court and High Court

Section 438 of the Code confers on the High Court and the Court of Session, the power to grant "anticipatory bail" if the applicant has "reason to believe" that he may be arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence. The expression "anticipatory bail" has not been defined in the Code. But it means "bail in anticipation of arrest". The expression "anticipatory bail" is a misnomer inasmuch as it is not as if bail is presently granted by the court in anticipation of arrest. When a competent court grants "anticipatory bail", it makes an order that in the event of arrest, a person shall be released on bail. There is no question of release on bail unless a person is arrested and, therefore, it is only on arrest that the order granting anticipatory bail becomes operative. The power being rather unusual in nature, it is entrusted only to the higher echelons of judicial service i.e. a Court of Session and the High Court. (Paras 14, 15 and 16)

The wide discretionary power conferred by the legislature on the higher echelons in the criminal justice-delivery system cannot be put in the form of straitjacket rules for universal application as the question whether to grant bail or not depends for its answer upon a variety of circumstances, the cumulative effect of which must enter into the judicial verdict. A circumstance which, in a given case, turns out to be conclusive, may or may not have any significance in another case. The imposition of unnecessary restrictions on the scope of the section which were not to be found in Section 438 of the Code, could make the provision constitutionally vulnerable, since the right of personal freedom, as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution, cannot be made to depend on compliance with unreasonable restrictions. The courts must keep in mind the guidelines while dealing with an application for grant of anticipatory bail laid down by the Constitution Bench in Gurbaksh Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 565. Further, the amendment to Section 438 brought about by the CrPC (Amendment) Act, 2005, which is yet to be enforced is more or less in line with the parameters laid down in Gurbaksh Singh case. (Paras 21 to 27). Savitri Agarwal v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 8 SCC 325: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 683: (2009) 80 AIC 116 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-2009]

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689, followed

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349, relied on

Gurbaksh Singh Sibia v. State of Punjab, AIR 1978 P&H 1: 1978 Cri LJ 20, held, overruled

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689, held, partly doubted

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, partly doubted

[6598] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Purpose of — Nature and extent of order that may be passed — Matters to be considered — Held, inter alia is to protect a person against harassment or humiliation sought to be achieved by complainant due to grudge or personal vendetta — However, protective mechanism of S. 438 does not imply passing of a blanket order which would exempt an accused from surrendering to court if charge-sheet is filed against him on completion of investigation — Anticipatory bail should be given for a limited period to enable accused to surrender to court and to obtain regular bail — On expiry of limited period, the court granting anticipatory bail should leave it to regular court to consider granting bail by taking into consideration evidence collected as a result of investigation or charge-sheet filed in court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B

Respondent 1 in his capacity as Managing Director of a company, had taken loan from appellant Bank for purchase of electronic sensor paver finishers from a specified supplier. The appellant Bank after sanctioning loan, drew cheques in the name of specified supplier and handed over cheques to Respondent 1. It was alleged that Respondent 1 instead of making purchases from specified supplier, deposited cheques in a fictitious account and diverted the amount to himself. A complaint was therefore filed for commission of offences under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B of the Penal Code, 1860.

On 3-7-2006, the Single Judge of the High Court granted anticipatory bail to Respondent 1 under Section 438 CrPC on the ground that investigating agency had already seized all relevant and vital documents and had recorded statements of all important witnesses, custodial interrogation of Respondent 1 was therefore not required. The appellant Bank filed present appeal for cancellation of anticipatory bail. One of the grounds taken by Respondent 1 for opposing the appeal was that anticipatory bail was granted on 3-7-2006 and Respondent 1 has never misused the privilege and had in fact cooperated with the investigating agencies all through.

Partly allowing the appeal and modifying the High Court order,

Held :

Section 438 CrPC contemplates arrest at the stage of investigation and provides a mechanism for an accused to be released on bail, should he be arrested during the period of investigation. Once investigation makes out a case against him and he is included as an accused in the charge-sheet, the accused has to surrender to the custody of court and pray for regular bail. On the strength of an order granting anticipatory bail, an accused against whom charge has been framed, cannot avoid appearing before the trial court. A person should not be harassed or humiliated in order to satisfy grudge or personal vendetta of complainant but at the same time, provisions of Section 438 CrPC cannot also be invoked to exempt accused from surrendering to court after investigation is complete and if charge-sheet is filed against him. Such an interpretation would amount to violence to the provisions of Section 438 CrPC, since even though a charge-sheet may be filed against an accused and charge is framed against him, he may still not appear before court at all, even during trial. No blanket order could be passed under Section 438 CrPC to prevent accused from being arrested at all in connection with the case. Anticipatory bail is given for a limited duration to enable accused to surrender and to obtain regular bail. Anticipatory bail should be of limited duration only and primarily on expiry of that duration or extended duration, the court granting anticipatory bail should leave it to the regular court to deal with the matter on an appreciation of evidence placed before it after the investigation has made progress or the charge-sheet is submitted. (Paras 18 to 20)

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

Role of Respondent 1 in the entire episode did not entitle him to relief of anticipatory bail, much less a blanket order of bail. However, that is now a closed chapter but what is of relevance is whether High Court should have worded its order in such a way that it could be interpreted to mean that Respondent 1 was not required to even appear and surrender before court during entire investigation stage and trial. Taking advantage of the same, Respondent 1 has successfully avoided court from very initial stage of investigation and even trial. Such kind of an order is not contemplated under Section 438 CrPC. The order of High Court is modified to the extent that Respondent 1 shall surrender before trial court forthwith and pray for regular bail and trial court shall dispose of the same on merits, in accordance with law, before proceeding further with the trial. (Paras 17 and 22). HDFC Bank Ltd. v. J.J. Mannan, (2010) 1 SCC 679.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-2009]

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198, relied on

[Ed.: See however Ravindra Saxena v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 1 SCC 684, which was decided by the Supreme Court one day before the present case i.e. on 15-12-2009. In Ravindra Saxena case, the Supreme Court has adopted somewhat liberal approach in granting anticipatory bail whereas in the present case, the Supreme Court has adopted a strict approach.]

[6599] — Ss. 438 and 167 proviso — Anticipatory bail — Considerations for grant or refusal of — Court must exercise its judicial discretion only — Material already collected disclosed 'an accusing finger' against accused — Urea Scam — Violation of FERA involving huge amount — Release of other accused on bail on failure of investigating agency to complete the investigation within time prescribed under proviso to S. 167 is not a ground for granting anticipatory bail to the respondent particularly when he also contributed to the non-completion of the investigation — High Court not justified in granting anticipatory bail to the respondent when it found that the material already collected disclosed 'an accusing finger' against the respondent — Public Accountability and Vigilance — Urea scam. Directorate of Enforcement v. P.V. Prabhakar Rao, (1997) 6 SCC 647: 1997 SCC (Cri) 978: AIR 1997 SC 3868.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee, S.P. Kurdukar and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-1997]

[6600] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — When should not be granted to bail applicants holding high position and/or wielding considerable influence — Factors to be considered in exercise of discretion by court — Advantage in custodial interrogation of eliciting more useful information and material should be kept in view — Court has to presume that police officers would conduct the custodial interrogation in a responsible manner without using third-degree methods — Court's approach in dealing with application for anticipatory bail under S. 438 should not be same as that in dealing with regular post-arrest bail applications — On facts held, High Court erred in ignoring the apprehension expressed by CBI that considering the high office held by the applicant and wide influence he could wield, CBI would be subjected to great handicap in interrogating him in case of grant of pre-arrest bail to him

The respondent is a Member of Legislative Assembly of the State of Himachal Pradesh and was also a Minister of the H.P. State Government for three years. He is son of a former Union Minister for Telecommunications. CBI has been investigating a case against the respondent for offence under Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act relating to acquiring wealth far in excess of his known sources of income. According to CBI there was clear cut evidence pointing to transfer of assets to the respondent by his father. While the investigation was in progress the respondent approached the High Court for an anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC. The High Court granted the bail reminding itself of the principle that "it is well settled that bail and not jail is a normal rule". The bail was subject to the conditions that he shall not go abroad without prior permission of the Court and shall surrender his passport to CBI. Challenging the High Court's order granting the bail CBI contended that respondent's was a clear case of corruption in high places and that considering the responsible and high office which the respondent held and the wide influence which he could wield and the great handicap which the investigating agency would be subjected to while interrogating a person armed with an order of anticipatory bail, the discretion under Section 438 should never have been exercised in favour of the respondent. After perusing the case-diary file,

Held :

In the present case the High Court has misdirected itself in exercising the discretionary power under Section 438 of the Code by granting a pre-arrest bail order to the respondent.

Custodial interrogation is qualitatively more elicitation-oriented than questioning a suspect who is well ensconced with a favourable order under Section 438 of the Code. In a case like this effective interrogation of a suspected person is of tremendous advantage in disinterring many useful informations and also materials which would have been concealed. Success in such interrogation would elude if the suspected person knows that he is well protected and insulated by a pre-arrest bail order during the time he is interrogated. Very often interrogation in such a condition would reduce to a mere ritual. The argument that the custodial interrogation is fraught with the danger of the person being subjected to third-degree methods need not be countenanced, for, such an argument can be advanced by all accused in all criminal cases. The Court has to presume that responsible police officers would conduct themselves in a responsible manner and that those entrusted with the task of disinterring offences would not conduct themselves as offenders.

The High Court has approached the issue as though it was considering a prayer for granting regular bail after arrest. The consideration which should weigh with the Court while dealing with a request for anticipatory bail need not be the same as for an application to release on bail after arrest. At any rate the High Court ought not to have side-stepped the apprehension expressed by the CBI (that the respondent would influence the witnesses). The apprehension was quite reasonable when considering the high position which the respondent held and in the nature of accusation relating to a period during which he held such office. State rep. by the CBI v. Anil Sharma, (1997) 7 SCC 187: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1039: AIR 1997 SC 3806.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-9-1997]

[6601] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, when not justified — Offence made out based on statement of witness and confession of co-accused — Leakage of question papers for crucial examination conducted by PSC and Board of Intermediate Education — Statement of witness recorded during investigation and confessional statement of co-accused making out a case of criminal conspiracy against the respondents, owners of a printing press — Held, in the circumstances, High Court not justified in granting anticipatory bail to the respondents

This is not a case for exercising the discretion under Section 438 in favour of granting anticipatory bail to the respondents. It is disquieting that implications of arming the respondents, when they are pitted against this sort of allegations involving well-orchestrated conspiracy, with a pre-arrest bail order, though subject to some conditions, have not been taken into account by the High Court. If the respondents are equipped with such an order before they are interrogated by the police it would greatly harm the investigation and would impede the prospects of unearthing all the ramifications involved in the conspiracy. Public interest also would suffer as a consequence. Having apprised himself of the nature and seriousness of the criminal conspiracy and the adverse impact of it on "the career of millions of students", the High Court should not have persuaded itself to exercise the discretion which Parliament had very thoughtfully conferred on the Sessions Judges and the High Courts through Section 438 of the Code, by favouring the respondents with such a pre-arrest bail order. State of A.P. v. Bimal Krishna Kundu, (1997) 8 SCC 104: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1245: AIR 1997 SC 3589: 1997 Cri LJ 4056.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-1997]

[6602] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Considerations — Nature of offence and age of accused — Considering that offence was under Ss. 308 and 323 IPC and the accused was a student, held on facts, accused should be enlarged on anticipatory bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 308 and 323 (Para 3). Harpreet Singh v. Govt. of NCT of Delhi, (2005) 11 SCC 551.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-2005]

[6603] — Ss. 438, 70 and 82 — Anticipatory bail — Considerations/Grounds — Indispensability of specialised treatment to accused suffering from several ailments (if deprived may lead to death of appellant-accused) and parity (as all forty-nine co-accused had been released on bail) — Although appellant in disregard of law, not cooperating with investigation, whereby proceedings under Ss. 70 and 82 CrPC initiated, on facts, held, interest of justice would be served if anticipatory bail is granted subject to depositing Rs 40 lakhs with Bank in liquidation — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 409, 420, 439, 471, 473 and 120-B — Banking Regulation Act, 1949, S. 46

(4) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

An FIR was lodged against the appellant and thirteen other co-accused for alleged commission of offences punishable under Sections 406, 409, 420, 439, 471, 473, 120-B IPC and Section 46 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949. The impugned order of the High Court rejected the appellant's plea of illness in his second application under Section 438 CrPC on the ground that the appellant, in disregard of law, had neither surrendered before the investigating officer nor extended cooperation in the investigation. Therefore, a proceedings under Sections 70 and 82 CrPC had also been initiated against the appellant.

Allowing the appeal partly,

Held :

On the facts and in the circumstances of the case and, more particularly, having regard to the health of the appellant, interest of justice would be served if the appellant is enlarged on anticipatory bail subject to certain conditions. There are as many as forty-nine accused, who were arrested and each one of them has already been enlarged on bail. According to the report of the government doctor the appellant is severely obese weighing 120 kg and he is not able to do his activities of daily living without at least two assistants. He is absolutely bedridden due to severe osteoarthritis below knee, lumbar canal stenosis, osteoporosis, diabetes and obesity and that he needs special toilet and bathroom. He has danger of having bedsores, pressure sores without specialised treatment and if left untreated, the diseases may lead to his death. Prognosis is not going to improve further due to increasing age and servile changes. (Paras 6 to 8)

The appellant is directed to deposit a sum of Rs 40 lakhs with the Bank in liquidation. (Para 10). Sureshchandra Ramanlal v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 7 SCC 591: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 212: (2008) 67 AIC 14 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-5-2008]

[6604] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Considerations — Detention of citizen in public interest — High Court refusing bail on ground that release of the offender was likely to impede investigation even resulting in tampering with prosecution evidence — No interference by the Supreme Court is called for — Wider questions involving Arts. 20(1) and 21 not gone into. K.K. Jerath v. UT, Chandigarh, (1998) 4 SCC 80: 1998 SCC (Cri) 809: AIR 1998 SC 1934.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-1998]

[6605] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Considerations — Accused a lady and offence less serious — Considering the facts that the appellant is a lady and the offence involved is a less serious offence, appellant directed to be released on bail on her executing a bond of Rs 10,000 — However, appellant can be questioned by IO under S. 161. Maqsoodan v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 97.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-2001]

[6606] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Considerations — Grave crimes — Appellant alleged to be involved in grave crimes including offence under S. 8 of Kerala Abkari Act (which is punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years and a fine which shall not be less than Rupees one lakh) granted anticipatory bail on ground of investigating agency's failure to collect material to connect the appellant with the crime — Held, Sessions Court seriously erred in doing so as custodial interrogation of appellant by the investigating agency was necessary — High Court was justified in reversing the order of Sessions Court — Kerala Abkari Act, 1077 (1 of 1077 NE), Ss. 8 & 41-A

A number of criminal cases were registered as a sequel to the large-scale deaths of persons in what is now known as the liquor tragedy in Kollam District (Kerala). A large number of persons have been permanently incapacitated in the episode. Arrested persons in connection with such cases remained in jail as bail had not been granted to them. The appellant who was described by the investigating agency as one of the kingpins in a series of grave crimes including the offence under Section 8 of the Kerala Abkari Act, apprehended that he would also be arrested in connection with some of those cases, if not in all. Hence, while remaining absconding, he approached the Sessions Court for grant of anticipatory bail. The Sessions Judge who granted the order of anticipatory bail found from the investigation records that there were reasons to presume that the appellant would also be implicated as an accused in the case. Despite serious objections raised by the Public Prosecutor, the Sessions Judge granted the anticipatory bail to the appellant. According to the Sessions Judge "no material could be collected by the investigating agency to connect the petitioner with the crime except the confessional statement of the co-accused". He also observed: "I do not think that any prejudice will be caused to the prosecution in the event of granting anticipatory bail especially when the petitioner has not so far been arrayed as an accused in the case". But the High Court of Kerala, within a month, reversed those orders of the Sessions Judge.

Dismissing the appeals,

Held :

Section 41-A of the Kerala Abkari Act is in pari materia with Section 37 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act. The Supreme Court has held, time and again, that no person who is involved in an offence under that Act shall be released on bail in contravention of the conditions laid down in the said section. If the position is thus in regard to an accused even after arrest, it is incomprehensible how the position would be less when he approaches the court for pre-arrest bail knowing that he would also be implicated as an accused. It is disquieting that a Sessions Judge has chosen to adopt such inane reasoning for granting anticipatory bail in cases involving offences for which the legislature has imposed stringent restrictions even in regard to the grant of regular bail. Custodial interrogation of such an accused is indispensably necessary for the investigating agency to unearth all the links involved in the criminal conspiracies committed by the persons which ultimately led to the capital tragedy. No court can afford to presume that the investigating agency would fail to trace out more materials to prove the accusation against an accused. It is not understandable as to what would have prompted the Sessions Judge to conclude, at this early stage, that the investigating agency would not be able to collect any material to connect the appellant with the crime. The order of the Sessions Judge, blessing the appellant with a pre-arrest bail order, would have remained a bugbear of how the discretion conferred on Sessions Judges under Section 438 CrPC would have been misused. The High Court was justified in reversing the order of the Sessions Court. (Para 7). Muraleedharan v. State of Kerala, (2001) 4 SCC 638: 2001 SCC (Cri) 795: AIR 2001 SC 1699: 2001 Cri LJ 2187: (2001) 2 KLT 355.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-4-2001]

Union of India v. Ram Samujh, (1999) 9 SCC 429: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1522, relied on

(5) Grounds for bail in dowry/cruelty cases

See also Section 438, '(4) Grounds for bail — Generally', above

[6607] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Considerations for grant of — Dowry death — Statement in FIR that appellants, the parents and brother of the husband, were living separately from the deceased and her husband — Factum of separate residence also supported by ration card — Held, these circumstances were relevant for grant of anticipatory bail — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B. Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237: (1994) 3 Crimes 1013: (1995) 32 ACC 149: (1995) 1 Andh LT (Cri) 37.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-1994]

[6608] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Considerations for grant of — Complainant alleging harassment for bringing insufficient dowry — Protection against arrest sought by appellant in terms of S. 438 — Dismissal by High Court — Sustainability — Held, on facts, High Court completely acted on materials which did not support the conclusions — Directions given by High Court like recovery of dowry articles, etc. need not have been given while dealing with application under S. 438 — Again, directions for seizing appellant's passport also could not have been given under S. 438 — Hence, relying on parameters highlighted in Adri Dharan Das case, (2005) 4 SCC 303, directions given that if appellant surrenders before the court concerned and moves for bail, the application shall be disposed of expeditiously preferably on the date it is filed — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 498-A and 304-B — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, S. 4 (Paras 2, 3, 9 and 12). Mohinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, (2008) 4 SCC 580: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 462: AIR 2008 SC 2068: 2008 Cri LJ 2623.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-2008]

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, relied on [6609] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Entitlement to — Question as to — Harassment for dowry — Suicide by wife — Prosecution case that accused were demanding dowry because of which deceased was depressed and ultimately committed suicide — Accused submitting that deceased was a schizophrenic psychotic patient with cyclic depression and was under medical treatment — They producing documents to show that relationship between the wife and her husband and in-laws was cordial — One year before also an attempt to commit suicide was made by deceased — Considering the entire material available on record without expressing any opinion on the same, held, accused entitled to anticipatory bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B, 406 and 498-A r/w S. 34 (Para 9). M.P. Lohia v. State of W.B., (2005) 2 SCC 686: 2005 SCC (Cri) 556: AIR 2005 SC 790: 2005 Cri LJ 1416.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2005]

(5) Grounds for bail in dowry/cruelty cases (contd.)

[6610] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Petition for, filed by brother of the victim's husband, who had been living separately from the accused husband since long — Complaint lodged with the police indicating that main allegations relating to offences under Ss. 323 and 498-A IPC were against the husband who is in jail — Held, High Court erred in rejecting the petition for anticipatory bail filed by brother of the main accused on ground that the main allegations were against the petitioner — Hence anticipatory bail granted subject to conditions under S. 438(2). Jageshwar Tanti v. State of Bihar, (2005) 12 SCC 178.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2005]

[6611] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Cancellation of — Propriety — Alleged dowry related offences — High Court by impugned judgment cancelling anticipatory bail granted to appellants (mother-in-law, father-in-law, younger brother of father-in-law and husband of deceased) who were accused of committing offences punishable under Ss. 498-A, 304-B r/w S. 34 IPC and Ss. 3 & 4, Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961 — Held, very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order directing cancellation of bail already granted — In the instant case, nothing was brought on record from which it could be inferred that appellants had not cooperated in the investigation or had in any manner abused concession of bail granted to them — Hence, impugned order unsustainable and set aside — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 498-A, 304-B r/w S. 34 — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, Ss. 3 and 4

The High Court by the impugned judgment cancelled the anticipatory bail granted to the appellants (mother-in-law, father-in-law, husband and younger brother of father-in-law of the deceased) who were accused of committing offences punishable under Sections 498-A, 304-B read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4, Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961.

It was alleged by the father of the deceased that the appellants were torturing the deceased for not meeting dowry demand of Rs 2 lakhs and earlier on 15-7-2006 she had left her matrimonial home intending to commit suicide because she was unable to bear it. However, on intervention of her relatives she was sent back to her matrimonial home.

On the day of occurrence the father-in-law of the deceased was stated to have heard cries of the deceased and on rushing there he found her burning. He tried to douse the fire and the deceased told him that her child aged about fifteen months was lying in the bathroom with burns. Both of them were rushed to the hospital. The child expired on the same day, while the deceased died ten days later in the hospital. In the two dying declarations recorded by the Executive Magistrate the deceased stated that she and her son caught fire accidentally when she was pouring kerosene oil in the lamp which accidentally fell down.

The Sessions Judge taking into consideration the two dying declarations, statements of the complainant and the witnesses and after perusing the case-diary granted anticipatory bail to the appellants. The High Court by the impugned judgment cancelled the same. Hence, the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Section 438 of the Code confers on the High Court and the Court of Session, the power to grant "anticipatory bail" if the applicant has "reason to believe" that he may be arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence. The expression "anticipatory bail" has not been defined in the Code. But it means "bail in anticipation of arrest". The expression "anticipatory bail" is a misnomer inasmuch as it is not as if bail is presently granted by the court in anticipation of arrest. When a competent court grants "anticipatory bail", it makes an order that in the event of arrest, a person shall be released on bail. There is no question of release on bail unless a person is arrested and, therefore, it is only on arrest that the order granting anticipatory bail becomes operative. The power being rather unusual in nature, it is entrusted only to the higher echelons of judicial service i.e. a Court of Session and the High Court. (Paras 14, 15 and 16)

The wide discretionary power conferred by the legislature on the higher echelons in the criminal justice-delivery system cannot be put in the form of straitjacket rules for universal application as the question whether to grant bail or not depends for its answer upon a variety of circumstances, the cumulative effect of which must enter into the judicial verdict. A circumstance which, in a given case, turns out to be conclusive, may or may not have any significance in another case. The imposition of unnecessary restrictions on the scope of the section which were not to be found in Section 438 of the Code, could make the provision constitutionally vulnerable, since the right of personal freedom, as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution, cannot be made to depend on compliance with unreasonable restrictions. The courts must keep in mind the guidelines while dealing with an application for grant of anticipatory bail laid down by the Constitution Bench in Gurbaksh Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 565. Further, the amendment to Section 438 brought about by the CrPC (Amendment) Act, 2005, which is yet to be enforced is more or less in line with the parameters laid down in Gurbaksh Singh case. (Paras 21 to 27)

In the instant case, the High Court committed a serious error in reversing the order passed by the Sessions Judge, granting anticipatory bail to the appellants. The Sessions Judge passed the order after due consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case, in particular, the two dying declarations, one recorded in the presence of the parents of the deceased and the statements of the members of the Women Cell who had dealt with the case when on 15-7-2006, the deceased had left the house with intention to commit suicide and therefore, it cannot be said that the judicial discretion exercised in granting anticipatory bail was perverse or erroneous, warranting interference by the High Court. The order passed by the Sessions Judge was supported by reasons to the extent required for exercise of judicial discretion in the matter of grant of bail. (Para 28)

It may be true that some of the circumstances, noticed by the High Court in the impugned order viz. no reference to lantern in the spot panchnama or the necessity of cleaning the lantern at 4 p.m. and/or availability of an inverter in the house, etc., could have persuaded the Sessions Judge to take a different view but it cannot be said that the factors which weighed with the Sessions Judge in granting bail were irrelevant to the issue before him, rendering the order as perverse. Moreover, merely because the High Court had a different view on same set of material which had been taken into consideration by the Sessions Judge, in our view, was not a valid ground to label the order passed by the Sessions Judge as perverse. It also appears that the High Court has overlooked the distinction of factors relevant for rejecting bail in a non-bailable case in the first instance and the cancellation of bail already granted. Very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order directing the cancellation of bail already granted, which were missing in the instant case. Nothing was brought on record from which it could be inferred that the appellants had not cooperated in the investigations or had, in any manner, abused the concession of bail granted to them. (Paras 29 and 30)

Hence, impugned order setting aside anticipatory bail granted to the appellants unsustainable and set aside. (Para 32). Savitri Agarwal v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 8 SCC 325: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 683: (2009) 80 AIC 116 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-2009]

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689, followed

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349, relied on

Gurbaksh Singh Sibia v. State of Punjab, AIR 1978 P&H 1: 1978 Cri LJ 20, held, overruled

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689, held, partly doubted

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, partly doubted

[6612] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail should not be granted by High Court to a person against whom investigation in connection with dowry death still going on — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302. Samunder Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1987) 1 SCC 466: 1987 SCC (Cri) 189: AIR 1987 SC 737: 1987 Cri LJ 705.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-1987]

[6613] — S. 438 — Bail — Grant of — Propriety — Cruelty and dowry death case — Role of State — Granted by the High Court without indicating any reasons therefor, despite accused being charged for serious offence under Ss. 498-A, 304-B r/w S. 34 IPC — Said order challenged by the father of the deceased while State remained a silent spectator — Callousness of the State deprecated (Para 18). Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2006) 12 SCC 131: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 568: AIR 2006 SC 3248: 2006 Cri LJ 4618: (2006) 4 KLT 143: (2006) 46 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2006]

Salim Khan v. Sanjai Singh, (2002) 9 SCC 670: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1524, relied on

[6614] — Ss. 438 and 439 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Propriety — Dowry related allegations — Respondents 1 to 3 filing application under S. 438 CrPC before High Court on apprehension of arrest in a complaint under investigation, on the allegation that because of the dowry demands, the victim committed suicide — Application disposed of with certain directions — Contention of the appellant informant that the parameters to be kept in view, while dealing with an application under S. 438 CrPC, were not kept in view — Further contention, that the respondents were granted bail without surrender, since the terms for release were stipulated in the order itself— On facts, held, some of the directions given by the High Court are not in accordance with what has been stated in Adri Dharan Das case, (2005) 4 SCC 303 — Accordingly, the directions need to be modified — As the respondents have already surrendered and have been granted bail in terms of the High Court's direction, they shall surrender before the court concerned and shall move for bail in terms of S. 439 CrPC which shall then be considered in its proper perspective uninfluenced by the disapproval of the Supreme Court of the stipulation of conditions by the High Court— Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, S. 4 (Paras 2 to 4 and 7). D.K. Ganesh Babu v. P.T. Manokaran, (2007) 4 SCC 434: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 345: AIR 2007 SC 1450: 2007 Cri LJ 1827: (2007) 53 AIC 266 (SC).

(5) Grounds for bail in dowry/cruelty cases (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-2007]

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, followed

Wharton's Law Lexicon, cited

[6615] — Ss. 438 and 439 — Bail — Grant of — Sustainability — Accused charged under Ss. 498-A, 304-B and 300 IPC for causing dowry death — High Court granting bail to Respondent 2 second time in spite of Supreme Court nullifying its earlier order granting bail — High Court while doing so not only trying to justify its earlier order granting bail, but also practically recording acquittal of Respondent 2 in each case — Held, while dealing with the bail application, final view is not to be expressed — It was only necessary to indicate reasons for grant of bail and not detailed analysis of the evidence on record, with regard to the nature of the offence and the evidentiary value of the materials on record — High Court lost sight of the fact that it was not dealing with any appeal on merits but was considering a bail application — Even otherwise several irrelevant aspects have been taken into consideration — High Court lightly brushed aside the view of Supreme Court regarding use of non-genuine document by respondent-accused S as a minor circumstance — High Court's order indefensible and hence, set aside (Paras 2, 13, 14, 25 and 27). Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2007) 14 SCC 537: (2007) 56 AIC 151 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 2752.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2007]

V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 560; Imran Ali v. Habibullah, (2007) 12 SCC 506, relied on

Followed in Deepak Singchi v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 14 SCC 583*

(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences

See also Section 438, '(4) Grounds for bail — Generally', and

'(5) Grounds for bail in dowry/cruelty cases', above

[6616] — Ss. 438 and 437 & 439 — Application for anticipatory bail moved by a person accused of committing murder by firearm — Court's approach should be cautious and circumspect — On facts, held, grant of anticipatory bail not justified

An FIR was lodged alleging that the accused-second respondent caused gunshot injuries to the deceased on August 23, 1983. Amongst others, offence under S. 307, IPC was registered but the accused was not arrested. The deceased later succumbed to his injuries and on receiving that information from the hospital, another offence under S. 302, IPC was added against the accused by the Investigating Officer. Soon thereafter on August 29, 1983 the accused appeared before the Sessions Judge and moved an application under S. 438, CrPC for grant of anticipatory bail. The Sessions Judge granted the bail. The High Court held that a case for cancellation of the bail was not made out.

Held :

No case was made out for granting anticipatory bail in this case. The discretionary power to grant anticipatory bail was exercised sub-silentio as to reasons or on considerations irrelevant or not germane to the determination. The Investigating Officer did not even attempt to arrest the accused though the initial accusation was under S. 307, IPC punishable with imprisonment for life. And as soon as the victim of the assault succumbed to his injuries and an offence under S. 302 was registered, an application for anticipatory bail was made and granted. If such an order is allowed to stand, faith of public in administration of justice is likely to be considerably shaken.

Anticipatory bail to some extent intrudes in the sphere of investigation of crime and the court must be cautious and circumspect in exercising such power of a discretionary nature. Some very compelling circumstances must be made out for granting bail to a person accused of murder by firearm when the investigation is in progress. Pokar Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1985) 2 SCC 597: 1985 SCC (Cri) 297: AIR 1985 SC 969: 1985 Cri LJ 1175.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar, D.A. Desai and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-4-1985]

[6617] — S. 438 — Murder case — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, and duration for which to be granted — Proper course of action for court — After evaluating averments and accusation available on record, if anticipatory bail is to be granted, held, interim bail should be granted and notice should be issued to Public Prosecutor — After hearing him, court may either reject anticipatory bail application or confirm grant of anticipatory bail — It may also impose conditions for grant of anticipatory bail — If the liberty granted by court is misused then at the instance of Public Prosecutor or complainant, court can cancel or modify conditions of anticipatory bail — Anticipatory bail can be cancelled even on finding of new material or circumstances at any point of time — Anticipatory bail granted should ordinarily be continued till trial of the case — In the present case, applicant although allegedly involved in murder case, High Court's order refusing him anticipatory bail, held, not sustainable — Appellant directed to join investigation and cooperate with investigator — Further directed that in case of arrest, he should be released on bail on personal bond as specified — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 21. Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248, followed

Hyman v. Rose, 1912 AC 623, 631, cited

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277, held, per incuriam

[6618] — S. 438 — Grant of anticipatory bail in murder case when investigation still incomplete not justified. Kiran Devi v. State of Rajasthan, 1987 Supp SCC 549: 1988 SCC (Cri) 106.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-1987]

[6619] — S. 438 — Pre-arrest bail in murder case — Grant of — High Court's satisfaction as to existence of sufficient reasons with the applicant for apprehending arrest, held, is a condition precedent — Hence, where the applicant for pre-arrest bail in a murder case was neither named in the FIR nor was subsequently made an accused, held, he did not have sufficient reasons to entertain the requisite apprehension — Therefore, his application to High Court for pre-arrest bail during continuance of investigation, held, was premature — Hence, High Court's order granting him pre-arrest bail, set aside (Para 2). Jaswantbhai M. Sheth v. Anand V. Nagarsheth, (2000) 10 SCC 7.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-10-1999]

[6620] — Ss. 438 and 439 — Anticipatory bail — Case under Ss. 302/149 IPC — Names of the appellants included among the suspected persons — Appellants describing deceased as "dreaded" — Refusal of pre-arrest bail — Considering pros and cons of the matter, IO directed to complete the interrogation of the appellants, subsequent to their surrender before the police, as early as possible and release them on bail after completing the interrogation and recovery of material object, if any — IO as well as person aggrieved permitted to proceed for the cancellation of bail if appellants misuse the bail — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 r/w S. 149. Abdul Hamit Ansari v. State of Maharashtra, 2000 SCC (Cri) 1505: AIR 2000 SC 3541 (1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-3-2000]

[6621] — S. 438 — Grant of anticipatory bail — Matters to be considered — Anticipatory bail sought by police officer involved in police atrocities/fake encounter case — Position of said police officer to influence, induce or coerce witnesses — Need for interrogation of said police officer to discover the facts

In view of the fact that the application for regular bail made by the respondent police officer is pending before the court concerned, it would not be appropriate to go into the various aspects projected. However, the approach made by the Sessions Court in granting anticipatory bail to the respondent, leaves much to be desired. The apprehension that the respondent is in a position to influence, induce or coerce witnesses to desist from furnishing relevant information to the investigating agency cannot be considered to be imaginary and the court ought to have considered that aspect seriously before granting anticipatory bail. The court also should have considered the need put forward for custodial interrogation of the respondent for finding out what exactly happened to the wife of Sohra- buddin, or how she met with her end. Suffice it to say that in the circumstances the said order granting anticipatory bail is set aside leaving the regular bail application of the appellant to be dealt with by the trial court in accordance with law and after taking note of all the relevant aspects. No opinion is expressed on the merits of the impugned application. (Para 5). State of Gujarat v. Narendra K. Amin, (2008) 13 SCC 594: AIR 2007 SC 2876: (2007) 57 AIC 83 (SC): (2008) 1 Guj LR 205.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-2007]

(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences (contd.)

[6622] — S. 438 [as subs. in Maharashtra] — Anticipatory bail — Grant and cancellation of — Considerations for dealing with application for grant of — Rape case — While granting anticipatory bail, held, court must record reasons therefor — Whether accused tampered with evidence should be considered by appropriate authority at appropriate stage — Post-bail conduct of accused and other supervening circumstances should be taken into account while considering application for cancellation of the anticipatory bail — Cases involving serious offences such as one punishable under S. 376 IPC should be allowed to be fully investigated — Prosecutrix being a girl of easy virtue not a relevant consideration — Victims who are lured or coerced for immoral trafficking should be given protection — Accused absconding for a long time, not cooperating with IO, nor complying with the conditions imposed while granting the bail — Held on facts, grant of anticipatory bail by High Court was not justified — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 375 and 376

A girl was lured and while being taken for the purpose of immoral trafficking on 22-4-2007 by the respondent-accused persons comprising police officers, politicians and a businessman, the police arrived and the respondents were taken to police station. The girl was medically examined on the same day and her radiographical (bone) assessment suggested her age to be between 14-16 years. The Municipal Council issued a certificate on 29-5-2007 recording the date of birth of the girl as 28-6-1991 and mentioning name of her father. The date of registration of the said certificate was 4-7-1996 i.e. much before any controversy arose. Three school leaving certificates had also been placed before the court wherein her date of birth was shown as 28-6-1991. The respondents were not named in FIR. However, the girl made several statements thereafter implicating them. She also gave her statement under Section 164 CrPC.

The respondents, having come to know that they have been named by the said girl, absconded. They filed an application for anticipatory bail before the Sessions Judge. The same was dismissed. But the High Court allowed the application for anticipatory bail. The State filed the present appeal against the judgment of the High Court.

The Supreme Court called for a report from SP, CID who in his report pointed out, that the respondent-accused persons had been absconding for a long time and they during the course of interrogation have been giving evasive answers. It was furthermore stated that from the residence of Accused 3, thirteen CDs of blue films and books instigating sex have been seized. It was also submitted that recovery of vehicles used by the respondents from time to time for commission of the offence are yet to be seized and if they are released on bail, they would tamper with evidence.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Immoral trafficking is now widespread. Victims, who are lured, coerced or threatened for the purpose of bringing them to the trade should be given all protection. (Para 28)

In an application for cancellation of bail, conduct subsequent to release on bail and the supervening circumstances alone are relevant. But the court while considering an appeal against grant of anticipatory bail would keep in mind the parameters laid down therefor. The matter, however, may be different for deciding an appeal from an order granting bail, where the accused has been at large for a considerable time, in which event, the post-bail conduct and other supervening circumstances will also have to be taken note of. (Para 34)

While granting anticipatory bail, the court must record the reasons therefor. Parameters for grant of anticipatory bail in such a serious offence, being under Sections 376, 376(2)(g) IPC, are required to be satisfied. (Paras 28 and 31)

The four factors, which are relevant for considering the application for grant of anticipatory bail, have been set out in Section 438(1) CrPC. There cannot be any direct proof that the respondents have been tampering with evidence, but that question will have to be considered by the appropriate authority at the appropriate stage. Immoral conduct on the part of police officers should not be encouraged. After having come to know that names of the respondents had been taken by the prosecutrix in her supplementary statement, they had been absconding for a long time. Further, the respondents had not scrupulously complied with the conditions imposed upon them. Admittedly, at least on four occasions, some of them were not present. It is not understandable as to how the police officers could go underground. They had been changing their residence very frequently. Although most of them were police officers, their whereabouts were not known. During the aforementioned period attempts had been made even by the person who was taking care of the girl to obtain custody of the girl, but at whose instance, is not known. The mother of the girl, had also affirmed an affidavit in relation to her date of birth showing her to be not a minor on the date of the incident. These may not be acts of voluntariness on their part evidently the evidence is being collected by somebody who intends to save the accused. It, therefore, is a case where no anticipatory bail should have been granted. (Paras 20, 27, 25 and 33)

A mistake in regard to recording of age of the prosecutrix as recorded in the first information report or the first medical document or even in her supplementary affidavit should yield to the public documents which have been produced by the prosecution at this stage. Even before the learned Chief Judicial Magistrate, she disclosed her date of birth to be 28-6-1991. Therefore, even according to that she was below 16 years of age. (Para 32)

It may be true that the date of issuance of the certificates had not been stated, but evidently such certificates had been obtained by the prosecution. It may be true that in the first information report as also in her first supplementary examination, her age was recorded as 18 years, but she had been examined medically. The possibility of her trying to shield herself from prosecution at the time of her arrest and for that purpose disclosing her age to be 18 years cannot be ruled out. (Para 22)

A case of this nature should be allowed to be fully investigated. Once a criminal case is set in motion by lodging an information in regard to the commission of the offence in terms of Section 154 CrPC, it may not always be held to be imperative that all the accused persons must be named in the first information report. It has not been denied nor disputed that the prosecutrix does not bear any animosity against the respondents. There is no reason for her to falsely implicate them. It is also not a case that she did so at the behest of some other person, who may be inimically disposed towards the respondents. The prosecution has disclosed the manner in which she was being taken from place to place which finds some corroboration from the testimonies of the other witnesses and, thus, it can safely be concluded that at least at this stage her evidence should not be rejected outrightly. (Para 30)

So far as the fact that the respondents have not been named in the first information report is concerned, suffice it to say that the first information report may not be encyclop'dic. (Para 23)

The High Court has in regard to the first factor envisaged under the Maharashtra Amendment of Section 438 CrPC proceeded on the basis that the prosecutrix was a girl of easy virtue. This may be so but the same by itself may not be a relevant consideration. (Para 29)

The High Court itself has refused to grant regular bail to the accused against whom charge-sheet has been submitted. The Sessions Judge also did not grant bail to some of the accused persons. If on the same materials, prayer for regular bail has been rejected, there is no reason as to why and on what basis the respondents could be enlarged on anticipatory bail. (Para 36)

In the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, the High Court ought not to have granted anticipatory bail to the respondents. The impugned judgment, therefore, cannot be sustained which is set aside accordingly. (Para 37). State of Maharashtra v. Mohd. Sajid Husain Mohd. S. Husain, (2008) 1 SCC 213: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 176: AIR 2008 SC 155: (2007) 59 AIC 15 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-10-2007]

D.K. Ganesh Babu v. P.T. Manokaran, (2007) 4 SCC 434: (2007) 2 SCC Cri 345; Vinod G. Asrani v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 3 SCC 633: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 129; State of U.P. v. Pappu, (2005) 3 SCC 594: 2005 SCC (Cri) 780, relied on [6623] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Considerations — Allegations of forgery of withdrawal form to withdraw cash — Allegation against appellant for forging the withdrawal form by converting the figure of Rs 10,000 into Rs 1,00,000 and encashing the same — Photocopy of document apparently showing the figure of one lakh in words also — Therefore, held, prima facie it was for the complainant to show how the words remained on document when he executed the same — On facts, held, the present case was fit for granting pre-arrest bail to appellant. Gama Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 10 SCC 263.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-10-2000]

[6624] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Electricity pilferage — Appellant-accused willing to deposit the amount of charges of electricity alleged to have been pilfered — Respondent stating the amount due from appellant to be more than Rs 1 crore — Amount due, when worked out for a period of six months only, crossing the figure of Rs 40 lakhs — Rs 20 lakhs already deposited by appellant pursuant to High Court's order — Considering all aspects, held, appellant could be granted anticipatory bail on a condition that he would remit a sum of Rs 21 lakhs in 3 equal instalments within 6 months. Chakrawarti Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2002) 10 SCC 390.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-12-2000]

(6) Grounds for bail — Particular offences (contd.)

[6625] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Offence alleged under S. 153-A IPC — Radio jockey accused of deliberately insulting the sentiments of Gorkha/Nepali (chowkidar) community by questioning/doubting one P's victory in a tele-series — Held, interrogation if at all necessary can be done without taking the accused into custody — Anticipatory bail, therefore, granted on specified conditions — Penal Code, 1860, S. 153-A

An FIR was lodged under Section 153-A IPC against the appellant-accused, a radio jockey for deliberately insulting the sentiments of "Gorkha/Nepali" community in West Bengal while discussing one P's victory in the tele-series called "Indian Idol" telecasted on Sony Entertainment Television Channel. The appellant was alleged to have stated: "If chowkidars are the Indian idols (meaning P), then wherefrom we are to obtain chowkidars." By the impugned order, the High Court rejected the bail application under Section 438 CrPC.

The appellant tendered an apology for any unintentional hurt both through radio broadcast and through his counsel in the Supreme Court and is stated to have got a clarification from P that the remarks were not derogatory.

Allowing the appeal,

Held:

On prima facie scrutiny of the material on record and in the backdrop of the facts and circumstances, it is a fit case where the appellant is entitled for the grant of anticipatory bail. There is no satisfactory and convincing reason for custodial interrogation of the appellant for the alleged offence registered against him. The appellant can be interrogated by the investigating officer without taking him in custody. In the event of the arrest of the appellant for the alleged offence, he shall be released on bail subject to stated conditions. (Paras 13 and 14)

The High Court ought not to have made observations that the words spoken by the petitioner squarely attract the provision of Section 153-A IPC and that the same was uttered with necessary mens rea in mind at the preliminary stage of the investigation of the case, which may cause prejudice to the defence of the appellant during the trial of the case. Therefore, the said observations shall not be taken into consideration by the trial court at any stage of the proceedings of the case. (Paras 15 and 10). Jonathan Nitin Brady v. State of W.B., (2008) 8 SCC 660: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 627.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2008]

[6626] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Scope and ambit of — FIR against appellants for alleged involvement in misappropriation of stock — Appellants contending that dispute relates to contractual liability and is of civil nature — Arbitration proceeding in progress — High Court rejecting application under S. 438 CrPC for non-deposit of amount with the complainant as directed earlier while granting conditional interim protection — In appeal counsel for respondent State submitting that it was not a case of civil dispute and criminal proceedings can be pursued even if arbitration proceedings are in progress — Held, High Court has not considered relevant aspects and also not indicated any reasons to direct deposit of the huge amount — Also, ambit of S. 438 CrPC as delineated by the Supreme Court not kept in view — Hence, held, orders of High Court set aside and matter remitted to it for consideration afresh with directions to keep in view the principles relating to S. 438 CrPC in Adri Dharan Das case, (2005) 4 SCC 303, and the relevance and applicability of Bal Kishan Das case, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 412 while dealing with application in terms of S. 438 CrPC (Paras 2 and 4 to 6). Sohan Lal Juneja v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 433: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 90: AIR 2007 SC 136: 2007 Cri LJ 303: (2007) 49 AIC 268 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-11-2006]

Bal Kishan Das v. P.C. Nayar, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 412: 1991 SCC (Cri) 1055; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, relied on

(7) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application

[6627] — S. 438 — Bail — Grant of — Scope — Factors to be considered — Need for reasons to be recorded, especially in case of serious offences — Held, though detailed examination of the evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case is to be avoided yet a court dealing with the bail application should be satisfied as to whether there is a prima facie case — Court is required to exercise its discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course — Reasons for granting bail need to be indicated, particularly when the accused is charged with a serious offence — On facts held, High Court erred in granting bail without indicating the "peculiar facts and circumstances" therefor, or how the scenario had changed, when several ear- lier petitions were rejected (Paras 11 to 15). Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2006) 12 SCC 131: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 568: AIR 2006 SC 3248: 2006 Cri LJ 4618: (2006) 4 KLT 143: (2006) 46 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2006]

Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157; V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 560; Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974; Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohd., (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669, relied on [6628] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, and duration for which to be granted — Proper course of action for court — After evaluating averments and accusation available on record, if anticipatory bail is to be granted, held, interim bail should be granted and notice should be issued to Public Prosecutor — After hearing him, court may either reject anticipatory bail application or confirm grant of anticipatory bail — It may also impose conditions for grant of anticipatory bail — If the liberty granted by court is misused then at the instance of Public Prosecutor or complainant, court can cancel or modify conditions of anticipatory bail — Anticipatory bail can be cancelled even on finding of new material or circumstances at any point of time — Anticipatory bail granted should ordinarily be continued till trial of the case — In the present case, applicant although allegedly involved in murder case, High Court's order refusing him anticipatory bail, held, not sustainable — Appellant directed to join investigation and cooperate with investigator — Further directed that in case of arrest, he should be released on bail on personal bond as specified — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 21. Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248, followed

Hyman v. Rose, 1912 AC 623, 631, cited

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277, held, per incuriam

[6629] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Reasoning of High Court in granting — Objection to application not raised "keenly" — High Court coming to a conclusion that as there is no objection raised for granting anticipatory bail to Applicants 2 and 3 keenly, their case would be totally different — Held, this does not mean that the appellants had no objection at all — In law either there is an objection or no objection, there cannot be a keen, weak or a strong objection — Matter remanded to be heard afresh (Paras 6 and 8). Union of India v. Yusuf Razak Dhanani, (2003) 8 SCC 98: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1963: AIR 2003 SC 4578: (2003) 157 ELT 241.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-9-2003]

[6630] — S. 438 — Grant of anticipatory bail — Sustainability — Different versions given in three different complaints pertaining to same alleged occurrence — Besides, allegations with regard to offences under Ss. 395, 397, 467, 468 and 471 IPC sought to be added at later stage of investigation — Held, no interference with grant of anticipatory bail to respondents called for — Constitution of India — Article 136 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 395, 397, 467, 468 and 471 (Paras 19 to 21). Pravinbhai Kashirambhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 7 SCC 598.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-7-2010]

State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2), relied on

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; CBI v. Tapan Kumar Singh, (2003) 6 SCC 175: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1305; Animireddy Venkata Ramana v. Public Prosecutor, (2008) 5 SCC 368: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 600; State v. Anil Sharma, (1997) 7 SCC 187: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1039; Anil Kumar Tulsiyani v. State of U.P., (2006) 9 SCC 425: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 565, considered

[6631] — S. 438 — Bail — Role of, in protection of right to personal liberty — Essence of function involved in grant of bail, and measures to ensure proper performance thereof — Held, exercise of said jurisdiction requires maintaining of perfect balance between two conflicting interests viz. sanctity of individual liberty and interest of society — Hence, it should be entrusted to judicial officers with some experience and good track record — High Courts advised to periodically organise (through their Judicial Academies) workshops, symposiums, seminars and lectures for orientation of judicial officers and police officers in respect of importance of, and method of balancing of, said conflicting interests — Direction given for periodical evaluation of performance of judicial officers concerned on the basis of cases decided by them — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 22. Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on

(7) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application (contd.)

[6632] — S. 438 — Grant of anticipatory bail — High Court must give reasons for exercising its jurisdiction — Anticipatory bail granted by the High Court in a dowry death case without assigning any reason set aside. Raghuvir Saran Agarwal v. State of U.P., (1998) 8 SCC 617: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1613.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and M.K. Mukherjee and K. Venkataswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-1996]

[6633] — Ss. 438, 437 and 439 — Bail — Role of, in protection of right to personal liberty — Essence of function involved in grant of bail, and measures to ensure proper performance thereof — Held, exercise of said jurisdiction requires maintaining of perfect balance between two conflicting interests viz. sanctity of individual liberty and interest of society — Hence, it should be entrusted to judicial officers with some experience and good track record — High Courts advised to periodically organise (through their Judicial Academies) workshops, symposiums, seminars and lectures for orientation of judicial officers and police officers in respect of importance of, and method of balancing of, said conflicting interests — Direction given for periodical evaluation of performance of judicial officers concerned on the basis of cases decided by them — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 22

Just as liberty is precious to an individual, so is the society's interest in maintenance of peace, law and order. Both are equally important. (Para 84)

A large number of undertrials are languishing in jail for a long time even for allegedly committing very minor offences. This is because Section 438 CrPC has not been allowed its full play. The Constitution Bench in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565 clearly mentioned that Section 438 CrPC is extraordinary because it was incorporated in CrPC, 1973 and before that other provisions for grant of bail were Sections 437 and 439 CrPC. It is not extraordinary in the sense that it should be invoked only in exceptional or rare cases. Some courts of smaller strength have erroneously observed that Section 438 CrPC should be invoked only in exceptional or rare cases. (Para 85)

According to the Report of the National Police Commission, when the power of arrest is grossly abused and clearly violates the personal liberty of the people, as enshrined under Article 21 of the Constitution, then the courts need to take serious notice of it. When conviction rate is admittedly less than 10%, then the police should be slow in arresting the accused. The courts considering the bail application should try to maintain fine balance between the societal interest vis-à-vis personal liberty while adhering to the fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence that the accused is presumed to be innocent till he is found guilty by the competent court. (Para 86)

The complaint filed against the accused needs to be thoroughly examined including the aspect whether the complainant has filed a false or frivolous complaint on earlier occasion. The court should also examine the fact whether there is any family dispute between the accused and the complainant and the complainant must be clearly told that if the complaint is found to be false or frivolous, then strict action will be taken against him in accordance with law. If the connivance between the complainant and the investigating officer is established then action be taken against the investigating officer in accordance with law. (Para 87)

The gravity of charge and the exact role of the accused must be properly comprehended. Before arrest, the arresting officer must record the valid reasons which have led to the arrest of the accused in the case diary. In exceptional cases the reasons could be recorded immediately after the arrest, so that while dealing with the bail application, the remarks and observations of the arresting officer can also be properly evaluated by the court. (Para 88)

It is imperative for the courts to carefully and with meticulous precision evaluate the facts of the case. The discretion to grant bail must be exercised on the basis of the available material and the facts of the particular case. In cases where the court is of the considered view that the accused has joined investigation and he is fully cooperating with the investigating agency and is not likely to abscond, in that event, custodial interrogation should be avoided. A great ignominy, humiliation and disgrace is attached to arrest. Arrest leads to many serious consequences not only for the accused but for the entire family and at times for the entire community. Most people do not make any distinction between arrest at a pre-conviction stage or post-conviction stage. (Paras 89 and 90)

Society has a vital interest in grant or refusal of bail because every criminal offence is the offence against the State. The order granting or refusing bail must reflect perfect balance between the conflicting interests, namely, sanctity of individual liberty and the interest of the society. The law of bails dovetails two conflicting interests, namely, on the one hand, the requirements of shielding the society from the hazards of those committing crimes and potentiality of repeating the same crime while on bail and on the other hand, absolute adherence to the fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence regarding presumption of innocence of an accused until he is found guilty and the sanctity of individual liberty. (Para 1)

Exercise of jurisdiction under Section 438 CrPC is an extremely important judicial function of a Judge and must be entrusted to judicial officers with some experience and good track record. Both the individual and society have vital interest in orders passed by the courts in anticipatory bail applications. (Para 119)

It is imperative for the High Courts through their judicial academies to periodically organise workshops, symposiums, seminars and lectures by the experts to sensitise judicial officers, police officers and investigating officers so that they can properly comprehend the importance of personal liberty vis-à-vis social interests. They must learn to maintain fine balance between the personal liberty and the social interests. The performance of the judicial officers must be periodically evaluated on the basis of the cases decided by them. In case, they have not been able to maintain balance between personal liberty and societal interests, the lacunae must be pointed out to them and they may be asked to take corrective measures in future. Ultimately, the entire discretion of grant or refusal of bail has to be left to the judicial officers and all concerned must ensure that grant or refusal of bail is considered basically on the facts and circumstances of each case. (Paras 120 and 121). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on [6634] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Role of, in protection of right to personal liberty — Sense in which S. 438 CrPC is described as being "extraordinary", clarified — Held, S. 438 CrPC is not extraordinary in the sense that it should be invoked only in exceptional or rare cases — A great ignominy, humiliation and disgrace is attached to arrest — In cases where court is of considered view that accused has joined investigation and he is fully cooperating with the investigating agency and is not likely to abscond, in that event, custodial interrogation should be avoided, and anticipatory bail should be granted, which after hearing Public Prosecutor, should ordinarily be continued till end of trial — Constitution of India, Arts. 21, 22 and 19. Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on [6635] — S. 438 — Discretion of court to grant or refuse anticipatory bail — Manner of exercise of — Factors to be taken into consideration — Held, said discretion should be exercised with due caution and prudence on the facts and circumstances of the case, without subjecting the discretion to self-imposed limitations — Although no inflexible guidelines or straitjacket formula can be provided in that regard, certain factors and parameters (albeit only illustrative and not exhaustive) laid down which can be taken into consideration while dealing with anticipatory bail. Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, followed

Joginder Kumar v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 260: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1172, referred to

National Police Commission Reports, 3rd Report, cited

(8) Duration and extent of anticipatory bail

See also Section 438, '(1) Generally', above

[6636] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Reasonable grounds for grant of — Bar against blanket anticipatory bail — Held, discretionary power conferred by the legislature on higher judiciary cannot be put in a straitjacket formula — Normally, no direction should be issued to the effect that the applicant should be released on bail "whenever arrested for whichever offence whatsoever" — Courts should be cautious that S. 438 CrPC is not misused by the rich and the influential — S. 438 CrPC has been amended by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 2005 (though amendment yet not brought into force) which now provides for hearing of the Public Prosecutor before granting an application for anticipatory bail and notice and presence of the applicant in the court seeking anticipatory bail

Discretionary power conferred by the legislature on higher judiciary cannot be put in a straitjacket formula. Such power must be exercised by the Court keeping in view facts and circumstances of an individual case. The High Court or the Court of Session must apply its own mind to the question and decide whether a case has been made out for grant of such relief. If condition precedent laid down in Section 438(1) CrPC is not satisfied and there is no reason to believe that the applicant is likely to be arrested for commission of a non-bailable offence, the Court has no power to grant anticipatory bail. The direction under Section 438(1) CrPC must be clear and specific and not vague and general. (Paras 29, 33 and 34)

(8) Duration and extent of anticipatory bail (contd.)

Normally, no direction should be issued to the effect that the applicant should be released on bail "whenever arrested for whichever offence whatsoever". Such order should not be passed as it would serve as a blanket to cover or protect any and every kind of allegedly unlawful activity. An order under Section 438 is a device to secure the individual's liberty, it is neither a passport to the commission of crimes nor a shield against any and all kinds of accusations likely or unlikely. "Blanket" order of bail may amount to or result in an invitation to commit an offence or a passport to carry on criminal activities or to afford a shield against any and all types of illegal operations, which, can never be allowed in a society governed by the rule of law. (Paras 35, 38 and 32)

The provision as to anticipatory bail has often been "misused by rich and influential people". Section 438 CrPC has been amended by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 2005 which now provides for hearing of the Public Prosecutor before granting an application for anticipatory bail. Sub-sections (1-A) and (1-B) also provide for notice and presence of the applicant in the court seeking anticipatory bail. The said provisions, however, have not been brought into force so far. (Paras 30 and 31). Union of India v. Padam Narain Aggarwal, (2008) 13 SCC 305: (2008) 231 ELT 397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, relied on

Malimath Committee on Reforms of Criminal Justice System, relied on [6637] — S. 438 — Blanket/anticipatory bail in apprehension of offences not yet committed or accusations not yet levelled — Impermissibility — Respondents 1 and 2 summoned by Customs Authorities under S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 — High Court directed Respondents 1 and 2 to appear before the Customs Authorities for recording of statements — High Court further directed the Customs Authorities that if any non-bailable offence is found against the accused persons they shall not be arrested without ten days' prior notice to them — Held, neither S. 438 CrPC nor any other provision of CrPC authorises the grant of blanket anticipatory bail for offences not yet committed or with regard to accusations not so far levelled — Customs Act, 1962, Ss. 108 and 104 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 174 and 175

In proceedings initiated by the Customs Department under the Customs Act, 1962 (the Act), summons were issued to Respondents 1 and 2 for preparing fake shipping bills and obtaining export benefits under Section 80-HHC of the Income Tax Act, 1961. In view of the non-cooperation by the respondents, complaints were filed by the Customs Authorities for commission of offences punishable under Sections 174 and 175 IPC. Applications for anticipatory bail before the Sessions Court were dismissed.

However, the High Court by the impugned order held that since the petitioner-accused had only been summoned under Section 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 to give their evidence in the inquiry, the anticipatory bail applications were premature. The High Court, therefore, directed the respondent-accused to appear before the Customs Authorities concerned. Again, the High Court also directed the Customs Authorities that if any non-bailable offence was found against the accused persons they would not be arrested without ten days' prior notice to them.

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

No such order could have been passed nor a direction as to prior notice before effecting arrest could have been issued by the High Court. Firstly, the order passed by the High Court was a blanket one and sought to grant protection to the respondents in respect of any non-bailable offence. Neither Section 438 CrPC nor any other provision of the Code authorises the grant of blanket anticipatory bail for offences not yet committed or with regard to accusations not so far levelled. Secondly, it illegally obstructed, interfered and curtailed the authority of the Customs Officers from exercising their statutory power of arrest by imposing a condition of giving ten days' prior notice, a condition not warranted by law. There is no question of release on bail unless a person is arrested and, therefore, it is only on arrest that the order granting anticipatory bail becomes operative. The respondents were only summoned under Section 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 (the Act) for recording of their statements. The High Court was conscious and mindful of that fact. It, therefore, held that the applications for anticipatory bail, in the circumstances, were premature. They were, accordingly, disposed of by directing the respondents to appear before the Customs Authorities. The High Court, however, did not stop there. It stated that if the Customs Authorities found any non-bailable offence against the applicants (the respondents herein), they would not be arrested without ten days' prior notice to them. The order passed by the High Court to the extent of directions issued to the Customs Authorities is, therefore, liable to be set aside. (Paras 14, 33, 45, 23 and 44). Union of India v. Padam Narain Aggarwal, (2008) 13 SCC 305: (2008) 231 ELT 397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on [6638] — S. 438 — De facto exercise of power under — What amounts to — Direction by High Court to Magistrate that if he finds that the case is not fit for bail, he must release the accused persons on personal bond and the accused must remain on the same personal bonds till the final disposal of their bail application by Sessions Court — Impropriety of — By issuance of said direction, virtually there had been an exercise of power under S. 438 CrPC, though S. 438 CrPC was not in operation in the State concerned — Even otherwise, in view of Adri Dharan Das case, (2005) 4 SCC 303, after surrender of the accused and rejection of his bail application, the relief of the nature granted by the High Court cannot be given — Hence held, High Court's direction not proper — But, since accused already granted bail by Sessions Court, no interference called for — Constitution of India — Art. 226 (Paras 7 to 9). Rekha Patel v. Pankaj Verma, (2008) 4 SCC 17: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 161: (2008) 3 All LJ 592.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2008]

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, followed

[6639] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — During pendency of application for anticipatory bail court cannot pass interim order not to arrest the applicant

The condition precedent for the operation of the direction issued is arrest of the accused. This being so, the irresistible inference is that while dealing with an application under Section 438 of the Code the court cannot restrain arrest. (Para 18). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

[6640] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — A blanket order that applicant be released on bail whenever arrested for whichever offence whatsoever cannot be passed

Normally, under Section 438 CrPC a direction should not issue to the effect that the applicant shall be released on bail "whenever arrested for whichever offence whatsoever". Such "blanket order" should not be passed as it would serve as a blanket to cover or protect any and every kind of allegedly unlawful activity. An order under Section 438 CrPC is a device to secure the individual's liberty, it is neither a passport to the commission of crimes nor a shield against any and all kinds of accusations likely or unlikely. (Para 16). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

[6641] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Held, can be granted only for a limited period — Grant of unconditional blanket protection is untenable and liable to be set aside — View taken in K.L. Verma case, (1998) 9 SCC 348 that "anticipatory bail may be granted for a duration which may extend to the date on which the bail application is disposed of or even a few days thereafter to enable the accused persons to move the higher court" held to be per incuriam — Constitution of India — Art. 141 (Paras 8 to 12 and 18 to 23). Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435: AIR 2005 SC 498: (2004) 115 DLT 517: (2005) 2 Guj LR 1096: (2005) 1 KLT 748: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 534.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2004]

K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031, held per incuriam

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689; Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; State v. Ratan Lal Arora, (2004) 4 SCC 590: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1353; Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co. Ltd., (1944) 2 All ER 293: 1944 KB 718; State of U.P. v. Synthetics and Chemicals Ltd., (1991) 4 SCC 139; Nirmal Jeet Kaur v. State of M.P., (2004) 7 SCC 558: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1989, relied on [6642] — S. 438 — Following Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565, held, grant of anticipatory bail for a limited duration is illegal — Anticipatory bail, after hearing Public Prosecutor to ordinarily continue till end of trial (see Shortnote in detail) — Later smaller Benches not in consonance with Constitution Bench ruling squarely on the issue — Course to

(8) Duration and extent of anticipatory bail (contd.)

be followed by smaller Bench cognizant of the Constitution Bench ruling — Said earlier rulings of smaller Benches being per incuriam for not being in consonance with the Constitution Bench ruling, former not followed and Constitution Bench ruling followed — Constitution of India, Art. 141

It was submitted that the law laid down in para 42 by the Constitution Bench in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565, that the normal rule is not to limit operation of the order of anticipatory bail, was not taken into account by Benches of the Supreme Court passing subsequent judgments. That the observations made in the said subsequent judgments have been made in ignorance of and without considering the law laid down in para 42 of Sibbia case which was binding on them. That in these circumstances, the observations made in the subsequent judgments to the effect that anticipatory bail should be for a limited period of time, must be construed to be per incuriam and the decision of the Constitution Bench be preferred.

Accepting the contention,

Held :

The House of Lords observed that "incuria" literally means "carelessness". In practice per incuriam appears to mean per ignoratium. English courts have developed this principle in relaxation of the rule of stare decisis. The "quotable in law" is avoided and ignored if it is rendered in ignoratium of a statute or other binding authority. The same has been accepted, approved and adopted by the Supreme Court while interpreting Article 141 of the Constitution which embodies the doctrine of precedents as a matter of law. (Para 128)

Not only the judgment of a larger strength is binding on a Bench of Judges smaller strength but the judgment of a coequal strength is also binding on a Bench of Judges of coequal strength. (Para 138)

In case there is no judgment of a Constitution Bench or larger Bench of binding nature and if the Court doubts the correctness of the judgments by two or three Judges, then the proper course would be to request the Chief Justice to refer the matter to a larger Bench of appropriate strength. (Para 139)

The views expressed by the Supreme Court in all the judgments referred to herein in paras 124 and 125 have to be reviewed. In these judgments by Benches of smaller strength it has been observed that anticipatory bail should be of limited duration only, and ordinarily on expiry of that duration or standard duration, the court granting the anticipatory bail should leave it to the regular bail court to deal with the matter. This view is clearly contrary to the view taken by the Constitution Bench in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565. Consequently, the judgments mentioned in paras 124 and 125 of this judgment are per incuriam. In the present case there is a direct judgment of the Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court in Sibbia case dealing with exactly the same issue regarding the ambit, scope and object of the concept of anticipatory bail enumerated under Section 438 CrPC. The present Bench is clearly bound to follow the said judgment of the Constitution Bench. Judicial discipline obliges it to follow the said judgment in letter and spirit. (Paras 98, 99, 103, 105, 107, 108, 122 to 127, 140 and 33).

Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

State of Bihar v. Kalika Kuer, (2003) 5 SCC 448; Govt. of A.P. v. B. Satyanarayana Rao, (2000) 4 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (L&S) 486; Union of India v. Raghubir Singh, (1989) 2 SCC 754; Thota Sesharathamma v. Thota Manikyamma, (1991) 4 SCC 312; R. Thiruvirkolam v. Presiding Officer, (1997) 1 SCC 9: 1997 SCC (L&S) 65; Bharat Petroleum Corpn. Ltd. v. Mumbai Shramik Sangha, (2001) 4 SCC 448; Central Board of Dawoodi Bohra Community v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 2 SCC 673: 2005 SCC (L&S) 246: 2005 SCC (Cri) 546; Official Liquidator v. Dayanand, (2008) 10 SCC 1: (2009) 1 SCC (L&S) 943; Subhash Chandra v. Delhi Subordinate Services Selection Board, (2009) 15 SCC 458: (2010) 2 SCC (L&S) 147, relied on

Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co. Ltd., 1944 KB 718: (1944) 2 All ER 293 (CA): 1946 AC 163: (1946) 1 All ER 98 (HL); Huddersfield Police Authority v. Watson, 1947 KB 842: (1947) 2 All ER 193 (DC), referred to

Halsbury's Laws of England (4th Edn.) Vol. 26, pp. 297-98, para 578; Wade: Administrative Law, cited

Karmi v. Amru, (1972) 4 SCC 86; Badri Prasad v. Kanso Devi, (1969) 2 SCC 586; Gujarat Steel Tubes Ltd. v. Mazdoor Sabha, (1980) 2 SCC 593: 1980 SCC (L&S) 197; P.H. Kalyani v. Air France, AIR 1963 SC 1756: (1964) 2 SCR 104; D.C. Roy v. M.P. Industrial Court, (1976) 3 SCC 693: 1976 SCC (L&S) 484; State of Karnataka v. Umadevi (3), (2006) 4 SCC 1: 2006 SCC (L&S) 753; S. Pushpa v. Sivachanmugavelu, (2005) 3 SCC 1: 2005 SCC (L&S) 327; Marri Chandra Shekhar Rao v. Seth G.S. Medical College, (1990) 3 SCC 130: (1990) 14 ATC 671; E.V. Chinnaiah v. State of A.P., (2005) 1 SCC 394: (2008) 2 SCC (L&S) 329; Hyman v. Rose, 1912 AC 623, 631, cited

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, followed

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277, held, per incuriam

[6643] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Nature, object, duration and extension — Held, blanket protection granted under S. 438 is extraordinary in character and should be used in exceptional cases — On expiration of anticipatory bail, question of bail should be left to regular courts — In present case, High Court had wrongly noted that the accused persons were not named in the FIR — In fact they were specifically named — Hence, respondents should surrender before the court concerned and seek regular bail

The informant challenged the impugned order passed by a Single Judge of the High Court disposing of three petitions filed by Respondents 1, 2 and 3, whereby, the prayer for protection in terms of Section 438 CrPC was accepted.

Disposing of the appeal in the terms below,

Held :

The power exercisable under Section 438 CrPC is somewhat extraordinary in character and it is only in exceptional cases where it appears that the person may be falsely implicated or where there are reasonable grounds for holding that a person accused of an offence is not likely to otherwise misuse his liberty, then power is to be exercised under Section 438. The object which is sought to be achieved by Section 438 CrPC is that the moment a person is arrested, if he has already obtained an order from the Court of Session or the High Court, he shall be released immediately on bail without being sent to jail. It is, therefore, necessary that such anticipatory bail orders should be of a limited duration only and ordinarily on the expiry of that duration or extended duration the court granting anticipatory bail should leave it to the regular court to deal with the matter on an appreciation of evidence placed before it after the investigation has made progress or the charge-sheet is submitted. Anticipatory bail may be granted for a duration which may extend to the date on which the bail application is disposed of or even a few days thereafter to enable the accused persons to move the higher court, if they so desire. The High Court had wrongly noted that the accused persons were not named in the FIR. In fact they were specifically named. The respondents should surrender before the court concerned and should seek regular bail. (Paras 5, 6 and 7). Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 2008 SC 218: (2008) 1 KLT 839.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-10-2007]

[6644] — Ss. 438, 437 and 439 — Anticipatory bail — Duration for which to be granted — Following Constitution Bench in Sibbia case, (1980) 2 SCC 565, held, grant of anticipatory bail for limited period is illegal — When order of anticipatory bail is confirmed after hearing Public Prosecutor, held, ordinarily its benefit should continue till end of trial — Grant of anticipatory bail for a limited period coupled with requirement to submit to custody thereafter and then seek, if at all, regular bail, held, violative of S. 438 — Such order would also be unreasonable and therefore, violative of Art. 21 of Constitution which enshrines test of fairness and reasonableness — Constitution of India, Art. 21. Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248, followed

Hyman v. Rose, 1912 AC 623, 631, cited

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031; Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Naresh Kumar Yadav v. Ravindra Kumar, (2008) 1 SCC 632: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 277, held, per incuriam

[6645] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Period of — Anticipatory bail is given for a limited duration so as to enable the accused to move the regular court for bail in terms of S. 439 — View that such limited duration may extend to the date on which the bail application is disposed of or even few days thereafter to enable the accused to move the higher court, cannot be accepted (Paras 11 and 12). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031, overruled

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; Nirmal Jeet Kaur v. State of M.P., (2004) 7 SCC 558: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1989; Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435; Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508, relied on

[6646] — S. 438 — Grant of anticipatory bail — Procedure to be followed — Order of anticipatory bail should be of a limited duration — Ordinarily on expiry of that duration the court granting anticipatory bail should leave it to the regular court to deal with the matter

When the Court of Session or the High Court is granting anticipatory bail, it is granted at a stage when the investigation is incomplete and, therefore, it is not informed about the nature of evidence against the alleged offender. It is, therefore, necessary that such anticipatory bail orders should be of a limited duration only and ordinarily on the expiry of that duration or extended duration, the court granting anticipatory bail should leave it to the regular court to deal with the matter on an appreciation of evidence placed before it after the investigation has made progress or the charge-sheet is submitted.

(8) Duration and extent of anticipatory bail (contd.)

Ordinarily the court granting anticipatory bail should not substitute itself for the original court which is expected to deal with the offence. It is that court which has then to consider whether, having regard to the material placed before it, the accused person is entitled to bail. Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198: AIR 1996 SC 1042.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and S.C. Sen and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-1995]

[6647] — Ss. 438 and 197 — Order of anticipatory bail does not enure till end of the trial but it must be of a limited duration — Matter of bail should be left to the regular court — Accused must be given sufficient time to move regular court for bail and in case of refusal by regular court to approach higher court — Grant of anticipatory bail by High Court till 14-10-1996 — Subsequently by another order High Court directing to issue notice on question of sanction under S. 197 — Notice returnable on 1-11-1996 — Held, the High Court not justified to grant stay of further proceedings till decision on question of requirement of sanction under S. 197

An order of anticipatory bail does not enure till the end of trial but it must be of limited duration as the regular court cannot be bypassed. The limited duration must be determined having regard to the facts of the case and the need to give the accused sufficient time to move the regular court for bail and to give the regular court sufficient time to determine the bail application. In other words, till the bail application is disposed of one way or the other the court may allow the accused to remain on anticipatory bail. To put it differently, anticipatory bail may be granted for a duration which may extend to the date on which the bail application is disposed of or even a few days thereafter to enable the accused persons to move the higher court, if they so desire. It cannot be said that as soon as the accused persons are produced before the regular court the anticipatory bail ends even if the court is yet to decide the question of bail on merits.

In the instant case the proper course for the High Court was to decide on the question of the requirement of sanction and if the High Court could not do so, to have stayed further proceedings till that vital question was answered. K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1031.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and J.S. Verma, J. [Date of decision: 13-10-1996]

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198, explained and followed

Held to have been decided per incuriam in Nirmal Jeet Kaur v. State of M.P., (2004) 7 SCC 558, Sumitra Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608 and in Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608

(9) Direction under S. 438, when becomes operative

[6648] — S. 438 — Direction under S. 438, held, becomes operative only after arrest (Para 18). Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933: AIR 2005 SC 1057: (2005) 117 DLT 686: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 259: 2005 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2005]

(10) Matters at large/Orders/Directions that may be passed

[6649] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Practice and procedure — Observations of court pointing towards the guilt of accused, held, are impermissible at the preliminary stage of the investigation of the case

The High Court ought not to have made observations that the words spoken by the petitioner squarely attract the provision of Section 153-A IPC and that the same was uttered with necessary mens rea in mind at the preliminary stage of the investigation of the case, which may cause prejudice to the defence of the appellant during the trial of the case. Therefore, the said observations shall not be taken into consideration by the trial court at any stage of the proceedings of the case. (Paras 15 and 10). Jonathan Nitin Brady v. State of W.B., (2008) 8 SCC 660: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 627.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2008]

[6650] — S. 438 — Interim orders, in anticipatory bail applications — Permissi- bility and scope — Factors to be considered — Respondent-accused, in anticipatory bail application, after securing ex parte order from High Court which directed that respondents may be released on bail on their appearance before CJM, furnished bail before the CJM — Subsequently, accused filed application before High Court stating that since all accused had furnished regular bail bonds, they need not press the pending petitions, allowed by High Court — High Court dismissed application for cancellation of interim order filed by investigating officer — Held, High Court committed a serious error in passing an ex parte interim order which had the effect of being final as well as granting anticipatory bail for an indefinite period which is impermissible in law — Further held, High Court, committed a manifest error in allowing respondents not to press their application — Before a final order granting anticipatory bail is passed, High Court was required to apply its mind not only with regard to stage at which investigation was pending but several other factors including conduct of the accused (Paras 9 to 12). Shree Baidyanath Ayurved Bhawan (P) Ltd. v. State of Punjab, (2009) 9 SCC 414.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2009]

[6651] — S. 438 — Direction for prior notice to accused before arrest — Direction of the High Court requiring 3 days' notice prior to the arrest of the respondent — Subsequent directions restraining CBI from acting in pursuance of 3 days' notice given to the respondent — Legality — Held, High Court was not justified in making such orders — CBI was not required to show also the breach of any of the subsequent conditions in addition to giving 3 days' notice — Period of required notice having expired, it is for the CBI to take the decision whether to arrest the respondents or not. CBI v. Chandraswami, (1997) 3 SCC 214: 1997 SCC (Cri) 432.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.S. Verma and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-1997]

[6652] — S. 438 — Grant of anticipatory bail by High Court — Held, observations made and conclusions reached by High Court absolutely uncalled for — Hence not to be considered by court while trying the case — Respondents allowed to remain on bail subject to condition that they should cooperate with investigating agency. State v. K.K. Jajodia, 1990 Supp SCC 667: 1991 SCC (Cri) 156.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-1988]

[6653] — S. 438 — Power under, regarding grant of anticipatory bail to accused — Exercise of — Scope of — Adverse directions issued against appellant police officer on consideration of accused's plea as to his false implication — Propriety of — Held, while granting anticipatory bail, the High Court was not justified in giving directions for initiating departmental proceeding and launching a criminal prosecution against the appellant — It was also not justified in issuing notice to the appellant as to why compensation be not paid to the accused — These directions could have been given by the Court upon conclusion of trial and not at this juncture — Hence, while confirming the grant of anticipatory bail to accused, the said directions issued against the appellant set aside (Paras 3 and 4). ASI Jaswinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2007) 2 SCC 802: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 678.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-2006]

[6654] — S. 438 — Prior notice to accused before arrest, held, is unwarranted — High Court giving direction to Customs Authorities that Respondents 1 and 2 shall not be arrested without ten days' prior notice — Held, is illegal — Such order obstructs, interferes and curtails the authority of the Customs Officers from exercising statutory power of arrest of a person said to have committed a non-bailable offence by imposing a condition of giving ten days' prior notice, a condition not warranted by law — Customs Act, 1962, S. 104

In proceedings initiated by the Customs Department under the Customs Act, 1962 (the Act), summons were issued to Respondents 1 and 2 for preparing fake shipping bills and obtaining export benefits under Section 80-HHC of the Income Tax Act, 1961. In view of the non-cooperation by the respondents, complaints were filed by the Customs Authorities for commission of offences punishable under Sections 174 and 175 IPC. Applications for anticipatory bail before the Sessions Court were dismissed.

However, the High Court by the impugned order held that since the petitioner-accused had only been summoned under Section 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 to give their evidence in the inquiry, the anticipatory bail applications were premature. The High Court, therefore, directed the respondent-accused to appear before the Customs Authorities concerned. Again, the High Court also directed the Customs Authorities that if any non-bailable offence was found against the accused persons they would not be arrested without ten days' prior notice to them.

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

The safeguards/considerations against the abuse of power and the statutory character of Section 104 of the Customs Act, 1962 have to be kept in view while deciding the correctness or otherwise of the directions issued by a Single Judge of the High Court. On the one hand the power to arrest a person by a Customs Officer under Section 104 of the Act is statutory in character and cannot be interfered with, and on the other hand, the power to arrest is circumscribed by objective considerations and cannot be exercised on whims, caprice or fancy of the officer. Such power of arrest can be exercised only in those cases where the Customs Officer has "reason to believe" that a person has been guilty of an offence punishable under Sections 132, 133, 135 or 135-A of the Act. Section 104 of the Act also obliges the Customs Officer to inform the person arrested of the grounds of arrest as soon as may be.

(10) Matters at large/Orders/Directions that may be passed (contd.)

The law requires such person to be produced before a Magistrate without unnecessary delay. "Blanket" order of bail may amount to or result in an invitation to commit an offence or a passport to carry on criminal activities or to afford a shield against any and all types of illegal operations, which, can never be allowed in a society governed by the rule of law. (Paras 36 to 38 and 22). Union of India v. Padam Narain Aggarwal, (2008) 13 SCC 305: (2008) 231 ELT 397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

[6655] — Ss. 438 and 439 — Anticipatory bail — Directions that may be issued — Direction for arrest — Rejection of, by the High Court, held, was proper — But, direction to investigating officer to arrest the petitioner within twenty-four hours was not sustainable — That matter was under the province of the investigating officer (Para 2). D. Prabhakaran v. Inspector of Police, (2005) 12 SCC 399.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2005]

M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649: 2003 SCC (Cri) 628, followed

(11) Practice and Procedure re disposal

[6656] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, by High Court — Hearing to State to oppose application — Need for — Respondents, apprehending arrest moving an application for anticipatory bail during vacation — Matter heard by the High Court on the very next day without giving adequate opportunity to the appellants to file objections — Held, procedure adopted by the High Court bad — Matter remanded to High Court to be heard afresh (Paras 6 to 8). Union of India v. Yusuf Razak Dhanani, (2003) 8 SCC 98: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1963: AIR 2003 SC 4578: (2003) 157 ELT 241.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-9-2003]

[6657] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, without hearing the State concerned or its Director General of Police, held, illegal. State of Assam v. Dr. Brojen Gogol, (1998) 1 SCC 397: 1998 SCC (Cri) 403: AIR 1998 SC 143, 144.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-10-1997]

(12) Successive/repeated bail applications

[6658] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Subsisting order of Supreme Court restraining arrest on condition that accused join investigation — Law laid down in Adri Dharan Das, (2005) 4 SCC 303, if applicable — Fraud/embezzlement case against employees of private bank — Appellants who were employees of a private bank, apprehending arrest on account of FIR lodged against them for alleged fraud/embezzlement arising out of withdrawal of money and shares belonging to the complainant — Appellants' case was that transaction was purely of civil nature for which arbitration proceedings had already been initiated — Petition filed by appellants was under S. 482 CrPC but in essence it was a prayer for grant of anticipatory bail under S. 438 — There was already a subsisting order of the Supreme Court restraining arrest of the appellants subject to the condition that appellants would join investigation — Held, strictly speaking the order did not fit into the parameters indicated in Adri Dharan Das case, but keeping in view that the order was in operation, no variation made in it — Appeal disposed of by giving directions for speedy completion of investigation

(1) The investigation shall be completed within two months unless there is some practical difficulty in completing the same within that period.

(2) The appellants shall, as and when required by the investigating agency, appear before the investigating officer and shall cooperate in the investigation.

(3) If any document is asked for, the same shall be supplied unless the appellants are not in possession of the documents.

(4) In case the investigating officer feels that non-production of documents as called for has any relevance, that can certainly be taken note of while submitting the final form or the charge-sheet as the case may be. This order shall be operative till the charge-sheet or the final form is filed before the court concerned. (Paras 9 and 10). Parvinderjit Singh v. State, (2008) 13 SCC 431.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-11-2008]

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, relied on

[6659] — S. 438 — Grant of anticipatory bail despite rejection of all bail applications by all courts including Supreme Court — Propriety — Accused granted 8 months' provisional anticipatory bail by High Court to enable him to donate kidney to his ailing father in face of rejection of all his bail applications, including Supreme Court —

Said order strongly deprecated in backdrop of events, especially as 8 months to donate a kidney belied the truth of the matter — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 201 and 120-B (Para 13). Virender Prasad Singh v. Rajesh Bhardwaj, (2010) 9 SCC 171: (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 1169: 2010 Cri LJ 4275: (2010) 95 AIC 182 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2010]

Mithabhai Pashabhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 6 SCC 332: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 1047; Ramachandran v. R. Udhayakumar, (2008) 5 SCC 413: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 631, relied on

Rubabbuddin Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 2 SCC 200: (2010) 2 SCC (Cri) 1006, distinguished on facts

(13) Conditions for bail under

[6660] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Conditions imposed, if onerous — Condition imposed by High Court while grant of, that the first and the second appellant should deposit Rs 10 lakhs and Rs 5 lakhs respectively — Modification of, by by holding that the said condition, on the facts and circumstances of the present case, was onerous — Appellants directed to furnish a self-bond of Rs 50,000 each and one surety for the like sum each — Further directed to abide by the conditions enumerated in S. 438(2) CrPC — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 3 and 4). U. Palaniappan v. Sub-Inspector of Police, (2005) 10 SCC 464: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1586.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-2005]

[6661] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Conditions for grants of — Reasonableness — Fraud alleged regarding sale of property — Appellant-accused alleged to have conspired and forged encumbrance certificate and impersonated themselves as original owners of house sites, prepared a false sale deed and registered the same in favour of complainant and cheated complainant to the tune of Rs 62,62,000 — High Court granting anticipatory bail on condition that in the event of arrest, appellants shall be enlarged on bail on their depositing title deeds of property worth Rs 20,00,000 standing either in their name or in the name of the third parties and also on their executing a personal bond of Rs 25,000 with two sureties for the like sum — Held, allegations, no doubt were serious and High Court with intention to protect interests of complainant passed impugned order — But, approach of High Court was incorrect as onerous and unreasonable conditions were laid down as condition precedent for grant of anticipatory bail — Matter remitted to High Court to reconsider entire facts of case including gravity of offence alleged and then in light thereof to consider prayer for anticipatory bail (Paras 3, 5, 11 to 15). I. Glaskasden Grace v. Inspector of Police, (2009) 12 SCC 769: AIR 2009 SC 1629.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2009]

Amarjit Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 13 SCC 769; Sandeep Jain v. NCT of Delhi, (2000) 2 SCC 66: 2000 SCC (Cri) 316, considered and relied on

[6662] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Factors to be considered for grant of — Conditions that may be imposed — Fraud alleged regarding sale of property — High Court granting anticipatory bail to appellant laying down onerous condition of depositing Rs 32 lakhs as condition precedent — Propriety of — Held, High Court proceeded to dispose of prayer for anticipatory bail oblivious of facts of case and contrary to correct legal position with regard to law relating to grant of anticipatory bail — Hence, order passed by High Court set aside and matter remitted for reconsideration in accordance with law — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B and 420

A complaint was filed by Respondent 2 contending that the appellants and another person, namely, K are legal heirs of one R and that they owned a house and that the said house was open and ready for sale. Complainant on behalf of his son-in-law negotiated with RT, wife of late R and his family members pursuant to which an agreement was entered into on behalf of him/ son-in-law and daughter for consideration of Rs 35.5 lakhs as desired by the accused persons. A sum of Rs 32.5 lakhs was advanced on different dates as a part of sale consideration but accused persons failed to handover the papers and documents relating to the house and handed over only the possession of the house. On enquiry it came to the knowledge of the complainant that the original documents and title deeds had been placed with a Chit Fund where they are required to pay a sum of Rs 8 lakhs including interest amount. It further transpires that the said accused and her late husband executed the sale deed in respect of the said property in 1998. The aforesaid fact of alleged fraudulent transfer of property was concealed. They also allegedly concealed the fact that they received a sum of Rs 11,50,000 from Punjab National Bank by means of pledging the documents and that a decree was passed against the purchasers regarding the pledged properties. It is thus alleged that the accused concealed the real fact and fraudulently received a sum of Rs 32.5 lakhs as sale consideration and thereby cheated the complainant and his son-in-law and his wife. The appellants apprehending arrest in the aforesaid case registered under Sections 120-B and 420 IPC filed a petition under Section 438 CrPC seeking anticipatory bail. The High Court passed an order granting anticipatory bail on an onerous condition.

(13) Conditions for bail under (contd.)

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The allegations are serious but the same are required to be considered by the Court in accordance with and in the light of correct position of law. It appears that in the facts and circumstances, the High Court passed the impugned order with the intention of protecting the interest of the complainant in the matter. The approach of the High Court was incorrect as under the impugned order a very unreasonable and onerous condition has been laid down by the Court as a condition precedent for grant of anticipatory bail. It is not disclosed from the record that the High Court considered the entire facts of the case in proper perspective and proceeded to dispose of the prayer for anticipatory bail oblivious of the facts of the case and contrary to correct legal position with regard to law relating to grant of anticipatory bail. The High Court should have considered the entire facts of the case including the gravity of the offence alleged and in the light thereof should have considered the prayer for grant of anticipatory bail. In that view of the matter, the entire order passed by the High Court is required to be set aside and the matter to be reconsidered in accordance with law and in terms of observations made herein. (Paras 12, 13 and 16). Ramathal v. Inspector of Police, (2009) 12 SCC 721: (2009) 77 AIC 215 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 2271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2009]

Amarjit Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 13 SCC 769; Sandeep Jain v. NCT of Delhi, (2000) 2 SCC 66: 2000 SCC (Cri) 316, relied on

[6663] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, on unreasonable condition — Impropriety of — FIR against appellant- accused under Ss. 406/420 IPC — Anticipatory bail granted to him, subject to deposit of Rs 15 lakhs in form of FDR in the name of trial court — Affirmed by High Court — Sustainability — Imposition of such condition, held, unreasonable, hence, set aside — Anticipatory bail granted on modified conditions — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406/420

Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the present case, the imposition of condition to deposit the sum of Rs 15 lakhs in the form of FDR in the trial court is an unreasonable condition and, therefore, the said condition is set aside as a condition precedent for granting anticipatory bail to the appellant-accused. (Para 7)

On the other hand, it is directed that on executing a bond to the tune of Rs 25,000 with two solvent sureties to the satisfaction of the Magistrate concerned, and further that the accused shall make himself available for interrogation whenever is required and the accused should surrender his passport immediately to the Magistrate concerned where the matter is pending and would not leave this country without appropriate permission from the court, he would be entitled to the order granting him anticipatory bail. (Para 8). Amarjit Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 13 SCC 769: (2002) 96 DLT 59.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-2002]

[6664] — S. 438 — Discretion of court to impose conditions for granting anticipatory bail is a judicial discretion which should be exercised with the object of avoiding possibility of hampering the investigation — Offence under Ss. 409 and 420 IPC alleged against appellant — Anticipatory bail granted by High Court on certain conditions — Interference of Supreme Court under Art. 136 with the conditions, whether called for — Facts and circumstances of the case, object for which the bail granted and impossibility and/or severity of satisfying the conditions considered and suitable orders issued — Constitution of India — Art. 136

The accused-petitioner, against whom offence under Sections 420 and 409 r/w Section 120-B IPC was alleged, moved for grant of anticipatory bail. By an order dated 31-1-2000, after taking all relevant facts as well as the undertaking of the accused the High Court granted anticipatory bail in favour of the petitioner subject to depositing Rs 50 crores in three instalments of Rs 20 crores, Rs 15 crores and Rs 15 crores within specified time frame. That order was modified by a subsequent order dated 30-3-2000 for payment of the aforesaid Rs 15 crores by modifying the dates and putting several other conditions as contained in para 18 of the order. The accused, thereafter approached the Supreme Court which stayed operation of the subsequent order on 17-4-2000. By that date a sum of Rs 35 crores had already been paid and a further sum of Rs 15 crores as was required by the High Court remained to be paid. The accused-petitioner contended that when the court exercises jurisdiction under Section 438 CrPC though is entitled to put conditions, but such conditions must be reasonable and judicious and the conditions should not be arbitrary. On behalf of the respondent State it was, on the other hand, contended that bearing in mind the nature of accusation, in fact, no anticipatory bail should have been granted, but the same having been granted the terms and conditions imposed should not be interfered with by the Supreme Court under Article 136.

Disposing of the petitions

Held :

The court while exercising jurisdiction under Section 438 CrPC must bear in mind and be satisfied that the accused will not abscond or otherwise misuse liberty and this can be ascertained from several factors like conduct of the accused in the past, his assets in the country and so on. But, while granting such anticipatory bail, though the court may impose such conditions as it thinks fit, the object of putting conditions should be to avoid the possibility of the person hampering investigation. The discretion of the court while putting conditions should be an exercise of judicial discretion. In an offence under Sections 409 and 420 IPC, the court is certainly not going to recover the alleged amount as a condition to granting of bail. (Para 6)

Since the High Court had directed the payment of the aforesaid money on the basis of the undertaking given by the accused, that part of the order need not be modified and, therefore, the accused would be required to pay the balance sum of Rs 15 crores within a period of four weeks. So far as condition (b) imposed in para 18 of the order is concerned, having considered the facts and circumstances of the case in hand and the object for which an accused is granted bail and the impossibility and/or severity of satisfying the said condition, that condition has to be altered by directing that it would be open for the accused to furnish corporate guarantee to the extent mentioned in para 18(b) of the aforesaid order to the satisfaction of the Magistrate concerned with whom the case is now pending. The Magistrate should be fully satisfied about the solvency of the corporate guarantee. All other conditions mentioned in para 18 of the aforesaid order would remain operative and the prosecution should take expeditious steps for completing the criminal proceedings. The corporate guarantee as aforesaid should be furnished within eight weeks. (Para 6). M. Sreenivasulu Reddy v. State of T.N., (2002) 10 SCC 653.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2000]

[6665] — Ss. 438 and 125 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, by High Court by imposing condition that accused would pay to the victim daughter-in-law a sum of Rs 2000 per month as maintenance — Propriety of — Held, was not proper — Accused who were jeth and jethani (elder brother-in-law and co-sister) of the victim could not be made liable to deposit the said amount for maintenance of victim — While deciding bail application, the court had no jurisdiction to decide civil disputes as between the parties — Hence, matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh on merit — High Court to pass appropriate order without imposing any condition of the nature imposed herein (Para 3). Mahesh Chandra v. State of U.P., (2006) 6 SCC 196: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 23.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-2006]

[6666] — Ss. 438 and 437 — Anticipatory bail — Conditions that may be imposed, enumerated — Factors to be considered by court — Irrelevant and unwarranted conditions for release on bail — Sustainability — Held, harsh, onerous and excessive conditions which frustrate the very object of anticipatory bail not to be imposed — Subjecting an accused to any condition other than conditions enumerated in the section would be beyond jurisdiction of the court — The conditions which can be imposed by the court while granting anticipatory bail are enumerated in Ss. 438(2) and 437(3) — To subject an accused to any other condition would be beyond jurisdiction of the power conferred on court under S. 438 (Paras 10 to 12). Munish Bhasin v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 4 SCC 45.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-2009]

[6667] — Ss. 438 and 125 — Anticipatory bail — Conditions for release on bail — Whether payment of maintenance to the wife and child could be a precondition for release of accused on bail — Held, in a proceeding under S. 438, Court is not justified in awarding maintenance to the wife and child — Subjecting an accused to any condition other than conditions enumerated under the section would be beyond jurisdiction of the court — Maintenance to be decided in appropriate proceedings where the parties adduce evidence as to their respective cases but not in proceedings under S. 438 (Paras 13 and 14). Munish Bhasin v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 4 SCC 45.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-2009]

(13) Conditions for bail under (contd.)

[6668] — S. 438(2)(i) — Anticipatory bail — Scope — Conditions that may be imposed — Held, while granting anticipatory bail, court can lay down a condition that accused shall make himself available for interrogation by a police officer as and when required — Purpose of such provision is that anticipatory bail cannot be permitted to be abused — Implicitly, whenever court imposes such a condition and the accused called for interrogation or for certain investigation does not appear before investigating officer, then it will be open for State to move High Court for cancellation of bail — Held, on facts, impugned order granting anticipatory bail requires no interference — However, in case respondents do not cooperate with investigation, then it is always open for State to move an application before High Court for cancellation of bail, which will be decided in accordance with law (Paras 5, 3 and 4). State of Punjab v. Raninder Singh, (2008) 1 SCC 564: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 301: AIR 2008 SC 609: 2008 Cri LJ 801: (2008) 1 KLT 507 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.K. Mathur and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-2007]

(14) Cancellation of bail

[6669] — S. 438 — Cancellation of anticipatory bail — Grant of anticipatory bail by Sessions Court on irrelevant or extraneous grounds and refusal by High Court to cancel the bail, on facts, causing miscarriage of justice — Supreme Court would interfere and cancel the bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136

In the present case in order to avoid miscarriage of justice, the Supreme Court must interfere under Art. 136 and cancel the order granting anticipatory bail. Ordinarily, this Court is loath to interfere with the orders granting or refusing bail but it cannot be an insurmountable obstacle in the way of rectifying an order which tends to disclose miscarriage of justice. Pokar Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1985) 2 SCC 597: 1985 SCC (Cri) 297: AIR 1985 SC 969: 1985 Cri LJ 1175.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar, D.A. Desai and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-4-1985]

[6670] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — When may be cancelled — In present case, appellant granted anticipatory bail by Sessions Judge — Appellant complying with conditions of anticipatory bail and also cooperating with investigation agency — Investigation agency not objecting to relaxation of conditions of bail of appellant before Sessions Judge — Other accused also enjoying benefit of bail — High Court quashing the bail — Sustainability — Held, no ground for setting aside the order granting bail — Liberty given to investigation agency to move Sessions Judge for interrogating appellant either alone or with other accused persons and appellant to comply with such directions, if passed (Paras 10 to 12). Fida Hussain Bohra v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 5 SCC 150.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2009]

[6671] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Cancellation of — Propriety — High Court by impugned order cancelling appellant's anticipatory bail — Nothing brought on record to show that there had been interference, or attempt to interfere with due course of administration of justice by appellant, or concession granted to him had been abused in any manner, or any supervening circumstance had surfaced justifying cancellation of anticipatory bail — Hence, impugned order unsustainable and set aside (Paras 3, 4 and 6 to 8). Hazari Lal Das v. State of W.B., (2009) 10 SCC 652: (2009) 82 AIC 196 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2009]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237, considered and followed

[6672] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Cancellation of — Propriety — Alleged dowry related offences — High Court by impugned judgment cancelling anticipatory bail granted to appellants (mother-in-law, father-in-law, younger brother of father-in-law and husband of deceased) who were accused of committing offences punishable under Ss. 498-A, 304-B r/w S. 34 IPC and Ss. 3 & 4, Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961 — Held, very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order directing cancellation of bail already granted — In the instant case, nothing was brought on record from which it could be inferred that appellants had not cooperated in the investigation or had in any manner abused concession of bail granted to them — Hence, impugned order unsustainable and set aside — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 498-A, 304-B r/w S. 34 — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, Ss. 3 and 4

The High Court by the impugned judgment cancelled the anticipatory bail granted to the appellants (mother-in-law, father-in-law, husband and younger brother of father-in-law of the deceased) who were accused of committing offences punishable under Sections 498-A, 304-B read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4, Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961.

It was alleged by the father of the deceased that the appellants were torturing the deceased for not meeting dowry demand of Rs 2 lakhs and earlier on 15-7-2006 she had left her matrimonial home intending to commit suicide because she was unable to bear it. However, on intervention of her relatives she was sent back to her matrimonial home.

On the day of occurrence the father-in-law of the deceased was stated to have heard cries of the deceased and on rushing there he found her burning. He tried to douse the fire and the deceased told him that her child aged about fifteen months was lying in the bathroom with burns. Both of them were rushed to the hospital. The child expired on the same day, while the deceased died ten days later in the hospital. In the two dying declarations recorded by the Executive Magistrate the deceased stated that she and her son caught fire accidentally when she was pouring kerosene oil in the lamp which accidentally fell down.

The Sessions Judge taking into consideration the two dying declarations, statements of the complainant and the witnesses and after perusing the case-diary granted anticipatory bail to the appellants. The High Court by the impugned judgment cancelled the same. Hence, the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Section 438 of the Code confers on the High Court and the Court of Session, the power to grant "anticipatory bail" if the applicant has "reason to believe" that he may be arrested on accusation of having committed a non-bailable offence. The expression "anticipatory bail" has not been defined in the Code. But it means "bail in anticipation of arrest". The expression "anticipatory bail" is a misnomer inasmuch as it is not as if bail is presently granted by the court in anticipation of arrest. When a competent court grants "anticipatory bail", it makes an order that in the event of arrest, a person shall be released on bail. There is no question of release on bail unless a person is arrested and, therefore, it is only on arrest that the order granting anticipatory bail becomes operative. The power being rather unusual in nature, it is entrusted only to the higher echelons of judicial service i.e. a Court of Session and the High Court. (Paras 14, 15 and 16)

The wide discretionary power conferred by the legislature on the higher echelons in the criminal justice-delivery system cannot be put in the form of straitjacket rules for universal application as the question whether to grant bail or not depends for its answer upon a variety of circumstances, the cumulative effect of which must enter into the judicial verdict. A circumstance which, in a given case, turns out to be conclusive, may or may not have any significance in another case. The imposition of unnecessary restrictions on the scope of the section which were not to be found in Section 438 of the Code, could make the provision constitutionally vulnerable, since the right of personal freedom, as enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution, cannot be made to depend on compliance with unreasonable restrictions. The courts must keep in mind the guidelines while dealing with an application for grant of anticipatory bail laid down by the Constitution Bench in Gurbaksh Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 565. Further, the amendment to Section 438 brought about by the CrPC (Amendment) Act, 2005, which is yet to be enforced is more or less in line with the parameters laid down in Gurbaksh Singh case. (Paras 21 to 27)

In the instant case, the High Court committed a serious error in reversing the order passed by the Sessions Judge, granting anticipatory bail to the appellants. The Sessions Judge passed the order after due consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case, in particular, the two dying declarations, one recorded in the presence of the parents of the deceased and the statements of the members of the Women Cell who had dealt with the case when on 15-7-2006, the deceased had left the house with intention to commit suicide and therefore, it cannot be said that the judicial discretion exercised in granting anticipatory bail was perverse or erroneous, warranting interference by the High Court. The order passed by the Sessions Judge was supported by reasons to the extent required for exercise of judicial discretion in the matter of grant of bail. (Para 28)

It may be true that some of the circumstances, noticed by the High Court in the impugned order viz. no reference to lantern in the spot panch- nama or the necessity of cleaning the lantern at 4 p.m. and/or availability of an inverter in the house, etc., could have persuaded the Sessions Judge to take a different view but it cannot be said that the factors which weighed with the Sessions Judge in granting bail were irrelevant to the issue before him, rendering the order as perverse. Moreover, merely because the High Court had a different view on same set of material which had been taken into consideration by the Sessions Judge, in our view, was not a valid ground to label the order passed by the Sessions Judge as perverse. It also appears that the High Court has overlooked the distinction of factors relevant for rejecting bail in a non-bailable case in the first instance and the cancellation of bail already granted. Very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order directing the cancellation of bail already granted, which were missing in the instant case. Nothing was brought on record from which it could be inferred that the appellan ts had not cooperated in the investigations or had, in any manner, abused the concession of bail granted to them. (Paras 29 and 30)

(14) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

Hence, impugned order setting aside anticipatory bail granted to the appellants unsustainable and set aside. (Para 32). Savitri Agarwal v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 8 SCC 325: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 683: (2009) 80 AIC 116 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-7-2009]

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689, followed

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465; Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349, relied on

Gurbaksh Singh Sibia v. State of Punjab, AIR 1978 P&H 1: 1978 Cri LJ 20, held, overruled

Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689, held, partly doubted

Adri Dharan Das v. State of W.B., (2005) 4 SCC 303: 2005 SCC (Cri) 933, partly doubted

[6673] — S. 438 — Recall of anticipatory bail without hearing — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for decision afresh after giving opportunity of hearing to parties — Constitution of India, Art. 136 (Paras 1 and 2). P. Sundarajan v. State, (2009) 17 SCC 641.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-2009]

(15) Interference by Supreme Court

[6674] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, by High Court — Interference with, by Supreme Court when warranted — High Court neither considering the detailed order passed by CJM wherein strong prima facie case was found against R, nor the cogent reasons recorded by Sessions Court while declining anticipatory bail, granting anticipatory bail to accused R on ground that he was not found guilty in joint enquiry, conducted by the Commissioner and the DIG on direction of Human Rights Commission — Held, High Court's order not sustainable — R at liberty to file appropriate application under S. 439 CrPC after surrender (Paras 6 and 7). Manager Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 458.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-10-2004]

[6675] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of — Ground of parity with co-accused — Scope of interference under Art. 136 — Held, it was a fit case for granting anticipatory bail to appellant, particularly when on similar allegations the remaining two accused had been granted the said benefit — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 2). Kamaljit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 7 SCC 226: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1668.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2005]

Followed in Deepak Singchi v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 14 SCC 583*

[6676] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Question as to grant of — Scope of interference under Art. 136 — Genuineness or correctness of documents produced by accused or prosecution — Supreme Court would not comment upon, at this stage — Said matter is to be considered at the trial — Any expression of opinion on the merits of the case except to the extent of finding out prima facie whether the accused are entitled to anticipatory bail or not, is likely to affect the trial — Hence, considering the entire material available on record without expressing any opinion on the same, held, accused entitled to anticipatory bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 7 to 9). M.P. Lohia v. State of W.B., (2005) 2 SCC 686: 2005 SCC (Cri) 556: AIR 2005 SC 790: 2005 Cri LJ 1416.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2005]

[6677] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail granted by Supreme Court — Cancellation of, by the High Court on the ground that the appellant misused the privilege of bail as he had been threatening the informant and other witnesses — Propriety of — Observation of High Court was based on reports of police officers — The said reports were not clear enough to indicate that the threats were received against the witnesses — Therefore, remitting the matter, held, High Court to re-examine the same in the light of the reports on record and any further report that may be called for by it — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 2). Bilash Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, (2005) 11 SCC 179.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2005]

[6678] — S. 438 — Direction given by Supreme Court under Art. 32 for grant of bail to persons apprehending arrest — Question of constitutionality not decided. Ghanshyam Dass Jain v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 389(1): 1983 SCC (Cri) 62(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-1981]

[6679] — S. 438 — Exercise of power under — Doing of complete justice to parties — Appellant ready and willing to settle contractual dispute wherein allegations of forgery and fraud had been made — Bail granted subject to appellant's appearance before Magistrate within four weeks and filing bail petition — Directions given to consider petition for exemption from personal appearance on merits — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 467 and 468 — Constitution of India — Art. 142 (Paras 17 and 18). Mahesh Chaudhary v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 4 SCC 439.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2009]

(16) Rejection of anticipatory bail — Effect

[6680] — Ss. 438 and 41 — Rejection of anticipatory bail application — Arrest — Permissibility — Mere rejection of anticipatory bail application of a person is no ground for arresting such person — Accused may or may not be arrested depending upon facts and circumstances and other aspects of the case

The mere fact that the bail applications of some of the appellants had been rejected is no ground for directing their immediate arrest. In the very nature of things, a person may move the court on mere apprehension that he may be arrested. The court may or may not grant anticipatory bail depending upon the facts and circumstances of the case and the material placed before the court. There may, however, be cases where the application for grant of anticipatory bail may be rejected and ultimately, after investigation, the said person may not be put up for trial as no material is disclosed against him in the course of investigation. The High Court proceeded on the assumption that since petitions for anticipatory bail had been rejected, there was no option open for the State but to arrest those persons. This assumption is erroneous. A person whose petition for grant of anticipatory bail has been rejected may or may not be arrested by the investigating officer depending upon the facts and circumstances of the case, nature of the offence, the background of the accused, the facts disclosed in the course of investigation and other relevant considerations. Therefore, the order dated 10-1-2002, insofar as it directs the arrest of the appellants, must be set aside. (Paras 15 to 16). M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649: 2003 SCC (Cri) 628.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-2002]

State of Bihar v. J.A.C. Saldanha, (1980) 1 SCC 554: 1980 SCC (Cri) 272; King Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmad, (1944) 71 IA 203: AIR 1945 PC 18; S.N. Sharma v. Bipen Kumar Tiwari, (1970) 1 SCC 653: 1970 SCC (Cri) 258, relied on

(17) S. 438 and Special Statutes

[6681] — Ss. 438 and 172 — Anticipatory bail — Whether on facts could be granted in a case registered under Ss. 10, 13 Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967 and Ss. 120-B, 121, 121-A and 122 IPC — Some the said provisions of 1967 Act and Penal Code — Some officers of a company meeting top leaders of an unlawful association (ULFA), negotiating with them over their various demands including payment of ransom, and expressing willingness to accept some of the demands — Diary of investigation proceedings showing that the company had funded the said unlawful association and the appellant officers of that company had a role to play in such funding — In such circumstances, held, a prima facie case under S. 10 of 1967 Act made out against the appellants in that they had assisted the operations of the unlawful association but none under S. 13 thereof or under Penal Code made out — Offence under S. 10 of the Act being a bailable one, provision for anticipatory bail, held, not applicable — Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967 — Ss. 10, 13, 2(f) & (g) and 3 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 120-B, 121, 121-A and 122. R.K. Krishna Kumar v. State of Assam, (1998) 1 SCC 474: 1998 SCC (Cri) 406: AIR 1998 SC 530: 1998 Cri LJ 848: (1998) 92 Comp Cas 14.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-1997]

[6682] — S. 438 — An order for 'anticipatory bail' can be issued even to a person apprehending arrest under R. 184 of the Defence and Internal Security of India Rules, 1971 subject to conditions laid down in R. 184 — Both provisions consistent as they apply to different situations — S. 438 not superseded by R. 184 — Non obstante clause explained — Defence and Internal Security of India Act, 1971, S. 38

'Anticipatory bail' is a misnomer. It is not as if bail is presently granted by the Court in anticipation of arrest. When the Court grants 'anticipatory bail', what it does is to make an order that in the event of arrest, a person shall be released on bail. Manifestly there is no question of release on bail unless a person is arrested and, therefore, it is only on arrest that the order granting 'anticipatory bail' becomes operative. It is a power exercisable in case of an anticipated accusation of non-bailable offence and there is no limitation as to the category of non-bailable offence in respect of which the power can be exercised by the appropriate court.

(17) S. 438 and Special Statutes (contd.)

Rule 184 commences on a non obstante clause and in its operative part imposes a ban on release on bail of a person accused or convicted of a contravention of the rules or orders made thereunder, if in custody, unless two conditions are satisfied. The rule imposes fetters on the exercise of the power of granting bail under the CrPC, in certain kinds of cases and removes such fetters on fulfilment of the aforesaid two conditions. The non obstante clause at the commencement of the rule also emphasises that the provision in the rule is intended to restrict the power of granting bail under the CrPC, and not to confer a new power exercisable only on certain conditions.

If a person is not in custody but is merely under an apprehension of arrest and he applies for grant of 'anticipatory bail' under S. 438, his case would clearly be outside the mischief of R. 184, because when the Court makes an order for grant of 'anticipatory bail', it would not be directing release of a person who is in custody. It is an application for release of a person in custody that is contemplated by R. 184 and not an application for grant of 'anticipatory bail' by a person apprehending arrest. Section 438 and R. 184 thus operate at different stages, one prior to arrest and the other after arrest and there is no overlapping between these two provisions so as to give rise to a conflict between them. And consequently, it must follow as a necessary corollary that R. 184 does not stand in the way of a Court of Session or a High Court granting 'anticipatory bail' under S. 438 to a person apprehending arrears on an accusation of having committed contravention of any rule or order made under the rules.

But even if R. 184 does not apply in such a case, the policy behind this rule would have to be borne in mind by the Court while exercising its power to grant 'anticipatory bail' under S. 438. That is to say, the Court should not grant 'anticipatory bail' unless a notice has been issued to the prosecution giving it an opportunity to oppose the application and in case the contravention is of a rule or order specially notified in this behalf, the Court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is not guilty of such contravention. But that is not intended to lay down that in no case should an ex parte order of 'anticipatory bail' be made by the Court. There may be facts and circumstances in a given case which may justify the making of an ex parte interim order of 'anticipatory bail' but in such an event, a short-dated notice should be issued and the final order should be passed only after giving an opportunity to the prosecution to be heard in opposition. Balchand Jain v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 572: 1976 SCC (Cri) 689: AIR 1977 SC 366: 1977 Cri LJ 225: (1977) 2 SCR 52.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati[1], A.C. Gupta[1] and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 5-11-1976]

[6683] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Bar to — Constitutionality — Non-applicability of provision for anticipatory bail under S. 438 CrPC in respect of offences under S. 3 SC & ST Act — Held, not violative of Arts. 14 and 21 having regard to the historical background and the social conditions — Offences enumerated under S. 3 pertain to a separate and special class and denial of anticipatory bail in the circumstances not unreasonable — S. 438 CrPC does not form an integral part of Art. 21 and anticipatory bail provided for the first time under the new Code is concerned with the Sessions Court and High Court and cannot be claimed as a matter of right — Constitution of India — Arts. 14, 21 and 17 — Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, S. 18

Section 18 of the said Act, denying the application of provisions for anticipatory bail to those accused under that Act, cannot be considered as violative of Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution. (Para 12)

The offences which are enumerated under Section 3(1) arise out of the practice of 'untouchability'. It is in this context that certain special provisions have been made in the Act, including the impugned provision under Section 18. Article 17 forbids practice of untouchability and also provides that enforcement of any disability arising out of 'untouch- ability' shall be an offence punishable in accordance with law. The exclusion of Section 438 CrPC in connection with offences under the Act has to be viewed in the context of the prevailing social conditions which give rise to such offences, and the apprehension that perpetrators of such atrocities are likely to threaten and intimidate their victims and prevent or obstruct them in the prosecution of these offenders, if the offenders are allowed to avail of anticipatory bail as pointed out in the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Act. In these circumstances, if anticipatory bail is not made available to persons who commit such offences, such a denial cannot be considered as unreasonable or violative of Article 14, as these offences form a distinct class by themselves and cannot be compared with other offences. (Para 6)

The submission that while Section 438 is available for graver offences under the IPC, it is not available for even "minor offences" under the Act is not justified. The offences which are enumerated under Section 3 are offences which, to say the least, denigrate members of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes in the eyes of society and prevent them from leading a life of dignity and self-respect. Such offences are committed to humiliate and subjugate members of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes with a view to keeping them in a state of servitude. These offences constitute a separate class and cannot be compared with offences under the IPC. (Para 10)

Article 21 enshrines the right to live with human dignity, a precious right to which every human being is entitled; those who have been, for centuries, denied this right, more so. Looking to the cautious recommendation of the Law Commission on the basis of which Section 438 was incorporated in the Code, the power to grant anticipatory bail is conferred only on a Court of Session or the High Court. Also, anticipatory bail cannot be granted as a matter of right. It is essentially a statutory right conferred long after the coming into force of the Constitution. It cannot be considered as an essential ingredient of Article 21 of the Constitution. And its non-application to a certain special category of offences cannot be considered as violative of Article 21. (Para 7)

Looking to the historical background relating to the practice of 'untouchability' and the social attitudes which lead to the commission of such offences against Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, there is justification for an apprehension that if the benefit of anticipatory bail is made available to the persons who are alleged to have committed such offences, there is every likelihood of their misusing their liberty while on anticipatory bail to terrorise their victims and to prevent a proper investigation. It is in this context that Section 18 has been incorporated in the Act. It cannot be considered in any manner violative of Article 21. (Para 9). State of M.P. v. Ram Kishna Balothia, (1995) 3 SCC 221: 1995 SCC (Cri) 439: AIR 1995 SC 1198: (1995) 1 KLT 535: 1995 MPLJ 303: 1995 Cri LJ 2076.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Jeevan Reddy and Sujata V. Manohar, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-2-1995]

Jai Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1993 Raj 177, approved

[6684] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Scope — Grant of, for offences under taxing statute — Grant of, for offences under Ss. 132, 133, 135 and 135-A of the Customs Act — Special/statutory power of arrest under S. 104 and objective considerations of protection against arrest and detention, held, have to be kept in view while deciding the correctness or otherwise of anticipatory bail — High Court directed the Customs Authorities that if any non-bailable offence is found against the accused persons they shall not be arrested without ten days' prior notice to them — Such blanket order of bail, held, can never be allowed in a society governed by the rule of law — Customs Act, 1962, Ss. 104, 132, 133, 135 and 135-A — Power of arrest under S. 104 of Customs Act

In proceedings initiated by the Customs Department under the Customs Act, 1962 (the Act), summons were issued to Respondents 1 and 2 for preparing fake shipping bills and obtaining export benefits under Section 80-HHC of the Income Tax Act, 1961. In view of the non-cooperation by the respondents, complaints were filed by the Customs Authorities for commission of offences punishable under Sections 174 and 175 IPC. Applications for anticipatory bail before the Sessions Court were dismissed.

However, the High Court by the impugned order held that since the petitioner-accused had only been summoned under Section 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 to give their evidence in the inquiry, the anticipatory bail applications were premature. The High Court, therefore, directed the respondent-accused to appear before the Customs Authorities concerned. Again, the High Court also directed the Customs Authorities that if any non-bailable offence was found against the accused persons they would not be arrested without ten days' prior notice to them.

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

No such order could have been passed nor a direction as to prior notice before effecting arrest could have been issued by the High Court. Firstly, the order passed by the High Court was a blanket one and sought to grant protection to the respondents in respect of any non-bailable offence. Neither Section 438 CrPC nor any other provision of the Code authorises the grant of blanket anticipatory bail for offences not yet committed or with regard to accusations not so far levelled. Secondly, it illegally obstructed, interfered and curtailed the authority of the Customs Officers from exercising their statutory power of arrest by imposing a condition of giving ten days' prior notice, a condition not warranted by law. There is no question of release on bail unless a person is arrested and, therefore, it is only on arrest that the order granting anticipatory bail becomes operative. The respondents were only summoned under Section 108 of the Customs Act, 1962 (the Act) for recording of their statements.

(17) S. 438 and Special Statutes (contd.)

The High Court was conscious and mindful of that fact. It, therefore, held that the applications for anticipatory bail, in the circumstances, were premature. They were, accordingly, disposed of by directing the respondents to appear before the Customs Authorities. The High Court, however, did not stop there. It stated that if the Customs Authorities found any non-bailable offence against the applicants (the respondents herein), they would not be arrested without ten days' prior notice to them. The order passed by the High Court to the extent of directions issued to the Customs Authorities is, therefore, liable to be set aside. (Paras 14, 33, 45, 23 and 44)

The safeguards/considerations against the abuse of power and the statutory character of Section 104 of the Customs Act, 1962 have to be kept in view while deciding the correctness or otherwise of the directions issued by a Single Judge of the High Court. On the one hand the power to arrest a person by a Customs Officer under Section 104 of the Act is statutory in character and cannot be interfered with, and on the other hand, the power to arrest is circumscribed by objective considerations and cannot be exercised on whims, caprice or fancy of the officer. Such power of arrest can be exercised only in those cases where the Customs Officer has "reason to believe" that a person has been guilty of an offence punishable under Sections 132, 133, 135 or 135-A of the Act. Section 104 of the Act also obliges the Customs Officer to inform the person arrested of the grounds of arrest as soon as may be. The law requires such person to be produced before a Magistrate without unnecessary delay. "Blanket" order of bail may amount to or result in an invitation to commit an offence or a passport to carry on criminal activities or to afford a shield against any and all types of illegal operations, which, can never be allowed in a society governed by the rule of law. (Paras 36 to 38 and 22). Union of India v. Padam Narain Aggarwal, (2008) 13 SCC 305: (2008) 231 ELT 397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-10-2008]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on [6685] — S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Violation of FERA — Court not justified in granting anticipatory bail unless the accused alleges and establishes that he is being unnecessarily harassed by the investigating agency — Grant of anticipatory bail on ground that the accused was available for interrogation but the prosecution failed to avail of that opportunity, held, improper. Enforcement Officer, TED v. Bher Chand Tikaji Bora, (1999) 5 SCC 720: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1045.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-1999]

Dukhishyam Benupani, Asstt. Director, Enforcement Directorate (FERA) v. Arun Kumar Bajoria, (1998) 1 SCC 52: 1998 SCC (Cri) 261, followed

[6686] — Ss. 438 & 439(2) and 156 — Anticipatory bail — FERA violation involving huge amount — Grant of anticipatory bail by High Court fixing time and places for interrogation, held, uncalled for — Considerations for pre-arrest bail different from post-arrest bail — Plea that the accused made himself available for interrogation for several days after grant of anticipatory bail or that he is a sick person not sustainable — City Sessions Judge erred in granting anticipatory bail ignoring the fact that the High Court had repeatedly refused to grant any relief to the accused — In view of seriousness of allegations and magnitude of amount involved order granting anticipatory bail is liable to be quashed — FERA, 1973, S. 40

In the present case it is rather unusual that when the aggrieved party approached the High Court challenging the order passed by a subordinate court the High Court made the position worse for the aggrieved party. The officials of the Directorate are now injuncted by the Division Bench from arresting the respondent and the time and places for carrying out the interrogations were also fixed by the Division Bench. Such kind of supervision on the enquiry or investigation under a statute is uncalled for. Such type of interference would impede the even course of enquiry or investigation into the serious allegations now pending. For what purpose the Division Bench made such interference with the functions of the statutory authorities, which they are bound to exercise under law, is not discernible from the order under challenge. It is not the function of the court to monitor investigation processes so long as such investigation does not transgress any provision of law. It must be left to the investigating agency to decide the venue, the timings and the questions and the manner of putting such questions to persons involved in such offences. A blanket order fully insulating a person from arrest would make his interrogation a mere ritual.

Considerations to be weighed with the court while dealing with a prayer for pre-arrest bail order are materially different from a post-arrest bail application.

Plea that the respondent made himself available for interrogation for several days after being armed with an order preventing his arrest is not of much relevance now because that is not an aspect which can be taken advantage of by the respondent in this case. Similarly, the plea that the respondent is a sick person is not enough to claim pre-arrest bail order.

In view of the allegations against the respondent any further loss of time would further impair the effectiveness of the enquiry and/or investigation into those allegations. Considering the nature and seriousness of the allegations as well as largeness of the amount involved. The order of the City Sessions Judge should not remain alive. Dukhishyam Benupani v. Arun Kumar Bajoria, (1998) 1 SCC 52: 1998 SCC (Cri) 261: AIR 1998 SC 696: (1998) 91 Comp Cas 413: 1998 Cri LJ 841.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-1997]

[6687] — Ss. 438 & 439 and Sch. I, Pt. II — Offences Railway Property Act — All the offences under said Act, held, are not bailable — Discretion to decide whether an offence is bailable or not is with the officer concerned, which is statutorily prescribed — View of the High Court to the contrary clearly erroneous — Such discretion is controlled by the prescription regarding forming of opinion as regards sufficiency of material or otherwise — Further held, except for S. 5 of the Act, Sch. I of CrPC applies, which makes all offences punishable with imprisonment for three years and upwards but not more than seven years, cognizable and non-bailable — Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, Ss. 8, 3 and 5

The issue in the instant case was whether an application under Section 438 CrPC could be filed in respect of offences contemplated under the provisions of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966. The Single Judge of the Gauhati High Court, after referring to Section 8 of the 1966 Act, held that the offences under the said Act were bailable. The Union of India challenged the said judgment by filing the instant appeal. It submitted that the High Court had not kept in view the provisions contained in Section 8 in the proper perspective. The High Court erroneously held that the accused had a right to get bail provided he was willing to offer surety/security. The High Court observed that only when the accused is not in a position to provide security or surety then only he can be sent to the Magistrate having jurisdiction.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Under proviso to Section 8(2) three situations are envisaged. Two of the three situations are relatable to clause (a) of the proviso. If the officer of the force is of the opinion that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion against the accused person he shall: (a) either admit him to bail to appear before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, or (b) forward him in custody to such Magistrate. There are two options given to the officer to form opinion i.e. whether there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion against the accused person. It nowhere deals with the right of the accused to get bail. The third category is contemplated by clause (b) of the proviso. This category deals with a case where there is absence of sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion. In such case the officer concerned has the power to release the accused person on his executing bonds. Therefore, the High Court was not justified in holding that all the offences under the Act are bailable. Such view is contrary to the provisions contained in Section 8 of the Act. (Para 8)

The High Court's interpretation that the direction that can be given by the officer having jurisdiction of the case is a corollary of the accused's right to get bail is clearly erroneous. It has been observed that the discretion to decide whether the offence is bailable or not cannot be left to the discretion of the officer. The view overlooks the clear language of the proviso and the jurisdiction to exercise the discretion is statutorily provided. The exercise of such discretion is also controlled by the prescription regarding forming of opinion as regards sufficiency of material or otherwise. (Para 6)

The controversy can be looked at from another angle. In Schedule I of CrPC, offences are classified. Part I deals with offences under the Indian Penal Code and Part II deals with "classification of offences against other laws". Undisputedly, the present case is covered by Part II. While classifying offences on the basis of punishments prescribed for offences punishable with imprisonment for three years and upwards but not more than seven years, it is provided that the offences shall be cognizable and non-bailable. However, an exception has been made by Section 5 of the Act, making the offence non-cognizable. Except that exception, Schedule I of CrPC applies. Under Section 3 of the Act for the first offence the imprisonment may extend up to five years and for subsequent offences also similar term is fixed. Only for special and adequate reasons to be recorded the minimum can be one year and two years respectively. (Para 7). Union of India v. State of Assam, (2004) 7 SCC 474: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1951.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Prakash Prabhakar Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2004]

Section 439 — Special powers of Sessions Court and High Court re Bail

— S. 439 See also S. 498, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1274 et seq. in Vol. 2

Synopsis

(1)	Generally	539
(2)	Maintainability of application	541
(3)	Grounds for bail — Generally	544
(4)	Grounds for bail in murder cases	548
(5)	Grounds for bail — Particular offences	552
(6)	Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application	554
(7)	Temporary/Interim bail	561
(8)	Successive/repeated bail applications	562
(9)	Conditions for bail	564
(10)	Matters at large/Orders/ Directions that may be passed	565
(11)	Cancellation of bail	566
(12)	Cancellation of bail after charge-sheet filed: Ss. 439(2), 437(5) and S. 167(2)	580
(13)	Appeal/Remedy	581
(14)	Interference by Supreme Court	581
(15)	Fresh consideration of application on remand	584
(16)	CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes	585
(17)	Other issues	594

— S. 439 See Ss. 4 and 439

See also Ss. 157 & 155 and 41 to 44 & 46 and Ss. 437 to 439

See also Ss. 167(2), 57, 437 and 439

See also Ss. 167(2) proviso, 437 and 439

See also Ss. 231, 242, 244, 309 and 437 & 439

See also Ss. 362 and 439

See also Ss. 389, 437 and 439

See also Ss. 389 and 439

See also Ss. 436 to 450

See also Ss. 436 to 439 and 446-A

See also Ss. 436, 437, 438, 439 and 482

See also Ss. 436, 437 and 439

See also Ss. 437 to 439

See also Ss. 437, 436-A and 439

See also Ss. 437, 438 and 439

See also Ss. 437, 438(2) and 439

See also Ss. 437 & 439

See also Ss. 437, 439 and 102

See also Ss. 437, 439 and 167

See also Ss. 437, 439 and 173

See also Ss. 437, 439, 300 and Chs. XXIX (Ss. 372 to 394) and XXX (Ss. 395 to 405)

See also Ss. 437, 439, 438 and 389

See also Ss. 437, 439 and 482

See also Ss. 438 and 437 & 439

See also Ss. 438, 437 & 439 and 41 to 44 & 46

See also Ss. 438 & 439

See also Ss. 438, 439 and 46(1)

See also Ss. 438 & 439 and Sch. I, Pt. II

See also Ss. 482 and 439

See also Ss. 482, 439, 438 and 407

— S. 439(1) See Ss. 437 and 439(1) & (2)

See also Ss. 437(1), (4) & (5) and 439(1) & (2)

See also Ss. 437(1) & (4) and 439(1)

See also Ss. 437(1) and 439(1)

— S. 439(2) See Ss. 167(2) proviso, 437(5), 439(2), 57 and 173

See also Ss. 167(2) proviso (a), 309(2), 437(5), 439(2), 441, 442(1) and 444

See also Ss. 436 to 450

See also Ss. 436 & 437(5) and 439(2)

See also Ss. 437 and 439(1) & (2)

See also Ss. 437 and 439(2)

See also Ss. 437(1), (4) & (5) and 439(1) & (2)

See also Ss. 437(1) & 439(2) and 300

See also Ss. 437(5) & 439(2)

See also Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and 167(2) proviso

See also Ss. 437(5), 439(2) and 167(2) proviso (a)

See also Ss. 438 and 439(2)

See also Ss. 438 & 439(2) and 156

(1) Generally

[6688] — S. 439 — Bail — Right of appellant to pray for, as and when he intends to — High Court cannot debar him from exercising his right for any period (one year in this case) — High Court may or may not entertain the bail petition but it cannot prevent an accused from seeking him release on bail. Manjoor Khan v. State of Bihar, (1998) 8 SCC 368: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1541.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1997]

[6689] — S. 439 — Grant of bail — Liberty of person accused of an offence vis-à-vis interest of society — Balancing of — Held, liberty of an individual is precious and is to be zealously protected by courts — Nonetheless, such a protection cannot be absolute in every situation — Valuable right of liberty of an individual and interest of society in general has to be balanced — Liberty of a person accused of an offence would depend upon exigencies of the case — It is possible that in a given situation, collective interest of community may outweigh right of personal liberty of individual concerned (Para 15). Masroor v. State of U.P., (2009) 14 SCC 286: (2009) 3 CTC 90 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415, relied on [6690] — S. 439 — Bail — Role of, in protection of right to personal liberty — Essence of function involved in grant of bail, and measures to ensure proper performance thereof — Held, exercise of said jurisdiction requires maintaining of perfect balance between two conflicting interests viz. sanctity of individual liberty and interest of society — Hence, it should be entrusted to judicial officers with some experience and good track record — High Courts advised to periodically organise (through their Judicial Academies) workshops, symposiums, seminars and lectures for orientation of judicial officers and police officers in respect of importance of, and method of balancing of, said conflicting interests — Direction given for periodical evaluation of performance of judicial officers concerned on the basis of cases decided by them — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 22. (Paras 120 and 121). Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on

[6691] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Bail application — Order passed by Administrative Judge of High Court during inspection to Sessions Judge to consider bail application of accused and enlarge him on bail — Propriety — High Court's power of superintendence and control over subordinate courts — Scope of — Whether it authorises the "Inspecting Judges" of High Court to transact any judicial work which is in the domain of subordinate courts — Administrative Judge of High Court during the course of inspection passing order to Sessions Judge to consider the bail application of appellant and enlarge him on bail — Propriety of — Held, power under Art. 227 is to be exercised most sparingly and only in appropriate cases in order to keep the subordinate courts within the bounds of their authority — Powers under Arts. 227 and 235 not to be exercised to interfere with judicial functions of subordinate courts — Protection of independence of subordinate courts in the discharge of their judicial functions, emphasised — Held, under the aforesaid articles the High Court cannot direct the subordinate court to pass a judicial order in a particular manner as that would amount to interfering with the independence of subordinate judiciary — In this view, stating the powers and functions of Inspecting Judge, held, a High Court Judge during the course of inspection has no power to pass any judicial order in individual cases pending in subordinate courts — During inspection he cannot pass any order on interim applications, such as bail petitions or transfer applications or applications for interim injunction, howsoever justified they may be — If any bail application is received by Inspecting Judge, the proper course would be to send the said application without commenting on merits of case to the court concerned to pass appropriate orders — Constitution of India, Arts. 227, 235 & 50

The appellant was arrested and remanded to judicial custody in a case under the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act and IPC. The appellant moved an application for bail, but the same was rejected. The appellant moved another bail application on 24-4-2003 before the Sessions Judge, which was fixed for hearing on 5-5-2003. Meanwhile, on 29-4-2003 the Administrative Judge of the High Court concerned came for annual inspection to the District and Sessions Court concerned. The said Judge also visited jail as part of the inspection programme. The appellant moved an application for bail during the course of inspection. The Inspecting Judge noticed the police officers as representative of the prosecution, and since they had no objection to the granting of bail to the appellant, the said Judge, considering that the co-accused had been enlarged on bail and the appellant was in jail for the last seven months, passed an order directing the Sessions Judge to look into the application of the appellant and enlarge him on bail as his trial was likely to take some time before it was concluded. Pursuant to the said order, the appellant was released on bail by the Sessions Judge. Thereafter, on a complaint being made to the Chief Justice of the High Court alleging mala fides on the part of the Sessions Judge in granting bail to the appellant, the Chief Justice called for the proceedings and directed that the entire matter be placed before the very same Administrative Judge on the judicial side. The de facto complainant reiterated her allegation and sought for cancellation of bail granted to the appellant. The Administrative Judge held that while passing the order of bail, the Sessions Judge had not discussed the matter on merit and, therefore, the said order was set aside. Hence, the present appeal.

(1) Special powers of Sessions Court and High Court re Bail — Generally (contd.)

Before the Supreme Court it was submitted that the Judges of the High Court are vested with the power of superintendence and control over all courts and tribunals subordinate to the High Court under Article 227, and as part of such constitutional power, the Inspecting Judges have the right and duty to consider the bail applications during inspection. It was also contended that the power of superintendence and control over the subordinate courts is conferred on the High Court under Article 235 of the Constitution and therefore the Inspecting Judge was fully justified under certain circumstances to entertain the bail petitions or transfer applications and direct the District Judges or other courts to pass appropriate orders.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

The power of superintendence over all the subordinate courts and tribunals is given to the High Court under Article 227 of the Constitution. The said power is both of administrative and judicial nature and it could be exercised suo motu also. However, such power of superintendence does not imply that the High Courts can influence the subordinate judiciary to pass any order or judgment in a particular manner. While invoking the provisions of Article 227 the High Court would exercise such powers most sparingly and only in appropriate cases in order to keep the subordinate courts within the bounds of their authority. It cannot intervene in the judicial functions of the lower judiciary. The independence of the subordinate courts in the discharge of their judicial functions is of paramount importance, just as the independence of the superior courts in the discharge of their judicial functions is. It is the members of the subordinate judiciary who directly interact with the parties in the course of proceedings of the case and, therefore, it is no less important that their independence should be protected effectively to the satisfaction of the litigants. The independence of the judiciary has been considered as a part of the basic structure of the Constitution and such independence is postulated not only from the executive, but also from all other sources of pressure. (Paras 10 and 14)

In respect of Article 235 also, the powers of control to be exercised thereunder do not extend to interfering with the judicial functions of the subordinate courts. By virtue of the power under Article 235 the High Court cannot direct the presiding officer of the subordinate court to pass a judicial order in a particular manner as that would certainly amount to interfering with the independence of the subordinate judiciary. (Para 15)

In the course of inspection, the High Court Judge is required to examine whether the courts are functioning within the norms laid down by the High Court. Mostly the inspection is to be confined to the administrative functioning of the courts and its officers. If any member of the administrative staff is not doing the work assigned to him or is causing any delay in the process of administration of justice, the Inspecting Judge can give proper direction and see that the courts function smoothly. But under no circumstances, the Inspecting Judge, as part of his administrative duty enjoys the power to interfere with the judicial functions of the subordinate courts in individual cases. In the course of inspection, a High Court Judge cannot pass any order on interim applications, such as bail petitions or transfer applications or applications for interim injunction, howsoever justified they may be. Orders on bail applications are passed under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure or under various other enactments, which provide for grant of bail and such orders are passed as part of the judicial work. The Inspecting Judge is not supposed to pass any judicial order in individual cases in the course of inspection. While on inspection, he is not supposed to perform any judicial work. Of course, he can give administrative directions to the presiding officer or to any of the subordinate staff, if such directions are pertinent in the context of administration of justice. Except giving general directions regarding any matter concerning administration of justice, any interference in the judicial functions of the presiding officer would amount to interference with the independence of the subordinate judiciary. (Paras 16 and 17)

Therefore, even if any application for bail is received by the Inspecting Judge, the proper course is to send the application to the court concerned to pass appropriate orders. When the Inspecting Judge visits the jail, it is quite likely that so many inmates of the jail may file petitions before the Judge concerned. It is the duty of the Judge to see whether there is any merit in any of these petitions. If any application for bail is received, he can very well send it to the court concerned without making any comments on the merits of the case. On the contrary, if the learned Inspecting Judge passes any order in such matter, he would only be usurping the powers of the courts authorised to pass such orders. (Para 19). Jasbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 8 SCC 294: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 470.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-10-2006]

Waryam Singh v. Amarnath, AIR 1954 SC 215; Trimbak Gangadhar Telang v. Ramchandra Ganesh Bhide, (1977) 2 SCC 437; Mohd. Yunus v. Mohd. Mustaqim, (1983) 4 SCC 566; State v. Navjot Sandhu, (2003) 6 SCC 641: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1545; S.P. Gupta v. Union of India, 1981 Supp SCC 87; Alok Kumar Roy v. Dr. S.N. Sarma, AIR 1968 SC 453, relied on

(2) Maintainability of application

[6692] — S. 439 — 'Custody' — Meaning of — Held, includes physical surrender by the accused before the court and submission to its directions — CrPC, 1898, S. 498

In the context of S. 439, 'custody' is physical control or at least physical presence of the accused in court coupled with submission to the jurisdiction and orders of the court. A person is in custody within the meaning of S. 439 when he is in duress either because he is held by the investigating agency or other police or allied authority or is under the control of the court having been remanded by judicial order, or having offered himself to the court's jurisdiction and submitted to its orders by physical presence. In the present case the accused, did physically submit before the Sessions Judge and therefore, the jurisdiction to grant bail arose. Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 1980 SC 785: 1980 Cri LJ 426: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 573.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1980]

Affirmed in State of Haryana v. Dinesh Kumar, (2008) 3 SCC 222

[6693] — Ss. 439 and 438 — Application for bail under S. 439 — Maintainability — Condition precedent — Held, accused must be in custody in connection with non-bailable offence — "Custody" — Meaning of — Person, who had been granted anticipatory bail under S. 438 for a limited period, has to move the regular court for bail under S. 439 within that period — If bail is not granted within that period, he has to surrender as required in law so that his application under S. 439 can be taken up for disposal — High Court cannot, during pendency of application under S. 439, by a blanket order extend the ad interim anticipatory bail arrangement so as to enable the accused to obtain bail under S. 439 — Observation of Supreme Court in K.L. Verma v. State, (1998) 9 SCC 348 that even after expiry of the limited period of anticipatory bail, a few days can be granted to enable the accused to move the higher court, held, per incuriam being without reference to the requirements of S. 439 — On facts held, the protection given by the High Court to accused-respondent by allowing his "application of ad interim anticipatory bail" while his application under S. 439 was pending, unsustainable

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Unless a person is in custody, an application for bail under Section 439 would not be maintainable. There is no question of bail unless a person is arrested in connection with a non-bailable offence by the police. (Paras 15 and 9)

He who is under the control of the court or is in the physical hold of an officer with coercive power, is in custody for the purpose of Section 439. The word is of elastic semantics but its core meaning is that the law has taken control of the person. (Para 16)

Since the expression "custody", though used in various provisions of the Code, including Section 439, has not been defined in the Code, it has to be understood in the setting in which it is used and the provisions contained in Section 437 which relate to jurisdiction of the Magistrate to release an accused on bail under certain circumstances which can be characterised as "in custody" in a generic sense. The expression "custody" as used in Section 439, must be taken to be a compendious expression referring to the events on the happening of which the Magistrate can entertain a bail petition of an accused. Section 437 envisages, inter alia, that the Magistrate may release an accused on bail, if such accused appears before the Magistrate. Such appearance before the Magistrate must be physical appearance and the consequential surrender to the jurisdiction of the Court of the Magistrate. (Para 17)

As observed in Salauddin case, (1996) 1 SCC 667, the protection in terms of Section 438 is for a limited duration during which the regular court has to be moved for bail. Obviously, such bail is bail in terms of Section 439, mandating the applicant to be in custody. Otherwise, the distinction between orders under Sections 438 and 439 shall be rendered meaningless and redundant. The distinction between the two orders is that the latter is passed after arrest whereas the former is passed in anticipation of arrest and becomes effective at the very moment of arrest. (Paras 22 and 9)

(2) Maintainability of application (contd.)

Where in a case the decision has been rendered without reference to statutory bars, the same cannot have any precedential value and shall have to be treated as having been rendered per incuriam. The present case stands on a par, if not, on a better footing. The provisions of Section 439 do not appear to have been taken note of. (Para 20)

The protection given to Respondent 2 by the High Court while the application under Section 439 of the Code is pending is clearly unsustainable. Respondent 2 should surrender to custody as required in law so that his application under Section 439 can be taken up for disposal. The High Court will take up the matter for disposal in accordance with law immediately after Respondent 2 is in custody as required under Section 439. (Para 24). Nirmal Jeet Kaur v. State of M.P., (2004) 7 SCC 558: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1989: (2004) 3 KLT 391.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-2004]

Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508, relied on [6694] — S. 439 — Bail — Held, unless a person is in custody, an application for bail is not maintainable (Paras 8, 12, 13, 18, 20, 21 and 22). Sunita Devi v. State of Bihar, (2005) 1 SCC 608: 2005 SCC (Cri) 435: AIR 2005 SC 498: (2004) 115 DLT 517: (2005) 2 Guj LR 1096: (2005) 1 KLT 748: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 534.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2004]

Salauddin Abdulsamad Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 1 SCC 667: 1996 SCC (Cri) 198; Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508; Nirmal Jeet Kaur v. State of M.P., (2004) 7 SCC 558: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1989, relied on [6695] — S. 439 — Bail application — Interim bail in vogue — Effect — Rejection of, by High Court on ground that it was not maintainable as the petitioner was not in custody — Propriety of — When bail application was filed petitioner was in custody as he was then on interim bail — His application could have been considered on merits — Therefore held, High Court's order not sustainable — Matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh on merits (Paras 4 and 5). Kanaksinh Mohansinh Mangrola v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 9 SCC 540: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 224.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-2006]

[6696] — Ss. 439 and 46(1) & (2) — Arrest and custody — What are — Voluntary appearance of accused before Magistrate and obtaining bail, if amounts to — Precondition for applying for bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 323/324/34 and 148/149/307/325 — Constitution of India — Arts. 20 and 21

D, the respondent in first of the present two appeals and L and B, the appellants in the other appeal applied for appointment as Constable-Drivers under Haryana Police. The application forms contained a query as to whether the applicant had ever been arrested. D answered the said question in the negative. On verification it was found that D had been arrested in connection with a case arising out of an FIR registered under Sections 323/324/34 IPC. In that case, he was ultimately acquitted by the Magistrate. Moreover, he had not surrendered to the police but had voluntarily appeared before the Magistrate and had prayed for bail and was released on bail. The Department took the view that in answering the said question in the application form in the negative D had concealed the said facts. Accordingly, D was denied appointment.

D then approached the High Court contending that since in the said case, he had been granted bail without having been actually arrested he could not be said to have suppressed any information by replying in the negative the said question. Upholding his contention, the High Court directed the Department to issue an appointment letter to D. The Department then filed one of the present appeals by special leave.

In the other appeal, L and B had been involved in a criminal case registered with the police under Sections 148/149/307/325/323 IPC but they had been subsequently acquitted of the said charges. In regard to another FIR under Sections 323/324/34, they appeared before the Magistrate and were released on their personal bonds without being placed under arrest or being taken into custody. They were also denied appointment. A coordinate Bench of the same High Court dismissed their writ petitions without examining the question as to whether they had actually been arrested or not. It held that L and B had withheld important information regarding their prosecution in a criminal case though ultimately they were acquitted. L and B then filed the second of the present two appeals by special leave.

The common question arising in both the appeals before the Supreme Court was whether the appearance of the applicants before the Magistrate in the said manner and their release without being taken into formal custody, could amount to "arrest".

The Department contended that when the persons concerned appeared before the Magistrates and prayed for bail, it must be understood that they had surrendered to the custody of the court, as otherwise, the provisions of Section 439 of the Code would not have had application. That it did not matter as to whether the accused persons had been arrested and detained in custody by the police or not.

On the other hand, D and L and B contended that although technically the appearance of the accused before the Magistrate might amount to surrender to judicial custody, it was on a layman's understanding of the principle of "arrest" and "custody" that prompted them to mention that they had never been arrested.

Upholding the contentions raised by the Department, but in the peculiar circumstances of the case, dismissing the Department's appeal and allowing the appeal of the applicants, the Supreme Court

Held :

The expression "arrest" has neither been defined in CrPC nor in IPC or any other enactment dealing with criminal offences. However, from Sections 46(1) & (2) CrPC this much is clear that in order to make an arrest the police officer or other person making the same shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be submission to the custody by word or action. Similarly, the expression "custody" has also not been defined in CrPC. (Paras 13 to 15)

The Department is right in its submission that unless a person accused of an offence is in custody, he cannot move the court for bail under Section 439 CrPC, which provides for release on bail of any person accused of an offence and in custody. The precondition, therefore, for applying the provisions of Section 439 CrPC is that a person who is an accused must be in custody and his movements must have been restricted before he can move for bail. (Para 25)

In the instant case the accused persons had appeared before the Magistrates concerned and on applying for bail were granted bail without being taken into formal custody, which appears to have swayed one of the Benches of the High Court to take a liberal view and to hold that no arrest had actually been effected. The said view is incorrect as it goes against the very grain of Sections 46 and 439 CrPC. (Para 26)

Sections 107 and 108 of the Customs Act do not contemplate immediate arrest of a person being summoned in connection with an enquiry, but only contemplate surrendering to the custody of the Customs Officer which could subsequently lead to arrest and detention. In such context the Full Bench of the Madras High Court returned a finding in Roshan Beevi case, 1984 Cri LJ 134, that "custody" and "arrest" are not synonymous terms and observed that it is true that in every arrest there is a custody but not vice versa. A custody may amount to "arrest" in certain cases, but not in all cases. The interpretation of "arrest" and "custody" rendered by the Full Bench in Roshan Beevi case may be relevant in the context of Sections 107 and 108 of the Customs Act where summons in respect of an enquiry may amount to "custody" but not to "arrest", but such custody could subsequently materialise into arrest. The position is different as far as proceedings in the court are concerned in relation to enquiry into offences under the Penal Code and other criminal enactments. In the latter set of cases, in order to obtain the benefit of bail an accused has to surrender to the custody of the court or the police authorities before he can be granted the benefit thereunder. (Paras 24, 20 and 27)

It is, therefore, held that the views expressed by the High Court in D's writ petition regarding arrest were incorrect, while the views expressed in the writ petitions filed by L & B correctly interpreted the meaning of the expressions "arrest" and "custody". However, how far the same would apply in the ultimate analysis relating to their answer in their application forms is another matter altogether. (Para 30)

The reasoning given in D's case in that context is a possible view and does not call for interference under Article 136 of the Constitution. Conversely, the decision rendered in the writ petitions filed by L and B has to be reversed to be in line with the decision in D's case. When the question as to what constitutes "arrest" has for long engaged the attention of different High Courts as also the Supreme Court, it may not be altogether unreasonable to expect a layman to construe that he had never been arrested on his appearing before the court and being granted bail immediately. The position would have been different, had the person concerned not been released on bail. In the facts of the present cases, the benefit of a mistaken impression, rather than that of deliberate and wilful misrepresentation and concealment of facts, has to be given to the appellants in the second of the two appeals as well. (Paras 31 and 32). State of Haryana v. Dinesh Kumar, (2008) 3 SCC 222: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 722: AIR 2008 SC 1083: (2008) 63 AIC 265 (SC): (2008) 2 SLR 331: (2008) 2 LLN 120.

(2) Maintainability of application (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-2008]

Roshan Beevi v. Jt. Secy. to the Govt. of T.N., 1984 Cri LJ 134 (Mad), limited

Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508, affirmed

State of U.P. v. Deoman Upadhyaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125, relied on

Halsbury's Laws of England (4th Edn.), Vol. 11, Para 99, referred to [6697] — Ss. 439 and 46(1) & (2) — Examination or summoning of person under Ss. 107 and 108, Customs Act, 1962 by Customs office — If amounts to "arrest" or "custody" — Distinction between the two — Observation by Full Bench of Madras High Court in Roshan Beevi case, 1984 Cri LJ 134 that "custody" and "arrest" are not synonymous and that in every arrest there is custody but not vice versa — Applicability of — Held, it may be relevant in the context of Ss. 107 and 108 where summons in respect of an enquiry may amount to "custody" but not to "arrest" although such custody can subsequently materialise into arrest — However, the position is different in respect of proceedings in court in relation to enquiry into offences under the Penal Code and other criminal enactments as in such cases, in order to obtain the benefit of bail the accused has first to surrender to the custody of the court or police authorities — Customs Act, 1962, Ss. 107 and 108. State of Haryana v. Dinesh Kumar, (2008) 3 SCC 222: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 722: AIR 2008 SC 1083: (2008) 63 AIC 265 (SC): (2008) 2 SLR 331: (2008) 2 LLN 120.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-2008]

(3) Grounds for bail — Generally

See also Section 439, '(4) Grounds for bail in murder cases', and

'(5) Grounds for bail — Particular offences', below

[6698] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Grounds and considerations, stated and considered — Delay in trial, held, is one of the important factors for consideration while granting bail — Respondent, a dentist applied stitches to one of the accused but there being no prima facie proof of respondent being involved in crime committed by all the other accused — Respondent having spent 66 days in custody and trial having not yet commenced, bail granted by High Court, held, sustainable — S. 43-D(5) proviso, 1967 Act not attracted as respondent was merely a member of an alleged illegal/terrorist organisation which had neither been declared so nor found to be so — Prima facie only offence that could be levelled against respondent was that under S. 202 IPC which too has to be proved beyond reasonable doubt during trial — Even a dentist can apply stitches during emergency — Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967, S. 43-D(5) proviso — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 136

Dismissing the appeal against grant of bail by the High Court,

Held :

There is no reason why the respondent should be denied bail. There is no prima facie proof that the respondent was involved in the crime. Prima facie the only offence that can be levelled against the respondent is that under Section 202 IPC, that is, of omitting to give information of the crime to the police, and this offence has also to be proved beyond reasonable doubt. Section 202 is a bailable offence. (Paras 15, 8 and 9)

There is no evidence as yet to prove that PFI is a terrorist organisation, and hence the respondent cannot be penalised merely for belonging to PFI. Moreover, even assuming that PFI is an illegal organisation, it has yet to be considered whether all members of the organisation can be automatically held to be guilty. In a democratic country like ours there is a distinction between an active "knowing" membership and passive, merely nominal membership in a subversive organisation. (Paras 10, 11 and 14)

Section 43-D(5) proviso, Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967 has not been violated. The case against the respondent is very different from that against the alleged assailants. There is no allegation that the respondent was one of the assailants. (Paras 8 and 3)

Delay in trial is one of the important factors for consideration while granting bail. The respondent has already spend 66 days in custody. A doctor incarcerated for a long period may end up like Dr. Manette in Charles Dicken's novel A Tale of Two Cities, who forgot his profession and even his name in the Bastille. If the accused is denied bail but is ultimately acquitted, who will restore so many years of his life spent in custody? Is Article 21 of the Constitution, which is the most basic of all the fundamental rights in our Constitution, not violated in such a case? (Para 15)

Just as it is the duty of a lawyer to defend an accused, so also it is the duty of a doctor to heal. Even a dentist can apply stitches in an emergency. Allegedly, the respondent, a dentist stitched the back of an assailant, which is not the job of a dentist. (Paras 9 and 3). State of Kerala v. Raneef, (2011) 1 SCC 784.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and Gyan Sudha Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-1-2011]

Scales v. United States, 6 L Ed 2d 782: 367 US 203 (1960), relied on

Elfbrandt v. Russell, 16 L Ed 2d 321: 384 US 11 (1965); Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 95 L Ed 817: 341 US 123 (1950), considered

Redaul Hussain Khan v. National Investigation Agency, (2010) 1 SCC 521: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 822; State of Maharashtra v. Dhanendra Shriram Bhurle, (2009) 11 SCC 541: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1480, distinguished

Charles Dicken: A Tale of Two Cities, referred to [6699] — S. 439 — Membership of alleged unlawful/terrorist organisation, neither declared to be so nor found to be so — Effect on question of bail. State of Kerala v. Raneef, (2011) 1 SCC 784.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and Gyan Sudha Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-1-2011]

Scales v. United States, 6 L Ed 2d 782: 367 US 203 (1960), relied on

Elfbrandt v. Russell, 16 L Ed 2d 321: 384 US 11 (1965); Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 95 L Ed 817: 341 US 123 (1950), considered

Redaul Hussain Khan v. National Investigation Agency, (2010) 1 SCC 521: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 822; State of Maharashtra v. Dhanendra Shriram Bhurle, (2009) 11 SCC 541: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1480, distinguished

Charles Dicken: A Tale of Two Cities, referred to

[6700] — S. 439 — Granting of bail — Satisfaction of court as to existence of grounds for believing that the accused is not guilty of committing the offence in question — A prima facie view of the court in respect of, held, has to be formed which must be based on very cogent material — Recovery of firearm, ammunition etc. from accused — Grant of bail by High Court doubting the alleged recovery — Propriety of — Said decision based on grounds that (i) there were discrepancies at various places in describing the firearm, and (ii) a person who, prior to recovery had objected before the Magistrate against the police custody by stating that the police would plant some incriminating material on him and would force a confession out of him, was not likely to make a confession and lead the police party to the discovery, held on facts, not proper — High Court's order set aside — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, Ss. 49(7) and 4

At the stage of granting bail, the court does not decide the merits of the matter. Of course, a prima facie view has to be formed in the court in order to satisfy itself that there are grounds for believing that the accused is not guilty of committing the offence he is charged with. However, such a prima facie view must be based on very cogent material. (Para 12)

The High Court stated that in one place the words "unlicensed revolver with ammunition and pamphlet" are used, in another place the words "unlicensed country-made pistol with ammunition and pamphlet" are used and in a third place the words "a country-made gun with two live ammunition of 0.410 Musket and a booklet in support of TNLA" have been used. It wrongly concluded that because of these discrepancies the non-existence of recovery was so probable that one could act on the supposition that the recovery did not exist. One must keep in mind that the articles recovered have been sent to the court and are in custody of the court. The first of the documents relied upon by the High Court was in Tamil language. The other documents are in English. Some police officer has translated it from Tamil to English. If some police officer wrongly translates the type of weapon one cannot conclude with any reasonable certainty that there was no recovery. Under Section 4 of POTA mere possession not just of an arm but also of an ammunition, is sufficient. Ammunition has also been allegedly recovered. There is no discrepancy in the description of the ammunition. Thus, at this stage, it is difficult to sustain the above conclusion of the High Court. (Paras 11 and 12)

Further, the statements (relating to objection to police custody) relied upon by the High Court, are given after the accused had been arrested and recoveries were made from him. They are also after the charge under POTA had been added. It is not unknown that persons who are charged or arrested make self-serving statement before the Magistrate with the intention of using those in court proceedings at a later stage. Therefore, at this stage, it would not be possible to conclude that no discovery would have been made at the instance of the accused. (Para 13). State of T.N. v. R.R. Gopal, (2003) 12 SCC 237.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2003]

[6701] — Ss. 439 and 437(2) — Bail — Grant of — Proper considerations — Held, nature of the alleged act of offence has to be considered

(3) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

The order of granting bail to the appellant was certainly vulnerable. The accused cannot take a plea while applying for bail that the person whom he killed was a hardened criminal. That certainly is not a factor which can be taken into account. The perversity as highlighted in Puran case, (2001) 6 SCC 338 can flow from the fact that irrelevant materials have been taken into consideration adding vulnerability to the order granting bail. The irrelevant materials should be of a substantial nature and not of a trivial nature. In the instant case, the trial court seems to have been swayed by the fact that S had shady reputation and criminal antecedents. That is not certainly a factor which is to be considered while granting bail. It is the nature of the acts of offence which ought to have been considered. (Paras 27 and 25). Dinesh M.N. (S.P.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 2008 SC 2318: 2008 Cri LJ 3008: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2310.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2008]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124, relied on [6702] — S. 439 — Grant of bail — Parameters to be kept in view while dealing with application for bail — Reasoned order — Necessity of — Reiterated, court considering bail application has to consider among other circumstances the following: (i) nature of accusation and severity of punishment in case of conviction and nature of supporting evidence, (ii) reasonable apprehension of tampering with witness or apprehension of threat to complainant, and (iii) prima facie satisfaction of court in support of charge — Herein, High Court granting bail to Respondent 2 without indicating any reasons — Unsustainability — Held, order of High Court set aside and matter remitted to it for consideration afresh for disposal by a reasoned order (Paras 4 to 6). Dhuk Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 11 SCC 369: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1382: (2009) 76 AIC 208 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-2-2009]

Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974, followed

Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohammad, (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669; Anil Kumar Tulsiyani v. State of U.P., (2006) 9 SCC 425: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 565; State v. Eslian, (2006) 9 SCC 785: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 399, relied on [6703] — Ss. 439, 437 and 389 — Bail in cases where a foreigner is involved, or where the offence is committed in a State adjoining the national frontiers — Duty of court — Held, in an offence of this nature, after grant of bail it becomes difficult to trace out the accused — Hence, courts should be circumspect in granting bail in cases of this nature — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 37 (Para 4). Union of India v. Abdul Momin, (2005) 13 SCC 144: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 130.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-10-2005]

[6704] — S. 439 — Bail — Entitlement to — Case mainly depending on confessions of appellant accused — Appellants in custody for more than 2 years — Allegation that appellants' firm receiving huge amounts from Dubai through hawala transactions and with full knowledge of the fact that the money received by them and handed over to the recipients was being used for terrorist activities — Case mainly depending upon confessions of appellants — Considering the confessions, the reports of the Review Committees and the provisions of S. 49, POTA and the clarification provided in PUCL v. Union of India, (2004) 9 SCC 580, held, case made out for grant of bail to appellants — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, Ss. 49(7) proviso, (6) & (9) (Paras 9 to 12). Kirtibhai Madhavlal Joshi v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 4 SCC 680: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 399: (2006) 3 Guj LR 1850.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-2006]

People's Union for Civil Liberties v. Union of India, (2004) 9 SCC 580: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1905, relied on

[6705] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Grounds and considerations — Bail granted on ground that appeal is likely to be heard in six months, held, is not a good ground

The impugned judgment of the High Court granting bail to the respondent-accused is set aside. He should be taken into custody forthwith. Bail was granted by the High Court for no good reason except by saying that the appeal is not likely to be heard in six months. If bail is granted on such a ground then bail will have to be granted in almost every case, even when the offence is heinous. Such a view cannot be approved. (Paras 9 and 8)

Despite the clear direction in Rajesh Ranjan Yadav case, (2007) 1 SCC 70 that no further bail application of the accused shall be entertained, the High Court granted bail to the respondent-accused. Said order of the High Court amounts to contempt of order of the Supreme Court. (Para 6). Rabindra Nath Singh v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2010) 6 SCC 417.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Markandey Katju and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-5-2010]

Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2007) 1 SCC 70: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 254, relied on [6706] — S. 439 — Bail — Considerations during grant of — Scope — Admissibility or otherwise of confessional statement and the effect of evidence already adduced by prosecution and the merit of evidence that might be adduced later, held, were all matters to be considered at the stage of trial — Hence, argument that High Court was justified in granting bail as prosecution failed to establish even a prima facie case against the accused because most of the witnesses already turned hostile and the alleged confession of co-accused was inadmissible, held, not acceptable (Para 19). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977: AIR 2004 SC 1866: 2004 Cri LJ 1796.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2004]

See also Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42

[6707] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Factors to be considered — Role of accused and period already undergone by him in jail — Consideration of — Allegation made against appellant (who was Assistant Superintendent of Central Prison) that he received illegal gratification for permitting and facilitating accused T to use mobile phone for his unlawful activities, to run his fake stamp business from the jail and also to celebrate a party within the jail premises — Appellant in jail for more than three years and four months — Trial likely to take a long time for completion — Held, having regard to the nature of involvement alleged and the role attributed to the appellant, and the period already spent by the appellant in jail, it was a fit case for grant of bail to the appellant — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7, 12 and S. 13(1)(d) r/w S. 13(2) — Karnataka Control of Organised Crimes Act, 2000 (1 of 2002), Ss. 3, 4 and 25 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 8). Nanjappa v. Union of India, (2007) 4 SCC 350: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 300: (2007) 53 AIC 61 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran, J. [Date of decision: 17-4-2007]

[6708] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Bihar Fodder Scam — Long incarceration without trial a relevant consideration — Undertrial incarcerated for a long period of about 1 year and 10 months and trial likely to consume some more time — In such circumstances, Supreme Court directing the undertrial to be released on bail subject to the condition that if the undertrial was a passport-holder he should surrender the passport to the trial court (Special Judge, Animal Husbandry in this case) — Constitution of India — Art. 21. Sunil K. Sinha v. State of Bihar, (1998) 5 SCC 607: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1366: AIR 1999 SC 1533.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K. Venkataswami and B.N. Kirpal, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-1998]

[6709] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Grounds for — Long period of custody and early conclusion of trial not likely — Grant of bail by High Court on grounds that accused had been in custody for a period of 3½ years and that there was no likelihood of the trial being concluded in the near future, held, not justified where gravity of the offence alleged was severe and serious allegations of tampering with the witnesses made against the accused

A complaint involving charges of conspiracy and murder was filed against the accused. The accused made seven applications for grant of bail before the High Court. All the said applications were rejected, except the fifth one. Some of the said rejections were affirmed by the Supreme Court also. The order granting bail on the fifth application was set aside in appeal before the Supreme Court. By the instant appeal, the prosecution challenged the order of the High Court granting bail to the accused on his eighth bail application. The grounds on which the said bail was granted were that the accused had been in custody for more than 3½ years and there was no possibility of the trial concluding in the near future.

Allowing the appeal and setting aside the impugned order of the High Court,

Held :

The High Court has given the period of incarceration already undergone by the accused and the unlikelihood of trial concluding in the near future as grounds sufficient to enlarge the accused on bail, in spite of the fact that the accused stands charged of offences punishable with life imprisonment or even death penalty. In such cases, the mere fact that the accused has undergone certain period of incarceration by itself would not entitle the accused to being enlarged on bail, nor the fact that the trial is not likely to be concluded in the near future either by itself or coupled with the period of incarceration would be sufficient for enlarging the accused on bail when the gravity of the offence alleged is severe and there are allegations of tampering with the witnesses by the accused during the period he was on bail. (Paras 14 and 21). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977: AIR 2004 SC 1866: 2004 Cri LJ 1796.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2004]

Badri Prasad Puran Badhai v. Bala Prasad Mool Chand Sahu, 1985 MPLJ 258, impliedly distinguished

See also Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2005) 2 SCC 42

(3) Grounds for bail — Generally (contd.)

[6710] — Ss. 439 and 228 — Delay in framing of charges — Bail — Entitlement to — Accused in jail — Rejection of bail on several occasions — Case fixed for framing of charges on 20-12-2000 adjourned on various grounds from time to time — Charges ultimately framed on 12-7-2001 — Held, taking so much time in framing the charges is negation of principle of speedy trial — Grounds of adjournment showing that trial was being conducted poorly — Trial court cautioned and directed not to keep the cases for framing charges pending for long periods, while the accused languishes in custody — Accused-appellant directed to be released on bail — Constitution of India — Art. 21 (Para 5). Bal Krishna Pandey v. State of U.P., (2003) 12 SCC 186.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-8-2001]

[6711] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Grant of — Long incarceration and early conclusion of trial unlikely — Where the accused-appellants were in jail for over 3 years and there was no possibility of early hearing of appeal pending before High Court, on facts, the accused persons directed to be released on bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/149. Takht Singh v. State of M.P., (2001) 10 SCC 463.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-1999]

[6712] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Grant of — When improper — Direct evidence available against respondent-accused on record — Held, High Court therefore erred in releasing said accused on bail. Jitendra Singh v. Mange Ram, (2005) 13 SCC 392: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 335.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-9-2005]

[6713] — S. 439 — Direction for release on bail — Issuance of, exclusively on the basis of plea of alibi — Legality — Such a direction where the same was issued by High Court merely on accepting the accused's plea of alibi without examining the nature of offence or any other material, held, ex facie not sustainable — Absence of any allegation against the accused, of any further overt act or tampering with prosecution evidence since his release eight long months ago, though a vital consideration for continuing his release, Supreme Court directing that all relevant maters should be taken into consideration for taking a decision afresh in that regard — Till such decision the accused permitted to be continued on bail (Para 2). Naresh Pal Singh v. Raj Karan, (1999) 9 SCC 104: 1999 SCC (Cri) 466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-1999]

(4) Grounds for bail in murder cases

[6714] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Grant of bail — General principles/factors to be taken into account, reiterated — Grant of bail in a murder case — Merely on the basis that: (i) accused was in jail for more than 2 years; (ii) he did not misuse his liberty while he was on temporary bail; and (iii) there was delay in initiation of trial — Unsustainability of — Held, the said reasons given for grant of bail were untenable — High Court completely ignored the general principles while granting bail in a heinous crime of murder — Respondent (who at the time of his grant of bail was a sitting MLA) was also involved in 10 other criminal cases, out of which 5 were under S. 307 IPC and one was under S. 302 IPC — He was acquitted in most of the cases for want of sufficient evidence — In one of the present two cases (in which bail granted on the basis of above reasons), 3 alleged eyewitnesses had unequivocally made statements under S. 161 CrPC that respondent was present at the time of occurrence and had fired from his gun — On these facts, held, prima facie a case for grant of bail not made out — Even in the other case also, having regard to the entire matter and in particular to the antecedents of the respondent, the alleged statements made to police by the witnesses present at the spot and the admitted enmity between the parties, it was not a fit case to grant bail — Hence, bail cancelled in both the murder cases — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

In Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21 it was held that while considering the application for bail, what is required to be looked is, (i) whether there is any prima facie or reasonable ground to believe that the accused had committed the offence; (ii) nature and gravity of the charge; (iii) severity of the punishment in the event of conviction; (iv) danger of the accused absconding or fleeing if released on bail; (v) character, behaviour, means, position and standing of the accused; (vi) likelihood of the offence being repeated; (vii) reasonable apprehension of the witnesses being tampered with; and (viii) danger of justice being thwarted by grant of bail. (Para 24)

In the present case, the High Court has completely ignored the general principles, for grant of bail in a heinous crime of murder in which the sentence, if convicted, is death or life imprisonment. The High Court by the impugned order has granted bail to the respondent on three grounds — (i) that the respondent was in judicial custody since March 2004; (ii) that trial had yet not commenced and no prosecution witness had been examined; and (iii) that the Court had tested the respondent twice by granting temporary bail to him with stringent conditions for a duration of one month each and, on both the occasions, the respondent had surrendered within time, without breach of any of the conditions. (Paras 26 and 18)

The said reasons given in the impugned order for grant of bail are untenable. That the respondent did not misuse his liberty while on temporary bail twice by itself is no ground to grant bail in a murder case especially when he was allegedly involved in a subsequent case of murder. As regards the reason that the trial of the case has not progressed/begun, the complainant party was in no way responsible for any delay in trial. Further, the reason that the respondent had been in jail for the last more than 2 years, is equally untenable in view of the observations made in Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21. (Paras 19 to 22)

Apart from the present two cases of murder, the respondent has been named in 10 other criminal cases in the last 25 years or so, out of which 5 cases were under Section 307 IPC and another was under Section 302 IPC. The respondent has been acquitted in most of the cases for want of sufficient evidence. This speaks volumes. (Para 20)

In the first case (where the bail was granted on the basis of above reasons), three witnesses, who had allegedly seen the occurrence, have unequivocally in their statements under Section 161 CrPC stated that the respondent was present at the time of occurrence and he had fired from his gun. Prima facie a case for grant of bail was not made out. (Para 23)

As regards the second case, taking the overall view of the entire matter and in particular of the antecedents of the respondent, the alleged statements made by the witnesses, who were present at the spot, to the police and the admitted enmity between the parties (which is a double-edged weapon to commit the crime as well as to falsely implicate), it is opined that it was not a fit case to grant bail in this case as well. (Para 28). Gobarbhai Naranbhai Singala v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 3 SCC 775: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 743: AIR 2008 SC 1134: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2192: 2008 Cri LJ 1618.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2), followed

Panchanan Mishra v. Digambar Mishra, (2005) 3 SCC 143: 2005 SCC (Cri) 660, relied on

[6715] — S. 439 — Grant of bail — Murder case — Factors to be taken into account while dealing with application for bail — Merits of the case not required to be examined — But reasons for prima facie conclusion to grant bail must be indicated — In absence of such reasons, order granting bail would be vitiated by non-application of mind

A first information report was lodged by the deceased's brother about committing of murder of deceased by some unknown persons by gunshot firing. In the statement of the deceased's son recorded on 5-12-2006 and that of one M recorded on 9-12-2006 during the course of investigation it was disclosed that Respondent 2 and one S had entered into a criminal conspiracy to commit murder of the deceased by hiring two shooters. The police acted upon the information and found that a part of the amount fixed for the killing was paid to S through a demand draft under the camouflage of payment for purchase of construction material from S who was dealing with such materials. It was pointed out that the phone records clearly indicated a link between Respondent 2 and the killers. Respondent 2 moved an application for bail which was rejected by the trial court. But his bail application before the High Court was allowed. The High Court observed that FIR was lodged against unknown persons and expressed its surprise as to why the deceased's son and M "kept mum and at the very first opportunity did not disclose this fact to the investigating agency and only in their statements recorded under Section 161 CrPC which admittedly were recorded after about two-and-a-half months from the date of the incident, they disclosed the involvement of the applicant in the present crime". As such the Court opined "that at the most the applicant can be said to be an accused under Section 120-B IPC read with Section 302 IPC for which an accused can be sentenced to life imprisonment, but the prosecution story as revealed till now, the manner in which the involvement of the applicant in the commission of the crime has come to light and the evidence collected by the investigating officer puts a dent in the prosecution case. Besides it, involvement of the applicant in the commission of the crime has been disclosed at a very later stage of the investigation."

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court was not justified in granting bail to Respondent 2. The order granting bail is set aside. Respondent 2 who was released on bail shall surrender to custody forthwith. (Para 14)

(4) Grounds for bail in murder cases (contd.)

While dealing with an application for bail, there is a need to indicate in the order, reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted particularly where an accused was charged of having committed a serious offence. It is necessary for the courts dealing with an application for bail to consider among other circumstances, the following factors also before granting bail. They are:

1. The nature of accusation and the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of supporting evidence;

2. Reasonable apprehension of tampering of the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant;

3. Prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge.

Any order dehors such reasons suffers from non-application of mind. (Para 11)

Though a conclusive finding in regard to the points urged by the parties is not expected of the court considering the bail application, yet giving reasons is different from discussing merits or demerits. At the stage of granting bail a detailed examination of evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case has not to be undertaken. But that does not mean that while granting bail some reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted is not required to be indicated. (Para 12). Lokesh Singh v. State of U.P., (2008) 16 SCC 753: AIR 2009 SC 94: (2008) 6 All LJ 775: 2009 Cri LJ 369: (2008) 71 AIC 94 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-10-2008]

Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41, relied on [6716] — S. 439 — Bail — Murder charge — In murder case bail should not be granted merely on the ground of delay in recovery of the weapons used in the crime — But where trial could not commence for long (in this case even during pendency of appeal before Supreme Court against High Court's order granting bail) for which accused-respondents were not responsible, held, on facts, it would be travesty of justice to keep the accused under further detention as undertrial prisoners — Hence no interference is called for with High Court's order releasing the accused on bail subject to the condition that before releasing them it should be ensured that they would not tamper with the evidence or intimidate or influence any of the witnesses for prosecution and that they would unfailingly attend the court on the posting dates (Para 8). State, CBI/SPE v. Pal Singh, (2001) 1 SCC 247: 2001 SCC (Cri) 131: 2001 Cri LJ 744.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-2000]

[6717] — S. 439 — Bail in double murder case — Grant of, by High Court without considering material facts on record and without assigning any reasons, held, not justified — There were eyewitnesses to the occurrence — Sufficient material on record available against accused — No mitigating circumstances — Hence, High Court's order liable to be set aside — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 4). State v. Eslian, (2006) 9 SCC 785: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 399.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2006]

[6718] — S. 439 — Grant of bail in a murder case without indicating any "reason" — Unsustainability — Held, such order passed by High Court was indefensible — Hence, set aside — Matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 10). Deepak Singchi v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 14 SCC 583: AIR 2007 SC 3064: (2007) 57 AIC 23 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 4338.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-2007]

Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157; V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 560; Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974; Kamaljit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 7 SCC 226: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1668; Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2007) 14 SCC 537, followed

[6719] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Entitlement to — Case of daylight murder wherein two persons died — Held, the said fact itself was not adequate to hold that accused R was not entitled to bail — Two co-accused had already been granted bail by High Court — R was a student, who was in jail for more than one year — His father was seriously ill due to heart ailment — In these circumstances, held order of Sessions Judge granting bail to R was not unjustified

The fact that it was a case of daylight murder wherein two persons died, is not adequate to hold that the accused were not entitled to bail at all. (Para 18)

Passing order on a bail application is a matter of discretion which is exercised by a judicial officer with utmost responsibility. When a co-accused had been granted bail by the High Court, the appellant judicial officer cannot be said to have passed an unjustified order granting bail, that too, to an accused who was a student and had been in jail for more than one year. R had alleged that he had suffered a loss of one year's study. He also alleged that his father was seriously ill due to a heart ailment and he produced a medical certificate from one of the professors working in the local medical college. If R were to be denied bail in the circumstances of the case, it would have been a travesty of justice especially when all factors relevant to be gone into for considering the bail application were heavily loaded in favour of grant of bail to R. (Para 18). Ramesh Chander Singh v. High Court of Allahabad, (2007) 4 SCC 247: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 266: (2007) 3 All LJ 502: (2007) 53 AIC 66 (SC): (2007) 113 FLR 841: (2007) 2 SLR 880.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and L.S. Panta and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-2007]

[6720] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Grant of — Factors to be considered — Murder case — Fact that Magistrate who recorded dying declaration had been a tenant in house of complainant — Consideration of, while granting bail — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 32(1)

In the bail order, the appellant judicial officer stated that there was an allegation that the Magistrate who recorded the dying declaration was once upon a time a tenant in one of the houses owned by the complainant. Taking of cognizance of this fact by the appellant in the order could not be said to be a totally unwarranted and a superfluous reasoning. (Para 9). Ramesh Chander Singh v. High Court of Allahabad, (2007) 4 SCC 247: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 266: (2007) 3 All LJ 502: (2007) 53 AIC 66 (SC): (2007) 113 FLR 841: (2007) 2 SLR 880.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and L.S. Panta and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-2007]

[6721] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Grant of — Propriety — Offence under S. 302 r/w S. 201 IPC — Accused, an advocate — Reasonable apprehension of the witnesses being tampered with or won over, coerced, threatened or intimidated by accused using his influence and position could not be ruled out — No mitigating circumstances to grant bail in the said non-bailable grave offence — Hence, High Court's order granting bail quashed — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 201 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 12 to 14). Anil Kumar Tulsiyani v. State of U.P., (2006) 9 SCC 425: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 565: (2006) 2 KLT 806.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2006]

[6722] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail in non-bailable offences (offence under S. 302 r/w S. 201 IPC in this case) — Grant of — Relevant considerations — Referring to various circumstances to be considered in an application for bail, held, gravity and nature of offence is one of the considerations in granting bail in such offences — High Court not at all addressed to this issue while granting bail to the respondent — On facts, held, High Court's order granting bail not sustainable (Paras 10, 11 and 14). Anil Kumar Tulsiyani v. State of U.P., (2006) 9 SCC 425: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 565: (2006) 2 KLT 806.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2006]

State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2), relied on [6723] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Grant of bail by High Court — Inadequate grounds — CB/CID investigating the case — Considering the fact that CB/CID normally takes a year or so in concluding the investigation and that the allegations of ailment of the applicant were not specifically denied, the High Court granting bail to applicant — Held, the said grounds were insufficient for granting bail to applicant, the main accused, in a case of such a serious nature (murder) — Further, in view of the fact that the ailment of applicant was not of such a nature requiring him to be released on bail and where the eyewitnesses directly connected him and assigned specific role to him in the murder, held, the High Court's order granting bail to the applicant was liable to be set aside. Pawan v. Ram Prakash Pandey, (2002) 9 SCC 166: AIR 2002 SC 2224: 2002 Cri LJ 2940.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2002]

[6724] — Ss. 439 and 437(1)(i) — Case under Ss. 302, 120-B & 34 IPC and Arms Act — Bail — Grant of, by High Court — Restriction contained in S. 437(1)(i) for granting bail — High Court did not apply its mind to the condition under, which is sine qua non for granting bail — Hence, High Court's order granting bail set aside

The High Court considered only two grounds for granting bail — one is that the respondent was in custody for more than one year and the other is that the High Court made some observation in the previous order. The previous order referred to by the High Court only made a mention that the respondent could renew the application after framing of the charge against him. That observation is not a ground envisaged under Section 437(1)(i) of the Code for granting bail. Thus, there was no application of mind of the High Court from the angle provided in the aforesaid clause, which is sine qua non for granting bail, in the light of the specific prohibition contained in the sub-clause that such persons shall not be so released if there appears a reasonable ground for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. (Paras 7 and 8). Union of India v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 539: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1987.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2001]

(5) Grounds for bail — Particular offences

[6725] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Entitlement to — Large economic scam in bank — Huge amounts advanced to persons of dubious antecedents without taking steps to verify their creditworthiness in violation of applicable banking procedures and regulations — Accused-petitioner, a higher authority in that bank — Considering the facts and circumstances of the case, held, petitioner not entitled to be released on bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 405, 406, 408, 409, 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B — Banking Regulation Act, 1949, Ss. 18, 24 and 35-A — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 16). Rameshchandra Nandlal Parikh v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 1 SCC 732: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 481: AIR 2006 SC 915: (2006) 194 ELT 140: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1365: 2006 Cri LJ 964.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J. and B.N. Srikrishna, J. [Date of decision: 13-1-2006]

[6726] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Offence of cheating — Bail — Grant of — Accused cheating a Japanese national of a big sum of about Rs 65 lakhs — Prima facie circumstances of the case not in favour of bail — In view of the fact that the accused was in custody for about 5 months, Supreme Court permitting the accused, by imposing certain conditions, to continue on bail as per its interim order passed earlier on 10-12-1999 — Respondents permitted to move for cancellation of the bail if accused misuses the bail or delays the trial — Case against the appellant may be splitted up so as to dispose of it expeditiously — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B, 420, 468, 471 and 506. Ashok Dhingra v. NCT of Delhi, (2000) 9 SCC 533: 2001 SCC (Cri) 641: AIR 2000 SC 3537 (1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2000]

[6727] — S. 439 — Export of drugs without export authorisation — Non-compliance with specific requirements of NDPS Act and Rules framed thereunder — Appellant and co-accused indulging in illegal internet pharmacy business — Drugs mentioned in Schedule to NDPS Act procured from local pharmacy and dispatched to customers abroad — Appellant-accused contending that drugs in question being Schs. G and H drugs under Drugs and Cosmetics Rules, 1945, export thereof would not attract provisions of R. 58, NDPS Rules, 1985 and that use of drugs for medicinal purposes is acknowledged in terms of proviso to S. 8(c) — Tenability — Held, appellant and his co-accused were said to have got licences under Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940 — But under S. 80, NDPS Act, provisions of NDPS Act or Rules are in addition to, and not in derogation of Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940 or Rules made thereunder — Drugs and Cosmetics Act does not deal with exports — Provisions of Customs Act, 1962, do — Licensees, therefore, were thus required to comply with specific requirements of NDPS Act and Rules — Undisputedly, appellant neither applied for nor was granted any authority to export by Narcotic Commissioner or any other officer who was authorised in this behalf — Hence, no merit in the instant appeal — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Rules, 1985, Rr. 53, 53-A, 58, 59 and 63 — Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940, Ss. 33(2)(e), 33-N and 12 — Drugs and Cosmetics Rules, 1945 — Schs. G and H — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 8(c), 22, 23, 25, 27-A, 53, 53-A, 58, 9, 76, 80 & 37 and Schedule (Paras 13 to 16). D. Ramakrishnan v. Narcotic Control Bureau, (2009) 14 SCC 603: AIR 2009 SC 2404: (2009) 240 ELT 321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-2009]

State of Uttaranchal v. Rajesh Kumar Gupta, (2007) 1 SCC 355: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 356, distinguished

[6728] — Ss. 439 and 438 — Bail application — Matter/Claim which cannot be adjudicated therein — Cheating and conspiracy — Allegation that accused obtained money from complainants for sending them abroad — N (one of the accused) depositing in court the amount claimed in complaint to show his bona fides for the purpose of obtaining bail — Amount deposited was to be paid to complainants only on settlement between the parties — No settlement arrived at — Nature of claim, a civil dispute — Held, the High Court erred in allowing complainants' application filed in bail petition of the appellants (accused other than N) whereby they sought disbursement of the said amount to them — In a bail application, it could not have adjudicated upon the rights between the parties in regard to the amount in deposit — Impugned directions might also prejudice the defence of the accused — Amount in question directed to be kept in interest-bearing account till appropriate orders were passed by the competent court in this regard — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420 and 120-B

While accepting the deposit, the Magistrate had made it clear that the amount in question would be paid to the complainants only if a settlement is arrived at. He had also directed that in the event of no settlement being arrived at within the time stipulated in his order the amount in question should be kept in interest-bearing deposit. The fact that there was no settlement between the parties is not in dispute. Even an attempt to settle the dispute through the Lok Adalat has failed. Therefore, the claim of the complainants for the amount in deposit being in the nature of a civil dispute, the High Court ought not to have directed the payment. The High Court in a bail application could not have adjudicated upon the rights between the parties in regard to the amount in deposit and the impugned directions might also prejudice the defence of the accused. Hence, the impugned orders are set aside. The amount in question be kept in interest-bearing deposit in a nationalised bank till such time as appropriate orders are passed by the competent court in this regard. (Paras 12, 13 and 15) . Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2004) 13 SCC 289: 2005 SCC (Cri) 208.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

[6729] — S. 439 — When bail should be granted — Case registered against appellant under Ss. 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC for allegedly driving a car by using a forged registration certificate as genuine — Car owned by appellant's uncle who had handed it over to appellant for getting registration certificate from RTO — Forged documents prepared by the co-accused, an agent of RTO — While the co-accused had been granted bail by High Court in October 2007, appellant still in jail since June 2007 — Counsel for the State failed to state about the progress and stage of trial of the case registered against appellant and the co-accused — Custody of appellant not required by IO for further interrogation — Bail application filed by appellant before High Court rejected — In the facts and circumstances of the case, held, it is a fit case where appellant deserves to be released on bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 467, 468 and 471 . Anwar Ali v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2008) 16 SCC 501: (2009) 1 ECrN 360 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 4572.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-2008]

[6730] — S. 439 — Bail — Relevant facts to be considered — False encounter — Plea that S who was encountered had a shady reputation and criminal antecedents — Unacceptability — Held, the accused police officer causing encounter cannot take a plea in bail application that the person whom he killed was a hardened criminal

The appellant-accused (a senior police officer) and co-accused N and other police officers were arrested for entering into criminal conspiracy and causing fake encounter of a hardened criminal S and destroying evidence relating to the death of K (wife of S). The FIR was registered for the offences punishable under Sections 302, 364, 365, 368, 193, 197, 201, 120-B, 420 and 342 IPC read with Section 34 IPC and under Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 of the Arms Act, 1959. Allegedly, an FIR against S to cover up the fake encounter was lodged by co-accused AR, a subordinate officer of the appellant-accused. In the FIR it was stated that S was acting at the behest of ISI to spread terror and to disturb the unity and integrity of the country and was conspiring by possessing arms and ammunition so as to kill one of the big leaders of the State of Gujarat and when asked to surrender by the police party, fired from his revolver and attempted to kill them. The High Court by the impugned order in terms of Section 439(2) CrPC cancelled the bail application granted to the appellant-accused by the Sessions Court.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The order of granting bail to the appellant was certainly vulnerable. The accused cannot take a plea while applying for bail that the person whom he killed was a hardened criminal. That certainly is not a factor which can be taken into account. The perversity as highlighted in Puran case, (2001) 6 SCC 338 can flow from the fact that irrelevant materials have been taken into consideration adding vulnerability to the order granting bail. The irrelevant materials should be of a substantial nature and not of a trivial nature. In the instant case, the trial court seems to have been swayed by the fact that S had shady reputation and criminal antecedents. That is not certainly a factor which is to be considered while granting bail. It is the nature of the acts of offence which ought to have been considered. (Paras 27 and 25)

Once it is concluded that bail was granted on untenable grounds, the plea of absence of supervening circumstances has no leg to stand. Irrelevant materials have been taken into account and relevant materials have been kept out of consideration. An

FIR was allegedly lodged to divert attention from the fake encounter. The same was not lodged by the Gujarat Police. The accused was the leader of the Rajasthan team and AR, one of the arrested officers had lodged the FIR. The relevance of these factors were kept out of consideration while granting bail. (Paras 26 and 27)

Even though reappreciation of the evidence as done by the court granting bail is to be avoided, the court dealing with an application for cancellation of bail under Section 439(2) CrPC can consider whether irrelevant materials were taken into consideration. That is so because it is not known as to what extent the irrelevant materials weighed with the court for accepting the prayer for bail. (Para 23). Dinesh M.N. (S.P.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 2008 SC 2318: 2008 Cri LJ 3008: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2310.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2008]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977, relied on

(6) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application

See also under Section 437

[6731] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Application for grant of, in "non-bailable" offence — Relevant factors to be considered — Power of court to scrutinise evidence — Held, while making order in such a case, the nature and the gravity of the offence is the primary consideration — At the stage of bail, court can only go into the case as prima facie case established — It cannot go into question of credibility and reliability of witnesses put up by prosecution — Said question can only be tested during trial — In the present case, while granting bail the High Court did not consider the nature and the gravity of the offence and its impact on the society — It recorded findings on credibility and evidential value of witnesses at the stage of bail and virtually acquitted the accused even before trial — Such findings recorded at the stage of bail, held, not sustainable — Order granting bail was liable to be set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/120-B

In granting or non-granting of bail in non-bailable offence, the primary consideration is the nature and gravity of the offence. At the stage of granting of bail the court can only go into the question of the prima facie case established for granting bail. It cannot go into the question of credibility and reliability of the witnesses put up by the prosecution. The question of credibility and reliability of prosecution witnesses can only be tested during the trial. (Paras 12 and 5)

In the present case of murder, the order of the High Court granting bail shows that the nature and the gravity of the offence and its impact on the democratic fabric of the society was not at all considered. On the contrary, while considering the bail application, the High Court appears to have decided the case pending trial on merit after scrutinising the evidence. This is against all canons of law and judicial propriety. (Paras 12 and 6)

The High Court recorded findings on the credibility and the evidential value of the witnesses at the stage of granting bail. By making such observations and findings, it virtually acquitted the accused of all the criminal charges levelled against him even before the trial. Where the trial is in progress, if such findings are allowed to stand it would seriously prejudice the prosecution case. The findings recorded by the High Court virtually amount to the regular trial pointing out the deficiency and reliability/credibility of the prosecution evidence. Such findings recorded at the stage of consideration of bail cannot be allowed to sustain. (Paras 12 and 13)

Hence, in view of the above, the order granting bail is not sustainable in law. It is, accordingly, set aside. (Para 14). Satish Jaggi v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2007) 11 SCC 195: (2007) 56 AIC 202 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 2766.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-2007]

Amit Jogi v. State of Chhattisgarh, 2006 Cri LJ 3349 (Chatt), reversed

[6732] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Grant of bail — Factors to be taken into account, restated — Reasoned order — Cardinal necessity of — Though a detailed examination of the evidence and elaborate documentation of merits of the case is not required, it is necessary to give reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted, particularly where an accused was charged of having committed a serious offence (murder in this case) — On facts, the cryptic non-reasoned order of the High Court granting bail, held, not sustainable — Hence, set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/504/ 149/148/147

There is a need to indicate in the order reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted, particularly where an accused was charged of having committed a serious offence. Any order dehors of such reasons suffers from non-application of mind. Though a detailed examination of the evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case is to be avoided by the Court while passing orders on bail applications, yet a court dealing with the bail application should be satisfied as to whether there is a prima facie case, but exhaustive exploration of the merits of the case is not necessary. The court dealing with the application for bail is required to exercise its discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. The factors which the court must consider among other circumstances before granting bail are (i) the nature of accusation and the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of supporting evidence; (ii) reasonable apprehension of tampering with the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant; and (iii) prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge. (Paras 8 and 7)

In the present case, the grant of bail to the respondent by a non-speaking and non-reasoned order was not proper. Hence, the said order is set aside. (Paras 10 and 11). Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohd., (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669: AIR 2005 SC 3530: 2005 Cri LJ 4132.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-9-2005]

Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, 2005 SCC (Cri) 157; V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304; Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974, relied on [6733] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Reasoned order — Necessity of — Unnatural death of the deceased within seven years of the marriage — High Court granted bail by a practically non-reasoned order — Held, it is not understood as to how the High Court observed that the provisions of S. 113-B, Evidence Act, 1872 were not applicable and this was not a case punishable under S. 304-B IPC — High Court's order is a bundle of confusion — Said order set aside and the matter remitted back to High Court for fresh consideration and disposal by a reasoned order — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 113-B — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B (Para 6). Subhash Chandra Singh v. Dheemant Singh, (2009) 11 SCC 169: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1284: (2009) 77 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-4-2009]

Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974; Anwari Begum v. Sher Mohammad, (2005) 7 SCC 326: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1669, followed [6734] — S. 439 — Grant of bail — Recording of reasons — Necessity of — Held, court granting bail has to exercise its discretion in a judicious manner with care and caution and not as a matter of course — Though at the stage of granting bail, elaborate examination of evidence and detailed reasons touching merit of case, which may prejudice accused, should be avoided, but there is a need to indicate in such order, reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted, particularly where accused is charged of having committed a serious offence — Mere recording of submissions of counsel for both parties not enough — Order must show consideration of factors like nature of offence, evidence collected by prosecution and forming part of charge-sheet and circumstances under which offences were committed — Giving reasons is different from discussing merits or demerits (Paras 13 and 19). Masroor v. State of U.P., (2009) 14 SCC 286: (2009) 3 CTC 90 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977, relied on [6735] — S. 439 — Grant of bail to second respondent, without recording reasons therefor — Impermissibility of — Failure to consider relevant factors for granting bail — Impropriety of — Charge-sheet for serious offences filed against 22 persons, including second respondent, for committing murder of two persons and causing multiple injuries to eight persons — Bail application filed by second respondent rejected by trial court — High Court, however, granting him bail, but without recording any reasons therefor — Sustaina bility — Failure on part of High Court in not indicating any reason for grant of bail, particularly when charges against second respondent were serious, makes the order indefensible — High Court completely ignored basic principles which are to be kept in view while dealing with an application under S. 439 for grant of bail, thus, committing a manifest error in matter of grant of bail to the second respondent, warranting interference — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 307, 148 and 149 (Paras 17, 18 and 12). Masroor v. State of U.P., (2009) 14 SCC 286: (2009) 3 CTC 90 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

[6736] — S. 439 — Bail — Role of, in protection of right to personal liberty — Essence of function involved in grant of bail, and measures to ensure proper performance thereof — Held, exercise of said jurisdiction requires maintaining of perfect balance between two conflicting interests viz. sanctity of individual liberty and interest of society — Hence, it should be entrusted to judicial officers with some experience and good track record — High Courts advised to periodically organise (through their Judicial Academies) workshops, symposiums, seminars and lectures for orientation of judicial officers and police officers in respect of importance of, and method of balancing of, said conflicting interests — Direction given for periodical evaluation of performance of judicial officers concerned on the basis of cases decided by them — Constitution of India, Arts. 21 and 22. Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694.

(6) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Dalveer Bhandari and K.S.P. Radhakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565: 1980 SCC (Cri) 465, relied on

[6737] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Grant of — Need for reasons — Extent of determination of contentions raised — Held, reasons therefor must be recorded, particularly where an accused is charged with a serious offence, without discussing the merits of evidence — Further held, conclusive finding as regards the points urged by the parties not expected of the court considering the bail application

Though a conclusive finding in regard to the points urged by the parties is not expected of the court considering the bail application, yet giving reasons is different from discussing merits or demerits. At the stage of granting bail a detailed examination of evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case has not to be undertaken. But there is a need to indicate in the order, reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted particularly where an accused was charged of having committed a serious offence. (Paras 8 and 6). State of Maharashtra v. Sitaram Popat Vetal, (2004) 7 SCC 521: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1971: AIR 2004 SC 4258.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-2004]

[6738] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Grant of — Held, reasons must be recorded, but without discussion of merits and demerits of evidence — Clarified that discussing evidence is totally different from giving reasons for a decision

Giving reasons is different from discussing merits or demerits. At the stage of granting bail a detailed examination of evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case has not to be undertaken. What the Additional Sessions Judge had done in the order dated 11-9-2000 was to discuss the merits and demerits of the evidence. That was what was deprecated. That did not mean that whilst granting bail some reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted did not have to be indicated. (Para 8)

The High Court has correctly not gone into merits or demerits of the matter. The High Court has noted that the evidence prima facie indicated demand of dowry. The High Court has briefly indicated the evidence on record and what was found at the scene of the offence. The High Court has indicated that the evidence prima facie indicated that a demand for Rs 1 lakh was made just a month prior to the incident in question. The High Court has stated that the material on record suggested that the offences under Sections 498-A and 304-B were prima facie disclosed. The High Court has concluded that the material on record, the nature of injuries, demand for Rs 1 lakh and the other circumstances were such that this was not a fit case for granting bail. Thus the High Court has given very cogent reasons why bail should not have been granted and why this unjustified erroneous order granting bail should be cancelled. (Para 9). Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124: AIR 2001 SC 2023: 2001 Cri LJ 2566.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2001]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237, relied on

[6739] — S. 439 — Bail — Factors to be considered before grant of, restated — Reasoned order — Necessity of — Though a detailed examination of evidence and elaborate documentation of merits of the case is not required, it is necessary to give reasons for prima facie concluding why bail is being granted, particularly where an accused is charged of having committed a serious offence (murder in this case) — Giving reasons distinguished from discussing merits or demerits — On facts, the cryptic non-reasoned order of the High Court, held, not sustainable — Hence, set aside — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/120-B

Respondent 2 was charged for commission of offence punishable under Sections 302/120-B IPC. The Sessions Court rejected his bail application. The High Court observed that the accused was not named in FIR and his name had been disclosed in the statement under Section 161 CrPC after three days of the incident. Thus, the High Court granted bail to Respondent 2. Hence the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal and setting aside the impugned order of the High Court,

Held :

At the stage of granting bail a detailed examination of evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case is not to be undertaken, but there is a need to indicate in the order reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted, particularly where an accused was charged of having committed a serious offence. Though a conclusive finding in regard to the points urged by the parties is not expected of the court considering the bail application, yet giving reasons is different from discussing merits or demerits. Any order dehors of such reasons suffers from non-application of mind. The court dealing with the application for bail is required to exercise its discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. The factors which the court must consider among other circumstances before granting bail are (i) the nature of accusation and the severity of punishment in case of conviction and the nature of supporting evidence, (ii) reasonable apprehension of tampering with the witness or apprehension of threat to the complainant, and (iii) prima facie satisfaction of the court in support of the charge. (Paras 11, 9, 10 and 8)

Above being the position, the cryptic non-reasoned order of the High Court is clearly indefensible. (Para 12). Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1974: AIR 2004 SC 4267: 2004 All LJ 3242.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2004]

Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528, relied on

Followed in Deepak Singchi v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 14 SCC 583*

[6740] — Ss. 439 and 437(1)(i) & (ii) — Bail — Grant of — Power of High Court — Relevant factors required to be considered by a court while taking a decision in the matter of enlargement on bail, restated — Order of High Court should make it appear that the High Court, while forming opinion on prayer for bail, was conscious of the reasons for rejection of prayer for bail as assigned by the Sessions Court — Instant case involving circumstances in which special reasons required for granting bail — Considering the facts of the case and the previous history and antecedents of the accused, Sessions Court refusing bail — High Court erred in granting bail without stating anything as to why it did so in spite of availability of grounds to the contrary set out in the order of Sessions Court

Previous conviction of an accused for a heinous offence punishable with imprisonment for life, his involvement in other crimes and the quantum of punishment for the offences in which the applicant is seeking bail are all relevant factors to which the court should consciously advert to while taking a decision in the matter of enlargement on bail. A prayer for bail having been rejected by the Sessions Court although the High Court while exercising its jurisdiction under Section 439 CrPC is not acting as a court of appeal or a court of revision over the order of the Sessions Court, nevertheless, the High Court should keep in mind, while hearing the application for bail, the factum of the prayer having been rejected by the Sessions Court and the reasons therefor expressly set out in the order of the Sessions Court. The order of the High Court, howsoever brief it may be, should make it appear that the High Court while forming opinion on prayer for bail was conscious of the reasons for rejection of prayer for bail as assigned by the Sessions Court. (Para 7)

Independently of the order of rejection passed by the Sessions Court, the High Court may grant bail to an accused person, yet it would be sound exercise of discretionary jurisdiction of the High Court if the order of the High Court reflects that the High Court had in mind the reasons assigned by the Sessions Court for refusing bail. The impugned order of the High Court suffers from this infirmity. (Para 8). Ram Pratap Yadav v. Mitra Sen Yadav, (2003) 1 SCC 15: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-11-2002]

[6741] — S. 439 — Grant of bail — Court should be satisfied only about a prima facie case and need not go into its merits — Where the accused are policemen, court should keep in mind the possibility of intimidation of witnesses and tampering with the documents by such accused to prove themselves innocent — CrPC, 1898, S. 498

Grant of bail is within the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge but the Court must not, in grave cases, gullibly dismiss the possibility of police accused intimidating the witness. No party should have the impression that his case has been prejudiced. To be satisfied about a prima facie case is needed but it is not the same as an exhaustive exploration of the merits in the order itself. Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 1980 SC 785: 1980 Cri LJ 426: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 573.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1980]

(6) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application (contd.)

[6742] — Ss. 439 and 161 — Bail — Grant of bail — Duty of High Court at the stage of — Held, it must consider all the statements recorded under S. 161 CrPC, examine the gravity of the offence and also examine the question of possibility of the accused tampering with the evidence and possibility of getting the attendance of the accused during trial and only then it can grant bail — Where four persons had died and charge-sheet had already been filed and the material collected by examining persons under S. 161 CrPC implicated S as one of the assailants, then grant of bail to S by High Court merely because in the statement of one of the injured persons, S was not indicated as an assailant, held, erroneous (Para 1). Salim Khan v. Sanjai Singh, (2002) 9 SCC 670.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-1999]

[6743] — S. 439 — Grant of bail on examination of merits of case — Sustainability — High Court should not go into merits of the case and decide, without affording an opportunity to prosecution, about non-complicity of the accused in the crime and on that basis grant bail to accused — On facts held, High Court was not justified in granting bail by going into merits of the case — No exceptional ground made out for departing from the usual procedure of trial once charge-sheet had been filed in trial court

According to the prosecution, the respondent had a love affair with the deceased. The deceased was insisting for marriage to which the respondent and his mother were not agreeable as the deceased belonged to a Scheduled Caste and the respondent belonged to Teli community which is considered as a higher caste. The respondent is alleged to have hatched a conspiracy to get rid of the deceased by eliminating her. In furtherance of the conspiracy and to create evidence in his favour, the respondent went to another place viz. Baramati. From that place he used to have telephonic talks with the accused persons who managed to take the deceased out of the house and got her killed. The respondent was arrested for the offences punishable under Sections 302, 109, 120-B, 364, 397, 201 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code and under Section 3(1)(xi) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. The respondent filed an application for bail in the trial court which was dismissed on finding that his complicity in the criminal conspiracy was established. He then filed a revision petition under Section 439 CrPC in the High Court which was allowed granting bail pending trial on the ground that there was no material on record to establish the involvement of the respondent in the commission of the crime and that the accused was not aware of the criminal conspiracy, in execution of which, the deceased was killed.

Allowing the appeal and setting aside the order of the High Court,

Held :

For releasing the respondent on bail, the High Court has ventured to refer to the merits of the case and prematurely held that there was no material on record to show that the respondent was guilty of conspiracy, in execution of which, the deceased was murdered. Despite observing that the case was based on circumstantial evidence, the High Court did not afford the prosecution an opportunity to lead evidence for establishing the existence of conspiracy and wrongly held that it was difficult to infer the existence of a conspiracy, particularly when the respondent had gone to Baramati. The factum of the respondent going to Baramati was relied upon by the prosecution as one of the circumstances connecting the accused with the commission of the crime particularly when it was alleged that while at Baramati he used to have telephonic talks with the other accused persons about the alleged conspiracy. In the absence of "exact talks", the High Court found that the allegation of conspiracy was not established. (Para 5)

Once the final charge-sheet has been filed in the trial court, the High Court, under the normal circumstances, should have permitted the respondent to get a verdict of his innocence or involvement from that court under Chapter XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. No exceptional ground has been made out, in the instant case, to depart from such usual established procedure. The order impugned being contrary to law is liable to be set aside. (Para 6). State of Maharashtra v. Ritesh, (2001) 4 SCC 224: 2001 SCC (Cri) 671: AIR 2001 SC 1310: 2001 Cri LJ 1695.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-3-2001]

[6744] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Bail application — Mode of disposal — Power to appreciate evidence — Noticing the extent of examination of evidence while considering the question of bail as stated in Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21, held, grant of bail in present case by touching upon the merits of the case and in a manner as if an order of acquittal was being passed, was not proper

In Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21 it has been held that a detailed examination of the evidence is to be avoided while considering the question of bail, to ensure that there is no prejudging and no prejudice is caused. Only a brief examination is to be done to satisfy about the facts and circumstances or otherwise of a prima facie case. In the present case, the findings recorded in the order granting bail touch upon the merits of the case. The Judge concerned has proceeded as if an order of acquittal is being passed. (Para 27). Gobarbhai Naranbhai Singala v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 3 SCC 775: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 743: AIR 2008 SC 1134: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2192: 2008 Cri LJ 1618.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Asho k Bhan and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2), followed

[6745] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Bail application — Power of Court to appreciate evidence/materials while dealing with — Held, though the Court can make some reference to materials, but it cannot make a detailed and in-depth analysis of the materials and record findings on their acceptability or otherwise, which is essentially a matter for trial — In this view, the course adopted by High Court while dealing with bail application in present case, not proper — Hence, matter remitted to it for consideration afresh (Para 3). Nira Radia v. Dheeraj Singh, (2006) 9 SCC 760: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 397.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-5-2006]

[6746] — S. 439 — Grant or refusal of bail need not be by a speaking order — SLP permitted to be withdrawn. Jivaji Jedeja v. State of Maharashtra, 1986 Supp SCC 556: 1987 SCC (Cri) 171: AIR 1987 SC 1491.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J. and G.L. Oza, J. [Date of decision: 22-10-1986]

[6747] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Reasons/Findings — Recording of — Necessity — Giving prima facie reasons for granting bail particularly where the accused is charged of having committed a serious offence, held, necessary — Order devoid of such reasons would suffer from non-application of mind — The court granting bail must indicate a prima facie finding on all points urged before it — On facts, non-consideration of vital facts as to allegations of threat or inducement made to witnesses by the accused, held, vitiated the conclusions arrived at by the High Court while granting bail

While granting bail, the High Court did not advert to the complaint of the investigating agency as to the threat administered by the accused to the witnesses as also to the fact of a number of witnesses having turned hostile after the accused was enlarged on bail. Before the Supreme Court, the accused contended that though the High Court did not give a finding in regard to this aspect, it did bear in mind these factors and rejected these contentions since these allegations were frivolous. It was also submitted that the High Court was justified in not giving any conclusive finding in regard to some of the arguments because any such finding given by the High Court might have prejudiced the pending trial.

Held :

The law in regard to grant or refusal of bail is very well settled. The court granting bail should exercise its discretion in a judicious manner and not as a matter of course. Though at the stage of granting bail a detailed examination of evidence and elaborate documentation of the merit of the case need not be undertaken, there is a need to indicate in such orders reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted particularly where the accused is charged of having committed a serious offence. Any order devoid of such reasons would suffer from non-application of mind. Such expression of prima facie reasons for granting bail is a requirement of law in cases where such orders on bail application are appealable, more so because of the fact that the appellate court has every right to know the basis for granting the bail. Therefore, there can be no agreement with the argument that the High Court was not expected even to indicate a prima facie finding on all points urged before it while granting bail, more so in the background of the facts of this case where on facts it is established that a large number of witnesses who were examined after the accused was enlarged on bail had turned hostile and there are complaints made to the court as to the threats administered by the accused or his supporters to witnesses in the case. In such circumstances, the Court was duty-bound to apply its mind to the allegations put forth by the investigating agency and ought to have given at least a prima facie finding in regard to these allegations because they go to the very root of the right of the accused to seek bail. The non-consideration of these vital facts as to the allegations of threat or inducement made to the witnesses by the accused has vitiated the conclusions arrived at by the High Court while granting bail to the accused. (Paras 11 and 18). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977: AIR 2004 SC 1866: 2004 Cri LJ 1796.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2004]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124, followed

(6) Proper exercise of discretionary jurisdiction/disposal of bail application (contd.)

[6748] — S. 439 — A reasoned order is a requirement of law to be complied with in all appealable orders — Grant of bail by High Court by reversing order of Sessions Court without assigning reasons as counsel for the parties did not press for a "reasoned order" — Held, not proper — Deprecating such practice, need for passing a reasoned order particularly where the appellate court is reversing the order of the lower court, emphasised — Bail — Grant of, by reversing the order of lower court without assigning reasons — Propriety of (Para 10). Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157: AIR 2004 SC 1508: 2004 Cri LJ 1364.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2004]

State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singh Talwandi, (1984) 1 SCC 596: 1984 SCC (Cri) 135, relied on

[6749] — S. 439 — Scope of exercise of power by High Court/Supreme Court — Appreciation of evidence — High Court not granting bail — Prima facie findings by High Court or Supreme Court for grant of bail before completion of Sessions trial, held, would be improper as any expression would undoubtedly affect the trial — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 25 and 27

It is for the trial court to consider and appreciate the evidence which comes before it in support of the plea of conspiracy and to arrive at the correct finding. It was an admitted position that the sessions trial had almost come to an end, and there were only few more witnesses to be examined. It would not have been proper for the Supreme Court/High Court hearing bail applications under Section 439 CrPC at that juncture to discuss about prima facie finding. It would not have been proper to discuss the evidence threadbare as any expression would undoubtedly have affected the trial. (Paras 12, 9 and 10). Narayan Ghosh v. State of Orissa, (2008) 3 SCC 693: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 723: AIR 2008 SC 1159: 2008 Cri LJ 1625.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2008]

Jayendra Saraswathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2005) 2 SCC 13: 2005 SCC (Cri) 481, distinguished

[6750] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Grant of, by a cryptic order without taking into consideration the relevant circumstances, held, not proper — Hence, order of High Court granting bail set aside — Matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302

The impugned order is wholly cryptic and has not taken into consideration the relevant circumstances. (Para 7)

The impugned order only states that the contention of the accused is that their names and that of the deceased are not mentioned in the information given in the control room; the deceased was not taken to the hospital by his brother and about the nature of injuries. Attention has been drawn to the order of the Sessions Judge rejecting the bail applications, inter alia, noting therein that the accused are named in the first information report; the FIR was promptly lodged; and that the post-mortem report corroborates the prosecution story. It also notices that there are two eyewitnesses, who are named in the FIR, and the pendency of as many as ten cases against the accused. The Supreme Court would refrain from commenting on what is stated in the said order and hope that all relevant aspects would be considered by the High Court on re-examination of the bail applications. (Paras 6 and 8). Ajay Kumar Sharma v. State of U.P., (2005) 7 SCC 507: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1702.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, B.N. Srikrishna and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2005]

[6751] — S. 439 — Contempt of Supreme Court by High Court — Without good ground, High Court in breach of Supreme Court directions granting bail under S. 439 CrPC, held, would amount to contempt of Supreme Court — Contempt of Courts Act, 1971, S. 2(b) — Constitution of India, Arts. 129 and 144

The impugned judgment of the High Court granting bail to the respondent-accused is set aside. He should be taken into custody forthwith. Bail was granted by the High Court for no good reason except by saying that the appeal is not likely to be heard in six months. If bail is granted on such a ground then bail will have to be granted in almost every case, even when the offence is heinous. Such a view cannot be approved. (Paras 9 and 8)

Despite the clear direction in Rajesh Ranjan Yadav case, (2007) 1 SCC 70 that no further bail application of the accused shall be entertained, the High Court granted bail to the respondent-accused. Said order of the High Court amounts to contempt of order of the Supreme Court. (Para 6). Rabindra Nath Singh v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2010) 6 SCC 417.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2010]

Rajesh Ranjan Yadav v. CBI, (2007) 1 SCC 70: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 254, relied on

[6752] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — After denial by trial court, High Court granting bail must record reasons — Held, where the trial court found material to establish a prima facie case against the respondent-accused and denied bail, High Court ought to at least briefly indicate reasons for reversing the trial court's findings and granting bail — Order of grant of bail by High Court set aside

Since the trial court has assigned reasons for refusing bail which includes availability of material to establish prima facie case against the respondent-accused, and looking to the gravity of the offence as also the apprehension of the complainant as to the possibility of interference by the accused with the investigation and threat to the prosecution witnesses in the event of they being enlarged on bail, it would have been more appropriate if the High Court could have at least briefly indicated the reasons which it thought entitled the respondent-accused to bail. It may be that any strong expression of opinion in the nature of a finding in a bail application by the High Court though not binding on the trial court, could influence the mind of the trial court since such observation comes from the High Court, yet it is appropriate that some indication of the grounds on which the High Court rejected the findings recorded by the trial court, should have been reflected in the order by which the High Court reversed such findings. (Para 5). Ghanchi Rubina Salimbhai v. Metubha Diwansingh Solanki, (2003) 7 SCC 183: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1600: 2003 Cri LJ 3759.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-7-2003]

(7) Temporary/Interim bail

See also under Section 437
See also Section 438

[6753] — S. 439 — In view of medical report and circumstances of case order of High Court granting interim bail to respondent quashed by Supreme Court — High Court directed to dispose of bail application at a very early date and enable the respondent, if so required, to be available for operation — Constitution of India — Art. 136. S.K. Wadhera v. Rajinder Gautam, 1990 Supp SCC 149: 1990 SCC (Cri) 635.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.S. Pathak, C.J. and S. Natarajan and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-1988]

[6754] — S. 439 — Grant of interim bail till final disposal of bail application — Power of Sessions Court in respect of, indicated by a seven-Judge Full Bench judgment in Amarawati case, 2005 Cri LJ 755 (All) — Ignorance of, by Sessions Courts of the State concerned (i.e. U.P.) — Sessions Courts of the said State ignoring the said judgment and not granting interim bail pending disposal of the final bail application even in appropriate cases — Held [per Markandey Katju, J.], this was wholly improper — Hence, direction issued that Amarawati case must be implemented in letter and spirit by the Sessions Courts in the State concerned

The decision of the seven-Judge Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Amarawati case, 2005 Cri LJ 755 (All) mentioned that the Sessions Judge while considering a bail application under Section 439 CrPC can grant interim bail till the final disposal of the bail application subsequently. This will enable innocent persons to avoid going to jail pending consideration of their bail application. However, despite the said judgment, the Sessions Courts in U.P. are ignoring that judgment and are not granting interim bail pending disposal of the final bail application even in appropriate cases. This is wholly improper. Decisions of the Supreme Court and the High Court must be respected and carried out by the subordinate courts punctually and faithfully. It is, therefore, directed that Amarawati case must be implemented in letter and spirit by the Sessions Courts in U.P. and in this connection the Registrar General of the Allahabad High Court will circulate letters to all the District Judges in U.P. along with a copy of this judgment to ensure faithful compliance with the said decision. (Paras 58 and 59). Som Mittal v. Govt. of Karnataka, (2008) 3 SCC 753: (2008) 1 SCC (L&S) 895: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 73: AIR 2008 SC 1126: (2008) 2 LLN 690: (2008) 65 AIC 187 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1610.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

Amarawati v. State of U.P., 2005 Cri LJ 755 (All), approved

[6755] — Ss. 439 and 438 — Interim bail — No allegation of non-cooperation on appellant's part and FIR lodged as far back as in January 2008 — If investigations are still incomplete, the appellant held, would be entitled to interim bail till consideration of regular bail — If charge-sheet is filed, the appellant would surrender and his bail application would be considered in accordance with law — Constitution of India, Art. 136

(7) Temporary/Interim bail (contd.)

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case and bearing in mind the fact that FIR was lodged as far back as in January 2008 and so far no action has been taken against the appellant despite rejection of his prayer for anticipatory bail in July 2008, and further there is no allegation against him regarding non-cooperation in the investigation, the appeal is disposed of with the direction that in the event of filing of charge-sheet against the appellant and on being informed by the Public Prosecutor about the filing of charge-sheet, he shall surrender before the trial court and apply for regular bail. (Para 4)

The application of the appellant for grant of regular bail shall be considered in its correct perspective in accordance with law. However, if the investigations are still incomplete, in the event of his arrest he shall be admitted to bail on his furnishing a personal bond in the sum of Rs 20,000 with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the investigating officer, which will continue to be in force till appropriate orders are passed on the appellant's application for regular bail. (Para 5). Dalip Babulal Tapadia v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 16 SCC 714.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-2009]

[6756] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Interim bail — Grant of — Propriety — Accused conspired in the siphoning off of the funds of a cooperative bank — He undertaking to deposit Rs 15 lakhs immediately and Rs 35 lakhs within six or eight months — He had been in jail for about 22 months — In these circumstances, held, accused to be released on interim bail for a period of six months — High Court to consider continuance of said bail, subject to further developments in the matter — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406, 420, 467 & 120-B — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 3). Babubhai Ratilal Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 12 SCC 536.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Venkatarama Reddi and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2005]

[6757] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Short-term bail — Grant of — Impermissibility — High Court granting accused bail for a period of 4 months on medical grounds and restricting it with a view to keep a watch over his future conduct and activities during the period — Held, if a case for release of the applicant on bail is not otherwise made out, he cannot be released on bail for a limited period only for keeping a watch over his future conduct and activities during the period — However on facts, Supreme Court declining to interfere with the order of High Court as bail was granted on medical grounds, the accused requiring frequent medical attention and freedom granted to him not misused during that period. State of U.P. v. Atique Ahmad, (2002) 9 SCC 401: AIR 2002 SC 2435: 2002 Cri LJ 3238.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Mohapatra and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-10-2001]

(8) Successive/repeated bail applications

See also under Section 437

See also Section 439, '(15) Fresh consideration of application on remand', below

[6758] — S. 439 — Successive bail applications — Judgments of superior court rendered in a lis between same parties — Binding nature of — Supreme Court affirming order refusing bail on four occasions — Further, by a reasoned order it cancelling the bail granted by High Court subsequently — High Court's approach in passing further order granting bail without taking note of the grounds on which the Supreme Court cancelled the bail earlier, held, was violative of the principle of binding nature of judgments of superior court rendered in a lis between the same parties — Constitution of India — Art. 141 (Para 20). Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977: AIR 2004 SC 1866: 2004 Cri LJ 1796.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2004]

[6759] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — After denial by trial court, High Court granting bail must record reasons — Held, where the trial court found material to establish a prima facie case against the respondent-accused and denied bail, High Court ought to at least briefly indicate reasons for reversing the trial court's findings and granting bail — Order of grant of bail by High Court set aside

Since the trial court has assigned reasons for refusing bail which includes availability of material to establish prima facie case against the respondent-accused, and looking to the gravity of the offence as also the apprehension of the complainant as to the possibility of interference by the accused with the investigation and threat to the prosecution witnesses in the event of they being enlarged on bail, it would have been more appropriate if the High Court could have at least briefly indicated the reasons which it thought entitled the respondent-accused to bail. It may be that any strong expression of opinion in the nature of a finding in a bail application by the High Court though not binding on the trial court, could influence the mind of the trial court since such observation comes from the High Court, yet it is appropriate that some indication of the grounds on which the High Court rejected the findings recorded by the trial court, should have been reflected in the order by which the High Court reversed such findings. (Para 5). Ghanchi Rubina Salimbhai v. Metubha Diwansingh Solanki, (2003) 7 SCC 183: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1600: 2003 Cri LJ 3759.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-7-2003]

[6760] — S. 439 — Bail — Interference by a Bench of High Court with an order of grant or rejection of bail passed by a coordinate Bench of same court — Propriety — Long-standing convention and requirements of judicial discipline in such matters restated — Where, on facts, bail was granted to appellant by a Single Judge of High Court, cancellation of it by the other Single Judge on subsequent application of the State, held, was not appropriate — Proper remedy for the party aggrieved by the decision of a High Court Bench is either to approach the appropriate higher forum or to place the matter before the same Judge who made the said decision — Constitution of India — Art. 226

Accused-appellant was released on bail by a Single Judge of the High Court. On a subsequent application moved by the State, bail of the appellant was cancelled by the other Single Judge of the same High Court. The appellant herein challenged the said interference with the decision of a coordinate Bench by the other Judge of the High Court.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

It was not open to the other Judge of the High Court to sit in appeal against the order passed by another coordinate Bench of the same Court. If the accused had obtained the bail order by misrepresentation or by suppression of facts, it was open for the State Government either to approach the appropriate higher forum or to place the matter before the same Judge. (Para 8)

The long-standing convention and judicial discipline require that subsequent application for grant or rejection of bail should be placed before the same Judge who had passed earlier orders. Placing of such matter before the same Judge has its roots in principle as it prevents abuse of process of court inasmuch as an impression is not created that a litigant is shunning or selecting a court depending on whether the court is to his liking or not. Said practice also prevents the filing of subsequent applications without any new factor having been cropped up. Disposal of successive bail applications on the same subject by different Judges, if permitted, would lead to conflicting orders. (Para 9). Harjeet Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 1 SCC 649: 2002 SCC (Cri) 225: AIR 2002 SC 281: 2002 Cri LJ 571: (2002) 1 CHN (Supp) 127.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2001]

Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 684: 1987 SCC (Cri) 415, followed

Vikramjit Singh v. State of M.P., 1992 Supp (3) SCC 62: 1992 SCC (Cri) 964, relied on [6761] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Successive bail applications — Maintainability — Existence of changed circumstances — No change in circumstances under which initial bail application rejected, except the fact that accused had undergone a further period in custody — Hence, appeal filed against order of High Court rejecting the prayer for bail, held, could not be entertained (Para 71). Jamiruddin Ansari v. CBI, (2009) 6 SCC 316.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2009]

[6762] — S. 439 — Bail — Rejection — Fresh bail application — Maintainability — Earlier rejections, held, would not render fresh bail application legally not maintainable — Court can always consider fresh circumstances and subsequent events (Para 2). Parvinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 12 SCC 615.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-2003]

[6763] — S. 439 — Bail — Rejection — Fresh bail application — Maintainability — Fact that SLP filed before Supreme Court against an earlier order of the High Court rejecting bail was dismissed as withdrawn, held, would not make the fresh bail application legally not maintainable — High Court can always consider fresh circumstances and subsequent events (Para 2). Parvinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 12 SCC 615.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-12-2003]

[6764] — S. 439 — Bail — Rejection of earlier bail applications — Subsequent applications for grant of bail — Duty of court while dealing with, held, is to consider the reasons and grounds on which the earlier bail applications were rejected and record the fresh grounds which persuade it to take a view different from the one taken in the earlier applications — On facts, no such fresh ground recorded by the High Court while granting bail on subsequent application — High Court's order set aside — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977: AIR 2004 SC 1866: 2004 Cri LJ 1796.

(8) Successive/repeated bail applications (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-3-2004]

Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598: 2002 SCC (Cri) 688, relied on

[6765] — Ss. 439 and 446-A — Cancellation of bail by High Court — Coordinate Benches deciding differently in case of co-accused — While one bench of the High Court directing the appellant to be released on bail, another bench while considering bail application of another accused observing that the accused persons did not deserve to be enlarged on bail and that these were fit cases where State should apply for cancellation of bail — Accordingly State filing application for cancellation of bail of the accused persons including the appellant for cancellation of their bail quoting the observations of the bench without stating any additional facts or allegations relevant for such cancellation — Application listed before the same bench which had made the observations and the bench by its impugned order cancelling the bail — Held, the bench had no authority to disturb the earlier order of co-ordinate bench of the High Court

The latter bench had no authority to upset the earlier order of the High Court. The judgment of the earlier bench had became final so far the High Court was concerned. If the appellant had misused the bail or new materials came to light, it would have been open to the prosecution to move for cancellation, but that is not the position in the present case. On the basis of the same materials and in the same circumstances in which the order was earlier passed in favour of the appellant by the High Court, the application for cancellation was made entirely as a sequel of the observations made by the latter bench while dealing with the application of another accused.

No bench can comment on the functioning of a co-ordinate bench of the same court, much less sit in judgment as an appellate court over its decision. That which could not be done directly could also not be done indirectly. Otherwise, a party aggrieved by an order passed by one bench of the High Court would be tempted to attempt to get the matter reopened before another bench, and there would not be any end to such attempts. Besides, it was not consistent with the judicial discipline which must be maintained by courts both in the interest of administration of justice by assuring the binding nature of an order which becomes final, and the faith of the people in the judiciary. Vikramjit Singh v. State of M.P., 1992 Supp (3) SCC 62: 1992 SCC (Cri) 964: AIR 1992 SC 474: 1992 Cri LJ 516.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: L.M. Sharma and J.S. Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-1991]

[6766] — S. 439 — Bail refused by a Judge of High Court — Subsequently accused moving another application for bail on ground of serious illness of his wife disclosing therein refusal of his previous application — Another Judge of the High Court granting provisional bail on that application — Judge who had earlier refused bail, suo motu causing the matter to be placed before him and cancelling the provisional bail order without any application being moved in that behalf by Public Prosecutor or Government counsel, without granting short adjournment prayed for by accused's counsel for obtaining accused's instructions and without issuing any show-cause notice to the Public Prosecutor or to the Government — Held, action bad and inconsistent with the high office of High Court Judge. Dara Gaddi v. State of Bihar, (1986) 4 SCC 564: 1986 SCC (Cri) 543.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J. and Ranganath Misra, J. [Date of decision: 3-9-1986]

(9) Conditions for bail

[6767] — S. 439 — Condition for granting bail should not be so excessively onerous as to amount to denial of bail itself — In such case Supreme Court can modify the conditions under Art. 136 — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Keshab Narayan Banerjee v. State of Bihar, AIR 1985 SC 1666.

Bench Strength 1. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah, J. [Date of decision: 11-7-1984]

[6768] — S. 439 — Conditional release on bail — Offence under Ss. 463, 467, 461, 419 r/w S. 120-B IPC — Accused in custody for about 1 year — Charge-sheet filed — Having regard to the fact that the trial may take long time, Supreme Court releasing accused on bail imposing certain conditions on him due to the alleged links he had with international terrorists — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 463, 467, 461, 419 r/w S. 120-B. Mehmood Mohd. Sayeed v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 10 SCC 677: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1144: AIR 2002 SC 482.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-2-2001]

[6769] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Imposition of conditions while granting bail — Condition to pay Rs 5 lakhs to complainant — Propriety of — Forbidding the High Court from imposing such a condition, High Court directed to consider the matter of grant of bail afresh — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 6). Geetha v. State of T.N., (2005) 12 SCC 203.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-4-2005]

(10) Matters at large/Orders/Directions that may be passed

[6770] — S. 439 — Bail — Right of appellant to pray for, as and when he intends to — High Court cannot debar him from exercising his right for any period (one year in this case) — High Court may or may not entertain the bail petition but it cannot prevent an accused from seeking him release on bail. Manjoor Khan v. State of Bihar, (1998) 8 SCC 368: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1541.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1997]

[6771] — S. 439 — Direction by the High Court to the Sessions Judge not to entertain any bail application of appellant — Propriety of — High Court, while disposing of the matter in habeas corpus petition, ordering that no application for bail was to be entertained by the Sessions Judge or any other court except the High Court or the Apex Court — The jurisdiction of a Sessions Judge under CrPC to entertain a bail application and dispose of it in accordance with law, held, cannot be taken away by the High Court — Irrespective of the facts, the right of an accused to move an application for bail cannot be curtailed in the manner as done in this case. Shankar Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (2002) 7 SCC 735: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1859.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-8-2002]

[6772] — S. 439 — Once bail is refused, Magistrate, held, not entitled to stay issuance of non-bailable warrant to enable the accused to move to higher court — CrPC, 1898, S. 498. Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 1980 SC 785: 1980 Cri LJ 426: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 573.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1980]

[6773] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Improper observations made by High Court in order rejecting bail regarding the nature of offence — Expunction of — Police filing final report under S. 174 CrPC alleging that offences under Ss. 304-A and 498-A IPC were made out — High Court vide impugned order making observations that material on record indicated that torture was being committed and it was not a case under S. 304-A but a case under S. 302 IPC and, therefore, it declining to grant bail — Held, High Court should not have made such passing observation — Matter should have been left to the appropriate court to take any decision on the materials produced before it — If the superior courts make any such observation the subordinate courts would be unduly swayed by it and may implicitly take certain decision without there being any proper application of mind — Hence, the aforesaid observations deleted — As regards bail, appellant directed to approach the High Court by way of a fresh application (Paras 4 to 6). Hitesh Verma v. State of Jharkhand, (2005) 13 SCC 174: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 133.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-9-2005]

[6774] — Ss. 439 and 438 — Bail application — Matter/Claim which cannot be adjudicated therein — Cheating and conspiracy — *Allegation that accused obtained money from complainants for sending them abroad — N (one of the accused) depositing in court the amount claimed in complaint to show his bona fides for the purpose of obtaining bail — Amount deposited was to be paid to complainants only on settlement between the parties — No settlement arrived at — Nature of claim, a civil dispute — Held, the High Court erred in allowing complainants' application filed in bail petition of the appellants (accused other than N) whereby they sought disbursement of the said amount to them — In a bail application, it could not have adjudicated upon the rights between the parties in regard to the amount in deposit — Impugned directions might also prejudice the defence of the accused — Amount in question directed to be kept in interest-bearing account till appropriate orders were passed by the competent court in this regard — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420 and 120-*B

While accepting the deposit, the Magistrate had made it clear that the amount in question would be paid to the complainants only if a settlement is arrived at. He had also directed that in the event of no settlement being arrived at within the time stipulated in his order the amount in question should be kept in interest-bearing deposit. The fact that there was no settlement between the parties is not in dispute. Even an attempt to settle the dispute through the Lok Adalat has failed. Therefore, the claim of the complainants for the amount in deposit being in the nature of a civil dispute, the High Court ought not to have directed the payment. The High Court in a bail application could not have adjudicated upon the rights between the parties in regard to the amount in deposit and the impugned directions might also prejudice the defence of the accused. Hence, the impugned orders are set aside. The amount in question be kept in interest-bearing deposit in a nationalised bank till such time as appropriate orders are passed by the competent court in this regard. (Paras 12, 13 and 15) . Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2004) 13 SCC 289: 2005 SCC (Cri) 208.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-9-2004]

(11) Cancellation of bail

See also under Section 437

[6775] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Grant/cancellation of bail — Consideration — If different — Held, different considerations have to be weighed while dealing with applications for cancellation of bail and for grant of bail respectively (Para 4). Ramcharan v. State of M.P., (2004) 13 SCC 617.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2003]

[6776] — Ss. 439 and 389 — Bail — Cancellation of — Considerations involved — Appeal filed against acquittal — Cancellation of bail pending the appeal — Impropriety — On appeal being filed by State against acquittal of the accused conditional bail granted to accused — Cancellation of bail, arrest of accused and confinement in custody ordered by High Court on violation of condition imposed for grant of bail — Application for condonation of said violation and grant of bail also rejected by impugned order — Propriety — Held, effect of impugned order is that despite acquittal, respondent remained in jail for six months — This itself shows that said order cannot be sustained by any reasoning (Para 2). Sitaram v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2004) 13 SCC 672.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-8-2004]

[6777] — S. 439 — Bail — Cancellation of — Parameters regarding grant/cancellation of bail, restated — Only because co-accused did not actually oppose prayer for cancellation of bail, held, could not be a ground to cancel bail — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 307/34 (Paras 5 and 6). Ram Babu Tiwari v. State of M.P., (2009) 12 SCC 471.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2009]

Dinesh M.N. (S.P.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 508, relied on [6778] — S. 439 — Bail — Cancellation of — Nature and exercise of judicial discretion in matters of — Principles to be considered — Respondent released on bail on furnishing of surety — Bail of respondent cancelled by High Court for non-appearance at time of hearing of bail application and for threatening appellant and violation of conditions of bail — Whether on facts warranted — Held, cancellation of bail should not be done in a routine manner — Where it appears to the superior court inter alia that the court granting bail acted on irrelevant materials or there was non-application of mind or where court does not take note of any statutory bar to grant of bail, order for cancellation of bail can be made — These circumstances are illustrative and not exhaustive — Court considering the application for cancellation of bail has to take note of all relevant aspects — Single Judge did not give any reasons for the cancellation and seems to have taken exception for non-appearance of the appellant at the time of hearing of the application for cancellation of bail — The reason for non-appearance has been explained by the respondent — It is also true that in the order granting bail there was no specific stipulation of any condition — Hence question of its violation did not arise — Furthermore, considering the nature of injuries allegedly caused by the respondent — Matter therefore remanded to High Court for fresh consideration (Paras 4 and 7). Rizwan Akbar Hussain Syyed v. Mehmood Hussain, (2007) 10 SCC 368: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 598: (2007) 56 AIC 248 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

[6779] — S. 439 — Cancellation of bail — Grounds for — High Court cancelling bail granted by Sessions Court on the ground that the accused had simultaneously made application for bail to the High Court and this was not disclosed to the Sessions Court — Bail restored as there was no allegation of interference with the course of justice. Mohan Singh v. UT, Chandigarh, (1978) 2 SCC 366: 1978 SCC (Cri) 190: AIR 1978 SC 1095: 1978 Cri LJ 844.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, Jaswant Singh and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-1978]

[6780] — S. 439 — Irrelevant materials considered — Cancellation of bail on ground of — Held, though reappreciation of the evidence as done by the court granting bail is to be avoided, the court dealing with an application for cancellation of bail under S. 439(2) can consider whether irrelevant materials were taken into consideration because it is not known as to what extent the irrelevant materials weighed with the court for accepting the prayer for bail — However, the irrelevant material so considered which adds to the vulnerability of the bail order should be of a substantial nature and not a trivial nature (Paras 10 to 12). Manjit Prakash v. Shobha Devi, (2009) 13 SCC 785: AIR 2008 SC 3032: (2008) 68 AIC 107 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3908.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-7-2008]

Mehboob Dawood Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 2 SCC 362: 2004 SCC (Cri) 551; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124, relied on

[6781] — S. 439 — Cancellation of bail — When warranted — Murder case — Husband, wife and others involved — Bail of husband cancelled on ground of interfering with the investigation and threatening witnesses — Wife's bail also cancelled since she would then do the same

In this case the High Court has failed to deal with the vast material placed by CBI which clearly indicated that the accused has, at all material times, tried to interfere with the course of investigation, tamper with witnesses, fabricate evidence, intimidate or create obstacles in the path of investigation officers and derail the case. The High Court granted bail being of the opinion that the extra-judicial confession given by R may not stand the test of scrutiny by a judicial mind but that by itself was not sufficient to grant the bail. There is voluminous evidence collected by CBI to show the involvement of AT in crime, and his effort to interfere with the investigation of the case before the grant of bail and also after the grant of bail. He tried to change the course of investigation by creating false evidence of the marriage of M with one AM. AT after his release on bail tried to threaten as well as win over sister of the deceased and her mother by offering bribe. The police officers who refused to toe the line of AT were transferred at his instance. It is also not in dispute that AT was on bail in a kidnapping case, when he indulged in the activities in question. Therefore, the High Court gravely erred in granting bail to AT in such circumstances. (Paras 26, 31 and 24)

The position of MT is somewhat different from the case of her husband AT. While AT is a politician and ex-Minister, MT is no doubt a housewife. In comparison to AT, there is no record of criminal cases against MT and there is nothing to show that she made any attempt to tamper with the evidence. But there is material to show that she had absconded for several months and surrendered only when bail was refused to her husband on the ground that she was absconding. Further, when the matter is considered in its entirety, with reference to the murder of M and the propensity of AT and MT to pressurise and persuade others to act according to their wishes, there is reasonable ground for apprehension that if AT alone is taken into custody; leaving MT to remain outside, MT may take over the task of tampering with the evidence and manipulating/threatening witnesses. Therefore, interference is called for even in regard to the bail granted to MT. (Para 32)

Hence, the High Court's order is set aside. The bail bonds of the respondents AT and MT are cancelled. (Para 33). State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2): AIR 2005 SC 3490: (2005) 123 DLT 362: 2005 Cri LJ 4149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2005]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237; Samarendra Nath Bhattacharjee v. State of W.B., (2004) 11 SCC 165: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 7, explained and distinguished [6782] — Ss. 439, 437 and 389 — Cancellation of bail — Grounds — Held, bail can be cancelled on existence of cogent and overwhelming circumstances but not on reappreciation of the facts of the case — Hence, in the absence of any supervening circumstances which might warrant recalling of the order which granted bail, suo motu cancellation of bail by the High Court merely on the ground that the bail order was passed on some misapprehension of factual position, held, not sustainable (Paras 4 and 5). Ramcharan v. State of M.P., (2004) 13 SCC 617.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2003]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237, relied on [6783] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Cancellation of bail, by Supreme Court — When justified — Where basic requirements necessary for grant of bail are completely ignored by High Court, held, Supreme Court would be justified in cancelling the bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 24). Gobarbhai Naranbhai Singala v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 3 SCC 775: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 743: AIR 2008 SC 1134: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2192: 2008 Cri LJ 1618.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-1-2008]

[6784] — Ss. 439 & 437 — Cancellation of bail by Supreme Court — Bail — Scope of interference — General rule and exceptions — Held, the general rule that the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere in matters relating to bail, is subject to

(11) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

exceptions where there are special circumstances and when the basic requirements for grant of bail are completely ignored by the High Court — AT, a politician and ex-Minister, and his wife MT along with others hatching conspiracy to commit murder in question — Grant of bail by High Court to AT and MT merely on ground that extra-judicial confession made by co-accused implicating them in crime was inadmissible in evidence, held, not proper — Material on record disclosing prima facie existence of the aforesaid conspiracy — AT from the day of murder trying to interfere, detract and mislead the investigation and to threaten and coerce witnesses — Reasonable ground for apprehension that the wife MT, if not taken in custody, might take over the task of tampering with the evidence and manipulating/threatening witnesses — Therefore held, it was necessary to interfere with High Court's order — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 24 — Constitution of India — Art. 136

One M was shot dead in her house by two persons. Investigation in the case revealed that M was killed pursuant to a conspiracy involving AT (a politician and ex-Minister) and his wife MT.

The prosecution alleged that AT was having an affair with M. This led to M's pregnancy thrice. On the first two occasions, the pregnancy was aborted at the instance of AT. On the third occasion, in spite of pressure and persuasion by AT, M refused to abort the pregnancy. The post-mortem revealed a six-month-old foetus in her womb. The DNA test of the foetus established the paternity of AT.

MT was upset when she learnt about the illicit intimacy between AT and M. She made several calls to the deceased and her family members to threaten and abuse them. Later, she informed R (cousin of AT) that she was troubled by her husband's relationship with M and requested him to help her to teach a "lesson" to M. R contacted one S and hired him for committing the murder of M. MT asked S to finish M at any cost. AT told R that M must be eliminated in such a manner that his name must not be linked to that incident. On 9-5-2003, S along with one P went to the house of M and shot her with a country-made pistol (katta) from close range, resulting in her death.

The facts disclosed that AT was interfering with the investigation, by trying to sidetrack it and mislead the police into a false trail, planting false stories in the media, creating false evidence and threatening witnesses either directly or by using the police. He even managed to get the police officers (including an officer of the rank of SSP) who were not toeing his line, transferred. MT surrendered before the court when the bail application of her husband was rejected on the ground that she was absconding.

Despite the said facts and circumstances, the High Court granted bail to AT and MT. Hence the present appeals by the State.

Held :

The general rule that the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere in matters relating to bail, is subject to exceptions where there are special circumstances and when the basic requirements for grant of bail are completely ignored by the High Court. (Para 21)

The matters to be considered in an application for bail are (i) whether there is any prima facie or reasonable ground to believe that the accused had committed the offence; (ii) nature and gravity of the charge; (iii) severity of the punishment in the event of conviction; (iv) danger of the accused absconding or fleeing, if released on bail; (v) character, behaviour, means, position and standing of the accused; (vi) likelihood of the offence being repeated; (vii) reasonable apprehension of the witnesses being tampered with; and (viii) danger, of course, of justice being thwarted by grant of bail. While a vague allegation that the accused may tamper with the evidence or witnesses may not be a ground to refuse bail, if the accused is of such character that his mere presence at large would intimidate the witnesses or if there is material to show that he will use his liberty to subvert justice or tamper with the evidence, then bail will be refused. (Para 18)

In this case the High Court has failed to deal with the vast material placed by CBI which clearly indicated that the accused has, at all material times, tried to interfere with the course of investigation, tamper with witnesses, fabricate evidence, intimidate or create obstacles in the path of investigation officers and derail the case. The High Court granted bail being of the opinion that the extra-judicial confession given by R may not stand the test of scrutiny by a judicial mind but that by itself was not sufficient to grant the bail. There is voluminous evidence collected by CBI to show the involvement of AT in crime, and his effort to interfere with the investigation of the case before the grant of bail and also after the grant of bail. He tried to change the course of investigation by creating false evidence of the marriage of M with one AM. AT after his release on bail tried to threaten as well as win over sister of the deceased and her mother by offering bribe. The police officers who refused to toe the line of AT were transferred at his instance. It is also not in dispute that AT was on bail in a kidnapping case, when he indulged in the activities in question. Therefore, the High Court gravely erred in granting bail to AT in such circumstances. (Paras 26, 31 and 24). State of U.P. v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1960 (2): AIR 2005 SC 3490: (2005) 123 DLT 362: 2005 Cri LJ 4149.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2005]

Pawan v. Ram Prakash Pandey, (2002) 9 SCC 166: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1110; Ram Pratap Yadav v. Mitra Sen Yadav, (2003) 1 SCC 15: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Prahlad Singh Bhati v. NCT, Delhi, (2001) 4 SCC 280: 2001 SCC (Cri) 674; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977, relied on

[6785] — Ss. 439 and 446-A — Cancellation of bail by High Court — Coordinate Benches deciding differently in case of co-accused — While one bench of the High Court directing the appellant to be released on bail, another bench while considering bail application of another accused observing that the accused persons did not deserve to be enlarged on bail and that these were fit cases where State should apply for cancellation of bail — Accordingly State filing application for cancellation of bail of the accused persons including the appellant for cancellation of their bail quoting the observations of the bench without stating any additional facts or allegations relevant for such cancellation — Application listed before the same bench which had made the observations and the bench by its impugned order cancelling the bail — Held, the bench had no authority to disturb the earlier order of co-ordinate bench of the High Court

The latter bench had no authority to upset the earlier order of the High Court. The judgment of the earlier bench had became final so far the High Court was concerned. If the appellant had misused the bail or new materials came to light, it would have been open to the prosecution to move for cancellation, but that is not the position in the present case. On the basis of the same materials and in the same circumstances in which the order was earlier passed in favour of the appellant by the High Court, the application for cancellation was made entirely as a sequel of the observations made by the latter bench while dealing with the application of another accused.

No bench can comment on the functioning of a co-ordinate bench of the same court, much less sit in judgment as an appellate court over its decision. That which could not be done directly could also not be done indirectly. Otherwise, a party aggrieved by an order passed by one bench of the High Court would be tempted to attempt to get the matter reopened before another bench, and there would not be any end to such attempts. Besides, it was not consistent with the judicial discipline which must be maintained by courts both in the interest of administration of justice by assuring the binding nature of an order which becomes final, and the faith of the people in the judiciary. Vikramjit Singh v. State of M.P., 1992 Supp (3) SCC 62: 1992 SCC (Cri) 964: AIR 1992 SC 474: 1992 Cri LJ 516.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: L.M. Sharma and J.S. Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-9-1991]

[6786] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of, by High Court — Cancellation by Supreme Court — Several cases involving serious offences already pending against accused — Some of them committed while on bail in other cases — Offences in question also committed while on bail — Bail granted in one of the earlier cases cancelled by Sessions Court on the ground of violation of conditions of bail — Considering the above facts and the nature of allegation and weapon used in the crime in question, held, it was a fit case to cancel the bail (Para 9). Omar Usman Chamadia v. Abdul, (2004) 13 SCC 234: 2005 SCC (Cri) 157: AIR 2004 SC 1508: 2004 Cri LJ 1364.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2004]

Followed in Deepak Singchi v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 14 SCC 583*

[6787] — Ss. 439(2) and 437 — Bail — Cancellation of — Ingredients to be considered by superior court while exercising discretion in matters of — Held, if a superior court finds that court granting bail had acted on irrelevant material, or if there was non-application of mind or failure to take note of any statutory bar to grant bail, or if there was manifest impropriety e.g. failure to hear Public Prosecutor/complainant where required, order for cancellation of bail can be made (Para 16). Subodh Kumar Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2009) 14 SCC 638: (2009) 80 AIC 74 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-7-2009]

Gajanand Agarwal v. State of Orissa, (2006) 12 SCC 131: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 568; Rizwan Akbar Hussain Syyed v. Mehmood Hussain, (2007) 10 SCC 368: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 598, relied on

[6788] — S. 439(2) — Applicability — Held, application for cancellation of bail must be premised on the factors envisaged under S. 439(2) — On facts, held, High Court committed a manifest illegality in directing cancellation of bail of appellants — Metropolitan Magistrate in passing the order while granting bail had taken into consideration all the relevant factors — He imposed a fine on appellants — Even the passports were surrendered — Application for cancellation of bail was filed by S, wife, on a misstatement that the passports had not been surrendered — Various contentions, in regard to purported suffering of the wife was taken into consideration which were wholly irrelevant (Paras 37 and 38). Vimlaben Ajitbhai Patel v. Vatslaben Ashokbhai Patel, (2008) 4 SCC 649: AIR 2008 SC 2675: (2008) 65 AIC 38 (SC).

(11) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-2008]

Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41; Bhagirathsinh v. State of Gujarat, (1984) 1 SCC 284: 1984 SCC (Cri) 63; Jayendra Saraswathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., (2005) 2 SCC 13: 2005 SCC (Cri) 481; Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 12 SCC 1: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 259, relied on

[6789] — S. 439(2) — Bail — Cancellation — Right of third parties to invoke suo motu power of High Court for — High Court has power to direct arrest of a person who had earlier been released on bail by the same High Court on judicial consideration and to commit him to custody — Held, power can also be exercised by High Court suo motu — Hence any member of the public can maintain a petition before the High Court reminding it of the need to exercise its suo motu power in a particular case — Where on Single Judge of High Court having granted bail to certain persons, a group of practising advocates presented petitions before Chief Justice of the High Court seeking initiation of suo motu proceedings for cancellation of bail by posting the petitions before a Division Bench of the High Court and accordingly the matter was placed before a Division Bench, held, the Division Bench erred in refusing to exercise its suo motu power on the ground that the petition submitted by the advocates was not maintainable

The frame of sub-section (2) of Section 439 indicates that it is a power conferred on the said courts. Exercise of that power is not banned on the premise that bail was earlier granted by the High Court on judicial consideration. In fact the power can be exercised only in respect of a person who was released on bail by an order already passed. There is nothing to indicate that the said power can be exercised only if the State or investigating agency or even a Public Prosecutor moves for it by a petition. The power so vested in the High Court can be invoked either by the State or by any aggrieved party. The said power can also be exercised suo motu by the High Court. If so, any member of the public, whether he belongs to any particular profession or otherwise, who has a concern in the matter can move the High Court to remind it of the need to invoke the said power suo motu. There is no barrier either in Section 439 of the Code or in any other law which inhibits a person from moving the High Court to have such powers exercised suo motu. If the High Court considers that there is no need to cancel the bail for the reasons stated in such petition, after making such considerations it is open to the High Court to dismiss the petition. If that is the position, it is also open to the High Court to cancel the bail if the High Court feels that the reasons stated in the petition are sufficient enough for doing so. It is, therefore, improper to refuse to look into the matter on the premise that such a petition is not maintainable in law. (Para 8)

Every matter to be decided by a High Court is normally decided by a two-Judge Bench of the High Court. For achieving expediency in disposal of cases, statutes have provided that certain categories of cases can be heard and disposed of by Single Judges of the High Court. But it must be pointed out that all matters which can be heard and decided by a Single Judge, can as well be heard and decided by a Division Bench but not vice versa, subject to statutory restrictions passed by the legislature. It is the prerogative of the Chief Justice of a High Court to allot cases to different Judges of the High Court for disposal, subject to such statutory provisions. (Para 9)

Though the aforesaid position has not been deviated from by the Division Bench of the Madras High Court it is necessary to remind all concerned of the legal principles involving the prerogative of a Chief Justice. The Division Bench has gone wrong in holding that the petition submitted by the advocates concerned was not maintainable at all. Refusing to exercise the suo motu powers contemplated in Section 439(2) cannot be on such a fallacious premise. The Division Bench ought to have considered the petitions on merits. (Para 11). R. Rathinam v. State, (2000) 2 SCC 391: 2000 SCC (Cri) 958: AIR 2000 SC 1851.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-2-2000]

State of Rajasthan v. Prakash Chand, (1998) 1 SCC 1, relied on [6790] — S. 439(2) — Bail — Cancellation of — Cancellation of bail by Sessions Judge after taking into consideration all the relevant facts and coming to the conclusion that cancellation of bail was necessary in order to maintain terror-free atmosphere during the proceedings — High Court not justified in interfering with order of the Sessions Judge. Sant Ram v. State of Haryana, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 205: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1217.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.B. Sawant and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1993]

[6791] — S. 439(2) — Bail — Cancellation of — Held, not to be lightly resorted to — Conditions in which bail can be cancelled, restated — On facts, accused-appellant threatening the witnesses in court premises with dire consequences — Case registered in respect thereof under S. 188 IPC — Affidavit filed by Police Inspector concerned stating the said facts — Nothing urged by way of reply to the affidavit or the truth or otherwise to the contents thereof before the High Court — Cancellation of bail by High Court, held on facts, proper

Rejection of bail stands on one footing, but cancellation of bail is a harsh order because it takes away the liberty of an individual granted and is not to be lightly resorted to. (Para 8)

When a person to whom bail has been granted either tries to interfere with the course of justice or attempts to tamper with evidence or witnesses or threatens witnesses or indulges in similar activities which would hamper smooth investigation or trial, bail granted can be cancelled. (Para 8)

In the affidavit of the Police Inspector attached to Control Room, Solapur, it has been clearly mentioned that a case (CR No. 3097 of 2003) was registered under Section 188 IPC in relation to the threat. Further, it is fairly accepted by learned counsel for the appellant that nothing seemed to have been urged by way of reply to the affidavit or the truth or otherwise to the contents thereof before the High Court. That being so, the appellant cannot make a grievance that no enquiry was made to find out the truth or otherwise of the statement made in the affidavit. As there were allegations prima facie showing that the witnesses have been threatened, a ground for cancellation of bail did exist. (Paras 9 and 10). Mehboob Dawood Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 2 SCC 362: 2004 SCC (Cri) 551: (2004) 2 KLT 812: 2004 Cri LJ 1359.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-2004]

Aslam Babalal Desai v. State of Maharashtra, (1992) 4 SCC 272: 1992 SCC (Cri) 870, followed

[6792] — S. 439(2) — Bail — Cancellation of — Relevant considerations for, restated — Consideration of merits of order granting bail — Permissibility of — Appeal under a special enactment (POTA in this case), against an order granting bail — Relevancy of said considerations — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, S. 34

While hearing an application for cancellation of bail under Section 439(2) CrPC, the courts generally do not examine the merits of the order granting bail. What is normally relevant to be examined in such a proceeding is whether the accused is trying to tamper with the evidence subsequent to his release on bail or has threatened the witnesses or has committed any other offence while on bail or is trying to adopt dilatory tactics resulting in delay of trial or has absconded or that the offence committed by him has created serious law and order problem. The court has to see as to whether the accused has misused the privilege of bail granted to him. Only in exceptional cases where the order granting bail is vitiated by any serious infirmity and in the interest of justice it becomes necessary to interfere with the discretion exercised in granting bail that the order would be interfered with on merits. (Para 9)

In view of the express language used in sub-section (1) of Section 34 of POTA, the appeal against the order granting bail in offences under POTA would lie before the High Court both on facts and law. In such case, even an order granting bail can be examined on merits by the High Court without any kind of fetters on its powers and it can come to an independent conclusion whether the accused deserves to be released on bail on the merits of the case. The considerations which are generally relevant in the matter of cancellation of bail under Section 439(2) CrPC, will not come in the way of the High Court in setting aside an order of the Special Court granting bail. (Para 11). State of Gujarat v. Salimbhai Abdulgaffar Shaikh, (2003) 8 SCC 50: AIR 2003 SC 3224.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2003]

[6793] — S. 439(2) — Bail — Practice of High Court to grant bail with effect from a future date ranging between six months to one year deprecated — Matter remitted back to the High Court for individual consideration on merits of each case. Dasharath Pandey v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (3) SCC 551: 1995 SCC (Cri) 991.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-1995]

[6794] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — Murder of District Magistrate by members of an unlawful assembly — Allegation against the respondent, an MLA (Anand Mohan), that he exhorted the co-accused to kill him who fired shots from his pistol resulting in death of the District Magistrate — Held, in the circumstances of the case, High Court not justified in granting bail to the respondent — Bail cancelled but respondent given liberty to move the trial court for grant of bail at a stage when recording of evidence of eyewitnesses is completed. State of Bihar v. Akhlakh Ahmed, (1998) 8 SCC 743.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-1-1996]

(11) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

[6795] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — Dowry death/Bride burning — Where appellant was charged under Ss. 498-A and 304-B IPC, held on facts, High Court had given adequate reasons for cancellation of bail where, after giving a brief outline of evidence and indicating what had been found at the scene of the offence, as well as the nature of the injuries (electric burns), it had noted that on the face of it evidence indicated that dowry (of Rs 1 lakh) had been demanded (one month prior to death of wife of appellant) and had concluded that appellant's case was not a fit one for grant of bail

The appellant, P, was charged with offences under Sections 498-A and 304-B of the Penal Code arising out of the death of his wife on 2-9-2000, within one year of their marriage. Three female relatives were also charged. These three women were granted bail on 11-9-2000 and a petition against that order was dismissed. P was granted bail on 13-11-2000 by the Sessions Court. However, by order dated 24-1-2001 the High Court allowed the petition of the father of the deceased for cancellation of P's bail.

On the face of it the evidence indicated inter alia that a dowry of Rs 5 lakh had been demanded at the time of the marriage; that the bride's father had spent Rs 7 lakhs on the marriage; that only a month before the death of P's wife Rs 1 lakh had been demanded; at the time of her death she was eight months' pregnant; she was not wearing any jewellery at all. There were extensive electric burn injuries on her left hand and over the right supramammary region.

Before the Supreme Court it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the observation of the High Court that the Sessions Judge had not given any reasons and had not referred to any material circumstances on record when allowing bail was not justified. The same Sessions Judge while granting bail to the three female accused in the case had given detailed reasons, had examined the evidence closely and had even discussed its merits and demerits. In its order rejecting the challenge to the bail granted to the three women, the High Court had reminded the lower court that a detailed examination of the evidence and discussion of merits ought not to be carried out in the course of passing orders in bail applications. On this basis, it was submitted on behalf of the appellant that the Sessions Judge could not and did not give reasons for granting bail; it was also contended that a third party could not move for cancellation of bail where the prosecution had not so moved. It was also contended that the High Court could not order cancellation of bail in exercise of powers under Section 482 CrPC as an order granting bail was an interlocutory order and that the High Court could not sit in appeal or revision over a Sessions Court's order under Section 439(2) as for the purposes of that section the High Court and Court of Session were coordinate courts.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Giving reasons is different from discussing merits or demerits. At the stage of granting bail a detailed examination of evidence and elaborate documentation of the merits of the case has not to be undertaken. What the Additional Sessions Judge had done in the order dated 11-9-2000 was to discuss the merits and demerits of the evidence. That was what was deprecated. That did not mean that whilst granting bail some reasons for prima facie concluding why bail was being granted did not have to be indicated. (Para 8)

The High Court has correctly not gone into merits or demerits of the matter. The High Court has noted that the evidence prima facie indicated demand of dowry. The High Court has briefly indicated the evidence on record and what was found at the scene of the offence. The High Court has indicated that the evidence prima facie indicated that a demand for Rs 1 lakh was made just a month prior to the incident in question. The High Court has stated that the material on record suggested that the offences under Sections 498-A and 304-B were prima facie disclosed. The High Court has concluded that the material on record, the nature of injuries, demand for Rs 1 lakh and the other circumstances were such that this was not a fit case for granting bail. Thus the High Court has given very cogent reasons why bail should not have been granted and why this unjustified erroneous order granting bail should be cancelled. (Para 9)

In this case the High Court has cancelled bail for very valid and cogent reasons. Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124: AIR 2001 SC 2023: 2001 Cri LJ 2566.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2001]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237, relied on

[6796] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — Grounds for — Held, an order granting bail passed by ignoring material and evidence on record and without giving reasons, would be perverse and contrary to principles of law — Such an order would itself provide a ground for moving an application for cancellation of bail — Such ground for cancellation is different from the ground that the accused misconducted himself or some new facts call for cancellation

Generally speaking, the grounds for cancellation of bail are interference or attempt to interfere with the due course of administration of justice or evasion or attempt to evade the due course of justice or abuse of the concession granted to the accused in any manner. However, these instances are merely illustrative and not exhaustive. One such ground for cancellation of bail would be where ignoring material and evidence on record a perverse order granting bail is passed in a heinous crime of this nature and that too without giving any reasons. Such an order would be against principles of law. Interest of justice would also require that such a perverse order be set aside and bail be cancelled. It must be remembered that such offences are on the rise and have a very serious impact on the society. Therefore, an arbitrary and wrong exercise of discretion by the trial court has to be corrected. (Para 10)

Further, it is to be kept in mind that the concept of setting aside the unjustified illegal or perverse order is totally different from the concept of cancelling the bail on the ground that the accused has misconducted himself or because of some new facts requiring such cancellation. (Para 11). Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124: AIR 2001 SC 2023: 2001 Cri LJ 2566.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2001]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237; Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118: 1978 SCC (Cri) 41: AIR 1978 SC 179, relied on

Subhendu Mishra v. Subrat Kumar Mishra, 2000 SCC (Cri) 1508: 1999 Cri LJ 4063; State (Delhi Admn.) v. Sanjay Gandhi, (1978) 2 SCC 411: 1978 SCC (Cri) 223; Bhagirathsinh v. State of Gujarat, (1984) 1 SCC 284: 1984 SCC (Cri) 63, distinguished

[6797] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — Irrelevant material — Degree of irrelevancy — Held, bail can be cancelled if material(s) on which bail is granted are/is substantially irrelevant

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The order of granting bail to the appellant was certainly vulnerable. The accused cannot take a plea while applying for bail that the person whom he killed was a hardened criminal. That certainly is not a factor which can be taken into account. The perversity as highlighted in Puran case, (2001) 6 SCC 338 can flow from the fact that irrelevant materials have been taken into consideration adding vulnerability to the order granting bail. The irrelevant materials should be of a substantial nature and not of a trivial nature. In the instant case, the trial court seems to have been swayed by the fact that S had shady reputation and criminal antecedents. That is not certainly a factor which is to be considered while granting bail. It is the nature of the acts of offence which ought to have been considered. (Paras 27 and 25)

Once it is concluded that bail was granted on untenable grounds, the plea of absence of supervening circumstances has no leg to stand. Irrelevant materials have been taken into account and relevant materials have been kept out of consideration. An FIR was allegedly lodged to divert attention from the fake encounter. The same was not lodged by the Gujarat Police. The accused was the leader of the Rajasthan team and AR, one of the arrested officers had lodged the FIR. The relevance of these factors were kept out of consideration while granting bail. (Paras 26 and 27)

Even though reappreciation of the evidence as done by the court granting bail is to be avoided, the court dealing with an application for cancellation of bail under Section 439(2) CrPC can consider whether irrelevant materials were taken into consideration. That is so because it is not known as to what extent the irrelevant materials weighed with the court for accepting the prayer for bail. (Para 23). Dinesh M.N. (S.P.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 2008 SC 2318: 2008 Cri LJ 3008: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2310.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2008]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977, relied on

[6798] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — Parameters for grant of and cancellation of bail are different — Court dealing with cancellation application required to find whether irrelevant material of substantial nature was taken into account or relevant material omitted from consideration, while granting bail — If so, order granting bail would be perverse, justifying cancellation — However, court should avoid reappreciation of evidence — Accused, a senior IPS officer was charged in a fake encounter case — While granting bail shady reputation and criminal antecedents of the deceased considered — On facts held, irrelevant materials had been taken into consideration and/or relevant materials omitted from consideration while granting bail to appellant — Hence High Court was justified in cancelling the bail granted to appellant — That there was no supervening circumstance has no relevance in such a case

(11) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

In connection with death of one S and his wife K, investigation commenced pursuant to which it was found that the deaths were result of fake encounters carried out by the then officers of Anti-Terrorist Squad (ATS), State of Gujarat. The appellant, a senior IPS officer, along with other officers was found to be involved in the encounters. According to the prosecution, in response to summons issued under Section 160 CrPC, the appellant appeared before the investigating officer but he did not cooperate and instead influenced the witnesses. On the date of recording his first statement he was not available either at his residence or at his place of posting. The appellant was arrested, remanded to police custody and charge-sheet was filed. The appellant moved a bail application which was accepted by the trial Judge. According to the trial court the accused had served the department with sincerity and dedication to curb the anti-social and anti-national elements. Persons like him should not be subjected to unnecessary harassment and humiliation when there was possibility of securing the persons by imposing appropriate conditions.

The State of Gujarat filed an application under Section 439(2) CrPC for cancellation of the bail. The stand of the State before the High Court was that the appellant was charged with offences punishable under Sections 302, 193, 201, 120-B read with Section 34 IPC and his role was narrated in the charge-sheet. Reference was made to the fact that even though he was in no way connected with ATS of Gujarat Police, he was present at the scene of offence where body of K was burnt. Mobile tracking also indicated presence of the appellant at the farm where the victims were illegally confined. It was pointed out that weekly diary showed his presence in the court during the period, but he was not actually in the court and some places were kept vacant in weekly diary and surprisingly during the entire operation mobile phone of the accused was switched off. The presence of the appellant when the corpse of K was cremated has been established by the statement of the witnesses. It was pointed out that the trial Judge concluded that the nature and gravity of the offence alleged was serious but there was no cogent, sufficient and reliable evidence to support the prosecution case. In other words, he had written indirectly an order of acquittal even before the trial was concluded. The High Court noticed that the appellant, a high ranking official, was charged with serious and heinous offences and while enlarging him on bail, the trial court ought to have kept in view the seriousness of the offences, punishment prescribed for such offences and involvement of the accused. It was pointed out that there was no question for referring to the antecedents of S and his characteristics as that was of no relevance. The bail, therefore, was cancelled.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The parameters for grant of bail and cancellation of bail are different. Even though the reappreciation of the evidence as done by the court granting bail is to be avoided the court dealing with an application for cancellation of bail under Section 439(2) can consider whether irrelevant materials were taken into consideration. That is so because it is not known as to what extent the irrelevant materials weighed with the court for accepting the prayer for bail. Perversity can flow from the fact that irrelevant materials have been taken into consideration adding vulnerability to the order granting bail. But, the irrelevant materials should be of a substantial nature and not of a trivial nature. (Paras 18, 23 and 25)

Though it was urged that the aspects to be dealt with while considering the application for cancellation of bail on appeal against the grant of bail, it was fairly accepted that there is no scope for filing an appeal against the order of grant of bail. Under the scheme of the Code the application for cancellation of bail can be filed before the Court granting the bail if it is a Court of Session or the High Court. (Paras 18 and 20)

In the instant case, the trial court seems to have been swayed by the fact that S, husband of K had shady reputation and criminal antecedents. That was certainly not a factor which was to be considered while granting bail. It was the nature of the acts which ought to have been considered. By way of illustration, it can be said that the accused cannot take a plea while applying for bail that the person whom he killed was a hardened criminal. That certainly is not a factor which can be taken into account. Another significant factor which was highlighted by the State before the High Court was that an FIR allegedly was filed to divert attention from the fake encounter. The same was not lodged by Gujarat Police. Once it is found that bail was granted on untenable grounds, same can be cancelled. The stand that there was no supervening circumstance has no relevance in such a case. (Paras 25 and 26)

The above aspects have been highlighted to show that in this case irrelevant materials have been taken into account and/or relevant materials have been kept out of consideration. That being so, the order of granting bail to the appellant was certainly vulnerable. The order of the High Court does not suffer from any infirmity to warrant interference. (Para 27). Narendra K. Amin (Dr.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 13 SCC 584.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2008]

Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977; Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124, relied on [6799] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — When not justified — Cancellation of bail by the High Court on ground that the accused was guilty of suppression of the material fact that his co-accused's bail application was rejected twice — Knowledge of the rejection of co-accused's bail application imputed to the accused without valid basis — High Court knowing that the co-accused was not granted bail — Omission on the part of the prosecution/complainant to bring to the court's notice that two bail applications of the co-accused were rejected — Held, in the circumstances of the case, the accused was not guilty of suppression of material fact — Hence cancellation of bail on that ground is improper. Kashmira Singh v. Duman Singh, (1996) 4 SCC 693: 1996 SCC (Cri) 844: AIR 1996 SC 2176.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and S.C. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 9-7-1996]

[6800] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail — When not justified — Fight between two groups resulting in casualty on both sides — Possibility of the complainant's side being aggressor, or there being a free fight cannot be ruled out — Fact that there were injuries on both sides was known to the High Court when it granted bail — In the circumstances of the case, the High Court was not justified in cancelling the bail on ground that there was only one case and not a cross-case against the complainant's party as assumed while granting bail. Kashmira Singh v. Duman Singh, (1996) 4 SCC 693: 1996 SCC (Cri) 844: AIR 1996 SC 2176.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and S.C. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 9-7-1996]

[6801] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail by High Court — Non-consideration of the plea of absence of supervening circumstances by High Court — Sessions Court considering irrelevant materials and ignoring relevant materials — Effect — Sessions Court considering the victim's past criminal record/conduct in a case of fake encounter — Sessions Court not considering that a co-accused AR lodged the FIR against S (the victim of encounter), allegedly to cover up the fake encounter — On facts, held, the plea of absence of supervening circumstance has no leg to stand — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 364, 365, 368, 193, 197, 201, 120-B, 420 and 342 — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 25(1-B)(a) and 27. Dinesh M.N. (S.P.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 2008 SC 2318: 2008 Cri LJ 3008: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2310.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2008]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124; Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2004) 7 SCC 528: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1977, relied on [6802] — S. 439(2) — Cancellation of bail in a non-bailable case — Proper mode of — Principles laid down in Dolat Ram case reported in (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237, held, ought not to have been ignored by High Court — Hence, High Court's order cancelling the bail in a rather mechanical manner, held, unsustainable (Paras 4 and 5). Subhendu Mishra v. Subrat Kumar Mishra, 2000 SCC (Cri) 1508: AIR 1999 SC 3026: 1999 Cri LJ 4063.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and M. Srinivasan and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-1999]

Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237, followed

[6803] — S. 439(2) — Considerations for cancellation of bail — Cancellation should not be by way of punishment even if prima facie case against the accused is established — Held, High Court erred in interfering with Sessions Court's bail order on irrelevant considerations such as nature and gravity of circumstances in which offence committed — Penal Code, 1860, S. 307

The appellant was arrested while inflicting several knife blows on a social and political worker who had come to visit a patient in a hospital. An offence under S. 307, IPC and S. 135 of the Bombay Police Act, was registered against him and he was remanded to judicial custody. His application for releasing him on bail was granted by the Sessions Court by a well-reasoned order made after hearing both the sides. The State moved an application to the High Court for cancellation of the order granting bail. The High Court allowed the application and cancelled the bail order holding that once a prima facie case was established, the Sessions Court ought to have taken into consideration the nature and gravity of the circumstances in which the offence was committed.

Held :

Very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order seeking cancellation of the bail. Even where a prima facie case is established, the approach of the court in the matter of bail is not that the accused should be detained by way of punishment but whether the presence of the accused would be readily available for trial or that he is likely to abuse the discretion granted in his favour by tampering with evidence.

(11) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

In the present case the High Court completely overlooked the fact that it was not for it to decide whether the bail should be granted but the application was for cancellation of the bail. It was misdirected while examining the question of directing cancellation of bail by interfering with discretionary order of the Sessions Court. The circumstance found by it that the victim attacked was a social and political worker cannot be considered to be so overriding as to permit such interference. The High Court was impressed by some of the most irrelevant considerations, overlooking the considerations relevant for deciding the question. The High Court's approach thus being erroneous must be set aside. Bhagirathsinh v. State of Gujarat, (1984) 1 SCC 284: 1984 SCC (Cri) 63: AIR 1984 SC 372: 1984 Cri LJ 160: (1984) 1 GLR 332.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-1983]

[6804] — S. 439(2) — In appeal to Supreme Court against refusal of High Court to cancel bail, the prosecution cannot rely on any new material — If it wants to rely on such new material it must apply to the High Court again

The Supreme Court will not allow the State to rely on any new material which was not available to the High Court. True, that the additional data came into existence after the High Court gave its judgment but it would be unfair to the respondent to make use of that material without giving him an adequate opportunity to meet it. That will entail a fairly long adjournment which may frustrate the very object of the proceeding initiated by the State.

Besides, though in appropriate cases the Supreme Court has the power to take additional evidence, that power has to be exercised sparingly, particularly in appeals brought under Art. 136 of the Constitution.

The new developments could, if the prosecution is so advised, be brought to the High Court's attention for obtaining suitable relief. The Supreme Court would not go into the new material for the first time. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Sanjay Gandhi, (1978) 2 SCC 411: 1978 SCC (Cri) 223: AIR 1978 SC 961: 1978 Cri LJ 952: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 500.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-1978]

[6805] — S. 439(2) — Invocation of — By whom permissible — Power of court to cancel bail order, held, may be invoked either by State or any aggrieved party (in this case father of deceased)

The framework of Section 439(2) CrPC indicates that it is a power conferred on the courts mentioned therein. There is nothing to indicate that the said power can be exercised only if the State or investigating agency or a Public Prosecutor moves a petition. The power so vested in the High Court can be invoked either by the State or by any aggrieved party. The said power could also be exercised suo motu by the High Court. Therefore, any member of the public, whether he belongs to any particular profession or otherwise can move the High Court to remind it of the need to exercise its power suo motu. There is no barrier either in Section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code or in any other law which inhibits a person from moving the High Court to have such powers exercised suo motu. If the High Court considers that there is no need to cancel the bail then it can dismiss the petition. It is always open to the High Court to cancel the bail if it feels that there are sufficient reasons for doing so. (Para 14). Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124: AIR 2001 SC 2023: 2001 Cri LJ 2566.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2001]

R. Rathinam v. State by DSP, (2000) 2 SCC 391: 2000 SCC (Cri) 958, relied on

Simranjit Singh Mann v. Union of India, (1992) 4 SCC 653: 1993 SCC (Cri) 22: AIR 1993 SC 280; Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1991) 3 SCC 356: 1991 SCC (Cri) 933, distinguished [6806] — S. 439(2) — Petition for cancellation of bail — What amounts to — Accused enlarged on bail by the High Court — Thereafter the complainant making a representation to the Chief Minister stating that the accused had issued threats to him, a copy of which was sent to the Chief Justice of the High Court — High Court not justified in treating the same as a petition for cancellation of bail. Kashmira Singh v. Duman Singh, (1996) 4 SCC 693: 1996 SCC (Cri) 844: AIR 1996 SC 2176.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and S.C. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 9-7-1996]

[6807] — S. 439(2) — Power of High Court to cancel bail — Orders in respect of which it may be exercised — Bail orders passed by Court of Session — As High Court is a superior court in hierarchy of courts, its power under S. 439(2) can also be exercised in relation to bail orders passed by Court of Session, not just those passed by any

Magistrate — Contention rejected that High Court and Court of Session were coordinate courts for purposes of S. 439(2) and therefore High Court could not sit in appeal or revision over an order of Court of Session

In the hierarchy of courts, the High Court is the superior court. A restrictive interpretation which would have the effect of nullifying Section 439(2) cannot be given. When Section 439(2) grants to the High Court the power to cancel bail, it necessarily follows that such powers can be exercised also in respect of orders passed by the Court of Session. (Para 16). Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124: AIR 2001 SC 2023: 2001 Cri LJ 2566.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-5-2001]

[6808] — S. 439(2) — Scope — Considerations before the court in cancelling bail — Mere turning of witnesses hostile not enough — Involvement of the accused in bringing about such result must be shown — But the burden on the prosecution is not of proof beyond reasonable doubt — On facts, cancellation of bail justified

Rejection of bail when bail is applied for is one thing; cancellation of bail already granted is quite another. It is easier to reject a bail application in a non-bailable case than to cancel a bail granted in such a case. Cancellation of bail necessarily involves the review of a decision already made and can by and large be permitted only, if, by reason of supervening circumstances, it would be no longer conducive to a fair trial to allow the accused to retain his freedom during the trial.

The fact that prosecution witnesses have turned hostile cannot by itself justify the inference that the accused has won them over.

It is therefore necessary for the prosecution to show some act or conduct on the part of the respondent from which a reasonable inference may arise that the witnesses have gone back on their statements as a result of an intervention by or on behalf of the respondent.

The issue of cancellation of bail can only arise in criminal cases, but that does not mean that every incidental matter in a criminal case must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt like the guilt of the accused. The same standard of proof as in a civil case applies to proof of incidental issues involved in a criminal trial like the cancellation of bail of an accused. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Sanjay Gandhi, (1978) 2 SCC 411: 1978 SCC (Cri) 223: AIR 1978 SC 961: 1978 Cri LJ 952: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 500.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-1978]

[6809] — Ss. 439(2) and 437(5) — Bail — Cancellation of — Grounds — Held, court cannot cancel the bail on a ground alien to the grounds mentioned in S. 437 — Hence, cancellation of bail by High Court on the ground that accused husband failed to keep his wife (complainant) with him and thus violated the terms of compromise which formed the basis for grant of bail, held, not justified — Grant of bail on the basis of an assurance of a compromise, or its cancellation for violation of the terms of such compromise, held, not permissible — Further, material on record indicated that no such compromise was arrived at between the parties — Hence, question of fulfilling the terms thereof did not arise at all — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 498-A (Para 7). Biman Chatterjee v. Sanchita Chatterjee, (2004) 3 SCC 388: 2004 SCC (Cri) 814: AIR 2004 SC 1699: 2004 Cri LJ 1451.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-2-2004]

[6810] — Ss. 439(2) and 437(5) — Bail — Cancellation of — Grounds — Alleged threat to witnesses — Mere assertion of, held, should not be utilised as a ground for cancellation of bail, routinely — Court to carefully weigh the acceptability of the allegations and pass orders as circumstances warrant in law — Further emphasised that such matters should be dealt with expeditiously

Mere assertion of an alleged threat to witnesses should not be utilized as a ground for cancellation of bail, routinely. Otherwise, there is ample scope for making such allegation to nullify the bail granted. The Court before which such allegations are made should in each case carefully weigh the acceptability of the allegations and pass orders as circumstances warrant in law. Such matters should be dealt with expeditiously so that actual interference with the ordinary and normal course of justice is nipped in the bud and an irretrievable stage is not reached. (Para 11). Mehboob Dawood Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 2 SCC 362: 2004 SCC (Cri) 551: (2004) 2 KLT 812: 2004 Cri LJ 1359.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-2004]

[6811] — Ss. 439(2) and 437(5) — Bail — Cancellation of, without notice — Propriety — Impugned order set aside and High Court directed to reconsider the matter and hear the accused before passing appropriate orders (Paras 1 and 3). Gurdev Singh v. State of Bihar, (2005) 13 SCC 286: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 177: 2000 Cri LJ 4686.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-2000]

(11) Cancellation of bail (contd.)

[6812] — Ss. 439(2) and 437(5) — Cancellation of bail — Conventional practice of placing the matter before the same Judge who granted the bail — Held, need not be followed as a statutory requirement where the cancellation is sought for on grounds different from those which existed at the time of granting bail

In the instant case, it was contended by the accused-appellant that the order of the High Court cancelling his bail could not be maintained as the said order was not passed by the learned Judge who had earlier granted the bail.

Rejecting the said contention and dismissing the appeal,

Held :

There is a long-standing convention and requirement of judicial discipline which has held the field for a long period that subsequent application for grant or cancellation of bail application should be placed before the same learned Judge who had passed the earlier order. This certainly is a desirable course. But at the same time the party who makes a grievance that the course has not been followed has to indicate as to in what manner he was in prejudice by the deviation. The question of prejudice arises only when on the same set of facts, a different order is passed by another learned Judge cancelling the bail or granting the bail as the case may be. But where the cancellation is sought for on grounds different from those which existed at the time of granting bail, the conventional practice of placing the matter before the same learned Judge need not be followed as if it is a statutory requirement. (Para 12)

In the case at hand, the cancellation has been done on a ground other than those which weighed with learned Single Judge for grant of bail. Though initially the application for cancellation of bail was founded on the alleged misrepresentation or suppression of facts, but what weighed with the learned Single Judge who dealt with the application for cancellation of bail was the conduct of the accused in threatening the witnesses. (Para 12). Mehboob Dawood Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 2 SCC 362: 2004 SCC (Cri) 551: (2004) 2 KLT 812: 2004 Cri LJ 1359.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-2004]

Harjeet Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 1 SCC 649: 2002 SCC (Cri) 225, distinguished on facts

[6813] — Ss. 439(2), 438 and 437(5) — Cancellation of bail — Factors to be taken into consideration — Rejection of bail in non-bailable offence and cancellation of bail already granted must be considered and dealt with on different bases and not mechanically — Cancellation of anticipatory bail in dowry death case

Rejection of bail in a non-bailable case at the initial stage and the cancellation of bail already granted, have to be considered and dealt with on different basis. Very cogent and overwhelming circumstances are necessary for an order directing the cancellation of the bail, already granted. Generally speaking, the grounds for cancellation of bail, broadly (illustrative and not exhaustive) are: interference or attempt to interfere with the due course of administration of justice or evasion or attempt to evade the due course of justice or abuse of the concession granted to the accused in any manner. The satisfaction of the court, on the basis of material placed on the record of the possibility of the accused absconding is yet another reason justifying the cancellation of bail. However, bail once granted should not be cancelled in a mechanical manner without considering whether any supervening circumstances have rendered it no longer conducive to a fair trial to allow the accused to retain his freedom by enjoying the concession of bail during the trial. (Para 4) . Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349: 1995 SCC (Cri) 237: (1994) 3 Crimes 1013: (1995) 32 ACC 149: (1995) 1 Andh LT (Cri) 37.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-11-1994]

[6814] — Ss. 439(2) and 437(5) — Cancellation of bail — Grounds for, held, should be those which arose after the grant of bail and should be referable to the conduct of the accused while on bail — Order of High Court cancelling bail of appellant N — Propriety of — Order based on grounds that (i) there was threat to PWs by N and his musclemen, (ii) N had suppressed the fact that in the connected trial the co-accused had already been convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment, and (iii) the High Court had failed to consider the fact that in the connected matter the trial court found material as to the participation of N in the offence — Held, complaints filed in relation to threats given to PWs could not be accepted ex facie as on the dates mentioned in those complaints N was still in jail and was not released on bail — Further, N had specifically mentioned about conviction of co-accused — That apart, the third ground, as stated above, also could not be a basis to cancel the bail — Allegation as to abscondence of N in the past or the likelihood of the same in future, not sustainable — Thus, no case made out for cancellation of bail — Order of High Court set aside — However, considering apprehension of complainant that N being an MLA might interfere with the trial or try to influence the witnesses, N directed not to enter the territorial jurisdiction of the place concerned with the trial, except for attending trial — In case it was imperative to visit the said place, N could do so after informing the investigating agency (Paras 8 to 10). Nityanand Rai v. State of Bihar, (2005) 4 SCC 178: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1159: AIR 2005 SC 2239: 2005 Cri LJ 2187.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-4-2005]

[6815] — Ss. 439(2) and 438 — Anticipatory bail — Cancellation of, by the High Court — Propriety — Non-application of mind — Complaint filed by wife's father (respondent) against his son-in-law (appellant) alleging offences under S. 498-A IPC and S. 4 of Dowry Prohibition Act — Anticipatory bail granted to appellant by High Court on the condition that he should stay at Chennai and report to the police everyday for a week while his father (second appellant) should report to the police as and when required — Accordingly appellant complying with the directions — Application for cancellation of bail filed, alleging that the appellant had gone to the house of one H and abused and threatened him not to give evidence in the case in which he happened to be a witness — But instead of lodging a complaint on the same day or on next day of the alleged threat, complaint lodged two days thereafter — Held, this delay in lodging the complaint itself creates a doubt as to authenticity of the complaint — Even the affidavit filed by the Inspector of Police complaining of violation of the conditions imposed cannot be relied upon since the complaint was made for the first time, eight months after the alleged threat — High Court erred in cancelling the bail by merely accepting the allegation made in the application for cancellation — Hence the order cancelling the anticipatory bail cannot be sustained (Para 10). Raj Kumar Jain v. Kundan Jain, (2004) 10 SCC 612: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2034: AIR 2004 SC 3794: 2004 Cri LJ 3342.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2004]

[6816] — Ss. 439(2) and 482 — Cancellation of bail — Approach to be followed — High Court not to decide as if in appeal

The High Court has approached the case as if it is an appeal against the conviction by giving findings on factual issues which are yet to be decided, which is too premature and is likely to prejudice the trial. That apart, since the only ground on which the cancellation of bail could have been ordered being the ground of intimidation which is not satisfactorily proved, the High Court erred in cancelling the bail granted to the appellant. (Paras 12 and 13). Samarendra Nath Bhattacharjee v. State of W.B., (2004) 11 SCC 165: AIR 2004 SC 4207: 2004 Cri LJ 4215.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde, S.B. Sinha and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2004]

[6817] — S. 439(2) and S. 437(5) — Bail — Cancellation of — Propriety of — Bail granted by Sessions Court cancelled by the Magistrate — Propriety — Bail granted by Sessions Court subject to certain directions and empowering the Magistrate to consider question of violation of any of the conditions stipulated therein and to pass appropriate orders thereon — Plea by appellant that (i) when the Sessions Court had granted bail, it or any superior court was alone empowered to cancel it; and (ii) it could not have vested such power in the Magistrate — Held, as a general proposition, the first plea raised by the appellant is correct but since there was a specific direction to pass appropriate orders as if the conditions for granting bail had been imposed by the Magistrate himself, the impugned order is legal and valid — Superior court can always give directions of this nature and authorise the subordinate courts to pass appropriate orders (Paras 6, 7 and 8). P.K. Shaji v. State of Kerala, (2005) 13 SCC 283: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 174: AIR 2006 SC 100: (2005) 4 KLT 856: 2005 Cri LJ 5063.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-10-2005]

Gurdev Singh v. State of Bihar, (2005) 13 SCC 286, followed

[6818] — S. 439(2) and S. 437(5) — Cancellation of bail — Hearing before, to accused — Held, accused must be heard before his bail is cancelled (Para 6). P.K. Shaji v. State of Kerala, (2005) 13 SCC 283: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 174: AIR 2006 SC 100: (2005) 4 KLT 856: 2005 Cri LJ 5063.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-10-2005]

Gurdev Singh v. State of Bihar, (2005) 13 SCC 286, followed

[6819] — S. 439(2) r/w S. 482 and S. 438 — Anticipatory bail — Grant of, by Sessions Court — Cancellation by High Court — When not permissible — Appellants apprehending implication for murder and conspiracy — Held, normally, very cogent and overwhelming grounds or circumstances are required to cancel the bail already granted — Sessions Court initially granting the anticipatory bail to appellants for six weeks and subsequently confirming the said order — Relevant facts and circumstances taken into account and reasons given in support while granting the bail — Held, High Court erred in cancelling the bail in a mechanical manner by simply stating and not showing how the judicial discretion exercised by the Sessions Court was erroneous — Further held that High Court failed to consider the distinction between rejection of bail in a non-bailable case at the initial stage and the cancellation of bail already granted

The learned Additional Sessions Judge, Rewari, after hearing both sides, initially granted anticipatory bail to the appellants on 9-4-2001 for six weeks, which was confirmed and bail was continued by the order dated 5-6-2001. Unfortunately, the High Court in the impugned order dated 21-12-2001, while cancelling the anticipatory bail granted to the appellants and in the subsequent order dated 22-2-2002 did not consider the contentions raised on behalf of the parties objectively and in proper perspective and did not deal with the reasons recorded and consideration made by the learned Additional Sessions Judges in the orders dated 9-4-2001 and 5-6-2001 granting anticipatory bail. The High Court simply observed in the order dated 21-12-2001 that the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Rewari, had not taken all the facts into account and that he granted anticipatory bail to the appellants on 9-4-2001 when the case was at the initial stage. The High Court has simply stated that the order of the learned Sessions Judge is based on exercise of judicial discretion in an erroneous manner without considering the material on the file. It is strange that the High Court has made such an observation without showing how the judicial discretion exercised by the learned Additional Sessions Judge was erroneous. A considered order of the learned Additional Sessions Judge supported by reasons in exercise of judicial discretion does not become erroneous by merely dubbing or calling it as such. Both the orders of the learned Additional Sessions Judges dated 9-4-2001 and 5-6-2001 after due consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case to the extent required for exercise of judicial discretion in the matter of granting bail are sustainable. The judicial discretion exercised in granting anticipatory bail, is neither perverse nor erroneous. On the other hand, they are based on relevant considerations supported by reasons. When the learned Additional Sessions Judges have passed the orders granting anticipatory bail exercising judicial discretion, there is no warrant to say that such an order of bail is obtained by dubious means. The High Court, except referring to two decisions as to the position of law, failed to notice the facts and relevant aspects of the case on hand to apply them. (Paras 9 and 16)

Further, there is a distinction between rejection of bail in a non-bailable case at the initial stage and the cancellation of bail already granted. Normally, very cogent and overwhelming grounds or circumstances are required to cancel the bail already granted. In the present case, the High Court, it appears, did not bear this distinction in mind and cancelled the bail in a mechanical manner. (Para 17). Mahant Chand Nath Yogi v. State of Haryana, (2003) 1 SCC 326: 2003 SCC (Cri) 312: AIR 2003 SC 18: 2003 Cri LJ 76.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-10-2002]

Subhendu Mishra v. Subrat Kumar Mishra, 2000 SCC (Cri) 1508, followed

(12) Cancellation of bail after charge-sheet filed: Ss. 439(2), 437(5) and S. 167(2)

See also Section 439, '(11) Cancellation of bail', above

See also under Section 437

[6820] — Ss. 439 and 167(2) — Recall of order granting bail — Giving an opportunity of hearing to accused in case of — Necessity of — Accused claiming that he was entitled to bail under S. 167(2) as no charge-sheet had been submitted by police within the statutory period — Sessions Judge, in the absence of the Public Prosecutor and in the light of the said averments, releasing accused on bail — But, on the same day at a later stage, Public Prosecutor appearing before the Sessions Judge and drawing his attention to the fact that the charge-sheet had already been submitted — In the circumstances of the case, Sessions Judge recalling his earlier order in the absence of accused — Held, High Court was right in setting aside the recall order and in directing the Sessions Judge to pass a fresh order in accordance with law after giving an opportunity of hearing to accused (Para 6). Samya Sett v. Shambhu Sarkar, (2005) 6 SCC 767: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1483: AIR 2005 SC 3309: 2005 Cri LJ 3739.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and C.K. Thakker and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-8-2005]

[6821] — Ss. 439(2) and 167(2) — Special powers of High Court or Sessions Court regarding bail — Magistrate releasing the accused under S. 167(2) on ground that the charge-sheet was not submitted within 90 days — Sessions Judge setting aside said order on ground that the accused was released on the 89th day i.e. before expiry of 90 days — High Court setting aside Sessions Judge's order holding that order passed by the Magistrate being an interlocutory order was not revisable under the revisional jurisdiction — Held, if a person is illegally or erroneously released on bail under S. 167(2), his bail can be cancelled by passing appropriate order under S. 439(2) — High Court erred in not referring to provisions of S. 439(2) which specifically empowers the High Court or the Sessions Court to cancel bail in such circumstances (Paras 7 to 10). Pandit Dnyanu Khot v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 17 SCC 745.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, B.P. Singh and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-2002]

Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1124, considered

[6822] — Ss. 439(2) and 167(2) — Cancellation of bail — Justifiability of grounds for — High Court cancelling bail for sole purpose of police remand to recover marriage articles in a case of cruelty by in-laws under Ss. 498-A, 406, 506, 323 r/w S. 34 IPC — There being no allegation of misuse of bail granted by Magistrate, said ground for cancellation of bail, held, not sufficient — Therefore, bail granted by Magistrate restored (Paras 14 and 17). Devender Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2010) 6 SCC 753.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2010]

CBI v. Anupam J. Kulkarni, (1992) 3 SCC 141: 1992 SCC (Cri) 554, followed

(13) Appeal/Remedy

See also under Section 437

[6823] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Remedy against — No appeal lies against order granting bail — Application for cancellation of bail has to be filed before the Court which passed the order granting bail

Though it was urged that the aspects to be dealt with while considering the application for cancellation of bail on appeal against the grant of bail, it was fairly accepted that there is no scope for filing an appeal against the order of grant of bail. Under the scheme of CrPC the application for cancellation of bail can be filed before the Court granting the bail if it is a Court of Session or the High Court. (Paras 18 and 20). Narendra K. Amin (Dr.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 13 SCC 584.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-2008]

[6824] — S. 439 — Challenge to order of Single Judge of High Court granting bail — Proper forum and locus standi — Held, neither any practising advocate who had nothing to do with the particular case nor any other person can challenge the order of the Single Judge by moving the same High Court subsequently — Only remedy available is to move the Supreme Court seeking special leave under Art. 136 (Para 5). R. Rathinam v. State, (2000) 2 SCC 391: 2000 SCC (Cri) 958: AIR 2000 SC 1851.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-2-2000]

(14) Interference by Supreme Court

See also under Section 439, '(11) Cancellation of bail', above

[6825] — S. 439 — Judicial Discipline — Observation made by High Court as to how an appeal against its order granting bail should be decided by Supreme Court, held, subversive of judicial discipline

What in effect the Single Judge of the High Court had said in its impugned order was that when an appeal is filed against an order of the High Court granting bail to an accused, it should be decided by the Supreme Court in accordance with the observations made in the case of Bihar Legal Support Society, (1986) 4 SCC 767 meaning thereby that the Supreme Court should not have interfered with his earlier order dated 30-5-2003 granting bail to Respondent 1.

Held :

In the hierarchical judicial system, it is not for any court to tell a superior court as to how a matter should be decided when an appeal is taken against its decision to that superior court. Such a course would be subversive of judicial discipline on the bedrock of which the judicial system is founded and finality is attached and orders are obeyed. The Supreme Court does not consider it proper to say anything further and would like the matter to rest there. (Para 13). Sompal Singh v. Sunil Rathi, (2005) 1 SCC 1: AIR 2005 SC 1483: (2004) 3 KLT 992.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 3-11-2004]

Tirupati Balaji Developers (P) Ltd. v. State of Bihar, (2004) 5 SCC 1, relied on

(14) Interference by Supreme Court (contd.)

[6826] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of — Non-interference therewith by Supreme Court though approach of High Court not proper to certain extent — Investigation by CBI disclosing that respondent aided the main accused in commission of organised crime relating to fake stamps — He did not arrest the persons involved in the crime — For said work, he received illegal gratification from accused — High Court discarding evidence of witnesses on ground of delay and granting bail to respondent — Considering the fact that present case was entrusted to CBI for thorough investigation on directions of Supreme Court issued 3½ years back, held, the approach of High Court to the extent that there was delay in recording statement of witnesses was incorrect — However, Supreme Court in present appeal could not go into various aspects urged before it as the same were to be decided at trial — Hence, those matters left to trial court for decision after taking proper evidence — Thus, despite the fact that Supreme Court not fully approving the views expressed by High Court, it declining to interfere with order granting bail — Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (30 of 1999), Ss. 21(4), 3, 4 & 24

Challenge in the present appeal was to the judgment of the High Court granting bail to the respondent Inspector of Police who was arrested in "stamp scam" case.

The appellant State submitted that the investigation conducted by CBI clearly indicated the involvement of the respondent in lending help to the main accused in commission of an organised crime. It was pointed out that the respondent had failed to arrest the main accused when he appeared in the office of the Crime Branch. Similarly, the respondent had set free the various persons taken into custody when huge quantity of fake stamps were recovered in a raid and this was done by the respondent in the light of the illegal gratification received by him from Accused 8. Accused 8 had made a confessional statement in this regard. That apart, nine of the witnesses had spoken of the involvement of the respondent. The State argued that the High Court made an erroneous approach to the materials gathered by CBI and erred in discarding them on the basis that there was some delay in recording the statements of the witnesses. It was contended that the High Court did not keep in mind the nature of the offence, its impact on society, the position held by the respondent, his duty as a protector of the law and the rights of the citizens and the nature of his conduct. It was a clear case where the offences under Sections 3, 4 and 24 of the Maharashtra Control of Organised Crime Act, 1999 (for short "MCOCA") had been made out. The High Court ought not to have interfered with the order refusing to grant bail.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

There is some merit in the contention of the appellants that the High Court was not correct in thinking that all the evidence gathered by CBI must be treated as evidence gathered belatedly. The High Court obviously forgot that CBI was directed to take up the investigation by the Supreme Court only in March 2004 and what the Supreme Court was intending, was a thorough investigation by CBI, especially in the nature of unsatisfactory performance of the State police and the number of police personnel and higher-ups allegedly involved in the organised crime. To that extent the approach or attitude of the High Court in dealing with the appeal against the refusal to grant bail to the respondent, cannot be approved. Same would be the position regarding the confessional statement of Accused 8. The High Court was not correct in trying to discard it on the basis that it was belated. (Para 7)

Any studied inaction or aid extended to the members of an organised crime, the members of an organised gang involved in such crime might also amount to an offence under MCOCA and this fact cannot be forgotten when dealing with the case of a police officer allegedly involved in the crime. But then that is a matter to be decided at trial. It is not proper in this appeal to go into the various aspects urged at great length. The matters must be left to the trial court for decision after taking proper evidence and it would be premature to pronounce on the various aspects urged herein. Thus, though it is neither possible to fully endorse or to fully approve the views expressed by the High Court in the order under challenge, it is not considered necessary, at this stage, to interfere with that order and set aside the bail granted to the respondent. (Paras 8 and 9). State of Maharashtra v. Vashishtha Rambhau Andhale, (2007) 7 SCC 341: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 359: (2007) 57 AIC 97 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-8-2007]

[6827] — Ss. 439 and 386 — Grant of bail by High Court — Supreme Court ordinarily does not interfere with — But it can interfere to prevent miscarriage of justice if it considers it fit to do so having regard to nature and gravity of offence and the materials collected during investigation — Constitution of India — Art. 136

Normally, the Supreme Court does not interfere with orders granting bail but considering the nature and gravity of the offence alleged against the respondent and the materials collected against him during investigation, this is a fit case where the order of the High Court has got to be set aside to prevent miscarriage of justice. State of Maharashtra v. Ramesh Taurani, (1998) 1 SCC 41: 1998 SCC (Cri) 257: AIR 1998 SC 586: 1998 Cri LJ 855.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-11-1997]

[6828] — Ss. 439 and 437 — Bail — Improper grant of, by High Court — Stage of proceedings at trial — Consideration of, by Supreme Court — Relief — Instead of cancelling bail, High Court's order maintained imposing certain conditions — Charge-sheet filed under S. 304 IPC — Initially investigation proceeded on the line as if the offence under S. 304-A IPC had been committed — High Court holding that the case was surreptitiously converted into S. 304 IPC — It considering that accused was already on bail for offences under Ss. 304-A and 338 IPC — Hence, it directing to accept fresh bail for added offence under S. 304 — No reasons indicated for grant of bail — Thus, though this was a fit case for cancellation of bail, considering that prosecution evidence was practically closed, held, trial to be completed within four months and accused to continue on bail subject to conditions that he would not take advantage of the bail granted and would not delay the case and/or tamper with the evidence — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 7 and 9). V.D. Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2005) 12 SCC 304: 2005 Cri LJ 3753: AIR 2005 SC 3270.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-2005]

Followed in Deepak Singchi v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 14 SCC 583

[6829] — S. 439 — On facts, Supreme Court directing grant of bail. Ranjit Singh v. Popat Rambhaji Sonavane, (1983) 1 SCC 298: 1983 SCC (Cri) 196: AIR 1983 SC 292: 1983 Cri LJ 437.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-1983]

[6830] — S. 439 — Sessions Court and High Court granting bail under — Supreme Court declining to interfere under Art. 136 though it considered the grant of bail to be improper — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, (1980) 2 SCC 559: 1980 SCC (Cri) 508: AIR 1980 SC 785: 1980 Cri LJ 426: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 573.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1980]

[6831] — S. 439 — Application for bail — Rejection of, by trial court and High Court — Appeal before Supreme Court — When no interference called for — Applicant appellant facing trial for alleged offences under various sections of IPC, POTA and Arms Act — According to appellant, he was kept in illegal custody by Crime Branch before his arrest, question of making alleged confession under S. 32 POTA did not arise as he did not know the regional language of the State (Gujarati) and did not even sign before Deputy Commissioner and though he was produced before Magistrate for confirmation of his confessional statement under S. 32(5) POTA, he was remanded to judicial custody and the so-called confessional statement was retracted by him — Trial court found existence of prima facie material showing appellant's involvement in the crime and his link with the absconding main accused as also his criminal antecedents as reflected in his so-called confessional statement, refused to grant him bail — Further, when appellant was produced for confirmation of so-called confessional statement, there was no allegation that the same was obtained under pressure and if there was no confession as claimed by appellant, question of any retraction would not arise — Held, no interference with High Court's order dismissing the appeal called for — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, Ss. 49 and 32. Gulam Mohammed v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 15 SCC 402: AIR 2009 SC 509.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-2008]

State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715, relied on [6832] — S. 439 — Grant of bail by Supreme Court — High Court refused to grant bail — Having regard to relevant material appearing in the case diary and other material on record and circumstances of the case, held, appellant deserves to be released on bail — Conditions laid down to be imposed by trial court while releasing appellant on bail — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Padma Charan Patra v. State of Orissa, (2007) 15 SCC 657.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2006]

[6833] — S. 439 — Bail — Grant of, by Supreme Court — Delay in release of accused — Bail granted on 25-4-2003 — Order received in jail on 1-5-2003 — Accused immediately informed to furnish the required bond with surety — On his furnishing the same, trial court releasing him on 7-5-2003 — Held, though there had been noticeable delay in release of accused, the same was due to the procedure involved in giving effect to the

(14) Interference by Supreme Court (contd.)

Supreme Court's order and not due to any individual's laxity — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 4 and 5). Pusai v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2004) 9 SCC 81: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1416: AIR 2004 SC 1184: 2004 Cri LJ 923.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2003]

[6834] — S. 439 — Review of cancellation of bail — Serious note taken that in spite of cancellation of bail, accused neither surrendering nor taken to custody — CBI thus directed to enforce earlier order — Review petition dismissed on merits — Constitution of India, Arts. 137 and 136 (Paras 1 to 4). Rajesh Ranjan v. State of Bihar, (2010) 13 SCC 57.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2010]

Rabindra Nath Singh v. Rajesh Ranjan, (2010) 6 SCC 417: (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 165, referred to

(15) Fresh consideration of application on remand

See also Section 439, '(8) Successive/repeated bail applications', above

[6835] — S. 439 — Bail application — Fresh consideration of, by the High Court in view of the direction made by the Supreme Court while setting aside its earlier order — Hearing by same Judge who decided the earlier bail application, held, not a necessity since it is not a second bail application — It could be heard by any Judge of High Court

After the earlier order granting bail had been set aside by the Supreme Court, a fresh bail application was filed in the High Court on 27-2-2004, which came up for hearing on 1-3-2004 before another learned Judge who had been assigned the jurisdiction. For reasons which are not clear from record, an order was passed by him to list the bail application before the same learned Judge who had granted bail on the earlier occasion. This order may have been proper had it been a second bail application in view of Chapter V Rule 13 of the Allahabad High Court Rules. But this being not a second bail application, the jurisdiction to hear the bail application lay with the learned Judge assigned with the jurisdiction by the Chief Justice and he could not have passed an order directing the matter to be listed before a particular Judge. (Para 6). Sompal Singh v. Sunil Rathi, (2005) 1 SCC 1: AIR 2005 SC 1483: (2004) 3 KLT 992.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 3-11-2004]

[6836] — S. 439 — Remand by Supreme Court for reconsideration of bail application afresh to High Court — Proper mode of disposal — Grant of bail by High Court without considering the relevant factors despite the same having been pointed out by the Supreme Court while setting aside its earlier order granting bail and directing it to decide the matter afresh — Held, impugned order granting bail was liable to be set aside as (i) instead of considering the matter de novo in the light of the observations made by the Supreme Court, the High Court only gave justification for its earlier order, (ii) emphasis was given to minor discrepancies, and (iii) conclusion as to absence of the informants at the time of occurrence was not proper

The instant appeal was preferred by the complainant S against the judgment and order dated 27-5-2004 of the Allahabad High Court by which Respondent 1 was granted bail in a case under Sections 147/148/149/302/307/ 404/504 and 506 IPC.

Respondent 1 had been initially granted bail by the High Court on 30-5-2003. This order was challenged by S before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court observed that the High Court while granting the bail had not considered the facts (i) that the accused was named in FIR, (ii) that the accused had several other accusations to his credit, and (iii) that the co-accused was denied bail. Thus, the order dated 30-5-2003 was accordingly set aside and the bail application filed by Respondent 1 was directed to be considered afresh by the High Court. Thereafter, the bail application was again heard by the same Judge and the accused was granted bail by the order dated 27-5-2004 which was the subject-matter of challenge in the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal and setting aside the order of the High Court,

Held :

The High Court did not decide the bail application on considerations which are relevant. A reading of the impugned order shows that instead of considering the matter de novo in the light of the observations made by the Supreme Court the whole effort of the learned Judge has been to give justification for the order earlier passed by him on 30-5-2003 by which bail was granted to the accused. (Paras 7 and 7.1)

While granting bail, the High Court has given great emphasis to some minor discrepancies alleged to have occurred during the course of investigation of the case. It is well settled that every infirmity in investigation does not lead to an inference that the case of the prosecution is false or the accused is entitled to acquittal. Though the High Court was hearing a bail application it has gone to the extent of recording a finding that the informant S and K were not present at the time of the occurrence, only on the ground that they had not received injuries in the incident and the two injured witnesses, namely, V and P had not specifically mentioned the presence of the informants in their statement under Section 161 CrPC. Instead of deciding the bail application on the basis of the evidence which was then available on record, the High Court chose to rely upon the statements of V and P made under Section 161 CrPC. The prosecution did not examine V and P as witnesses in the trial, and, therefore, their statements under Section 161 CrPC could not be used at all at that stage. (Para 9). Sompal Singh v. Sunil Rathi, (2005) 1 SCC 1: AIR 2005 SC 1483: (2004) 3 KLT 992.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 3-11-2004]

Ambika Prasad v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2000) 2 SCC 646: 2000 SCC (Cri) 522; Ram Bihari Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1998) 4 SCC 517: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1085, relied on

(16) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes

See also under Section 437

[6837] — S. 439 — High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain application for bail in respect of TADA offences under S. 439, CrPC — TADA, 1987, S. 19(1). State of Punjab v. Kewal Singh, 1990 Supp SCC 147: 1990 SCC (Cri) 640.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-7-1988]

Usmanbhai Dawoodbhai Memon v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 2 SCC 271: 1988 SCC (Cri) 318, followed

[6838] — S. 439 — Granting of bail — Satisfaction of court as to existence of grounds for believing that the accused is not guilty of committing the offence in question — A prima facie view of the court in respect of, held, has to be formed which must be based on very cogent material — Recovery of firearm, ammunition etc. from accused — Grant of bail by High Court doubting the alleged recovery — Propriety of — Said decision based on grounds that (i) there were discrepancies at various places in describing the firearm, and (ii) a person who, prior to recovery had objected before the Magistrate against the police custody by stating that the police would plant some incriminating material on him and would force a confession out of him, was not likely to make a confession and lead the police party to the discovery, held on facts, not proper — High Court's order set aside — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, Ss. 49(7) and 4

At the stage of granting bail, the court does not decide the merits of the matter. Of course, a prima facie view has to be formed in the court in order to satisfy itself that there are grounds for believing that the accused is not guilty of committing the offence he is charged with. However, such a prima facie view must be based on very cogent material. (Para 12)

The High Court stated that in one place the words "unlicensed revolver with ammunition and pamphlet" are used, in another place the words "unlicensed country-made pistol with ammunition and pamphlet" are used and in a third place the words "a country-made gun with two live ammunition of 0.410 Musket and a booklet in support of TNLA" have been used. It wrongly concluded that because of these discrepancies the non-existence of recovery was so probable that one could act on the supposition that the recovery did not exist. One must keep in mind that the articles recovered have been sent to the court and are in custody of the court. The first of the documents relied upon by the High Court was in Tamil language. The other documents are in English. Some police officer has translated it from Tamil to English. If some police officer wrongly translates the type of weapon one cannot conclude with any reasonable certainty that there was no recovery. Under Section 4 of POTA mere possession not just of an arm but also of an ammunition, is sufficient. Ammunition has also been allegedly recovered. There is no discrepancy in the description of the ammunition. Thus, at this stage, it is difficult to sustain the above conclusion of the High Court. (Paras 11 and 12)

Further, the statements (relating to objection to police custody) relied upon by the High Court, are given after the accused had been arrested and recoveries were made from him. They are also after the charge under POTA had been added. It is not unknown that persons who are charged or arrested make self-serving statement before the Magistrate with the intention of using those in court proceedings at a later stage. Therefore, at this stage, it would not be possible to conclude that no discovery would have been made at the instance of the accused. (Para 13). State of T.N. v. R.R. Gopal, (2003) 12 SCC 237.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-9-2003]

[6839] — S. 439 — Grant of bail in TADA case by Designated Court despite misutilisation of bail granted earlier — Propriety of — Accused, who was released on bail earlier, jumped bail, but ultimately taken into custody by investigating agency — Under such circumstances, held, the Designated Court erroneously granted the bail — Accused-respondent directed to be taken into custody. State of Maharashtra v. Mohd. Shahid N. Qureshi, (2001) 10 SCC 462.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1999]

(16) CrPC provisions for bail and Special Statutes (contd.)

[6840] — S. 439 — Jurisdiction of High Court under, to entertain bail application — POTA case — Specific provision in the statute [S. 34(4) POTA in this case] for appeal before High Court against an order granting or refusing bail — Effect of — Held, powers under S. 439 cannot be exercised in such case — Hence, in view of the specific provision under POTA, held, High Court erred in granting bail to accused-respondents exercising powers under S. 439 — Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002, S. 34(4)

Section 34(4) of POTA provides for an appeal to the High Court against an order of the Special Court granting or refusing bail. The accused-respondents submitted that the power of the High Court to grant bail under Section 439 CrPC has not been taken away by POTA and consequently, the learned Single Judge of the High Court had the jurisdiction to grant bail to the respondents in exercise of the power under Section 439 CrPC. It was urged that if the intention of the legislature was to make the provisions of Section 439 CrPC inapplicable in relation to offences under POTA, it would have made a provision similar to Section 49(5) of POTA which expressly excludes the applicability of Section 438 CrPC.

Rejecting the said contention,

Held:

Section 49 of POTA cannot be read in isolation, but must be read keeping in mind the scope of Section 34 of the said Act whereunder an accused can obtain bail from the High Court by preferring an appeal against the order of the Special Court refusing bail. In view of this specific provision, it will not be proper to interpret Section 49 in the manner suggested by the respondents. (Para 12)

That apart, if the argument of the respondents is accepted, it would mean that a person whose bail under POTA has been rejected by the Special Court will have two remedies and he can avail any one of them at his sweet will. He may move a bail application before the High Court under Section 439 CrPC in the original or concurrent jurisdiction or may prefer an appeal under sub-section (4) of Section 34 of POTA. To interpret a statutory provision in such a manner that a court can exercise both appellate and original jurisdiction in respect of the same matter will lead to an incongruous situation. (Para 14). State of Gujarat v. Salimbhai Abdulgaffar Shaikh, (2003) 8 SCC 50: AIR 2003 SC 3224.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-2003]

A.R. Antulay v. Ramdas Sriniwas Nayak, (1984) 2 SCC 500: 1984 SCC (Cri) 277; Usmanbhai Dawoodbhai Menon v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 2 SCC 271: 1988 SCC (Cri) 318; State of Punjab v. Kewal Singh, 1990 Supp SCC 147: 1990 SCC (Cri) 640, relied on [6841] — Ss. 439 & 438 — Anticipatory bail — FERA violations alleged involving large amount — Held, on facts, was not a case fit for anticipatory bail. Directorate of Enforcement v. Ashok Kumar Jain, (1998) 2 SCC 105: 1998 SCC (Cri) 510: AIR 1998 SC 631.

